QUOTATIONS AND REFERENCES

Boldface type in Exegesises and Expositions indicates a quotation from either the King James or the Revised Standard Version of the passage under discussion. The two versions are distinguished only when attention is called to a difference between them. Readings of other versions are not in boldface type and are regularly identified.

In scripture references a letter (a, b, etc.) appended to a verse number indicates a clause within the verse; an additional Greek letter indicates a subdivision within the clause. When no book is named, the book under discussion is understood.

Arabic numerals connected by colons, as in scripture references, indicate chapters and verses in extra-canonical and non-canonical works. For other ancient writings roman numerals indicate major divisions, arabic numbers subdivisions, these being connected by periods. For modern works a roman number and an arabic number connected by a comma indicate volume and page. Bibliographical data on a contemporary work cited by a writer may be found by consulting the first reference to the work by that writer (or the bibliography, if the writer has included one).

A. Introductions to the Reigns of the Kings of Judah

The two books now known as I and II Kings formed originally a single work, and they were the fourth and last book in that section of the Hebrew Bible which is known as the Latter Prophets. The division into two books was first made in the Septuagint, probably as a matter of convenience rather than of deliberate design. We know that the books of Jeremiah and Ezekiel were both bisected for convenience in translation, and there are indications that this custom was followed on other occasions also.

In the Septuagint the two books are known as Third and Fourth Kingdoms, and this ancient nomenclature is preserved in part in the Vulgate in its customary compromise between the Hebrew and the Greek in the matter of titles. In the Vulgate, I and II Kings are called III and IV "of Kings." Origen 2 testifies that the Jews regarded them as one book, while the Greeks of his day regarded them as two. In this he is supported by Cyril of Jerusalem 8 and Jerome. 4

The internal evidence for one original book is to be found in Greek manuscripts, chiefly in the Septuagint Codex Vaticanus and in Lucian’s version, but also in other Septuagint manuscripts. In Codex Vaticanus, for instance, the first verse of IV Kingdoms (i.e., II Kings) is found also at the end of III Kingdoms (i.e., I Kings), while the Lucian text repeats the second verse also as far as the end of the first sentence, that is, as far as the word ἄρωτισπεν.

4 According to Eusebius Church History VI. 25. 2.
5 Catechetical Lectures IV. 33.
6 Preface to the Books of Samuel and Kings.

Such an overlap is actually found at the end of II Chronicles in all Bibles, ancient and modern, whatever the language. In the Hebrew Bible, and therefore in every other, the first two verses of Ezra-Nehemiah and the major part of the third verse have been repeated at the end of II Chronicles. The break comes right in the middle of a sentence. Ezra 1:3 states that the devout exiles were not merely to “go up,” as the end of II Chronicles says, but that they were to “go up to Jerusalem.” The same phenomenon is found in Septuagint manuscripts, not only at the end of III Kingdoms (I Kings), but also at the end of I Kingdoms (I Samuel) and I Chronicles. It was indeed a regular custom of ancient copyists in the case of a single work which had to be written on more than one scroll, and the custom arose “so that the reader could find correctly what should follow.” 8

The first indication of a division in Hebrew Bibles appears in the First Rabbinic Bible of 1517, printed by Daniel Bomberg at his Hebrew printing office in Venice, and edited by Felix Pratensis. There is indeed a complete break in this Bible between I and II Samuel, but an asterisk appears between I and II Kings with a note in the margin which says, “Here the foreigners 9 begin the Fourth Book of Kings.”

I. Author

The generally accepted opinion is that the author of the books of Kings completed his work about 600 B.C., soon after the death of King Josiah, but before the glamour of those days had died away." There was a thorough revision under strong Deuteronomic influence about 550 B.C., and other still later additions, mostly under the influence of the Priestly Code. These successive revisions will be discussed later; meanwhile it is necessary to consider the original author and his aims.

The death of Ashurbanipal in 626 B.C., and the immediately consequent breakup of the Assyrian Empire, gave Josiah of Judah the opportunity to restore the national fortunes in general and the national religion in particular. By 621 B.C. he was busy restoring the temple. One day Hilkiah the priest produced a scroll which he said he had found during the renovations. Perhaps he was astonished to find it; perhaps he knew where to look—that problem will probably never be solved, but the scroll is generally agreed to have been the nucleus of the present book of Deuteronomy. When King Josiah heard Shaphan the secretary read what was written on the scroll, he was so appalled at the terrible threats of disaster as a requital for the idolatries of the past that he forthwith instituted wide and far-reaching reforms. He removed the idols and the idolatrous cult objects which former apostate kings had introduced into the temple (II Kings 22:11-12); he rendered the age-old sites in the environs of Jerusalem unfit for religious use by filling them with dead men's bones (II Kings 23:10, 13-14); he destroyed all the upcountry shrines (II Kings 23:19) so as to centralize the worship in Jerusalem; and he cleared the land of wizards and witches in a determined effort to do away with all forms of necromancy (II Kings 23:24).

With all these reforms the author of the books of Kings was in full-throated agreement. He was a most ardent admirer of King Josiah. Judah never had a king like him, and in II Kings 23:25 he sings his praises in language saturated with Deuteronomic phrases. The writer was certainly full of unbounded zeal for all these reforms. C. F. Burney gives a list of fifty-one Deuteronomic phrases that are characteristic of the style which is dominant throughout the books. Indeed, the whole work is written to demonstrate the soundness, both in theory and practice, of the Deuteronomic theory of life, with Josiah as the greatest example and proof of its pragmatic value. Our author made everything pass through the Deuteronomic sieve. It is probable that he omitted such material as was not suitable for his didactic purpose; it is possible that he made occasional adjustments in his treatment of the material he used, it is certain that in the result everything has been fitted into the Deuteronomic scheme.

II. Sources

There are three sources mentioned by name, and probably four others. The three which are mentioned are: (a) The Acts of Solomon; (b) The Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel, (c) The Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah. The other four sources of the books of Kings were concerned with the four outstanding figures of the ninth and eighth centuries—Ahab, Elijah, Elisha of the North, and Isaiah of the South. The author-compiler of Josiah's time used the three sources which are mentioned by name and also the Isaiah narratives, but not the other four, which bear many indications of having been inserted at later periods.

A. The Acts of Solomon.—This work is mentioned specifically in I Kings 11:41; it was a biographical rather than a historical document, being designed primarily to set forth the wisdom, the riches, and the general magnificence of King Solomon. The two verses I Kings 3:12-13 might very well stand as a text-introduction for the biography as a whole "Behold, I give you a wise and discerning mind, so that none like you has been before you and none like you shall arise after you. I give you also what you have not asked, both riches and honor, so that no other king shall compare with you, all your days." The biography seems to have been compiled from the royal annals and from official temple records, but it contained such folk tales as the story of Solomon's judgment in I Kings 3:16-28. Some scholars are of the opinion that the author of the books of Kings found and used the temple records independently of the biography, but it is better on the whole to assume that Solomon's biographer had already incorporated the nucleus of them (there having been very considerable later expansion) to the greater glory of Solomon.

It is from this laudatory biography of Solomon that we get the notice of Solomon's Egyptian marriage (I Kings 3:1), and also the nucleus of the dream at Gibeon. This latter account, as it now stands in I Kings 3:1-15, bears many traces of the author-compiler's own handiwork. Vs. 5 is his, inserted as a preface to the whole story to explain why the king ever... went to Gibeon at all in face of plain Deuteronomic commands to the contrary. The narrative of the dream, as the author found it in his source, was probably very close to what is found in the Chronicler's parallel (II Chr. 1:7-13), where the obviously Deuteronomic elements are almost entirely absent.

The account of Solomon's well-known judgment of the case of the two mothers and the one child is in substantially the form in which the author found it in his source. In the following chapter there are lists of Solomon's chief princes (I Kings 4:1-6) and of the twelve administrators whom he put in charge of the districts into which he divided the country when he apparently sought to break up the local tribal loyalties (I Kings 4:7-19). These lists were doubtless originally in the royal records, but had been incorporated into the biography as evidence of Solomon's power and magnificence. The remainder of I Kings 4 gives further details of Solomon's wealth and splendor and wisdom. Most of the details are from the biography, but vss. 20-21 and 24-25 are later elements, since they are not found in either the Septuagint or Lucian's version.

I Kings 5–8 (English versions, but 5:15–8:66 in the Hebrew) deals with the building of the temple—that is, the preparations, the actual building operations, and the dedication of the completed building. The nucleus was originally in the temple archives, and perhaps after that in the biography, but the whole section has been considerably expanded by the author, himself neither builder nor architect, and it has been worked over more than once during succeeding centuries, especially by scribes who were thoroughly familiar with the layout and the furnishing of the postexilic temple.

Other passages which the author found in his source are Solomon's final settlement of accounts with Hiram king of Tyre (I Kings 9:11-14); the building of Millo (I Kings 9:23-25); and the reference to Solomon's ventures in overseas trade (I Kings 9:26-28). There was also in the Acts of Solomon an account of the visit of the queen of Sheba (I Kings 10:1-10, 13, vs. 9 being the author's own addition). The author also found many details concerning Solomon's fabulous wealth. How accurate these figures are may be judged from the statement that in taxation alone Solomon received 660 gold talents annually, that is, about twenty-five million dollars (I Kings 10:14). This material has been partly woven into the story of the queen of Sheba (I Kings 10:11-12), as if to impress her as well as us, and it is continued in the other parts of the chapter. In I Kings 11 there are some original verses from the biography (vss. 1a, 3a, 4a, 7-8), but the rest of vss. 1-8 is due to the author who saw in these foreign wives the cause of Solomon's departure from the proper Deuteronomic standards of life and the resultant disasters which ensued. Finally comes the author's concluding formula (I Kings 11:41-43).

B. The Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel.—This source is mentioned seventeen times in all, the first time being I Kings 14:19. Here, as before, the author refers the reader to his source if further information is required. The only two northern kings for whom this source is not cited are Jehoram son of Ahab, and Hoshea. Scholars generally agree that the source book came to an end before the reign of Hoshea, since it is not mentioned in connection with him. The omission in the case of Jehoram renders this unlikely. The more probable reason for the omissions is that in neither case did the actual course of the narrative allow the customary notice concerning the death and burial of the king. This notice invariably precedes the author's reference to his source. It may therefore be held that the source did include details from Hoshea's reign, though probably not the story of the final collapse. The source, as a whole, dates from about 725 B.C. The material from this source has been almost invariably embedded in a Deuteronomic framework, for the author used it boldly by way of illustrating his Deuteronomic theme.

C. The Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah.—This source is first mentioned in I Kings 14:29, and fifteen times altogether. The reader is referred to it for further information in the cases of all the kings of Judah, except for Ahaziah and three of the last four kings—Jehoahaz, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah. In addition, there is no reference in the case of Athaliah, who seized the throne at the death of her son Ahaziah and held it for seven years (II Kings 11:1, 4). The reason for the omission of any reference to the source in the case of Jehoram of Israel may be that the narrative gave the author no opportunity to insert his regular formulas of death, burial place, and source of further information. Exactly the same situation confronted him in the case of Ahabiah of Judah, that other king whom Jehu slew. It is noticeable that the cases of Jehoahaz, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah are similar to that of Hoshea, for in none of these cases are the death and the place of burial recorded. Like Hoshea, they all three ceased to reign before they died. Particularly are these omissions noteworthy, since the source is actually mentioned in the case of Jehoiakim (II Kings 24:5-6), who died in his bed, and whose death is recorded. We cannot therefore say, as some do, that the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah ceased to be written up in the days of Josiah. As in the parallel chronicle of the northern kings, it may well have included all but the closing scenes of the life of Zedekiah, the last of the Judean kings. The final date of it may therefore be as late as about 500 B.C. Once again, the material taken from this source has been regularly embedded in a Deuteronomistic framework, since the author used this material also in bold illustration of his theme.

III. Method

The author’s method is most clear in the second section of his work—the period of the two kingdoms—where he had to deal with two separate lines of kings (I Kings 12:1–11 Kings 17:41). He goes through the lists steadily, mentioning every successive king in the proper historical order, giving a place even to Zimri, who can scarcely be said to have reigned at all. His attempt to seize the throne at the death of Elah succeeded only to the extent of the elimination of all Elah’s kindred, and the occupation of Tirzah, the capital, for seven days (I Kings 16:8–20).

The author does his best to deal with both kingdoms contemporaneously. He does this by dealing with the whole story of one king from accession to death, and then going back to deal with all the kings of the other kingdom who began to reign after his succession. This has the disadvantage of mentioning on occasion a king of the other kingdom whose accession has not yet been recorded, but some anomalies were bound to arise whatever scheme had been adopted. The author’s scheme is as good as any, and indeed better than most. He begins this second section of the book by telling the story of Rehoboam’s accession with its immediate consequence in the revolt of the northern tribes and the activity of Jeroboam son of Nebat. Having thus mentioned the setting up of the Northern Kingdom of Israel and Jeroboam’s establishment of himself as king, the author continues the story of this monarch’s reign, records his death, and gives the name of his successor (I Kings 14:20). By this time Rehoboam has been succeeded in the Southern Kingdom by Abijam, and Abijam by Asa, so the author now turns to Judah to give an account of these three reigns. This brings the story of the south down to the end of Asa’s reign, an over-all period of sixty-one years. He then goes back to Nadab, Jeroboam’s successor in the north, and gives an account of all the kings of Israel who came to the throne while Asa was reigning in the south. Nadab having become king in Asa’s second year. This involves the reigns of five northern kings—Baasha, Elah, Zimri, Omri, and Ahab. Because of Asa’s long reign the author mentions nothing, except accidentally, about the Southern Kingdom from I Kings 15:23 to I Kings 22:41, the gap having been made even more pronounced by the later interpolation of the Elijah stories and some of the stories of Ahab.

After the death of Ahab we turn back again to his fourth year, when Jehoshaphat of Judah began to reign, but at I Kings 22:51 we return to the north. For Jehoshaphat is dead. With Ahaziah of Israel dying within the year from injuries received through a fall from an upstairs window, Jehoram of Israel soon becomes king. Here the author has to break with the regularity of his scheme because he cannot tell the story of this king’s death until he has told the story of J ehu’s revolt. He therefore leaves the story of Jehoram of Israel in his fifth year (II Kings 8:15) in order to give an account of the seven years of Jehoram of Judah and of the reign of Ahaziah of Judah up to the time when Ahaziah went to visit his cousin Jehoram, who was lying ill in J ezebel. He is forced to bring the southern story up to this point because he has to tell how J ehu slew two kings in one day. The account of J ehu’s revolt therefore necessarily follows the reference to Ahaziah’s visit to J ezebel (II Kings 8:29). The author’s scheme incidentally is further disrupted by the later insertion of II Kings 2:1–7:20, the first two chapters of which may have belonged to the Elisha narratives, and the last four of which certainly did.

After his account of J ehu’s reign, which concludes at II Kings 10:34–36, the author is able to resume his regular scheme Thus he now maintains without variation till the Northern Kingdom ceases to exist (II Kings 17:6; the rest of this chapter is by other and later writers). Thereafter, there being now but one kingdom, the author is able to complete the third and last section of his book, which begins at II Kings 18:1, by going straight ahead with the successive kings of Judah until he has brought the history down to his own time. The whole scheme is marked out most clearly by the formulas which the author used, both for the introduction of the successive kings and at the conclusion of the story of their reigns.

His chief difficulty consisted in the dating of the whole period. He did this by giving the year of the reign of the corresponding king in the other kingdom. Actually he had no other method of fixing a date than by such a synchronization, since in his day there was no dating event from which the counting of years could be made. There are discrepancies, three years one way from Jeroboam to J ehu, and twenty-one years the other way from J ehu to the fall of Samaria. Perhaps the errors were in the author’s sources, but it is more likely that the miscalcula-
In any case, it is more than probable that the difficulties of calculating a correct synchronization were well-nigh insurmountable. When, for instance, did Hezekiah actually become king of Judah? Was it 727 B.C., or 725, or 720, or 715? There is some justification for each date, and in this case the confusion certainly belongs in part to the sources. The whole problem of the chronology of the regal period is most complicated, and there is considerable literature on the subject.

IV. Purpose

The author's aim was quite definitely and deliberately religious, and his textbook was the original Deuteronomic nucleus, that is, the scroll which was found in the temple in 621 B.C., the basis of the reformation under King Josiah. He has written the whole history to show how sound the Deuteronomic teaching is, and ultimately to put forward King Josiah as the perfect example of what a Deuteronomic king should do.

The Deuteronomic scroll which Hilkiah found in the temple is a crystallization of the teachings of the great eighth-century prophets, Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, and Micah. The reform of Josiah was actually an attempt to establish their teaching as the official, national religion of the kingdom of Judah. With this there is associated the promise of the continuity of the Davidic dynasty, conditional always upon the proper observance of the Deuteronomic teaching (cf. II Sam. 7:12-16). The author's aim is set down in his account of David's final charge to Solomon (I Kings 2:2-4), a passage which is full of characteristic Deuteronomic phraseology. His purpose is to place before both king and people the injunction: "Keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and his testimonies, as it is written in the law of Moses, that thou mayest prosper in all that thou doest, and whithersoever thou turnest thyself." Then in vs. 4 comes the particular promise concerning the Davidic dynasty.

The basis of the teaching is to be read in Amos 3:2, with its statement of God's special choice of Israel to be his people out of all the families of the earth. This special choice involved the exclusive right of God to the worship and wholehearted allegiance of Israel. For Israel, "the Lord is our God, the Lord alone" (Deut. 6:4). The nucleus of Deuteronomy does not involve a full doctrine of monotheism, a doctrine which became explicit during the Exile, and is actually embodied in the later strata of Deuteronomy (e.g., 4:28, 33, 39). The first stratum of the Deuteronomic teaching, that which forms the basis of the work of the original author of the books of Kings, insists that Israel shall have nothing at all to do with any other gods. "Ye shall not go after other gods, of the gods of the people which are round about you" (Deut. 6:14). The Lord is a jealous God: he is a God who brooks no rival. There must be no slightest acknowledgment in any shape or form, no slightest tolerance for any other god within Israel. The Lord alone may be worshiped, and this by all, whether native Israelite or resident alien. Thus Solomon is severely criticized (I Kings 11:1-8) because he built shrines for the national deities of his many wives and concubines, and the various troubles of his reign are put down to this cause. Three foreign deities are listed as having their worship countenanced by Solomon: the Zidonian As-tarte, the Ammonite Melek (Milcom, Molech), and the Moabite Chemosh. Later (I Kings 15:13) Asa of Judah is commended on the ground that he removed his mother Maacah from the position of head of the women's household because she had set up an Asherah idol in Jerusalem. Coupled with this demand for the exclusive worship of the Lord, the author has also taken over the Deuteronomic idea of rigid retribution. Whoever fulfills the Deuteronomic law will assuredly prosper; whoever does not fulfill this law will undoubtedly meet with disaster. The whole history of the kings of both north and south is written to show the workings of this principle.

The author's insistence upon the exclusive worship of the Lord God of Israel works out in two ways. The first is that there shall be one place and one place alone where the one God may be worshiped. This place is Jerusalem, and in particular that temple which David proposed to build, but which his son Solomon actually built. It is difficult to see how the policy of one central sanctuary could have been at all practicable before the fall of Samaria in 722 B.C., since before that time the distances would have been too great, especially before the northern provinces of Israel were detached by the Assyrians in 794 B.C. But in the seventh century the territory of Judah was much circumscribed, and even Beer-sheba in the south was only fifty miles from the northerly border of Judah, which ran in a northwesterly direction close by Jerusalem itself. In any case, such a policy of centralization was essential in any approach toward a true monotheism, or even toward the establishment of the national worship of one God alone. Local shrines meant local loyalties, and unity was essential in the time of national revival which followed the fall of the Assyrian power. Further, the people had been accustomed from time immemorial to the idea of a multiplicity of shrines, each shrine with its own traditions, its own cult, and a special name for the god who was worshiped there. The history of religion shows that such differences lead almost inevitably to polytheism, and it is doubtful whether such ideas could ever be eradicated from the minds of the people, whatever had been said, and however forcefully, by the eighth-century prophets. Any king, therefore, who encouraged any worship, even of the Lord himself, at any shrine other than that at Jerusalem was held by the author to be a bad king and is condemned by him. This forthrightness and rigidity is to be seen at its clearest in the author's condemnation of Jehu (II Kings 10:31). The king undoubtedly believed himself to be a true worshiper of the Lord, so much so that he could make boast of his zeal for the Lord even to the strict and orthodox Jehonadab son of Rechab (II Kings 10:16). The author himself says that "Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel," but in spite of this he adds that "Jehu was not careful to walk in the law of the Lord the God of Israel with all his heart" (II Kings 10:31). This adverse judgment is due to the fact that Jehu "departed not from the sins of Jeroboam" (vs. 31) and continued the worship at Bethel and the local shrines of the north. No king of Israel thus escapes condemnation, not even the king who followed the dictates of Elijah and Elisha and wiped out the idolatrous house of Omri.

The second result of the author's adherence to the Deuteronomic teaching is his utter abhorrence of everything associated with the local shrines. He is severe against every form of idolatry. He commends every reform which involves the abolition of idols (I Kings 15:12). The climax of the extreme wickedness which made Ahab worse than all his predecessors was his making an idol (I Kings 16:33). Hezekiah is praised because of the clean sweep which he made of idolatrous objects, even including the bronze serpent which tradition associated with Moses. On the other hand, Manasseh did everything which he ought not to have done, and broke every law which the Deuteronomists had laid down. "He made his son to pass through the fire, and practised augury, and used enchantments, and dealt with them that had familiar spirits, and with wizards" (II Kings 21:6 ASV); all this in addition to his restoration of the apostasies of Ahab of Israel and his introduction of the star-gods of Assyria and their cults.

The doctrine of retribution is worked out precisely according to Deuteronomic theory. The difficulties of Solomon are ascribed to the fact that he countenanced the setting up of shrines for his wives. This is why Edom revolted from him under Hadad, and Syria under Rezon. Solomon's apostasy and his troubles are all put by the author at the end of his reign. In this the author was probably influenced by his theories of retribution, not being able to admit that these troubles overtook Solomon the builder of the temple while the king was still faithful to the trust which his father had imposed upon him. But the retribution is nevertheless severe. God is unwilling to destroy the Davidic line in spite of Solomon's sins, but he did raise up Jeroboam to punish the Davidic dynasty by rending away all but one tribe (I Kings 11:32). But although Jeroboam is raised up by God to punish the apostasy of Solomon, yet Jeroboam and his house do not escape judgment because he and his successors did not follow the Davidic model (I Kings 14:7-10). The adherence of the author to the strict Deuteronomic ideas of retributive justice is to be seen particularly in Amaziah's punishment of his father's murderers. He executed the murderers themselves, but he did not put their children to death as the ancient custom demanded. The author states that in doing this Amaziah was acting "according to what is written in the book of the law of Moses" (II Kings 15:6). This law is apparently Deut 24:16. Another instance of the author's loyalty to the Deuteronomic doctrine of retribution is his comment on Zinri, who managed to seize the throne of Israel for seven days. He can scarcely be said to have reigned at all, but what he did is most important from the author's point of view because it was he who executed the proper retribution on the house of Baasha in that they had continued in the religious separatism of Jeroboam (I Kings 16:12-15).

The author of the books of Kings has not a very great deal to say in line with the humanitarn doctrine of Deuteronomy, nor does he deal with the social crimes of bribery and corruption in the courts and oppression of the poor generally. Such details, important as they are, were outside his immediate purview. He was dealing with the history of the people as a whole. He painted on a broad canvas and with a large brush. Nevertheless he never lost an opportunity of condemning the immorallities which were associated with Canaanite worship, and commended those kings who abolished sacred prostitution, whether it involved males or females (I Kings 14:24; II Kings 23:7).

V. Formulas of the Framework

The author shows his adherence to Deuteronomic principles clearly in the framework into which he has set his material. He has standardized, mostly in Deuteronomic phraseology, his introductions to the reigns of the kings, and equally he has standardized his conclusions.

A. Introductions to the Reigns of the Kings of Judah.—There are four items: 1. The date of the king's accession is given in terms of the year of the reigning king of Israel: "Now in the eighteenth year of King Jeroboam the son of Nebat, Abijam began to reign over Judah" (I Kings 15:1). The same formula is found for every king of Judah from Abijam to Hezekiah, with slight variations in the cases of Jehoshaphat (I Kings 22:41) and Jehoash (II Kings 12:1). After Hezekiah this formula was necessarily abandoned, since in his day there ceased to be a king in Israel.

2. The age of the king at his accession: "Rehoboam was forty-one years old when he began to reign" (I Kings 14:21). This type of note is found for every king from Rehoboam to Zedekiah, though in the case of the boy Jehoash it comes first instead of second, doubtless because of the way in which the whole series of events is wrapped up with his excelling youthfulness.

3. The name of the queen mother: of Rehoboam son of Solomon, "His mother's name was Naamah the Amnonitess" (I Kings 14:21). This information, necessary in times of plural marriages, is given for every king from Rehoboam to Zedekiah, except for Jehoram and for Ahaz. There seems to be no particular reason for the omission in either case. In the case of Rehoboam the information is given twice, once in the usual position in I Kings 14:21, and again in the Masoretic Text at I Kings 14:31, after the notice of his death; but since this repetition is not found either in the Septuagint or in the parallel text of II Chronicles, it is safe to assume that it is an interpolation into the original text.

4. A brief summary of the king's attitude to the Deuteronomic laws with a definite comparison with "David his father." It is in respect of this last item that the author's didactic purpose is most clearly seen.

Only two kings earned the author's unqualified approbation, Hezekiah and Josiah (II Kings 18:3; 22:2). In each case the detailed account of his reforms, short in the case of Hezekiah but very long in the case of Josiah, is followed by the statement that there never was such a king either before or after (II Kings 18:5; 23:25). There is increased emphasis concerning Josiah, both in respect of the initial approbation and the final summary. In the cases of six other kings the author's praise is modified. This is true even in the case of Asa, who evidently was a great reformer and was responsible for greatly increasing the temple treasures.

The modification is that although "the heart of Asa was wholly true to the Lord all his days" (I Kings 15:14), yet "the high places [i.e., the provincial, upcountry shrines] were not taken away." The five kings, apart from Asa, were Jehoshaphat, Jehoash, Amaziah, Azariah-Uzziah, and Jotham. Each of these kings "did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord," as his father had done before him, "yet the high places were not taken away, and the people still sacrificed and burned incense on the high places" (I Kings 22:43; II Kings 12:2; 14:3-4; 15:9-11, 34-35).

The remaining ten kings are all severely criticized in that they "did what was evil in the sight of the Lord" (II Kings 8:18, 27; 21:2, 20; 23:22, 37; 24:9, 19), with modifications in the formula in the cases of Abijam (I Kings 15:3) and Ahaz (II Kings 16:2). The author here shows his abhorrence of any worship at any shrine other than the temple at Jerusalem. The existence of the separate Northern Kingdom was a source of great concern to him because it weaned men away from Jerusalem and encouraged that worship at the local shrines which the author, as a good Deuteronomist, so thoroughly detested. His comments on the wickedness of all the kings of Israel (see below) epitomize this attitude. This is particularly evident in the case of Jeroboam son of Nebat, and later, Ahab son of Omri. His intense dislike of Jeroboam is concerned with that king's institution of the rival worship of the north, especially the cultus at Bethel, while his hatred of Ahab is concerned more with the sacrifices at the high places than with his condonation of the worship of the Tyrian Baal. The Elijah stories are no part of the original book. Our estimate therefore of Ahab is largely governed by material which the Deuteronomic editor did not use. Three southern kings are severely criticized for doing as Ahab and the kings of Israel had done. These are Ahab's son-in-law Ahaziah (II Kings 8:27), Ahaz (II Kings 16:8) and Manasseh (II Kings 21:3). The main ground of this complaint is that they "sacrificed and burned incense on the high places, and on the hills, and under every green tree" (II Kings 16:4). Manasseh now becomes the type of wicked king (II Kings 21:20). After this the basis of criticism changes somewhat. Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim are condemned because they did as "their fathers" (II Kings 23:32, 37), and Jehoiachin and Zedekiah because they did as Jehoiakim had done (II Kings 24.9, 19). These comments are the work not of the original Deuteronomic author, but of the later Deuteronomic editor of about 550 B.C.

B. Introductions to the Reigns of the Kings of Israel.—Here there are four items: 1. The date of the king's accession is given in terms of the corresponding year of the reigning king of Judah. "In the third year of Asa king of Judah, Baasha the son of Ahijah began to reign over all Israel." (I Kings 15:35).

2. The name of the capital from which he reigned: This was part of the king's offense, since it involved a revolt from David's line reigning in Jerusalem, the only place where, according to the author, either religion or state could properly find its center of loyalty. The capital is mentioned in every case from Baasha onward, first Tirzah until Omri built Samaria, and then Samaria from the time of Ahab until the end of the kingdom of Israel.

3. The length of the king's reign: This is generally in the introduction, but the regular scheme is necessarily varied in the cases of Jeroboam son of Nebat and of Jehu.

4. A brief verdict on the king's character, always condemning him in that "he did what was evil in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the way of Jeroboam and in his sin which he made Israel to sin" (I Kings 15:34). The latter part of this condemnation varies slightly, and Shallum (II Kings 15:15), who reigned but a month, escapes criticism altogether. In the cases of Elah and his murderer, Zimri, the condemnation is found in the concluding formulas, and the reference in the former case does not include Jeroboam. This regular condemnation applies, as we have seen, even to Jehu, who was full of zeal for the Lord and destroyed Baal out of Israel. Even Jehu did not depart from the sins of Jeroboam wherewith he made Israel to sin, though the author does not say that "he did evil in the sight of the Lord," but rather that he "was not careful to walk in the law of the Lord the God of Israel with all his heart" (II Kings 10:31).

The concluding formulas for the kings of both kingdoms have no particular didactic purpose. They refer the reader to the "book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah [Israel]," record the king's death and the place of his burial, and give the name of his son. The formulas are omitted in particular cases where, for instance, the king's reign was cut short by deposition (Jehoahaz, Jehoichin, Zedekiah in the south, and Hoshea in the north), or by assassination, as in the cases of Joram of Israel and Ahaziah of Judah, the two kings whom Jehu slew in one day. There are necessarily further variations when the successor was a usurper (this for the north only, since David's line was unbroken in the south apart from the interregnum of Athaliah), and when the manner of the king's death was unusual.

We thus see that the whole framework of the author's account of the reigns of the kings depends upon his Deuteronomic principles.

There never ought to have been any breakaway from the south, and there never ought to have been any worship except only in Jerusalem. The worship at any high place was illegitimate, and the cult of the golden calves was wickedness almost beyond words. It combined idolatry with the vice of separation from Jerusalem.

VI. The Two Deuteronomic Editors

The generally accepted opinion is that the author of the books of Kings finished his work about 600 B.C., soon after the death of King Josiah, and that there was a further and thorough Deuteronomic revision about 550 B.C., which was part of a general revision of all the national traditions from Genesis to Kings. It was the time when the two earlier strata of the Pentateuch, known as J and E, were combined with the Deuteronomic material. Thus the editor who created JED as a combined work was also the Deuteronomic editor of the other historical books, Joshua, Judges, and Samuel. His framework for the book of Judges is generally agreed to be modeled on that of his predecessor, the original author of Kings. The Deuteronomic principles, as this second editor of Kings envisaged them, are set out in full in Judg. 2:11-23. The concluding chapters of the books of Kings belong to the same outlook.

A. First Editor (ca. 610 B.C.).—Opinion varies as to the exact date of the original author, that is, the man who used the three main sources which we have discussed—the Acts of Solomon and the Books of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel and of Judah. Gustav Hölscher maintained that there was a pre-Deuteronomic book of Kings just as in the case of Samuel. This suggestion has been favored by Otto Eissfeldt, and has gained some ground. Hölscher, however, does not admit that the centralization of the worship belonged to Josiah's reign, but that this king's reforms were on the basis of E. Thus Hölscher's date for his pre-Deuteronomic book of Kings is not materially different from the generally accepted date. He would date his original book near the end of Josiah's reign, and would then say that the re-editing of the book was part of the general revision of all the extant books, about 550 B.C. Most scholars, however, believe that Josiah's reformation did include the idea of centralization of the worship at Jerusalem.

But assuming that the original author of the books of Kings worked under the spell of good King Josiah's glorious days, should one also maintain that he wrote after the death of Josiah at Megiddo in 609 B.C.? If so, then the author deliberately ignored the king's untimely death. Such an assumption involves a great deal more than is generally realized, because this disaster beyond question would destroy his whole thesis that those who obey the Deuteronomic laws live long and prosper. Such nevertheless is the position held by Pfeiffer \(^{14}\) and other scholars generally. They hold that the original book ended at II Kings 23:28, but did not include the last phrase of vs. 25, nor vs. 26-27. It is a much more satisfactory solution of the problem to assume that the original Deuteronomic author concluded his work before the year of Josiah's death, and so was active rather toward the end of the period between 621 and 609 B.C. There is every indication that the collapse after Josiah's death was sudden and complete. The death of Josiah meant the end of Judah's independence, since Necho deposed Jehoahaz and made his pro-Egyptian brother Eliakim-Jehoiachim king in his stead. It is most difficult to see how the author could have done his work in the face of such an obvious denial of the truth of the position he was writing to demonstrate. Every shred of evidence was against him.

The later editor (ca. 550 B.C.) had therefore to meet the difficulty of Josiah's untoward death and thus to maintain the Deuteronomic principles. This he was in a position to do because he had seen in his own time a change in the fortune of the captive Jehoahaz away in exile (II Kings 25:27-30). Apparently a case could be put up for the Deuteronomic theory of life. In spite of the Exile and all its attendant woes, everything still was going to work out correctly according to the Deuteronomic pattern. The disaster which had fallen upon Josiah could still be explained. It was "because of all the provocations with which Manasseh had provoked" God (II Kings 29:26). These idolatries and all his abominations had created such a dead weight of sin that even the superlatively pious Josiah was not able to avoid the inevitable penalty of such flagrant violation of Deuteronomic principles. Therefore the reference to the thirty-one years of Josiah's reign (II Kings 22:1) appears to be an insertion by the later editor, whose conclusion to the original work begins with the "neither" of II Kings 23:25.\(^{15}\)

Thus the incident of II Kings 22:12-20 should be ascribed to the later editor.

The fact that the reader is referred to the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah for further information concerning Josiah (II Kings 23:28) is no evidence that the author completed his work after the death of King Josiah and before the destruction of the city in 586 B.C. If the later editor could add a similar reference to his story of the reign of Jehoahaz, who died in 597 B.C. (II Kings 21:5), then he could equally have added the reference in connection with the death of Josiah. We find ourselves, therefore, driven to assume that the original author completed his work before the death of Josiah at a time when all was still well and when Judah was still independent. This acquires the author of falsifying the history of the death of Josiah.

B. Second Editor (ca. 550 B.C.).—The second Deuteronomic editor must have been active later than 561 B.C., since he knew of the exaltation of the exiled Jehoachin (II Kings 25:27-30). He must, however, have finished his work well before 538 B.C., the year when Cyrus captured Babylon, for in that case he would certainly have reflected something of the exuberant enthusiasm of Second Isaiah (Isa. 40-55). The original author was chiefly concerned with the worship at the high places and with the fact that the Northern Kingdom had broken away from the south. The later editor was more concerned with the idolatries. In this he reflects the concern of the exiled Jews, as can be seen from the emphasis placed on this by Second Isaiah. His insertions are also characterized by a less venomous attitude to the Northern Kingdom of Israel. By his time Judah had gone the way of Israel, and both kingdoms had been equally guilty of apostasy. Judah was in no position to preen herself on a favor from God which had been denied to Israel. This is the period when Jeremiah and Ezekiel were looking forward to a restoration of both kingdoms under a single king of the line of David.

There is evidence that the later editor shared this point of view. One passage which is likely to come from him is I Kings 4:20-26. Vs. 27 follows on naturally from vs. 19, so that the intervening verses are easily seen to be an interpolation. They were written in some locality to the east of the Euphrates, for the Hebrew of vs. 24 says "beyond the river" (see ASV mg.), meaning to the "west of the Euphrates," according to the rendering of the Revised Standard Version. In vs. 20, 25 we have a picture of idyllic bliss in a united kingdom such as could scarcely have been envisaged by the earlier author. Another passage which is probably due to this later editorial activity is the supplement to the life of Solomon which is found in I Kings 11:14-40. The introductory verse is reminiscent of the ideas set forth by the editor of Judges, who thought of God as delivering or selling the wayward children of Israel into the power of their oppressors (e.g., Judg. 4:2; 6:1). Further, there is an expectation of a united kingdom (I Kings 11:38-39), which may be safely ascribed to the later editor. The whole section is much confused, so that Hugo Winckler,\textsuperscript{15} using the variant story of the Septuagint, claimed to find in it two distinct narratives—one told of a boy named Adad who fled to Egypt in David's time and was protected there by Pharaoh who gave him his queen's sister as wife. To this combined story there is added the account of Rezon of Damascus and his activities (I Kings 11:23-29). These three mishances, all of them unfavorable to Solomon's prestige, belong to the earlier part of Solomon's reign, not to the end, as is suggested by their present position.

The story of Jeroboam's revolt in I Kings 12:1-24 bears marks of later editing under Deuteronomic influence. Vs. 15 presupposes 11:31, and the story of vss. 21-24 is at variance with the plain statement of 14:30, which says that there was continual war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam. The reference to Shemaiah and his oracle would thus appear to be of later origin, showing traces of the less hostile attitude of the second editor. There are two passages which show a friendly concern for the north unknown to the original author (II Kings 13:22-25; 14:25-27). The attitude of the later editor to both kingdoms is also shown in II Kings 17:7-20; 21:13-14. It is equally probable that he made considerable interpolations into Solomon's dedicatory prayer in I Kings 8.

\textbf{VII. Tales of the North}

The original book of Kings (ca. 610 B.C.) consisted of I Kings 2:1-12, and then ran from I Kings 3:1 to II Kings 23-25a. Into this book there have been interpolated numerous narratives which undoubtedly originated in the Northern Kingdom of Israel. They come from three of the four unnamed sources which have provided the basis of the material used in the completed books of Kings. These three sources were composed of stories which collected around the outstanding figures of the north—Elijah, Elisha, and Ahab. There is considerable difference of opinion among scholars as to the precise allocation of these stories to the various sources, and as to the exact relation between the different narratives. Perhaps the best allocation is to be separated from the Carmel-Horeb sequence. The story of Naboth's vineyard, as many scholars have maintained, might very well belong to the author of I Kings 17-18. The Septuagint and Lucian place the chapter immediately after the Carmel-Horeb story, and there is much to be said for this order, since ch. 21 has closer affinities with chs. 17-19 than with chs. 20 and 22, and it certainly interrupts the sequence of these two chapters. Pfeiffer holds that ch. 21 was inserted by the original author of 610 B.C., and there are indeed evident traces of Deuteronomic style, especially in vs. 20b-24. On the other hand, there is considerable dramatic power in the telling of the story of Naboth's vineyard, so much so that it is difficult to resist the conclusion that the author of chs. 17-19 is also the author of ch. 21. This brings II Kings 9:1-10:31 into the same cycle, since this passage is the sequel to ch. 21. However, many scholars maintain that the author of II Kings 9:1-10:31 is also the author of I Kings 20; 22; II Kings 3:4-27; 6:8-23; 6:24-7:20, and there are indeed a number of coincidences, although these are of limited significance.

There is also a measure of disagreement concerning the exact limits of the Elisha cycle. Burney has noted a number of similarities of expression in the Elijah stories on the one hand, especially I Kings 17-19, and in II Kings 2:1-18 and 4:1-37 on the other, so that he is inclined to suppose a common authorship. He would add, though tentatively, II Kings 5 and, more uncertainly still, II Kings 8:7-15; 13:14-19. A more adequate explanation of the similarities of expression is that the Elisha stories were written by a less competent author in imitation of the Elijah cycle. They certainly do not show the same dramatic power in spite of the similarities of expression. The prophet Elisha played a decisive part in the shaping of the events of his time, in many respects more outstanding than that played by his illustrious predecessor. Perhaps it was this knowledge of the political importance of Elisha's work which led his biographer to write up the traditions which had gathered around him, beginning with the claim that he was the true successor of Elijah. This claim is given in II Kings 2:9 and 15 in the statement that Elisha received the double portion, that is, the heir's portion of Elijah's spirit. Following this commissioning of the prophet Elisha comes a series of stories, some of which are reflections of incidents in the life of Elijah, for example, the sustenance of the widow (II Kings 4:1-7) and the resurrection of a hostess's son (4:8-37). To these must be added the story of II Kings 8:1-6, where Elisha calls for a famine of seven years as against Elijah's three, a narrative which is connected with the woman whose son Elisha revived from death. There is one story, much longer than the rest, which approaches in excellence the literary standards of the Elijah cycle that of Naaman the leper and the Israelite maid. It nevertheless belongs rather to the wonder-story group of the Elisha cycle, all of which is told to enhance the more-than-human power of the miracle-working man of God, and is not as much concerned with the religious work of the prophet as is the case in the Elijah cycle. The powers of Elisha are superhuman. They partake of the quality of that mana which is constantly met with in the study of primitive religion. Any cavalier treatment of this holy man meets with sudden and awful disaster, even to small boys who laugh at his baldness (II Kings 2:23-25). This magical mana power is still present even in his dead body (II Kings 13:21).

The Elisha narratives may be later than the Elijah cycle, but were necessarily written before the end of the Northern Kingdom. The date for the Elijah cycle is perhaps about 800 B.C., and that of the Elisha cycle about 750 B.C. It may very well be that the author of the Elisha cycle added the Elijah stories to his own collection, so as to make one complete collection dealing with prophetical activity in the north. Neither author saw anything wrong with the Yahweh worship of the north so long as it was not contaminated by foreign cults such as that of Jezebel's Tyrian Baal. The work was probably incorporated by the later Deuteronomic editor of about 550 B.C.: it is unlikely that stories in any way favorable to the north could have been introduced either much before his time or after the trouble which arose over the building of the second temple in Zerubbabel's time (Ezra 4:8). It seems likely that the Ahab narratives had a different origin from that of the Elijah-Elisha cycles and that they formed part of an independent story of the life of Ahab, who was a great builder and one of the most successful kings the north ever had. It has often been pointed out that in I Kings 20 and 22:1-39 there is hostility not to Ahab but to Syria—a fact which scarcely agrees with the partiality of Elisha for anyone who would destroy the house of Omri. On the other hand, there is no marked antagonism to Ahab in the prophetic narratives as a whole. The hostility is against Jezebel rather than against Ahab, and later against Jehoram, Ahab's son. After all, it was not until the twentieth year of Jehoram's reign that the prophetic revolution took place which sent Jehu on the throne. There would therefore appear to be some justification for assuming that all the undated incidents in the Elisha cycle occurred during the reign of Jehoram son of Ahab (852-843 B.C.). Every such story can be placed between Jehoram’s accession (II Kings 1:17) and his assassination (II Kings 9:24), except for two short narratives which are definitely fixed by their contents in the reign of Joash son of Jehoahaz (800-785 B.C.). The other story of the “impudent” Amaziah is necessarily to be placed within the story of Amaziah’s reign. It is alleged that the insertion of all these stories into the reign of Jehoram has caused a certain amount of confusion and discrepancy. However, the discrepancies are not as pronounced as some critics have maintained. The state of peace which is presumed in the Naaman story (II Kings 5) is actually one of complete Israeliite subjection to Syria, and this may well be part and parcel of the disastrous atmosphere set forth in II Kings 8:12. Further, Elisha may well have preserved enough friendship with the king to allow for the offer of II Kings 4:13, and also for the state of affairs in II Kings 5 and elsewhere. As has been said already, the revolution did not take place until Jehoram had reigned for over eleven years.

In view both of the many similarities, and also of the many differences which have been noted in all these northern narratives, it seems best to assume three separate origins for the three different cycles, but an interweaving of all three prior to their incorporation by the second Deuteronomic editor.

VIII. Tales of the South

The southern narratives are those which are found in II Kings 18:13-20:19. They comprise the story of Sennacherib’s attack on Judah and Jerusalem (18:13-19:37), the account of Hezekiah’s sickness (20:1-11), and the narrative of Merodach-baladan’s embassy (20:12-19).

The story of Sennacherib’s attack contains three distinct elements; first, 18:13 (except for the date) together with 18:17-19:8, 36:37; second, 18:14-16; and third, 19:9b-35. The second of these (18:14-16) is not found in the parallel Isa. 56:1-22, and it is certainly the most clearly historical of the three stories. It shows marked agreements with Sennacherib’s own account of the campaign as found on the Taylor Cylinder, especially in respect of the “thirty talents of gold.” These three verses are from the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah and belong to the first edition of the books of the Kings, about 610 B.C. The date given in 18:13, however, is difficult, both for this annalistic record itself and for the other two narratives. If Samaria did indeed fall in Hezekiah’s sixth year as 18:10 maintains, then Sennacherib’s expedition of 701 B.C. was not in Hezekiah’s fourteenth year. There are two alternatives. Either the embassy was immediately prior to Sennacherib’s expedition and “the fourteenth year” is right and the embassy was about 714 B.C. In this case “the fourteenth year” refers to the events of ch. 20. Hezekiah’s sickness, and Merodach-baladan’s embassy. Both dates are sound for such activity on the part of this Mesopotamian firebrand He had set himself up as king in Babylon from 720-710 B.C., and again, though insecurely, for about three months in 702 B.C.

The story of the Rabshakeh and his threats (18:17-19 9, 36-37) is compatible with the story of Hezekiah’s submission to the Assyrian king and his payment of tribute on the assumption that in the end the Assyrian Sennacherib was not satisfied with anything less than the occupation of Jerusalem and the deportation of its inhabitants. Especially is this possible since the tribute appears not to have been paid at the time, but sent afterwards to Nineveh (see the Taylor Cylinder 21). According to the Assyrian account, Sennacherib did actually invest Jerusalem, but there is no record of his having captured it. The explanation given in II Kings 19:7 is that he heard a rumor and forthwith lifted the siege to hurry back to Nineveh. According to 19:9a this rumor was concerned with the advance of a certain Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia. The statement presents considerable difficulty since this king probably did not commence his reign until 691 B.C. Further, even if his advance should be the one mentioned in the Taylor Cylinder, the reference is still difficult because we know that this Egyptian attempt to relieve Jerusalem was ignominiously defeated by the Babylonians, and it certainly did not cause Sennacherib to raise the siege and hurry home. This actual defeat would account very satisfactorily for Hezekiah’s abortive submission (II Kings 18:14-16), since it would then be clear to him that all hope of help had gone. It is better therefore to assume that the reference to Tirhakah of Ethiopia is a mistake, and that the rumor which sent Sennacherib home so quickly was a rumor of an incipient rebellion by a certain Bel-ibni, whom Sennacherib had placed on the throne of Babylon as vassal king in place of the restless Merodach-baladan.

The third account of the deliverance of Jerusalem from the might of the Assyrian king consisted originally of II Kings 19:9b-20, 32-34, since the “therefore” of vs. 32 follows quite naturally on vs. 20. Into this there has been interpolated, perhaps by the original author, what purports to be a genuine oracle of Isaiah of Jerusalem given in the well-known qinăh (lamentation) 3:2 measure, followed with a prose account of one of those signs which formed a feature of Israel's method. There is no particular reason why the main body of this account should not have been inserted by the original author. It is noteworthy that the story does not involve a tremendous slaughter of the Assyrian army. It promises that the king of Assyria "shall not come to this city or shoot an arrow there, or come before it with a shield or cast up a mound against it. By the way that he came, by the same he shall return, and he shall not come into this city" (II Kings 19:32-33). The story of the miraculous destruction of the whole of the Assyrian army depends wholly on vs. 35, a verse which has no connection at all with what precedes and none with what follows it, since the next verses belong to the first of the three accounts of these incidents. It is possible that this particular verse was inserted by some later editor who did not think that the deliverance was spectacular enough, and was influenced by some such writings as Ps. 46 and 91.

The two narratives in ch. 20 probably belong to the fourteenth year of King Hezekiah, that is, 714 B.C. (II Kings 18:13), some thirteen years before the attack of Sennacherib, which is told in detail in II Kings 18-19. The first narrative concerns Hezekiah's sickness and, except for vs. 6, was taken from the Isaiah biography by the original author of 610 B.C. Vs. 6 is probably his insertion, based in part on a calculation subtracting fourteen years of the king's reign from a total of twenty-nine years (II Kings 18:2), and for the rest acting as a connecting link between the account of the sickness and the siege of Jerusalem by Sennacherib, the two incidents having been wrongly made contemporaneous.

The second narrative (II Kings 20.12-19) concerns the embassy of Merodach-baladan, who was seeking to stir up trouble throughout the Assyrian Empire (ca. 714 B.C.). There is no reason to suppose that this story came from anywhere other than the Isaiah biography, except that vs. 16-18 must have been worked over by a later editor who knew the story of the destruction and spoliation of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. and of the Exile. They are probably the work of the later editor, who displaced an original conclusion to the story.

In addition to these last-mentioned narratives which have been drawn from the biography of Isaiah, there are also a number of glosses and insertions from later times. Some of these were unknown to the Chronicler (ca. 250 B.C.) who used the books of the Kings as his major source for his history of the whole period of the kingdoms. Others of them were not even known to the translators of the Septuagint (ca. 200-150 B.C.).

Many of these glosses are due to the influence of the compilers of the Priestly Code, and deal with details of the temple. Such glosses are to be found particularly in I Kings 8 and in the quotation from Gen. 35:10 which is given in I Kings 18:31. The small section in I Kings 6.11-14 is not found at all in the Septuagint, while I Kings 8:1-11 has been worked over by Priestly Code editors so that it now presents a Masoretic text materially different from that in the Septuagint. Other passages which may have been considerably worked over in the earlier part of the second century B.C. are I Kings 4:20-5:14; 5:15-7:51.

In conclusion, the earliest document which is embodied in the present books of Kings dates from the tenth century B.C.—the biography of Solomon's grandeur, including the account of his accession to the throne. The main work was formed toward the end of the seventh century (ca. 610 B.C.), not long before the death of good King Josiah. There was further considerable editorial work about the middle of the sixth century B.C., while other editors added their quotas for another four centuries, making an over-all total of some eight hundred years.

IX. Modern Significance

Part of the message of the completed books of Kings belongs to its own day, namely the localization of the worship of God in one particular place. Israel now, equally with other peoples, knows that God is not a respecter of places any more than of persons. This fact is already recognized in Solomon's dedicatory prayer: "But will God indeed dwell on the earth? Behold, heaven and the highest heaven cannot contain thee; how much less this house which I have built!" (I Kings 8:27). The passing years have made this more and more plain, for there is no place at all where a man can go and be away from God (cf. Ps. 139:7-12).

The perennial religious significance of the books of Kings is to be found in the full recognition of monotheism, which is evident in the work of the later editors, and in the stern opposition to all those things in worship which detract from the highest and purest conception of morality. The authors will not countenance in the least any thought of any other deity. This is because they know that the God of Israel is different from any other god. It is possible and it is permitted, for instance, to associate prostitu-
Interpretation with the worship of other gods. This is neither possible nor permissible in connection with the worship of the God of Israel. He is not that sort of god. If any king introduces such behavior into the temple at Jerusalem, then he is desecrating the temple and there is no worship of the one true God. A man may "pass his children through the fire" to another god (though, as the later editors would say, they are not gods), but he cannot do this in sacrifice to the one true God. Images of other so-called deities may be found in other lands, but they are not permitted in Yahweh's land. Certainly he cannot be worshiped through such media. Once again, he is not that sort of god. None of the furniture which has association with any of these things can be permitted, for this heritage is too precious ever to be subjected to the risk of contamination and debasement which such things inevitably involve.

The later editor (ca. 550 B.C.) has learned also that this God is ready to pardon and to forgive. The experiences of the Exile had taught that. The earlier editor knew something of this in the partial way which his limited experience had taught him. For every man who sins against his neighbor and repents, in time of national defeat, and in every time of famine, plague, and disaster, this God will hear and forgive. The later editor (I Kings 8:44-61) knew that, wherever God's people are scattered, God forgives those who turn to him "with all their mind and with all their heart" (vs. 48). This God, too, is not willing that any should be oppressed. Such an attitude is plain in the northern narrative of Naboth and his vineyard. The conduct of Jezebel is a definite contradiction of those principles which are right and proper in Yahweh's land. He is strong against oppression and injustice of every kind, and this both to condemn the guilty and to exalt the righteous.

But most of all this justice of God shows itself in his stern and rigorous condemnation of sin. No man can sin without setting in motion an inevitable train of consequences. The dire results of sin in sorrow and trouble and death are bound to come. Further, a king like Jeroboam son of Nebat or like Manasseh of Judah can bring his people to disaster and to a doom from which there is no escape. The Deuteronomic teaching is in many ways a stepping-stone to other and deeper truth. This much—the inevitable doom which sin brings in its train—stands for all ages. With it there is the promise shining through at the very end of the books of Kings, a promise of a new beginning when the price has been paid. Out of the sorrows of the Exile there dawns a new hope. The exiled king is restored to some measure of freedom, an earnest of better things to come.

I. The Last Days of David (1:1–2:46)

These first two chapters form one section. They were originally the continuation of II Sam. 9–20, but were detached so as to provide a suitable introduction to the story of Solomon's reign. They are thoroughly lively in style and well written. The author evidently had access to firsthand information of the inner life of the court with its plots and counterplots. So clearly is this the case that we may safely assume that he used a court narrative as his source. Nothing of these two chapters is found in Chronicles. Presumably the Chronicler did not wish to perpetuate the memory of any suggestion of difficulty or doubt concerning Solomon's accession to the throne.

The First Book of Kings.—This book is not commonly considered a very fertile field for cultivation. The quarrels between cliques of a court on the way to dissolution, the petty acts of kings who left no lasting footprints, the elaborate description of a temple and a royal palace whose traces have been erased by centuries of war and change—all these seem irrelevant to enduring spiritual values.

But along what at first glance may appear to be a desert road are discovered some oases (see Intro., pp. 15-16). Also one can see the pits of primitive ethics from which the Hebrew-Christian tradition has dug some of its foundation stones of personal conduct and public policy. Amid the interplay of the secular and the spiritual may be seen emerging some regulative principles in the ever-fresh problem of the re-
2 Wherefore his servants said unto him, Let there be sought for my lord the king a young virgin: and let her stand before the king, and let her cherish him, and let her lie in thy bosom, that my lord the king may get heat.

3 So they sought for a fair damsel throughout all the coasts of Israel, and found Abishag a Shunammite, and brought her to the king.

The Deuteronomist has interpolated two short passages into this court story: 2:2-4, 10-12. The first of these represents David's deathbed charge to his successor, and it is couched in language which bears an unmistakable Deuteronomist character in every phrase. The second passage contains the obituary notice by the editor, together with the usual information concerning the new king. It may well be that 2:27 also is due to the Deuteronomist editor since it depends upon I Sam. 2:27-36, a passage which he largely rewrote in his own words.

A. Rivals for the Throne (1:1-53)

It is evident that according to popular expectation Adonijah was the legitimate heir. He was the eldest surviving son, and while this in itself by no means settled the matter his claim was supported by the great majority of the court party, including Abiathar and Joab, the two men who had been most loyal to David through the years and most intimate in his counsels. Adonijah was ousted from the throne by means of a plot conceived in the first place by Nathan the prophet and Bathsheba, Solomon's mother—the woman who had originally been the wife of Uriah the Hittite. The most that can be said for their nominee is that David may have made a secret promise to the mother that Solomon should succeed to the throne. Even of this there is legitimate doubt, and it is most likely that Bathsheba's statement in vs. 13 was a deliberate fabrication invented to impose upon the aged king. The position of queen mother was one of considerable prestige and influence, and was well worthy of the efforts of an ambitious woman (cf. 15:13).

1. David's Incapacity (1:1-4)

1:1-4. David, aged now approximately seventy years, has become impotent. Every step is taken to rejuvenate him, but without avail. He therefore must cease to be king, and make way for a successor.

Most commentators take these verses to refer to the collapse of the aged king's strength through senile decay. It is assumed that it was a general loss of bodily vigor which led to the necessity for his abdication. But these verses are most valuable in that they provide evidence of "the hole of the pit" whence Israel was dug. They show that in the early days the Hebrews had ideas in common with the peoples by whom they were surrounded. Just as David thought that he could not worship Israel's God except on Israel's soil (I Sam. 26:19; cf. II Kings 5:17-18), so it was believed that the fertility of lations between church and state. Amid the bloody milieu of intrigue and ruthlessness the roots of prophecy take hold.

As the record begins, the reins of government are slipping from the feeble fingers of the senile David. When the ruling power shifts, the fundamental principles of a nation's government are tested. The strength of the American democratic constitution was never better demonstrated than when in 1945 it survived the death of a powerful president during the conduct of a great war. But the crude little kingdom which Saul and David had fashioned from Israel's tribes was not yet familiar with even the simplest forms of free government.

veiling of one whose name is synonymous
4 And the damsel was very fair, and cherished the king, and ministered to him: but the king knew her not.

5 ¶ Then Adonijah the son of Haggith exalted himself, saying, I will be king: and he prepared him chariots and horsemen, and fifty men to run before him.

The king. 4 The maiden was very beautiful; and she became the king's nurse and ministered to him; but the king knew her not.

5 Now Adonijah the son of Haggith exalted himself, saying, "I will be king"; and he prepared for himself chariots and horsemen, and fifty men to run before him.

the soil and the general prosperity of the people were bound up with the fertility of the king. David by this time is old and decrepit and his sexual vigor is in question. Attempts are made to remedy the situation. The first cure is to heap clothes upon his bed in order to secure such physical heat as might render him capable. When this fails a search is made for the most beautiful young woman in the land. Great emphasis is placed on her charms. The LXX supports this by translating in vs. 2, "and let her excite him and lie with him" (cf. the use of θέαω in Aeschylus, Prometheus Bound, 1. 590). The fact that the king had no intercourse with her is decisive in the story and not a mere interesting addendum. If David was impotent he could no longer be king. Further, there is no point in the story of 2:12-25 unless Abishag the Shunammite had been more than an old man's nurse. She must have been reckoned as David's wife or Solomon would never have interpreted Adonijah's request as a bid for the throne. Also, why should a king be expected to abdicate because he cannot keep warm in bed even when clothes are piled upon him?

This explanation, dependent upon the necessity of the physical vigor of the king, is in line with the ideas of primitive peoples generally, and indeed finds present-day support in the Near East. There was an occasion when the authority of Ibn Saud over his Arabs actually depended on such a factor (H. C. Armstrong, Lord of Arabia [Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, 1938], p. 106). A number of instances have been collected by James G. Frazer of the killing of the king when his bodily vigor fails, for "the fertility of men, of cattle, and of the crops is believed to depend sympathetically on the generative power of the king" (The Golden Bough [Abridged ed.; London: Macmillan & Co., 1923], pp. 264-83, especially p. 269). There is no need to assume the existence in old Israel of the ritual of the sacred marriage, annually performed in the Mesopotamian cults, since it is clear from the story that the search for the ravishing young woman is exceptional. It is possible, nevertheless, to see here some evidence of primitive ideas among the Hebrews at the beginning of the first millennium B.C.

2. ADONIJAH IS PROCLAIMED KING (1:5-10)

Adonijah had already taken steps to forward his claim to the throne by providing himself with chariot and charioteers, together with fifty outrunners to run in front of his chariot. This conduct was closely similar to that of Absalom when he had sought to establish his claim to the throne (II Sam. 15:1). David allowed Absalom to do this with valor and strength reveals the stark realism of the O.T. record. The writers did not glamorize their heroes at the expense of truth.

5. The Right to Rule.—The writer implies that Adonijah had grown up an undisciplined and ambitious youth whose handsome physique gave him a certain popular appeal. He either used one of the court factions to further his designs on the throne, or allowed himself to be used as a pawn by the designing courtiers. He exalted himself, saying, I will be king. Aligning himself with Joab the soldier and Abiathar the priest, Adonijah staged a religious festival, thus adopting a method common to political usurpers, that of enlisting both the army and the church in support of dynastic designs. The twentieth century still witnesses the overthrow of governmental rules according to the pattern of Adonijah. But the world's conscience has at least so improved that political aspirants feel obliged to offer a more adequate reason than did David's son, when he said, I will be king. Candidates for governmental office must claim that their motive is to serve, and our dangerous lack of discipline stems not from making the home too "child-centered" but too "individual-centered." Parents in their busy absorption leave home life at loose ends. Children grow up without having learned restraint and co-operation, then transfer their undisciplined individualism to new homes of their own, and the vicious circle continues to mutilate lives and multiply divorces.
6 And his father had not displeased him at any time in saying, Why hast thou done so? and he also was a very goodly man; and his mother bare him after Absalom. for four years (II Sam. 15:7 [Syriac, Lucian]), and he similarly acquiesced in Adonijah's conduct. It is hard to resist the conclusion that David did regard Absalom as his heir until the latter's death, and that later this choice was transferred to Adonijah. Two additional reasons for his suitability as heir are given in vs. 6. He was the eldest surviving son, and a very handsome man. Evidently both Absalom and Adonijah had their father's good looks and attractive ways. Adonijah and his friends held a sacrificial feast, at which apparently (vss. 9, 13) Adonijah was proclaimed king.

Jesus laid down a basic law of stewardship which homes neglect at their peril: "If ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?" (Luke 16:12.) The family is the first training ground in trusteeship. By being guardians of others' interests, the members fit themselves for receiving that which the family is designed to give them. Children or parents, husbands or wives, never get from a home what really belongs to them until they act as if they belonged to it.

The true home is a partnership of free minds wherein the experiences of the elders supplement the experiments of the youngsters. Think what David could have done for Adonijah if he had shared with him the memories of his own spiritually sensitive youth, if he had asked the lad, Why have you done thus and so? and then helped to interpret the answers in the light of his own rich experience. John R. Mott has told of an orphaned lad who was reared with such painstaking care by an uncle that when it came time for college, the uncle laid his hands on the boy's shoulders and said, "My boy, do what you have a mind to do." The guardian knew the lad's mind to be so disciplined that his tastes could be trusted.

And now that radio brings the news of the world, the music of all nations, and contributions of thought from all sectors of opinion, the home can be made the magic circle which fits the members of the family to become intelligent and responsive citizens in life's largest relationship, transcending the barriers of provincialism and prejudice.

6 His father had never at any time displeased him by asking, "Why have you done thus and so?" He was also a very handsome man; and he was born next after officials are called public servants. Yet while there are those who honestly seek power in order to serve the people, in general the game of politics is played on the principle that "to the victors belong the spoils." 1

So deeply ingrained is the assumption that power is for rule rather than for service that men have difficulty in comprehending the kingship of the Son of man who "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister" (Mark 10:45). But in the long process of history it begins to be recognized increasingly that power must be "of the people, by the people, and for the people." In the thwarting of Adonijah's self-interested scheme is seen another instance that the sovereign God recognizes the right to rule only when it is based on the desire to serve.

6. A Father's Failure.—Had David been so engrossed in public affairs that he neglected the nurture of his son, and never at any time displeased him by asking, "Why have you done thus and so?" Was he too doting a father to discipline the boy? Whatever the answer, the parental relationship had failed to fit Adonijah for his future social adjustments.

A university dean once declared that the modern "child-centered" home was creating a more difficult problem for school and college than was made by the old-fashioned home. In earlier days the family operated more as a unit, and the child was geared into the group action; but the modern trend has been to make the individual the center, with the home providing the accessories for his development. Undoubtedly some of the old unenlightened disciplines and regimentation have thus been corrected; but the child who does not learn to subordinate his interests at some points to a larger loyalty is left like Adonijah, ill-prepared for life. The school and the community cannot successfully provide the discipline which the home fails to give.

More correct would it be to say that this

1 William Learned Marcy, Speech in U. S. Senate, Jan., 1852.
7 And he conferred with Joab the son of Zeruiah, and with Abiathar the priest: and they following Adonijah helped him. 8 But Zadok the priest, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and Nathan the prophet, and Shimei, and Rei, and the mighty men which belonged to David, were not with Adonijah. 9 And Adonijah slew sheep and oxen and fat cattle by the stone of Zoheleth, which is by En-ro'gel, and called all his brethren the king's sons, and all the men of Judah the king's servants:

Ab'salom. 7 He conferred with Jo'ab the son of Zeru'iah and with Ab'i'athar the priest: and they followed Adoni'jah and helped him. 8 But Zadok the priest, and Benai'ah the son of Jehoi'ada, and Nathan the prophet, and Shim'e-i, and Re'i, and David's mighty men were not with Adon'i'jah.

9 Adoni'jah sacrificed sheep, oxen, and fatlings by the Serpent's Stone, which is beside En-ro'gel, and he invited all his brethren, the king's sons, and all the royal officials

7. Joab was David's nephew, being a son of David's sister, Zeruiah. He was also David's "captain of the host," i.e., commander of the militia, the army in the field which consisted of every able-bodied man called up for the campaign. The small standing army was under the command of Benaiah, captain of the king's bodyguard of foreign mercenaries. Thus Adonijah had no armed force to support his claim at short notice, whereas Solomon had a body of disciplined seasoned troops at his immediate call under the command of Benaiah. This was the decisive factor when the time came for action.

Abiathar the priest was the sole survivor of the massacre by Saul of the house of Eli, the hereditary priests of the ark of Shiloh from the beginning (I Sam. 2:27-28; 22:20). He shared all David's early vicissitudes, and when David came to his kingdom was installed as copriest with Zadok. This Zadok was probably of the original Jebusite priesthood of Jerusalem (H. H. Rowley, The Re-Discovery of the Old Testament [Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1946], p. 78). His descendants were priests at Jerusalem as long as any temple existed. Even when, after the Exile, the priests were called "the priests the sons of Aaron," two thirds of them were Zadokites (I Chr. 24:4).

8. Nathan the prophet had considerable influence at court. He had been in a sufficiently strong position to prevent David from building the temple (II Sam. 7:5-17) and to reprove him in the matter of Uriah the Hittite (II Sam. 12:1-15). He had been particularly interested in Solomon from babyhood, and it was through Nathan that the child was called Jedidiah, "Beloved of Yah" (II Sam. 12:25). It will be seen that Solomon actually had the backing of those who had grown to be strong at court during David's reign, rather than of those who had been David's early comrades.

9. The coronation feast was celebrated hard by the sacred spring of En-ro'gel. This is probably Job's Well (Bîr Ayyûb), and not the modern Virgin's Spring, which was Gihon, where Solomon's coronation feast was held (vs. 33). Gihon was nearer the city, out of sight from Job's Well, though not out of hearing.

7-31. The Value of Vows.—In the counterplot to check Adonijah's coup d'état, Nathan the prophet resorts to the religious appeal. He sends Bathsheba to remind the aged king of his royal vow before the Lord that Solomon should succeed him on the throne. There is no record of such a vow (cf. Exeg. on vs. 13); and the staging of Bathsheba's visit, with the timing of Nathan's appearance while she was in the king's presence, appears a little too clever to be convincing. But however truth may have been tampered with by his attendants, David's conscience is sensitive to the divine approach. And the king swore, saying, "As the LORD lives, who has re-
10 But Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah, and the mighty men, and Solomon his brother, he called not.

11 ¶ Wherefore Nathan spake unto Bathsheba the mother of Solomon, saying, Hast thou not heard that Adonijah the son of Haggith doth reign, and David our lord knoweth it not?

12 Now therefore come, let me, I pray thee, give thee counsel, that thou mayest save thine own life, and the life of thy son Solomon.

13 Go and get thee in unto king David, and say unto him, Didst not thou, my lord, O king, swear unto thine handmaid, saying, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne? why then doth Adonijah reign?

14 Behold, while thou yet talkest there with the king, I also will come in after thee, and confirm thy words.

15 ¶ And Bathsheba went in unto the king into the chamber: and the king was very old; and Abishag the Shunammite ministered unto the king.

3. THE PLOT IN FAVOR OF SOLOMON (1:11-14)

Nathan and Bathsheba hatch a plot to supersede the generally expected heir in favor of the younger Solomon. It may be asked whether they were reminding David of an ancient promise or were inventing the whole story and palming it off for true on the aged king.

12. The success of Adonijah would certainly involve the execution, sooner or later, of the rival claimant and his known supporters. In the end both Adonijah and Joab lost their lives, and this would have been Abiathar's fate also had he not been a priest and therefore inviolate as a sacred person.

4. BATHSHEBA BEFORE DAVID (1:15-21)

The two conspirators begin to put their plans into practice with Bathsheba making the first approach. She alleges that David has made a promise in respect of her son hours when judgment is dimmed by desire. What husband does not know the surge of moral power which has come to his aid when in some hour of temptation he recalled the vows made at the marriage altar? Or perhaps a father has been called back from laxity of living by remembering that day when his little daughter's life was spared, and in gratitude he made his vow of obedience before God. The memory of the vow behind us is often as reinforcing to the will as the vision of the goal before us.

In making a vow to the Lord a man undergirds himself with himself and with God. To break that vow is to go back on oneself and to play false with God. It undoes something in human character, as the dropping of a spool of thread unrolls what has been wound up. Vows, if thoughtfully kept, help to stiffen vague ideals into sturdy standards. In common use we make a difference between ideals and standards. An ideal is something we hold before ourselves; a standard is something we hold ourselves to. Our lofty ideals and noble sentiments need the strengthening which our godly ancestors got from their fixed moral rules, their settled religious habits, their sense of obligation to a covenant-keeping God.

Vows serve to combine a gentleman's code of honor with a Christian's sensitive conscience. That is a desirable combination, for religious that I and my son Solomon shall be counted offenders.

Solomon, tells him that Adonijah has already been made king, asks the king to declare his promise publicly, because it is a matter of life and death for her and her son.

21. Sleeps with his fathers: This phrase is in line with the earliest Hebrew ideas of what happens after death. The idea of Sheol is a later development. “Sheol is the land of ghosts, . . . weak and helpless, with no life in themselves.” It did not form the basis of the later growth of a belief in a resurrected life after death. That came “primarily from the firm belief that God was still the Saviour of his people,” however disastrous their fate might seem to be (N. H. Snaith, “Life after Death: The Biblical Doctrine of Immortality,” Interpretation I [1947], 309-24, especially pp. 317-18; see also H. Wheeler 1946], pp. 94-105). The only passages which by common agreement refer to life beyond the grave are Isa. 26:19 and Dan. 12:2.

Counted offenders: The Hebrew is וּמָשִׁים, usually translated “sinners.” Both the KJV and the RSV are interpreting, neither quite adequately. Early Hebrew ideas of sin, before the rise of the eighth-century prophets, were practical rather than ethical.
Here the word has no ethical significance, but means that they will find themselves on impulses need to be strengthened with a sense of honor as truly as our gentlemanly codes need to be sensitized with godliness. A Christian must be all that becomes a gentleman, and more.

There is a value too in the public making of vows. The psalmist adds force to his position when he declares, “I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people” (Ps.
116:14). Cultured persons are prone to think of religion as a very intimate affair. They do not wish to parade their deep personal feelings.
They see the point of A. N. Whitehead’s contention that “religion is what the individual does with his solitariness.”
2 But just how private can a person’s religious attitudes and convictions be?

Jesus said, “Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven” (Matt.
5:16). Our faith is not meant to be hidden under a bushel or locked in a closet. Love is meaningless in solitude. What is joy without someone to share it? Courage requires the pre-ence of others to test it and preserve it. With 22 ¶ And, lo, while she yet talked with the king, Nathan the prophet also came in. 23 And they told the king, saying, Behold Nathan the prophet. And when he was come in before the king, he bowed himself before the king with his face to the ground. 24 And Nathan said, My lord, O king, hast thou said, Adonijah shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne? 25 For he is gone down this day, and hath slain oxen and fat cattle and sheep in abundance, and hath called all the king's sons, and the captains of the host, and Abiathar the priest; and, behold, they eat and drink before him, and say, God save king Adonijah. 26 But me, even me thy servant, and Zadok the priest, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and thy servant Solomon, hath he not called. 27 Is this thing done by my lord the king, and thou hast not showed it unto thy servant, who should sit on the throne of my lord the king after him?

the losing side, suffering the death penalty for having supported the unsuccessful aspirant; cf. Gen. 43:9, where the KJV rightly has “let me bear the blame for ever,” but the Hebrew is, “Then will I be a sinner [יְשַׁעַל] to thee all my days.” A similar example is Exod. 9:27, where Pharaoh says, “The LORD is righteous [יְרֵא], and I and my people are wicked [שׁוּר],” the meaning being that God has won and Pharaoh has lost. There is no question here of ethics. The rightness of the action is judged solely by the consequences, not by any preconceived moral code. This judgment by results needs to be remembered generally in connection with the words for “sin” and the doctrine of the Atonement. The words can be used, and are often used, not only for the wrong act itself, but also for the consequences of it in suffering, condemnation, and death.

5. The Plot Develops (1:22-27)

22-27. Nathan the prophet is announced as seeking audience of the king. The woman retires according to custom. Nathan’s approach is different from that of Bathsheba. He pretends to assume that David has given secret instructions for the coronation of Adonijah, thereby putting Nathan himself and his friends in imminent peril of death. It is evident not only from this, but also from vs. 10, that Solomon had a following even before the climax came when it was imperative that a successor to David should be enthroned.

all respect for those secret vows which men keep hidden in their hearts, nevertheless, a pledge gains tremendous support when given in the presence of others. A public vow to the Lord shows where the maker stands. It acknowledges his dependence on God and helps to achieve his independence from the godless crowd. Moreover, the making of a public religious vow strengthens the maker with the comradeship of fellow believers. There are times when we crave to be alone with God. But there are other situations, such as the threat of public perils, when we get tremendous help from the presence of other God-seekers. As we shall see later in the case of Elijah, we often need to be reminded how many there are whose knees “have not bowed to Baal” (19:18).

David’s respect for his vow to the Lord, however his aged mind may have been played upon by clever courtiers, reveals a foundation stone in 28 ¶ Then king David answered and said, Call me Bath-sheba. And she came into the king's presence, and stood before the king.

29 And the king sware, and said, As the Lord liveth, that hath redeemed my soul out of all distress, 30 Even as I sware unto thee by the Lord God of Israel, saying, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne in my stead; even so will I certainly do this day.

31 Then Bath-sheba bowed with her face to the earth, and did reverence to the king, and said, Let my lord king David live for ever.

32 ¶ And king David said, Call me Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada. And they came before the king.

33 The king also said unto them, Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon my son to ride upon mine own mule, and bring him down to Gihon:

34 And let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet anoint him there king over Israel: and blow ye with the trumpet, and say, God save king Solomon.

28 Then King David answered, “Call Bathsheba to me.” So she came into the king's presence, and stood before the king. 29 And the king swore, saying, “As the Lord lives, who has redeemed my soul out of every adversity, 30 as I swore to you by the Lord, the God of Israel, saying, ‘Solomon your son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne in my stead’, even so will I do this day.” 31 Then Bathsheba bowed with her face to the ground, and did obeisance to the king, and said, “May my lord King David live for ever!”

32 King David said, “Call to me Zadok the priest, Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada.” So they came before the king. 33 And the king said to them, “Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon my son to ride on my own mule, and bring him down to Gihon; 34 and let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet there anoint him king over Israel; then blow the trumpet, and say,

6. David Takes Decisive Action (1:28-40)

David confirms the oath which Bathsheba and Nathan claimed he had made long before. He then calls for Solomon's supporters, bids them mount Solomon on his own royal mule, escort him to Gihon, and there establish him as king with all proper formalities.

33. My own mule: The mule was the proper riding beast for the king and his sons (II Sam. 13:29; 18:9). Horses were introduced from Egypt in the time of Solomon, and then for driving rather than for riding. Ordinary people rode asses.

34. Anoint him king: Every anointed person (Hebrew, māšāh; English, “Messiah”) was sacred, regarded as having been chosen by God for a particular purpose, the king to rule God's people, the nation to be his chosen people, and even Cyrus (Isa. 45:1) to set the people of God free from exile, until finally Messiah is the one chosen to usher in the kingdom of God. There is no evidence of any priest being anointed until the high priest of postexilic times—a civil ruler as well as priest. Priests were consecrated but not anointed.

Blow the trumpet: The Hebrew word for blow strictly means “thrust,” “smite,” and it is used regularly for thrusting with a weapon. The reference here is thus to the defender and champion of his chosen people. After David has declared his intention of keeping his vow, and has set in motion the program to put Solomon on the throne, Benaiah cries out his hope that the Lord himself will confirm the words of the king. As the Lord has been with my lord the king, even so may he be with...
35 Then ye shall come up after him, that he may come and sit upon my throne; for he shall be king in my stead: and I have appointed him to be ruler over Israel and over Judah.

36 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada answered the king, and said, Amen: the Lord God of my lord the king say so too.

37 As the Lord hath been with my lord the king, even so be he with Solomon, and make his throne greater than the throne of my lord king David.

38 So Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, went down, and caused Solomon to ride upon king David’s mule, and brought him to Gihon.

39 And Zadok the priest took a horn of oil out of the tabernacle, and anointed Solomon. And they blew the trumpet; and all the people said, God save king Solomon.

40 And all the people came up after him, and the people piped with pipes, and rejoiced with great joy, so that the earth rent with the sound of them.

Long live King Solomon! 35 You shall then come up after him, and he shall come and sit upon my throne; for he shall be king in my stead; and I have appointed him to be ruler over Israel and over Judah.” 36 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada answered the king, “Amen! May the Lord, the God of my lord the king, say so. 37 As the Lord has been with my lord the king, even so may he be with Solomon, and make his throne greater than the throne of my lord King David.”

38 So Zadok the priest, Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cher’ethites and the Pel’ethites, went down and caused Solomon to ride on King David’s mule, and brought him to Gihon. 39 There Zadok the priest took the horn of oil from the tent, and anointed Solomon. Then they blew the trumpet; and all the people said, “Long live King Solomon!” 40 And all the people went up after him, playing on pipes, and rejoicing with great joy, so that the earth was split by their noise.

suddenness of the blast of the coronation fanfare, even to this day a unique and shattering sound. Among the Hebrews this fanfare was blown on the shophar, a curved trumpet made from a ram’s horn. This horn was also blown as an alarm (Amos 3:6), for rallying in battle (Zeph. 1:16), and in later O.T. times on special religious occasions (Lev. 25:9).

40. Playing on pipes: The ancient versions speak of a great variety of musical instruments, from organs (O.L.), sistra (Syriac), to harps (Targ.) and choruses and melodies (second rendering of O.L.). Whatever instruments they used, they certainly made a great deal of noise. The Hebrew says that the earth was split by it.

While fuller revelation has lifted our sights and insights until we see God as sovereign of the universe, we have not outgrown the primitive and selfish desire to use him as the servant of our purposes rather than to submit our programs to his will. Like Benaiah, we pray for the Lord’s confirmation of the plans we make. In this tendency C. S. Lewis finds the real snag in all this drawing up of blue prints for a Christian society. Most of us are not really approaching the subject in order to find out what Christianity says: we are approaching it in the hope of finding support from Christianity for the views of our own party. We are looking for an ally where we are offered either a Master or—a Judge.a

One of the most popular perversions of Christianity is the presentation of God as a caterer to man-made wants and religious faith as a way of fulfilling human desires. The contemporary pulpit in its effort to draw crowds stresses the satisfactions to be derived from religion—peace of mind, health of body, social acceptability, freedom from tension, financial prosperity, even military success. Preachers try to “sell religion” on the principle of “the public be pleased.” They preach to men’s desires rather than to their needs. They portray God as a sort of divine Santa Claus coming down to fill our stockings with whatever we may ask in his name. All this some preachers do because they know that people would rather feel good than be good. But they forget that God in Christ came to save rather than to satisfy. Our willful and misguided world needs a Master, not an ally.
And Adonijah and all the guests that were with him heard it as they had made an end of eating. And when Joab heard the sound of the trumpet, he said, Wherefore is this noise of the city being in an uproar?

And while he yet spake, behold, Jonathan the son of Abiathar the priest came: and Adonijah said unto him, Come in; for thou art a valiant man, and bringest good tidings.

And Jonathan answered and said to Adonijah, Verily our lord king David hath made Solomon king.

And the king hath sent with him Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and they have caused him to ride upon the king's mule:

7. Adonijah's Cause Collapses (1:41-53)

The bad news of what has been happening at Gihon soon reaches Adonijah and his supporters at En-rogel. The movement forthwith collapses and every man flees for his life. Adonijah himself seeks sanctuary and his life is spared conditionally upon his future good behavior.

Jonathan son of Abiathar the priest shares with Ahimaaz son of Zadok the other priest the reputation of being a long-distance runner. They both appear in the stories of David's reign as runners of repute (II Sam. 15:27; 17:17; 18:27).

Consider first why Adonijah's men came together. No doubt different members of the party had differing reasons for being there. One motive in the minds of some must have been a sincere desire to save the kingdom from civil war. The country could not continue strong while divided between two rival claimants. Others very likely were attracted by loyalty to the person of Adonijah, for the report is that he was handsome (cf. vs. 6). Another motive on the part of some was undoubtedly a desire to share in the perquisites of office. If Adonijah came to power there would be royal commissions, offices, special privileges, and profits. And of course some of them had come together out of fear, for they knew that if the other party succeeded they would suffer. Very probably several of these motives may have been mixed in the mind of each individual, for most of us form our associations from mixed motives. Consider the family itself. It is hardly accurate to say that our family life is motivated purely by love. Family ties are woven of several strands—love, comfort, convenience, security, fear. The English novelist, A. S. M. Hutchinson, in his book This Freedom,* interpreted a wife as feeling that her husband had married for a home where he could find his comforts and possessions, a place he could step into and call his. The husband on his part felt that his wife had married to have a place which she could step out of, into a security not possessed by her unmarried women competitors in the career field.

And what are the motives which lead to the formation of friendships? Some persons we almost instinctively like. Others are persons with whom we like to be seen. Some of our companions we choose because we can help them, some because they can help us. The golden bonds of friendship contain much alloy.

45 And Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet have anointed him king in Gihon: and they are come up from thence rejoicing, so that the city rang again. This is the noise that ye have heard.

46 And also Solomon sitteth on the throne of the kingdom.

47 And moreover the king's servants came to bless our lord king David, saying, God make the name of Solomon better than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne. And the king bowed himself upon the bed.

48 And also thus said the king, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, which hath given one to sit on my throne this day, mine eyes even seeing it.

49 And all the guests that were with Adonijah were afraid, and rose up, and went every man his way.

50 ¶ And Adonijah feared because of Solomon, and arose, and went, and caught hold on the horns of the altar.

50. The horns of the altar: These were originally bull's horns and represented the strength of deity. They were the most sacred parts of the altar. Here Hebrew ideas

| Or why do we come together in community associations? Again our motives are mixed. Most of us have an instinct for neighborliness. We join in neighborhood activities in order to escape loneliness, to find recreation, to support welfare organizations. Often we organize in our communities to protect property values, to keep out bad influence, and sometimes to keep out undesirable neighbors.

And while we are considering the motives which prompted Adonijah's partisans, we might examine the reasons for our political party affiliations. We believe that party government is essential to preserve free society. We are supposed to join political parties which help express our convictions. But we have to admit that many are moved not by sincere desire or what is best for the country as a whole but by what promises to serve best the interests of their own group or class. Many merely vote for the party to which their families and friends belong.

Granted, then, that our associations and alliances are formed from mixed motives, let us note what happens when danger threatens. Adonijah's partisans were terrified and they fled. Danger tests and sifts the motives which prompt our associations. In the case of Adonijah's party, danger revealed a fear based on self-interest. Darkening peril produced dominant fear which led to disintegration.

Fear has a legitimate function in life. Like pain, fear is a sentinel which warns of danger. But when fear moves in to the seat of command and becomes chief of staff it heightens the danger. Fear makes men so self-conscious that they cannot see objectively. Fear crows the conscience and perverts moral judgments. Fear weakens efficiency, enervates the body and when it verges toward panic, paralyzes the will. Fear may bring men together in alliances, but it does not hold them together. In the face of common danger during war, racial, religious, and industrial differences within a nation tend to be overlooked. But with the cessation of strife abroad, conflicts and suspicions revive at home. In the face of Nazi terror the United States and the Soviet Union linked arms as allies; but when Hitler was removed, the alliance turned to distrust. Fear makes strange bedfellows, but it does not make lasting comrades.

In the formation and fall of Adonijah's party we see how danger tests the purity of motives. Self-interest, however "enlightened," is not a sufficient bond of unity. Mutual fear is not an adequate foundation for a family of nations. Nothing less than love can hold men together during long peril and strain. And abiding love must be fed from above.

50-53. A Coward's Castle.—Adonijah and his followers were seized with panic. In his fear of 51 And it was told Solomon, saying, Behold, Adonijah feareth king Solomon: for, lo, he hath caught hold on the horns of the altar, saying, Let king Solomon swear unto me to-day that he will not slay his servant with the sword.

52 And Solomon said, If he will show himself a worthy man, there shall not a hair of him fall to the earth: but if wickedness shall be found in him, he shall die.

53 So king Solomon sent, and they brought him down from the altar. And he came and bowed himself to king Solomon: and Solomon said unto him, Go to thine house.

2 When the days of David drew nigh that he should die; and he charged Solomon his son, saying,

2 I go the way of all the earth: be thou strong therefore, and show thyself a man;

once more are in line with heathen custom generally. There were bronze horns on the top of the ziggurat (temple-pyramid) of Babylon, and also on that at Nineveh. All primitive altars had horns, though in many Palestinian altars which have been excavated the horns have been formalized into knobs (S. A. Cook, The Religion of Ancient Palestine in the Light of Archaeology [London: British Academy, 1930], pp. 28-31).

53. Go to your house, i.e., retire from public life. This clemency extended by Solomon is unusual. Possibly he was loath to execute his defeated rival because he had actually been anointed and so might be regarded as a sacred person. David was most scrupulous in this respect concerning "the Lord's anointed." In any case, Solomon's action should be remembered to him for righteousness.

B. DAVID'S LAST WORDS (2:1-12)

The dying charge of David to Solomon is composed of two distinct sections. They are very different in temper and in style, the first giving sound advice of the orthodox seventh-century type, the second giving practical counsel after the fashion of an earlier and more brutal age.

1. A CHARGE TO PIETY (2:2-4)

This section is full of Deuteronomic phrases. It was inserted by the editor (ca. 610 B.C.) to act as a preface to his whole history of the kings in order to suggest that David was a model Deuteronomic king. The kings who follow are to be judged according to the way in which they obeyed or disobeyed these commands of David (cf. 15:3; etc.). The theme is that the man who obeys the Deuteronomic law with full zeal will prosper in all he does. He must worship God faithfully and in Jerusalem. He must abhor all Solomon's possible revenge, Adonijah fled to the sanctuary and claimed the protection accorded by the horns of the altar. He sought the same shelter that Joab was to seek (2:28). The horns of the altar were an asylum originally planned for unintentional manslayers. But later they appear to have been made use of by those who feared punishment by death. Adonijah's flight to this sanctuary could well be interpreted as a confession of guilt. Solomon's act of clemency was a sign of his magnanimity. It enhanced his popularity. It was one more sign of promise which heightened the people's expectancy of their new king.

2:1-4. 12. The Gospel of Success.—When the dying David charged Solomon to keep the statutes as written in the law of Moses, he offered this incentive: that you may prosper in 3 And keep the charge of the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and his testimonies, as it is written in the law of Moses, that thou mayest prosper in all that thou doest, and whithersoever thou turnest thyself:

4 That the LORD may continue his word which he spake concerning me, saying, If thy children take heed to their way, to walk before me in truth with all their heart and with all their soul, there shall not fail thee (said he) a man on the throne of Israel.

Be strong, and show yourself a man, and keep the charge of the LORD your God, walking in his ways and keeping his statutes, his commandments, his ordinances, and his testimonies, as it is written in the law of Moses, that you may prosper in all that you do and wherever you turn; 4 that the LORD may establish his word which he spoke concerning me, saying, 'If your sons take heed to their way, to walk before me in faithfulness with all their heart and with all their soul, there shall not fail you a man on the throne of Israel.'

immoral cults and have nothing at all to do with any foreign gods. He must care for the poor and the unprivileged in order that God's justice may be established in his land. Further, so long as the kings do this there will always be an heir of David's line to rule in Jerusalem.

2:4. With all their soul: Better, "with all their self," since neither in the O.T. nor in the N.T. does the word soul refer to an immortal part of man's nature. In the O.T. it stands for עַלְפּוֹ, and in the N.T. for ψυχή, both of which belong to this present life and cease at death. Whatever lives after death is expressed by ψυνή, and this is a gift of God, not man's either by nature or by merit (cf. I Cor. 15:48-50; etc.).

all that you do and wherever you turn. In assuming that prosperity is the reward of obedience to God, David is in line with much O.T. teaching. The Genesis account of Joseph is one of the greatest success stories in all literature. The psalmists reiterate that the favor of God is revealed in the prosperity of the righteous. To be sure, Jeremiah becomes puzzled at the way justice is meted out, and exclaims, "Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper?" (Jer. 12:1). Ecclesiastes was perplexed when he observed that the race is not always "to the swift,... nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favor to men of skill" (Eccl. 9:11). The great poetic drama of Job deals with the inexplicable calamities which can befall a godly man; but the poem ends with Job's prosperity restored. When we turn to the N.T., we find Jesus rejected because he did not fit the prevailing success patterns of his people. Yet although Jesus seemed a failure when judged by current measurements, he puts into his Beatitudes the promise of rewards, and he talks about what shall profit men. When we read the letters of Paul, we catch such words as these: "Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain" (I Cor. 9:24).

How can the biblical promises of prosperity and reward be reconciled with the basic Christian principles of unselfishness and sacrifice? For one thing, Christ enlarges the popular success patterns. The urge to amount to some-thing is part of our native normal equipment. The child without ambition is like a watch with a broken spring. But the desire to succeed must be made to include more than the self. Personal self-assertiveness must be cured by the process of outgrowing it into larger loyalties. The child grows up within the life of the family and then the welfare of the whole household should become his interest. Later, school and college loyalty should expand the success patterns of the individual to include the larger group. This does not always happen. An educator said that secular education is much concerned with the verbs "to know," "to do," and "to get," while Christian education is concerned primarily with the verbs "to be," "to obey," "to serve," and "to dedicate." Christ enlarges the self to include the interests of the family, the school, the community, the nation, and the world.

Moreover, Jesus in his life and teachings spiritualizes the popular conception of success. We live so within the shadow of the market place that money colors almost all our estimates of success. As we say, "money talks"; but only so long as people listen. And when people become intelligent enough to look for true values, then money ceases to talk so convincingly. Jesus recognized that money has a place in life. He referred to it often in the Gospels. But he put money in its proper and secondary place. Recall the occasion when a man accosted our Lord, asking him to bid his brother divide the family inheritance with him. Jesus refused to serve as 5 Moreover thou knowest also what Joab the son of Zeruiah did to me, and what he did to the two captains of the hosts of Israel, unto Abner the son of Ner, and unto Amasa

2. David's Legacy of Evil (2:5-12)

The second section of David's last charge to Solomon (vss. 5-9) is very different from vss. 2-4. Some scholars (e.g., Pfeiffer) hold that these also are the work of the editor, but others (e.g., Skinner, Burney) believe that they belong to the court source, in common with most of the rest of chs. 1-2. The latter alternative is much the more likely. There are no Deuteronomic elements to be found here, either in phrase or in theme. The character of David is not at all idealized as in the previous verses. These commands are wholly consistent with a tenth-century B.C. origin. He was in many respects a man of his own time, and he thought and acted in ways which to us seem both cruel and ruthless. If David's line was to be firmly established, then the bloodguilt which was upon that house must be removed. Both Abner and Amasa were under David's safe conduct when Joab murdered them. Shimei's curse still rested upon David's house, though David himself could do nothing to remove it because of his oath to Shimei. David therefore left these two curses for Solomon to remove, and bade him also remember the oath of good will sworn to the house of the aged Barzillai. There is no need to ascribe the contents of these verses to treachery on David's part or to an unseemly desire for revenge. David's action had been perfectly proper in his lifetime according to the ethics of his day. His charge to Solomon was to take advantage of the opportunity when it comes in order to remove the doom which would prevent the secure establishment of the dynasty.

5. Putting innocent blood upon the girdle about my loins: It is best to follow the ancient versions, as the RSV does. The reference to the girdle is explained from Jer.

judge or divider and warned the man to beware of covetousness. Then he told the parable of the rich farmer whose fields brought forth so bountifully that he decided to build larger barns. Suddenly in the midst of his preparations the man died and the title to his possessions passed from him. Then Jesus added, "So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God" (Luke 12:21). To be rich toward God is Jesus' idea of success. And what constitutes such riches? When a person can look around him and see values which he helped to create; work well done, however humble, which leaves the world better off; lives made brighter because he has lived beside them; children whose strength of character has been inherited or caught from him; a community more wholesome because of his residence there; good causes furthered by his service and sacrifice—all this is something of what it is to be rich toward God. Measured by popular standards the career of Jesus was a series of failures. He lost his home, he lost his following, he lost his life. But it was not long after his death that men began to write of "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich" (II Cor. 8:9).

If we take our measurements from "the low world's level stand," David's promise of prosperity as the reward of obedience to God is not worthy in motive or trustworthy in practice. Christianity is not a gospel of success. But if our tastes are properly trained until virtue begins to be enjoyed as its own reward, if our insights are sharpened to see that the creation of values is better than the collection of profits; if we are unselfish enough to be more concerned with the prosperity of the cause we serve than with our personal prestige; if we are patient to hear what the centuries have to say against the hours, then we are justified in cherishing and trusting the promise that God "is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Heb. 11:6). The rewards of God are not to be bargained for in calculating fashion. The kingdom of heaven is not a factory wherein wage agreements are all signed in advance; but, as Jesus pictured it in his parable of the workers, it is a vineyard in which those who trust fare better than those who bargain (Matt. 20:1-16). The followers of Jesus are his fellow workers, not as hirelings putting in time for a wage, but as friends putting in life for love.

59, 13-34. The Vicious Circle of Vengeance.
—The record of Joab throws light in several the son of Jether, whom he slew, and shed the blood of war in peace, and put the blood of war upon his girdle that was about his loins, and in his shoes that were on his feet.

6 Do therefore according to thy wisdom, and let not his hoar head go down to the grave in peace.

7 But show kindness unto the sons of Barzillai the Gileadite, and let them be of those that eat at thy table: for so they came to me when I fled because of Absalom thy brother.

8 And, behold, thou hast with thee Shimei the son of Gera, a Benjamite of Bahurim, which cursed me with a grievous curse in the day when I went to Mahanaim: but he came down to meet me at Jordan, and I sware to him by the LORD, saying, I will not put thee to death with the sword.

9 Now therefore hold him not guiltless: for thou art a wise man, and knowest what thou oughttest to do unto him; but his hoar head bring thou down to the grave with blood.

13:11 as that which clings most closely to a man, and the following figure of sandals as that which is bound firmly onto a man. Joab had made David responsible for the blood of Abner and Amasa. David’s very protests show by their vigor that he realized his responsibility. Solomon must use his wits (Act . . . according to [his] wisdom, cf. vs. 6) and see to it that Joab’s blood atones for that of Abner and Amasa.

7. Show kindness: Lit., “make ḫĕṣedū,” i.e., keep the agreement which David made with Barzillai (II Sam. 17:27-29; 19:31-39) when he took Barzillai’s son to live at court. The word ḫĕṣedh comes to be used mainly as a covenant word, and properly denotes the faithfulness with which each party ought to keep the terms of the covenant between them. When the word is used it is God it comes to stand for God’s mercy toward his people Israel. This is due to Israel’s continued apostasy, as a result of which God needs to exercise continual mercy and forbearance toward Israel if anything of the covenant is to survive. Miles Coverdale invented the word “lovingkindness,” and he used it in the Psalms for the word ḫĕṣedh whenever it stood for God’s attitude to his covenant direction. It serves to reveal the bloody feuds begotten by love of power in a time when force was the only arbiter. Joab had chosen the weaker side in the struggle between Adonijah and Solomon. He gambled for glory and lost his life.

Joab also paid the penalty of his ruthlessness. Having shed the blood of Abner and Amasa, he knew what to expect when Solomon came to the throne. He fled in fear to the horns of the altar. But that did not save him. Solomon gave orders for his death, declaring, The LORD will bring back his bloody deeds upon his own head (vs. 32). Solomon was ascribing to God the vengeance he himself was determined to inflict. Such is the custom of conquerors. They take vengeance into their own hands and then pose as the agents of divine justice. Thus the vicious circle goes on. Bloody deeds do come back on the heads of blood-seekers. The old principle of “an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth” is a losing game. Joab is just another illustration of the truth, “All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword” (Matt. 26:52). And the story of the death of Adonijah (vss. 13-25) underlines the same lesson of the nemesis that may come to ambition and to the pride of attempted power.
10 So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David.
11 And the days that David reigned over Israel were forty years: seven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty and three years reigned he in Jerusalem.
12 ¶ Then sat Solomon upon the throne of David his father; and his kingdom was established greatly.
13 ¶ And Adonijah the son of Haggith came to Bath-sheba the mother of Solomon. And she said, Comest thou peaceably? And he said, Peaceably.
14 He said moreover, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And she said, Say on.
15 And he said, Thou knowest that the kingdom was mine, and that all Israel set their faces on me, that I should reign: howbeit the kingdom is turned about, and is become my brother’s: for it was his from the Lord.
16 And now I ask one petition of thee, deny me not. And she said unto him, Say on.
17 And he said, Speak, I pray thee, unto Solomon the king, (for he will not say thee nay,) that he give me Abishag the Shunammite to wife.
18 And Bath-sheba said, Well; I will speak for thee unto the king.
19 ¶ Bath-sheba therefore went unto king Solomon, to speak unto him for Adonijah. And the king rose up to meet her, and

C. SOLOMON REMOVES THE CURSES (2:13-46)

Solomon uses his wisdom and removes in turn the three threats to the continued prosperity of the house of David. He makes full use of the opportunities given him by the three men whom he must destroy if he and his heirs would be safe and prosperous.

I. ADONIJAH’S REQUEST (2:13-25)

Adonijah seeks to take Abishag as his wife. He proffers this request through the queen mother who, as head of the harem, holds a dominant place at court. Solomon greets his mother with all proper respect, but interprets the request as a renewed attempt of Adonijah to secure that kingdom which had only just eluded his grasp. It was an ancient Semitic custom that the man who inherited the women of the dead king was his successor (cf. II Sam. 3:7; 12:8; 16:20-29). Solomon takes advantage of Adonijah’s folly and sends the captain of his bodyguard to execute him forthwith. The rashness of the request allows Solomon to execute a man who had been anointed king.

19. The seat was indeed a throne. The word שׁלום is rarely used of any ordinary seat, bowed himself unto her, and sat down on his throne, and caused a seat to be set for the king's mother; and she sat on his right hand.

20 Then she said, I desire one small petition of thee; I pray thee, say me not nay. And the king said unto her, Ask on, my mother; for I will not say thee nay.

21 And she said, Let Abishag the Shunammite be given to Adonijah thy brother to wife.

22 And king Solomon answered and said unto his mother, And why dost thou ask Abishag the Shunammite for Adonijah? ask for him the kingdom also; for he is mine elder brother; even for him, and for Abiathar the priest, and for Joab the son of Zeruiah.

23 Then king Solomon swore by the Lord, saying, God do so to me, and more also, if Adonijah have not spoken this word against his own life.

24 Now therefore, as the Lord liveth, which hath established me, and set me on the throne of David my father, and who hath made me a house, as he promised, Adonijah shall be put to death this day.

25 And king Solomon sent by the hand of Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; and he fell upon him that he died.

26 ¶ And unto Abiathar the priest said the king, Get thee to Anathoth, unto thine own fields; for thou art worthy of death: but I will not at this time put thee to death, because thou barest the ark of the Lord Goer before David my father, and because thou hast been afflicted in all wherein my father was afflicted.

27 So Solomon thrust out Abiathar from to speak to him on behalf of Adonijah. And the king rose to meet her, and bowed down to her; then he sat on his throne, and had a seat brought for the king's mother; and she sat on his right. 29 Then she said, "I have one small request to make of you; do not refuse me." And the king said to her, "Make your request, my mother; for I will not refuse you." 21 She said, "Let Abishag the Shunammite be given to Adonijah your brother as his wife." 22 King Solomon answered his mother, "And why do you ask Abishag the Shunammite for Adonijah? Ask for him the kingdom also; for he is my elder brother, and on his side are Abiathar the priest and Jo'ab the son of Zeru'iah."

23 Then King Solomon swore by the Lord, saying, "God do so to me and more also if this word does not cost Adonijah his life! 24 Now therefore as the Lord lives, who has established me, and placed me on the throne of David my father, and who has made me a house, as he promised, Adoni'jah shall be put to death this day." 25 So King Solomon sent Benai'ah the son of Jehoi'ada; and he struck him down, and he died.

26 And to Abi'athar the priest the king said, "Go to An'athoth, to your estate; for you deserve death. But I will not at this time put you to death, because you bore the ark of the Lord God before David my father, and because you shared in all the affliction of my father." 27 So Solomon expelled Abi'athar from being priest to the Lord, but usually of a seat of high distinction and honor; to sit on the right hand of the king is to sit in the place of power and authority (cf. Acts 7:56; Heb. 1:13, of the risen and ascended Christ).

2. Abiathar Is Banished (2:26-27)

Solomon now turns to deal with Adonijah's former allies. He cannot execute Abiathar, who is a priest and therefore beyond Solomon's jurisdiction, i.e., so far as matters of life and death are concerned. What Solomon can do, he does. He exiles Abiathar from the royal shrine and from court circles, bids him return to his ancestral property at Anathoth and stay there. This village was some two and a half miles north of Jerusalem, just beyond Nob, where Saul had massacred the house of Eli. Jeremiah the prophet was descended from the priests of Anathoth (Jer. 1:1; 32:7).

27. This verse is due to the Deuteronomic editor, who thus emphasizes the authority of the Zadokite priesthood of Jerusalem.
being priest unto the Lord; that he might fulfill the word of the Lord, which he spake concerning the house of Eli in Shiloh.

28 ¶ Then tidings came to Joab: for Joab had turned after Adonijah, though he turned not after Absalom. And Joab fled unto the tabernacle of the Lord, and caught hold on the horns of the altar.

29 And it was told king Solomon that Joab was fled unto the tabernacle of the Lord; and, behold, he is by the altar. Then Solomon sent Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, saying, Go, fall upon him.

30 And Benaiah came to the tabernacle of the Lord, and said unto him, Thus saith the king, Come forth. And he said, Nay; but I will die here. And Benaiah brought the king word again, saying, Thus said Joab, and thus he answered me.

31 And the king said unto him, Do as he hath said, and fall upon him, and bury him; that thou mayest take away the innocent blood, which Joab shed, from me, and from the house of my father.

32 And the Lord shall return his blood upon his own head, who fell upon two men more righteous and better than he, and slew them with the sword, my father David not knowing thereof, to wit, Abner the son of Ner, captain of the host of Israel, and Amasa the son of Jether, captain of the host of Judah.

33 Their blood shall therefore return upon the head of Joab, and upon the head of his seed for ever: but upon David, and upon his seed, and upon his house, and upon his throne, shall there be peace for ever from the Lord.

34 So Benaiah the son of Jehoiada went up, and fell upon him, and slew him: and he was buried in his own house in the wilderness.

thus fulfilling the word of the Lord which he had spoken concerning the house of Eli in Shiloh.

28 When the news came to Jo‘ab — for Jo‘ab had supported Adoni‘jah although he had not supported Absalom — Jo‘ab fled to the tent of the Lord and caught hold of the horns of the altar. 29 And when it was told King Solomon, “Jo‘ab has fled to the tent of the Lord, and behold, he is beside the altar,” Solomon sent Benai‘ah the son of Jehoi‘ada, saying, “Go, strike him down.” 30 So Benai‘ah came to the tent of the Lord, and said to him, “The king commands, ‘Come forth.’” But he said, “No, I will die here.” Then Benai‘ah brought the king word again, saying, “Thus said Jo‘ab, and thus he answered me.” 31 The king replied to him, “Do as he has said, strike him down and bury him; and thus take away from me and from my father’s house the guilt for the blood which Jo‘ab shed without cause.

32 The Lord will bring back his bloody deeds upon his own head, because, without the knowledge of my father David, he attacked and slew with the sword two men more righteous and better than himself, Abner the son of Ner, commander of the army of Israel, and Ama‘sa the son of Jether, commander of the army of Judah.

33 So shall their blood come back upon the head of Jo‘ab and upon the head of his descendants for ever; but to David, and to his descendants, and to his house, and to his throne, there shall be peace from the Lord for evermore.” 34 Then Benai‘ah the son of Jehoi‘ada went up, and struck him down and killed him; and he was buried in his

3. THE END OF JOAB (2:28-34)

David’s former commander in chief hears what has happened to Adonijah and Abiathar, his two companions of other days, and flees for sanctuary to grasp the horns of the altar. Solomon interprets this act as a confession of new guilt, and sends Benaiah to execute him. Benaiah dares not do this when he finds Joab on holy ground, but returns to the king for new instructions. The command comes in the form of fulfilling Joab’s own words, I will die here.

32. The bloodguilt for the murders of Abner and Amasa can be removed from David’s house only by the blood of him who was responsible for the murders, i.e., of Joab, who had actually done the deeds, or of David and his kin, who were ultimately responsible. When the RSV translates his bloody deeds, it is interpreting according to 35 ¶ And the king put Benaiah the son of Jehoiada in his room over the host: and Zadok the priest did the king put in the room of Abiatar.
36 ¶ And the king sent and called for Shimei, and said unto him, Build thee a house in Jerusalem, and dwell there, and go not forth thence any whither.
37 For it shall be, that on the day thou goest out, and passest over the brook Kidron, thou shalt know for certain that thou shalt surely die: thy blood shall be upon thine own head.
38 And Shimei said unto the king, The saying is good: as my lord the king hath said, so will thy servant do. And Shimei dwelt in Jerusalem many days.
39 And it came to pass at the end of three years, that two of the servants of Shimei ran away unto Achish son of Maacah king of Gath. And they told Shimei, saying, Behold, thy servants be in Gath.
40 And Shimei arose, and saddled his ass, and went to Gath to Achish to seek his servants: and Shimei went, and brought his servants from Gath.
41 And it was told Solomon that Shimei had gone from Jerusalem to Gath, and was come again.
42 And the king sent and called for Shimei, and said unto him, Did I not make thee to swear by the Lord, and protested unto thee, saying, Know for a certain, on the day thou goest out, and walkest abroad from Jerusalem, that thy house and the house of thy father shall be left unto me, and I will give it to him that killeth thee?

modern ideas. It is truer to Hebrew ideas to retain his blood. The blood that has been shed calls for vengeance till it has been covered with other blood. Joab dies and the account is closed, there being no bloodguilt incurred for the shedding of Joab's blood, justly slain, especially since he had told Benaiah that he would die there at the altar.

35. This is a short historical note concerning the successors of Joab and Zadok as army chief and priest respectively.

4. THE END OF SHIMEI (2:36-46)

One curse still remains, that uttered by Shimei. Solomon warns Shimei, and bids him dwell in Jerusalem under the modern "open arrest." The king makes it quite clear 36-46. When a Man Presumes Too Far.—In this grim story the king is ruthless, but the man upon whom his anger fell had no right to complain. According to his deserts, Shimei might have come to his death long before. David, with great magnanimity, had spared him in spite of his insulting and treacherous hostility (II Sam. 16:5-13; 19:21-23). Solomon had let him continue to live in Jerusalem, but upon the express condition that he stay there, and with the stark warning that if he left the city it was on peril of his life. But when Shimei thought his interests required it, he presumed to go out of the city all the same. He was like a man on parole who violated it, and the judgment on him was already rendered. Always there may be others who need, as Shimei did, to understand that life has conditions that may be any whither, that thou shalt surely die? and thou saidst unto me, The word that I have heard is good.

43 Why then hast thou not kept the oath of the Lord, and the commandment that I have charged thee with?

44 The king said moreover to Shimei, Thou knowest all the wickedness which thine heart is privy to, that thou didst to David my father; therefore the Lord shall return thy wickedness upon thine own head:

45 And king Solomon shall be blessed, and the throne of David shall be established before the Lord for ever.

46 So the king commanded Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; which went out, and fell upon him, that he died. And the kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon.

3 And Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter, and brought her into the city of David, until he had made an end of building that if he leaves Jerusalem on any pretext whatever, it will mean death. Three years afterward Shimei goes to Gath to bring back two runaway slaves. Solomon is now free from all taboos concerning Shimei, so he sends for him on his return and executes him without compunction.

44. Most of the English versions have the wickedness; the Hebrew means not any evil designs which were in Shimei's heart and mind, but the actual evil brought into being by his curse (II Sam. 16:5-10). The Hebrews of old held that both blessings and curses, once uttered, had a life of their own and were destined inevitably to be fulfilled in the fate of the person, or his kin, against whom they were uttered. Only special action could prevent this (cf. Judg. 17:3). Otherwise nothing that a man does can alter the incidence of the curse or blessing. Isaac's blessing must come true over Jacob because it was uttered over Jacob. The fact that the old man thought he was blessing Esau has nothing to do with it (Gen. 27:35-40). The whole point of the present story is that Shimei placed himself in the wrong by not keeping the oath which Solomon had put upon him (vs. 43). This error gives Solomon the opportunity of dealing with Shimei and at last of removing the curse which all this time had been hanging over his head. Shimei was executed because he had broken a solemn oath in leaving Jerusalem. To have taken action against Shimei before Shimei had committed some such fault as this would have been equivalent to interfering with the action of God.

46. The kingdom is indeed now firmly established. Solomon has removed the bloodguilt which rested on his house and has managed by his wisdom to neutralize the curse which Shimei had uttered in days gone by.

II. The Reign of Solomon (3:1—11:43)

These nine chapters as they stand tell the story of a king who was wholly devoted to God for the major part of a long and prosperous reign. He was rewarded with honor, glory, power, and wisdom. For eight chapters we read of splendor and success. The king who is faithful to the Deuteronomic teaching receives the Deuteronomic rewards. Especially does the king who built the temple at Jerusalem receive the fullest rewards of wealth and honor. In point of fact, Solomon's reign was marred by successful rebellions in Edom and Damascus. Both these kingdoms became independent and did great harm to Solomon, and Rezon of Damascus in particular "was an adversary of Israel all the days of Solomon" (11:25). It is clear from ch. II also that the seeds of revolt within Israel had already been sown during the time when Solomon was busy with his grandiose building schemes. The editor has relegated all this material to the last chapter of his account of Solomon's reign, and has ascribed these troubles to the way in which Solomon's many foreign wives entangled him into admitting the worship of foreign gods. That Solomon did this is beyond question, but the editor is manipulating his sources when he ascribes such conduct to Solomon's old age.

A. Solomon's Wisdom and Splendor (3:1-4:30)

1. Solomon's Choice (3:1-15)

The story of Solomon's visit to Gibeon, the vision he saw there, and the choice he made, is contained in vss. 4-15. God offers Solomon in a dream any request he may ask. Solomon asks for wisdom to govern wisely and well according to the pattern of a true and righteous king. His request for this wisdom in government, rather than for wealth and military success, brings him wealth and honor also. This material has proved most useful to the Deuteronomic editor, who needs to add little more than a sentence here or there in order to point out the Deuteronomic moral. The nucleus of the paragraph comes from the biography, but there are many editorial additions which are not found in the parallel story of II Chr. 1:3-13, though the Chronicler has additions of his own, notably in his transcript of vss. 3-6.

This story of the vision at Gibeon has been prefaced with the notice of Solomon's marriage to an Egyptian princess, taken from the first of the editor's main sources, The Acts of Solomon (I Kings 11:41). In the LXX vs. I is joined with 9:16 and both are inserted after 4:9 (M.T., 5:14). The LXX here probably preserves the order of the editor. The reason for the change in the M.T. may be that a later scribe thought some further explanation was needed to account for Solomon's going to Gibeon and sacrificing there, when the whole book and all later practice and theory held that Jerusalem alone was the legitimate place for such things. Even the addition here of vs. I did not satisfy a still later scribe. He thereupon added vs. 2 as a marginal note to justify the statement that Solomon sacrificed elsewhere than at Jerusalem.

3:2. The high places: Sacrifices at these local hill shrines were regarded as legitimate until the Deuteronomic reforms in Josiah's time (cf. 18:32, where Elijah is represented alliance with Egypt. The use of marriage bonds as political aids has been a practice of ruling monarchs down the centuries. Egypt was the nearest, and after David's victories the most powerful of Israel's neighbors.

The politician in Solomon showed not only in his marriage but in his religious practices. While the Chronicler asserts Solomon's love of the Lord, he describes his deviation from devotion by sacrificing at the high places. Perhaps Solomon justified his use of the pagan shrines by the fact that the ark of Yahweh had not yet been set up. In our time when a Christian congregation has lost its place of worship through fire or flood, it is considered an act of generous comradeship for a Hindu to place his temple at the Christians' disposal. But one can almost read between the lines and discern the motive of political expediency in Solomon's use of the high places. With a non-Hebrew wife and

3 And Solomon loved the LORD, walking in the statutes of David his father: only he

4 And the king went to Gibeon to sacrifice there; for that was the great high place:

offer upon that altar.

as doing a praiseworthy deed in rebuilding the altar on Mount Carmel; cf. also Judg.
6:26; I Sam. 9:10-14). In all the early history of the Hebrews the existence of the hill shrines is assumed as a matter of course. They were the original Canaanite shrines, local models of the great mountain of the gods away to the north, taken over by the invading Israelites, generally with most of the original ritual. Sacred sites are not invented; they are older than history itself. The name of the god may change with the changing of the worshippers, but the site retains its sacredness; cf. the site of Kadesh Naphtali, where a third-century Semitic altar has been found, with traces underneath of an ancient pagan temple of a much earlier date (Cook, Religion of Ancient Palestine in Light of Archaeology, pp. 196-97).

3. Sacrificed and burnt incense: All the English versions have this, including the RSV. The Hebrew לֹא did not mean “burn incense” until postexilic times. It is better to translate “slaughtered and burned sacrifices,” taking the root נָסָן in its earlier sense of slaughter and the root רָפָט in its original sense of “causing to smoke,” i.e., burning on an altar.

4. Possibly the number a thousand represents the total number of offerings he made there from first to last. If this is so, then the frequentative of the RSV is correct, though used to offer does not make the matter much more clear than did . . . offer. A better translation would be “offered, first and last.”

The burnt offering (נָסָן) is properly a whole offering, all of it burned upon the altar and none of it eaten either by worshiper or by priest. It was entirely a gift to God.

The altar (מִזְבָּח) was originally a “place of slaughter,” as the etymology of the word shows, from an original custom whereby the animal was slain upon a stone (cf.
I Sam. 14:33-35). Every slaughter (נָסָן) was both a sacrifice and a meal in the early nomad days and in the first days of Canaan also.

a non-Hebrew constituency to placate, the young king is being loosened a bit from the faith of his fathers. It is one thing to tolerate other religions within a nation’s borders; it is another thing to adopt a politician’s practice of putting them all on the back as if they were equally good. At this stage it is too early to condemn Solomon, but reading back from later developments, we can see the first beginnings of religious compromise.

5-15. A Model Prayer.—Notwithstanding Solomon’s personal imperfections, the prayer ascribed to him is so appropriate for one who has just assumed a place of public power and responsibility that it has served as a model for rulers since his day. Americans will remember that when the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt placed the burdens of the presidential office on the shoulders of Harry S. Truman, the new executive offered Solomon’s petition as his own prayer for guidance. His act enlisted the sympathy of his fellow citizens.

Solomon’s prayer breathes the spirit of humility, I am but a little child; I do not know how to go out or come in. Measuring himself by the stature of his father, the young sovereign felt 6 And Solomon said, Thou hast showed unto thy servant David my father great mercy, according as he walked before thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart with thee; and thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that thou hast given him a son to sit on his throne, as it is this day.

7 And now, O Lord my God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of David my father: and I am but a little child: I know not how to go out or come in.

8 And thy servant is in the midst of thy people which thou hast chosen, a great people, that cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude.

9 Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?

6. Great kindness: The Hebrew word is הָסֶדֶה, and the reference is to the “great bounty,” which God has shown to his chosen king. Thus, in the view of the Deuteronomic editor, both God and David have kept the covenant, David by his faithfulness and uprightness of heart, and God by prospering the king and establishing the heir upon the throne (II Sam. 7:12).

7. Jeremiah speaks of himself as a child in his account of his call (Jer. 1:6), and Solomon similarly refers to himself as a little child. The phrase is intended partly to denote the humility of inexperience, but partly also to emphasize Solomon’s sense of a divine call to a more-than-human task. Ancient commentators tended to take the statement literally. The LXX (2:12) reckons Solomon to have been twelve years old at his accession, while Josephus (Antiquities VIII. 7. 8) makes him out to be fourteen years, and gives him a reign of eighty years. In any case Solomon can scarcely have been more than twenty years old, since he was born about the time of the Ammonite war (II Sam. 12:24), which is unlikely to have been in the earlier half of David’s reign.

9. An understanding mind: This is a sound modern translation. The M.T. reads “a hearing heart” (ASV mg.), the root וְשָׁמָן being used in the sense of “hear and obey,” as regularly in Deuteronomic passages. The heart is often said to have been regarded by the Hebrews as the seat of the intellect, but the meaning of the word is in fact much wider. It stands for the inner core of a man’s being, and thus can be used as the seat of the intellect, the will, the emotions, or whatever aspect of man’s nature is involved basically at the time. Thus here it means that Solomon desired “in his heart of hearts.”

his littleness and his need. He became “poor in spirit,” and poverty of spirit is the opposite of pride. Pride is the first of the deadly sins because it shuts the doors of the mind and heart. It takes away the key to the gates of understanding and fellowship. And just as pride comes first in the list of deadly sins, so Matthew in reporting the Beatitudes puts poverty of spirit as the first of the lively virtues. Emptied of self-importance and self-righteousness, the humble person is prepared to receive the blessings of the kingdom of heaven.

Solomon, though no longer a child in years, revealed the childlike spirit which Jesus said is an essential prerequisite for entrance into the kingdom. Open of mind, he sought to see the truth; and obedient in spirit, he seemed ready to follow where the facts might lead. However dark and confused the problems in any situation, the seeker after truth can and should always clean from the lens of his own mind the befogging preconceptions and presumptions so that he can catch whatever light may break. This is the preparation which Pilate, for ex-
10 And the speech pleased the Lord, that Solomon had asked this thing.

11 And God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life: neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies; but hast asked for thyself understanding to discern judgment;

12 Behold, I have done according to thy word: lo, I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart; so that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee.

13 And I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches, and honor: so that there shall not be any among the kings like unto thee all thy days.

14 And if thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as thy father David did walk, then I will lengthen thy days.

as we say, to be wholly and completely obedient to the will of God so that he could govern God's people wisely and well. He longed to be the perfect Deuteronomic king.

11. To discern what is right: This is an interpretation rather than a translation. The Hebrew reads “to hear [and obey] mishpāt.” In a strict sense this latter word is untranslatable. In so far as it means judgment it means “judgment according to precedent.” But there is always a religious atmosphere about the word. In early times when any matter of faith or practice came up for decision, it was customary to seek a ruling from God at the shrine. The cult official sought this on behalf of the inquirer. If the official was a priest, he sought the answer by casting the sacred lot or by the examination of the entrails of bird or beast. If he was a prophet, it would be in a vision or dream, or else in an ecstasy. This word which thus came straight from God was called a tōrāh, probably from the ancient custom of “casting” (yārāh) the sacred lot. But when the same question came again, there was already a precedent. The same answer was given as before, but it was then a mishpāt. The king always governed by mishpāt (“custom,” “precedent”), but if any matter cropped up of any particular difficulty, he would send to the shrine for a new ruling (tōrāh; cf. II Kings 19:1-2, 14). Solomon therefore asked for discernment so that he might understand the will of God and obey it, whether as declared in the first place by tōrāh or as known in human experience by mishpāt.

14. This verse is thoroughly Deuteronomic in every detail.

ample, failed to make when he was examining Jesus. The Roman governor asked his prisoner: “Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice. Pilate saith unto him, What is truth?” (John 18:37-38.) According to the record, Jesus made no answer. There was little use in trying to explain truth to Pilate, who was not sufficiently “of the truth” to wait to learn what it might be and to follow it when presented. Pilate was motivated by expediency, and the God of truth dwells only “with him who is of a contrite and humble spirit” (Isa. 57:15).

Solomon in his humility prayed: Give thy servant . . . an understanding mind to govern thy people. Note how frequently the word “understanding” occurs in Proverbs, which popular thought associates with Solomon and his advisers. Understanding is more than information. It is intellectual apprehension, and when applied to human values it includes imaginative comprehension. An understanding mind is one able to put itself in the place of others. We may 15 And Solomon awoke; and, behold, it was a dream. And he came to Jerusalem, and stood before the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and offered up burnt offerings, and offered peace offerings, and made a feast to all his servants.

16 ¶ Then came there two women, that were harlots, unto the king, and stood before him.

17 And the one woman said, O my lord, I and this woman dwell in one house; and I was delivered of a child with her in the house.

15. Thus, according to Deuteronomic standards, Solomon regularizes his action in going to Gibeon. Being unable to sacrifice in a temple which was not yet built, he does the next best thing and sacrifices on the site of the future central sanctuary. The LXX says that he offered sacrifices on an altar before the ark. He offered burnt offerings and peace offerings, the former a gift wholly given to God (cf. vs. 4), the latter providing the sacred meal, the feast for all his servants. The M.T. has shelâmim, short for zebabah shelâmim, “the shared meal.” Opinion differs as to the significance and meaning of shelâmim. Some say the word has to do with “peace,” and others with the “fulfillment of vows.” The aim was probably to secure shâlôm, which means not only “peace” but “good fortune,” “health,” prosperity,” these being secured by participating in what had been consecrated, and therefore was divine food.

2. THE JUDGMENT OF SOLOMON (3:16-28)

16-28. This story is given as an example of that wisdom in judgment which was promised at Gibeon. Solomon decides a difficult case with great acuteness. Two women, prostitutes living in the same house, dispute as to whose child is dead and whose child is alive. Both claim the living child. Solomon decides by commanding that the living child be cut into two pieces and shared between the two women. One woman refuses and know the external facts about other persons, other races, other nations, and yet not have imagination enough to get on the inside of their viewpoints and feelings. If our world which has now been reduced to a neighborhood is ever to become a brotherhood, it will be thus transformed by the cultivation of imagination more than by the collection of information.

In our curtained-off world we can look up to God, the Father of all men, and pray for his other children whom he has made of one blood with us. By such repeated praying we can sensitize our imaginations until we approach the understanding sympathy of Jesus, who felt whatever was done to the least of his brethren as having been done to himself (Matt. 25:31-46).

In his search for understanding adequate to the governing of his people Solomon looked up to God first. From a level gaze people do not look very lovable. We must try to see human beings as God sees them. Only as we catch the family atmosphere of our heavenly Father can we cultivate and safeguard reverence for personality. Divine help is needed to purge the dross of possessiveness from our intimacies, to put charitableness into our charities, to keep our kindnesses from being condescending, to generate sympathy for strangers, and to beget prayers for those who despitefully use us. Without the sympathy nurtured by communion with God, our social attitudes tend toward cynicism; and without the strengthening standards of divine law, our so-called reverence for personality deteriorates toward a plausible sentimentality which is all things to all men. Solomon started on the only plane where rule can give promise of redemption, for “the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: and the knowledge of the Holy is understanding” (Prov. 9:10).

16-28. Wisdom and Justice.—The story of the two harlots is a dramatic demonstration of Solomon’s wisdom at work. When the case became noised abroad it aroused admiration for the young ruler’s astuteness. The public regard went deeper: They stood in awe of the king, 18 And it came to pass the third day after that I was delivered, that this woman was delivered also: and we were together; there was no stranger with us in the house, save we two in the house.

19 And this woman’s child died in the night; because she overlaid it.

20 And she arose at midnight, and took my son from beside me, while thine handmaid slept, and laid it in her bosom, and laid her dead child in my bosom.

21 And when I rose in the morning to give my child suck, behold, it was dead: but when I had considered it in the morning, behold, it was not my son, which I did bear.

22 And the other woman said, Nay; but the living is my son, and the dead is thy son. And this said, No; but the dead is thy son, and the living is my son. Thus they spake before the king.

23 Then said the king, The one saith, This is my son that liveth, and thy son is the dead; and the other saith, Nay; but thy son is the dead, and my son is the living.

24 And the king said, Bring me a sword. And they brought a sword before the king.

25 And the king said, Divide the living child in two, and give half to the one, and half to the other.

26 Then spake the woman whose the living child was unto the king, for her bowels yearned upon her son, and she said, O my lord, give her the living child, and in no wise slay it. But the other said, Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it.

Offering to let the other have the child. She is the mother. Otto Thenius (Die Bücher der Könige [Leipzig: S. Hirzel, 1873], p. 28) quotes a similar case of a Thracian king who had to choose among three men, all of whom claimed to be the son and heir of the dead Cimmerian king. He ordered them to pierce the dead king’s body with a spear. One refused. He was the son. The incident of the two women is from the biography, and may very well be, as some allege, an adaptation of a common folklore tale for the greater glory of Solomon. It is a typical example of that Oriental wisdom which is conbecause they perceived that the wisdom of God was in him, to render justice (vs. 28). Solomon’s shrewd way of deciding the maternity of the child by offering to cut it in two did show an element of divine wisdom in that it sought truth through the test of love. The common saying that love is blind is a misleading half-truth. To be sure, love does dull the vision to some defects, but it also quickens the insight in ways essential to discovering truth and dispensing justice. In the case before Solomon the love of the real mother had its reward. Likewise, love always wins the verdict before the divine Judge.

When the record asserts of Solomon that the wisdom of God was in him, to render justice, it raises in the reader’s mind the relation of wisdom to justice. The classic symbol of justice is that of a blindfolded woman with a scales in her hand, the implication being that the essence of justice is the weighing of the facts in hand with an impartiality which might be lost if the judge were to see the parties involved.
27 Then the king answered and said, Give her the living child, and in no wise slay it: she is the mother thereof.

28 And all Israel heard of the judgment which the king had judged; and they feared the king: for they saw that the wisdom of God was in him to do judgment.

4 So king Solomon was king over all Israel.

2 And these were the princes which he had: Azariah the son of Zadok the priest, 3 Elihoreph and Ahiah, the sons of Shisha, scribes; Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud, the recorder.

4 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the host: and Zadok and Abiathar were the priests:

5 And Azariah the son of Nathan was over the officers: and Zabud the son of Nathan was principal officer, and the king’s friend:

cerned with the actual business of living rather than with abstractions. The Hebrews valued particularly that astuteness which reveals a thorough knowledge of human character both in strength and in weakness. It is a type of wisdom which often becomes a very worldly wisdom.

3. Solomon’s Court Officials (4:1-6)

This list of high officials comes with the rest of the chapter from the biography. It illustrates the greatness of Solomon. The biographer has taken extracts from the court annals and has added comments of his own throughout the chapter. The LXX has another list included in the long addition which follows 2:26. Some of the differences between the two lists are extremely perplexing and no satisfactory explanation has been offered. The suggestion that the LXX list refers to the end of the reign and the present list, with its LXX equivalent, to the beginning, does not solve the problem.

4:5. The LXX and Lucian omit the reference to the priest in connection with Zabud son of Nathan. The English versions insert and in order to “correct” the syntax. Probably the word ought to be omitted as a mistaken gloss. The word kōhēn (priest) may have had a wider significance than is generally supposed (cf. II Sam. 8:18, which has never been satisfactorily explained). The duties of the king’s friend are unknown, but Hushai filled this position in David’s time (II Sam. 15:37; 16:16), and the title is mentioned in the Tell el-Amarna letters as a regular official in petty Palestinian court circles of the fourteenth century B.C.

But such a portrayal is hardly adequate. The blindfold should be removed. If we would weigh a situation justly, we must see the background of those involved in it; e.g., the delinquent boy whose home has been a slum and whose playmates have been the gashouse gang cannot be judged justly on the same basis as the boy who has enjoyed every advantage of a good home and Christian culture. And in school that lad whose mind is a place of sharp tensions and brilliant powers is not to be disciplined on the same basis as the boy whose nature flows along smoothly and placidly. What parent or teacher can do justice to the merits of the different temperaments committed to his care unless he has the insight and imagination to look into the hearts and backgrounds of those whom he must judge?

Divine justice is dispensed by the infinitely wise and understanding Father-God. He looks

4. Solomon's Provincial Governors (4:7-19)

7-19. This list gives the names of twelve administrative officers and their districts. Each governor provided supplies for Solomon's establishment for one month in the year. The list is important for two reasons. First, the boundaries are not equivalent to the old tribal boundaries. This has been thought to be part of Solomon's deliberate policy, whereby he sought to break up the old tribal loyalties so as to consolidate his own royal rule. If this is so, then we have here one of the causes of the disruption of the united kingdom at Solomon's death. Second, there is no governor over any part of Judah.

upon the heart. He sees "the purposes unsure, the instincts immature." He comprehends the meshwork of influences in which each erring child is caught. He is aware that our sins flow together as waters mingle in a stream. Our little finite minds cannot comprehend the fullness of divine compassion, but we sing in faith with Frederick W. Faber:

There's a wideness in God's mercy,
Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in his justice,
Which is more than liberty.

And we agree with Portia that Earthly power doth then show likest God's,

When mercy seasons justice.

Mercy is an integral part of true justice. It is not a sentimental forgiveness, not a condescending pity. Mercy is that insight which sees how life looks through the other person's eyes. It is that kindness which gives the benefit of the doubt and days of grace to our debtors. The seer of Patmos comprehended the blending of 20 Judah and Israel were many, as the sand which is by the sea in multitude, eating and drinking, and making merry.

This is significant since the chief duty of the governor toward the king was to provide supplies for the court and the standing army of chariots and horses (vss. 22-23, 27-28). Judah was apparently exempt from this levy and was thus favored against the rest of the country. When we realize also that Judah was not liable to labor conscription, we can see that the so-called united kingdom of Judah and Israel was largely a domination of Israel by Judah.

5. The Splendor of Solomon (4:20-28)

These verses give a picture of idyllic happiness throughout the whole kingdom. In addition we have details of Solomon's magnificence, telling of the size of his establishment and the quantity of provisions necessary for its upkeep.

The LXX and Lucian order of the verses is different from that of the M.T. Vss. 20, 21, 25, and 26 are in the long LXX interpolation which is found after 2:46. The LXX order is probably original, for the details there are much less confused. It is evident that some editor has been busy, apparently in the postexilic period (see vs. 24). He was desirous to extol the greatness of Solomon and to paint an impressive picture of general happiness extending throughout north and south under his rule. Probably the editor who is responsible for these changes is the man who moved the note about the marriage with Pharaoh's daughter to the beginning of ch. 3. Otherwise the rest of this chapter contains material drawn from the annals, though the figures may easily have grown in the telling. It exalts King Solomon, his wealth and splendor and wisdom, all of it according to the pattern set out in the dream at Gibeon.

mercy with justice when in his vision he saw that "there was a rainbow round about the throne" (Rev. 4:3). God rules from a "throne of grace." Solomon was far from such a divine principle of rule, but he had prayed for an understanding heart, and his early career gave promise that the wisdom of God was in him, to render justice.

4:20-34. When GodProsper.—The "glory of Solomon" has become proverbial. The reflection of his splendor lingers on the pages of the N.T. The Chronicler not only takes pride in recounting the magnificence of Solomon's court but interprets it as proof of God's favor. The danger of riches is compounded by the assumption that they are the reward of righteousness. To be sure, our Hebrew-Christian faith does instill the qualities of industry, integrity, and thrift, which tend toward material success. But our faith has not been so effective in controlling the wealth it has helped to create. It was so in Solomon's case.

If there is truth in the proverb that "the love of money is the root of all evil" (I Tim. 6:10), it is certainly not true that the accumulation of money is the fruit of all righteousness. The idea that material prosperity is evidence of divine favor has had devilish results. Jesus sought to 21 And Solomon reigned over all kingdoms from the river unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt: they brought presents, and served Solomon all the days of his life.

22 ¶ And Solomon's provision for one day was thirty measures of fine flour, and threescore measures of meal, 23 Ten fat oxen, and twenty oxen out of the pastures, and a hundred sheep, besides harts, and roebucks, and fallow deer, and fatted fowl.

24 For he had dominion over all the region on this side the river, from Tiphshah even to Azzah, over all the kings on this side the river: and he had peace on all sides round about him.

25 And Judah and Israel dwelt safely, every man under his vine and under his fig tree, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, all the days of Solomon.

26 And Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses for his chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen.

27 And those officers provided victuals for king Solomon, and for all that came were happy. 21ς Solomon ruled over all the kingdoms from the Eu-phra'tes to the land of the Philistines and to the border of Egypt: they brought tribute and served Solomon all the days of his life.

22 Solomon's provision for one day was thirty measures of fine flour, and sixty measures of meal, 23 ten fat oxen, and twenty pasture-fed cattle, a hundred sheep, besides harts, gazelles, roebucks, and fatted fowl. 24 For he had dominion over all the region west of the Eu-phra'tes from Tiph-sah to Gaza, over all the kings west of the Eu-phra'tes; and he had peace on all sides round about him. 25 And Judah and Israel dwelt in safety, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, every man under his vine and under his fig tree, all the days of Solomon. 26 Solomon also had forty thousand stalls of horses for his chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen. 27 And those officers supplied provisions for King Solomon, and for all who

21. The claim is that the kingdom stretched from the river [i.e., the Euphrates] . . . unto the border of Egypt [i.e., the Wadi el-'Arish, approximately half way between Gaza and the Isthmus of Suez], apart from the Philistine country. These are the ideal boundaries, east and west, of Israel's territory. Actually Solomon lost control over Edom (11:22 [LXX]) and over Syria-Damascus (11:24-25).

The RSV correctly translates the word minhāh by tribute. This is the original meaning of the word prior to its special use as a sacrificial term. In pre-exilic days the minhāh was a gift to God, being tribute paid to him as owner and lord of the land. This is the meaning in Gen. 4:3 ("offering"). After the Exile the word came to be used for the cereal offering which accompanied every flesh offering (Lev. 23:18; etc.). There is confusion concerning this because the rendering of the KJV is invariably "meat offering." The explanation is that in seventeenth-century English "meat" meant food in general and not flesh in particular (cf. Lev. 6:14-18, where it is obvious that a cereal offering is involved).

22. Altogether a thousand bushels per day of groats and meal were needed apart from the flesh, by no means excessive if Solomon kept forty thousand horses and twelve thousand riders.

24. "Beyond the River" would be a true rendering of the M.T., but west of the Euphrates is meant. The translation on this side (KJV) is not misleading, though strictly less accurate. The author of this verse evidently lived east of the Euphrates, so that here is clear evidence of the work of an exilic editor.

25. The idyllic picture of Palestinian ease is every man under his vine and under his fig tree. He does not want the land "developed," either then or now (cf. Marmaduke Pickthall, Said the Fisherman [London: Methuen & Co., 1909], p. 1).

27. There was a time when this verse followed directly after vs. 19. The Hebrew has "these officers," but the usual English rendering is those officers, a change made necessary because of the interpolation of the intervening verses.

6. SOLOMON’S SURPASSING WISDOM (4:29-34)

God more than fulfills the promises of Gibeon. Solomon becomes the wisest of men, and all the world comes to hear him. His wise sayings cover the whole realm of the natural world.

30. The people of the east: In Hebrew the Bené Qedhem are the Arabian-Edomite tribes to the southeast of the Dead Sea. Arabia-Edom is the traditional home of that type of epigrammatic wisdom which the Hebrews admired; cf. Job 1:3, where “the people of the east” are the lords of the Arabian desert.

B. ERECTION OF THE TEMPLE (5:1-7:51)

1. PREPARATIONS FOR BUILDING THE TEMPLE (5:1-18)

Solomon arranges with Hiram of Tyre for the delivery of cedar and cypress timber.
Hiram contracts to float the timber down the coast in rafts and to break up the rafts at the agreed place. Hiram’s men are to do the felling, but Solomon is to provide the unskilled labor. Solomon contracts to pay large quantities annually of wheat and oil.

room of his father: for Hiram was ever a lover of David.

2 And Solomon sent to Hiram, saying,

3 Thou knowest how that David my father could not build a house unto the name of the Lord his God, for the wars which were about him on every side, until the Lord put them under the soles of his feet.

Solomon arranges for the stone himself, quarrying it in the hill country of Ephraim, with hired Phoenician stonemasons to do the actual cutting. These experts are from Gebel, i.e., Byblos. twenty miles north of Beyrouth.

The material for this chapter is from the biography, except for vss. 3-6, which are a Deuteronomistic interlude.

5:1. The spelling of the name varies, but Hiram is correct, being a shortened form of עִירם (‘āhIrām), “brother of Ram [the lofty one].”

The name Tyre means “rock,” and the city was originally built on a rocky islet half a mile from the shore. This rock was a mile long by three quarters of a mile broad. Its double harbor, north and south, made it a famous port, since one harbor or the other was generally accessible in any weather. This was important because the whole coast line was most difficult for sailing ships, being a sandy lee shore with few harbors, and the ships were unable to do much more than sail before the wind, since tacking was an unknown art. Alexander the Great built a causeway sixty yards wide and thus captured the city which had successfully resisted many sieges, even that by the Babylonians. Since that time sand has drifted up from the south, and now the site of ancient Tyre is joined to the mainland by an isthmus half a mile broad.

The LXX and Lucian have here a curious variant, according to which Hiram sent his servants to anoint Solomon. This custom is vouched for in the Tell el-Amarna tablets as a ceremony by which the suzerain confirmed the appointment of his vassal. Winckler suggested that the gifts mentioned in vs. 11 were actually a permanent tribute paid annually to the Tyrian king (Eberhard Schrader, Die Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament, ed. H. Zimmern and H. Winckler [3rd ed.; Berlin: Reuther & Reichard, 1902-8], I, 237-38).

5:3. The Deuteronomistic explanation for David’s not having built the temple is that David was too busy establishing the kingdom. The explanation given in II Sam. 7 workmen. When he contracted with King Hiram of Tyre for the materials with which to build the temple, he raised a levy of forced labor and dispatched his men into Hiram’s country to prepare the timber for shipment. And he sent them to Lebanon, ten thousand a month in relays; they would be a month in Lebanon and two months at home (vs. 14). Solomon was wise enough to see that the keeping of home contacts is essential to the morale of men abroad. The nature of man demands some place where he can feel “at home.” Home is the spot where our spirits in the presence of love relax from the strain put upon us by the pressure of work. Home is the circle where listening ears allow us to unpack our hearts with words, knowing that understanding sympathy will keep what is worth while and throw away the waste. Home is the environment where little ones lean on us and look up to us, thereby causing us to stand a bit more firmly and feel a bit taller. Home is the place where we are appraised not in terms of market price but on the basis of what we are, where a Bob Cratchit is a hero to Tiny Tim, however he may be scorned as an underling at the office.

How morale deteriorates when home life is disrupted is shown in time of war. Absentee husbands and fathers, working mothers, up-rooted families transplanted by war’s emergencies—these are factors which bear fruit in sexual irregularities, multiplied divorces, juvenile delinquency, and many other ills. The prolonged absence of the Hebrew workmen in a foreign land would have tended to weaken both their family ties and their national loyalty. Perhaps we should not read too much into the record here. How much Solomon had his eye on pre 4 But now the Lord my God hath given me rest on every side, so that there is neither adversary nor evil occurrent.

5 And, behold, I purpose to build a house unto the name of the Lord my God, as the Lord spake unto David my father, saying, Thy son, whom I will set upon thy throne in thy room, he shall build a house unto my name.

6 Now therefore command thou that they hew me cedar trees out of Lebanon; and my servants shall be with thy servants: and unto thee will I give hire for thy servants according to all that thou shalt appoint: for thou knowest that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like unto the Sidonians.

7 ¶ And it came to pass, when Hiram heard the words of Solomon, that he rejoiced greatly, and said, Blessed be the Lord this day, which hath given unto David a wise son over this great people.

is that such a building is contrary to the true and primitive worship of the God of the Hebrews, which should involve a tent. The explanation given in I Chr. 22:8 is that David was a man of blood and therefore not fit to build the temple.

4. The Hebrew sāṭān (adversary) is used in its original sense of any human agent. In Job, Satan is one of God's heavenly court. His particular duty is to travel to and fro in the earth to see if men are actually as good as they claim to be. If they are not, his duty is to accuse them before the throne of God. Later the word becomes a proper name, and already in I Chr. 21:1 (cf. II Sam. 24:1) Satan is the enemy of God. In the N.T. he is the prince of the kingdom of evil.

6. The cedars of Lebanon were famous from antiquity, their wood being hard and therefore proof against dry rot and insects. According to Pliny the cedar roof of the temple of Diana at Ephesus lasted for four hundred years. The wood is close-grained and therefore admirably suitable for carving. Its fragrance is most marked. Cedars at one time covered the whole of the Lebanon, the Anti-Lebanon, and thence north and west into the Taurus Mountains. They were in great demand throughout the Near East, large parts of which have always been treeless country. The Assyrian advances toward the Mediterranean from the twelfth century B.C. onward had in part these cedars as their objective.

6. The skill of the Sidonians (Phoenicians) in crafts of every kind was well known in the ancient world; cf. the embroidered robes of Andromache and the silver bowl of Achilles (Homer Iliad VI. 290; XXIII. 741-44).
8 And Hiram sent to Solomon, saying, I have considered the things which thou sentest to me for: and I will do all thy desire concerning timber of cedar, and concerning timber of fir.
9 My servants shall bring them down from Lebanon unto the sea; and I will convey them by sea in floats unto the place that thou shalt appoint me, and will cause them to be discharged there, and thou shalt receive them: and thou shalt accomplish my desire, in giving food for my household.
10 So Hiram gave Solomon cedar trees and fir trees according to all his desire.
11 And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand measures of wheat for food to his household, and twenty measures of pure oil: thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year.
12 And the LORD gave Solomon wisdom, as he promised him: and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon; and they two made a league together.
13 ¶ And king Solomon raised a levy out of all Israel; and the levy was thirty thousand men.

11. Twenty thousand is correct, following the LXX, Lucian, Syriac, and II Chr. 2:10, as against the “twenty” of the M.T. The total quantities amount to 220,000 bushels of wheat and 180,000 gallons of best olive oil. Beaten oil is the purest oil, obtained by pounding the olives in a mortar instead of the normal procedure of treading them in the press.

12. The Hebrew idiom is “cut a treaty.” The custom was common among the Greeks also. Tyndareus, father of Helen, cut a boar in pieces and made all the Greek princes pass between them to confirm the oath to abide by Helen’s choice of a husband. The Romans “smote a treaty” (cf. Livy’s description of the treaty between the Romans and the Albans, when the priest of Jupiter smote the boar pig with a flint knife [I. 24]). The Roman idea was that Jupiter should smite the offender just as his priest smote the boar pig. The Hebrew idea was that of both parties becoming partakers of the same life, both identifying themselves with the life of the animal sacrificed (cf. Gen. 15:9-21 concerning God’s covenant with Abraham, and especially Jer. 34:18, where a covenant is ratified by the cutting of a calf into two pieces; see James G. Frazer, Folk-lore in the Old Testament [London: Macmillan & Co., 1919], I, 391-428).
And he sent them to Lebanon, ten thousand a month by courses: a month they were in Lebanon, and two months at home: and Adoniram was over the levy.

And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens, and fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains;

Besides the chief of Solomon’s officers which were over the work, three thousand and three hundred, which ruled over the people that wrought in the work.

And the king commanded, and they brought great stones, costly stones, and hewed stones, to lay the foundation of the house.

And Solomon’s builders and Hiram’s builders did hew them, and the stonesquarers: so they prepared timber and stones to build the house.

And it came to pass in the fourth hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon’s reign over

14. Relays is more intelligible today than courses. The Hebrew word  הָלִיצְפַּדָּה  means “exchanges.” (Cf. the caliph, who is the successor of Mohammed; also Isa. 40 81, “they shall exchange strength,” i.e., they shall change their human strength, which is of no avail, and in its place, as its successor, they shall receive the strength of God.)

2. The Temple Edifices (6:1-38)

The building of the temple marks a definite development in Hebrew religion, involving the worship of a settled community as against that of a nomad people. Ancient Hebrew tradition favored a tent as against “a house of cedar” (II Sam. 7:7). The details of the layout of the temple have been taken in the first place from a temple document which was embodied in the biography, but the whole description has been worked over by successive editors. They thought in terms of the second temple, that which was built after the return from exile. The result is that the original scheme is hard to isolate.

The temple was set on the hill, as was reckoned to be proper for temples. This was not because it was thus nearest to the sky, but because it represented the great mountain of the gods away to the north. It was impossible for man actually to appear in the true abode of the gods, but they were gracious enough to be found in such a model of their real home. The entrance to the temple itself was from the east, between two great pillars, and thence through a vestibule (Hebrew,  עלם) which ran the whole width of the edifice, just over thirty feet wide (twenty cubits). The vestibule was ten cubits deep (over fifteen feet) and led into the holy place (Hebrew, הֶקְחָל, Akkadian, egalu, properly “palace”), which was forty cubits long (nearly sixty feet) by twenty wide by thirty high, with rafters across at a height of twenty cubits. Beyond this to the between God and men. In building the house of God, Solomon wisely sought to preserve among the builders the homes of men.

6:1-7:1. A Tale of Two Houses.—Ch. 6 gives the long and detailed description of the temple which Solomon built, ending with this statement, He was seven years in building it (vs. 38). Ch. 7 opens immediately with these words, Solomon was building his own house thirteen years. Seven years for the house of God; thirteen years for his own palace. Is there significance in the fact that the king spent almost twice as Israel, in the month Zif, which is the second month, that he began to build the house of the Lord.

2 And the house which king Solomon built for the Lord, the length thereof was three score cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits.

3 And the porch before the temple of the house, twenty cubits was the length thereof, according to the breadth of the house; and ten cubits was the breadth thereof before the house.

west was the shrine itself (Hebrew, ḏēbhir), twenty cubits by twenty by twenty. This was completely dark, there being no external lighting of any kind. On every side of the edifice except the east, where the whole side was taken up by the vestibule, there were three stories of small rooms, the lowest being five cubits wide, the next six, and the uppermost seven. This arrangement provided half a cubit on each side of the lower room to form a resting place for the ceiling beams. The total height of the three stories was fifteen cubits, half the height of the main building as seen from the front (east). The entrance to the small rooms was on the south, and there were staircases from story to story.

6:1. In the LXX this verse is inserted two verses earlier, and vss. 37-38a are found here. The verse is a postexilic addition, a different word for month (ςμν) being used from that which is found in the rest of the chapter (יון). Ziv was the eighth month of the pre-exilic calendar and the (approximately) second month of the postexilic calendar. The figure of 480 years is actually obtained by adding 50 years of the Babylonian exile to the total number of years assigned by the Deuteronomic editor to the kings of Judah (430 years). The suggestion is that an editor of the Priestly Code period has been busy creating a regular pattern for the history after the exact numerical fashion usual in that school of writers. He has thus made the time from the Exodus to the building of the temple exactly equal to the time from the building of the first temple to the first beginnings of the building of the second temple according to Ezra 5:16. If this verse is indeed late and is due to such a calculation, then there is no longer any main internal support for the earlier date of the invasion of Canaan under Joshua (ca. 1407 B.C.).

During the Exile the Jews adopted the Babylonian calendar (of Nippur) and began to reckon their months from the spring new moon. This makes Ziv the second month. It is probable, however, that before the Exile the month began with the full moon, and only after the Exile with the new moon (N. H. Snaith, The Jewish New Year Festival [London: Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1947] pp. 96-108). If this is the case, then the new month day of Ziv was equivalent to the fifteenth day of Iyar, the postexilic name for the second month of the Babylonian year.

much time on his own house as on the temple of God? We should not read between the lines, but the bare statement would seem to betoken that the secular was beginning to overshadow the spiritual in Solomon’s court.

The young king by his prayers and deeds had given evidence that he had what Paul calls “a sense of what is vital in religion” (Rom. 2:18 Moffatt). He had asked for wisdom and under-4 And for the house he made windows of narrow lights.
5 And against the wall of the house he built chambers round about, against the walls of the house round about, both of the temple and of the oracle: and he made chambers round about.
6 The nethermost chamber was five cubits broad, and the middle was six cubits broad, and the third was seven cubits broad: for without in the wall of the house he made narrowed rests round about, that the beams should not be fastened in the walls of the house.
7 And the house, when it was in building, was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither: so that there was neither hammer nor axe nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was in building.
8 The door for the middle chamber was in the right side of the house: and they went up with winding stairs into the middle chamber, and out of the middle into the third.

4. Recessed frames or narrow lights: The Hebrew word is uncertain; the reference is probably to openings wide inside, but narrowing to a slit outside, similar to the windows of the medieval castles of western Europe, made for shooting arrows and for securing light with the minimum of dangers from archers who might be attacking the castle.

5. The Hebrew once more is uncertain, and the ancient translators were puzzled. Possibly the reference is to a continuous buttress built to support the outside walls—an embankment. The Targ. apparently thought of the whole block of side buildings, the three stories of chambers which covered three sides of the main building. These chambers were perhaps designed for family feasts (I Sam. 1:18 [LXX]; 9:22). In the second temple similar chambers were store chambers (I Chr. 9:26; Ezra 8:29; Neh. 10:38).

7. This verse interrupts the description of the small chambers, and is probably a late insertion by a postexilic editor whose activities are the cause of many difficulties both in this chapter and in the next. He evidently knew that no hewing of stone took place on the temple site. Apparently he thought that this was so that there should be no noise during the actual building. It is likely that the original intention is connected with the early custom whereby altars had to be made of unhewn stone. The earliest altar (lit., "place of slaughter") was probably the actual stone in which the god was supposed to be. He thus drank the blood which bathed and soaked into the stone. The stone must not be hewn lest the god should be damaged. When the development of shrines into permanent stone buildings took place, all stone brought onto the site

He takes a man who is shiftless and makes him industrious. He transforms the fellow who is dishonest into the reliable and trustworthy employee. He stirs the sluggish spirit and makes it alert. Thereupon these traits of industry, sobriety, honesty, and alertness begin to enlarge their possessor's place in society. That is what seemed to be happening at first with Solomon. That is what happened to the early Christians in the Roman Empire. They became such good craftsmen that they attracted the attention of Emperor Constantine, who made their religion legal, and in a century or so the once-despised Christians had become the social leaders of the 9 So he built the house, and finished it; and covered the house with beams and boards of cedar.
10 And then he built chambers against all the house, five cubits high: and they rested on the house with timber of cedar.
11 ¶ And the word of the LORD came to Solomon, saying,
12 Concerning this house which thou art in building, if thou wilt walk in my statutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments to walk in them; then will I perform my word with thee, which I spake unto David thy father:
13 And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will not forsake my people Israel.
14 So Solomon built the house, and finished it.
15 And he built the walls of the house within with boards of cedar, both the floor of the house, and the walls of the ceiling: and he covered them on the inside with wood, and covered the floor of the house with planks of fir.
16 And he built twenty cubits on the sides of the house, both the floor and the walls with boards of cedar: he even built them for it within, even for the oracle, even for the most holy place.

would thereby be made sacred, so that whatever squaring and shaping of the stone was done would have to be done before transport.

9. This verse makes a break between vss. 8 and 10, where no break ought to be, and it should follow vs. 10 as in the LXX and Lucian; its last phrase contains two difficult and uncertain words, beams and planks. Ewald’s suggestion (History of Israel [London: Longmans, Green & Co., 1871], III, 288-89) is that there was “an ornamental ceiling in squares, with small pieces of cedar wood as dividing beams.”

11-14. A late insertion by a priestly editor, too late to find a place in the LXX. He repeated vs. 9a in order to dovetail his insertion into the narrative.

16. A Priestly Code editor has inserted as the most holy place. This is the first of a series of insertions by which this editor sought to identify the second temple with Solomon’s temple. The most holy place (lit., “holy of holies”) was the inner shrine of the second temple and, apart from store chambers and living quarters, etc., was the only covered place in the main block of buildings.

waning empire. This same story of transformation was repeated in the case of the English Puritans. The sober industriousness inculcated by piety made the followers of Cromwell the founders of England’s financial leadership. It is no accident that the Western culture which developed in the wake of Hebrew-Christian expansion is more dynamic than the Oriental civilizations. The prophets of Israel and the evangelists of Christianity teach that man has a fighting chance and is not chained in fatalism, that he shall seek the truth and the truth will make him free. These are among the factors which gave rise to the science, the inventions, the spirit of material progress of our Western world.
17 And the house, that is, the temple before it, was forty cubits long.
18 And the cedar of the house within was carved with knops and open flowers: all was cedar; there was no stone seen.
19 And the oracle he prepared in the house within, to set there the ark of the covenant of the Lord.
20 And the oracle in the forepart was twenty cubits in length, and twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in the height thereof: and he overlaid it with pure gold; and so covered the altar which was of cedar.
21 So Solomon overlaid the house within with pure gold: and he made a partition by the chains of gold before the oracle; and he overlaid it with gold.
22 And the whole house he overlaid with gold, until he had finished all the house: also the whole altar that was by the oracle he overlaid with gold.
23 ¶ And within the oracle he made two cherubim of olive tree, each ten cubits high.
24 And five cubits was the one wing of the cherub, and five cubits the other wing as the most holy place. 17 The house, that is, the nave in front of the inner sanctuary, was forty cubits long. 18 The cedar within the house was carved in the form of gourds and open flowers; all was cedar, no stone was seen. 19 The inner sanctuary he prepared in the innermost part of the house, to set there the ark of the covenant of the Lord. 20 The inner sanctuary was twenty cubits long, twenty cubits wide, and twenty cubits high; and he overlaid it with pure gold. He also made an altar of cedar. 21 And Solomon overlaid the inside of the house with pure gold, and he drew chains of gold across, in front of the inner sanctuary, and overlaid it with gold. 22 And he overlaid the whole house with gold, until all the house was finished. Also the whole altar that belonged to the inner sanctuary he overlaid with gold.

23 In the inner sanctuary he made two cherubim of olivewood, each ten cubits high. 24 Five cubits was the length of one

17-22. These verses have been worked over at least twice, once by a Deuteronomist editor (probably the second, ca. 550 B.C.), and later by the editor who tried to equate the two temples. The original seems to have consisted of vs. 17, omitting that is, the nave, and vs. 20, omitting the reference to the gold. Into this the Deuteronomist editor inserted vs. 19, thus giving a text close to that of the LXX. The remainder of the verses are still later additions, not in the LXX, describing the decorations of the second temple. In the LXX the reference to the gold plating refers to the altar also. According to both the M.T. and the LXX the whole of the inside of the building, both outer house (temple) and inner shrine, was covered with gold. This would involve a very considerable amount of gold, and no mention is made of it in the stories of the successive plunderings of the temple. Either the mention of the gold is due to the embroidering of tradition, or it was only a thin gilding with liquid gold (C. F. Burney, Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Kings [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1903], pp. 73-74).

21. And he drew chains of gold across: This phrase, in common with the earlier part of this verse, is not in the LXX. A comparison with 11 Chr. 3:14 suggests that the phrase is a remnant, not easily translated (cf. and he made a partition by the chains of gold), of a priestly editor's insertion which involved a reference to the veil which was before the holy of holies of the second temple, as being drawn across with golden chains.

23-28. These verses are original, except that vs. 26 would be better inserted in vs. 23 to follow olivewood. There are two types of cherubs in Hebrew lore. There was the

But how often it happens that those who have risen through the power of religion fail to give it recognition when they reach the top. Christ finds room at the bottom of the social scale, in the lowly mangers; but there is no room for him at the top. The palatial homes which have been made possible through the labor and laws inspired by the Christian religion keep no place in their crowded schedule for its worship. The giant businesses which have grown on soil fertilized by Christian faith and hope scorn the little churches which crouch under the shadows of their skyscrapers. Governments which rest upon the integrity and justice inculcated by of the cherub: from the uttermost part of the one wing unto the uttermost part of the other were ten cubits.

25 And the other cherub was ten cubits: both the cherubim were of one measure and one size.

26 The height of the one cherub was ten cubits, and so was it of the other cherub.

27 And he set the cherubim within the inner house: and they stretched forth the wings of the cherubim, so that the wing of the one touched the one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall; and their wings touched one another in the midst of the house.

28 And he overlaid the cherubim with gold.

29 And he carved all the walls of the house round about with carved figures of cherubim and palm trees and open flowers, within and without.

30 And the floor of the house he overlaid with gold, within and without.

cherub, one or more than one, who was a guardian of sacred places (cf. Gen. 3:24; Ezek. 28:14) and certainly of Mesopotamian origin. There were also pairs of cherubs. These are personifications of the twin spirits of the thunderstorm (cf. Castor and Pollux in the Roman myths, and the general association of twins with thunder). In this case the pair of cherubs which were in the inner sanctuary are a survival of the descriptions of the Lord as the storm-god, riding on the thunderclouds from the deserts of the south (Hab. 3; Ps. 18:10-17).

29-30. Both verses are in the LXX and Lucian, except for the reference to open flowers. Vs. 29 is due to the interpolator who was thinking in terms either of the second temple or of the proposals of Ezek. 41:18. The phrase translated open flowers is found in vss. 18, 29, 32, 35—all of them due to this late editor. The word סגור is difficult, but means "outspread," and so is more likely to be describing "garlands of flowers" (so Skinner and others). The original significance of the palm trees is fertility. Such representations were common in ancient temples, and there is ample evidence that Solomon's temple conformed largely to the general pattern (cf. 7:15-37).

The history of worship is largely the story of the continuation of ancient patterns and forms, combined with a continual endeavor to reinterpret them in accordance with new religious ideas. Originally temples were mostly associated with sun worship, and the center line was directed toward the rising sun. The center line of the Jerusalem temple followed this tradition, and it may be that in the earliest days there was some recognized association with a cult of the rising sun. Later custom and tradition involved a deliberate denial of any sun worship, especially when the priests at the feast of Tabernacles marched toward the east gate of the temple and deliberately turned their Christianity pay only formal and empty tributes to it. The general attitude of so-called Christian society toward Christ is similar to the treatment that might be accorded to one who has transferred the management of his property to his heirs. He is given a place at the table. He is shown a certain deference. But he is outside the main currents of the ongoing activities. The real business is conducted without him.

31 ¶ And for the entering of the oracle he made doors of olive tree: the lintel and side posts were a fifth part of the wall.
32 The two doors also were of olive tree; and he carved upon them carvings of cherubim and palm trees and open flowers, and overlaid them with gold, and spread gold upon the cherubim, and upon the palm trees.
33 So also made he for the door of the temple posts of olive tree, a fourth part of the wall.
34 And the two doors were of fir tree: the two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding.
35 And he carved thereon cherubim and palm trees and open flowers: and covered them with gold fitted upon the carved work.
36 ¶ And he built the inner court with three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams.
37 ¶ In the fourth year was the foundation of the house of the Lord laid, in the month Zif:
38 And in the eleventh year, in the month Bul, which is the eighth month, was the house finished throughout all the parts thereof, and according to all the fashion of it. So was he seven years in building it.

But Solomon was building his own house thirteen years, and he finished all his house.

31 For the entrance to the inner sanctuary he made doors of olivewood; the lintel and the doorposts formed a pentagon.¶
32 He covered the two doors of olivewood with carvings of cherubim, palm trees, and open flowers; he overlaid them with gold, and spread gold upon the cherubim and upon the palm trees.
33 So also he made for the entrance to the nave doorposts of olivewood, in the form of a square, and two doors of cypress wood: the two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding. 35 On them he carved cherubim and palm trees and open flowers; and he overlaid them with gold evenly applied upon the carved work. 36 He built the inner court with three courses of hewn stone and one course of cedar beams.
37 In the fourth year the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid, in the month of Ziv. 38 And in the eleventh year, in the month of Bul, which is the eighth month, the house was finished in all its parts, and according to all its specifications. He was seven years in building it.

Solomon was building his own house thirteen years, and he finished his entire house.

backs to the rising sun and bowed toward the altar. Similarly all the fertility decorations, date palms, pomegranates, etc., had original pagan associations with fertility cults. It was originally believed that the very representation itself constituted an effective prayer to the deity and itself ensured fertility, just as it was believed that the actual ceremonies themselves were efficacious. This “magical” idea dies hard.

31-36. These verses contain details of the doorways, with vss. 32 and 35 as later additions.
37. Here is the original statement concerning the date of the commencement of the building of the temple, of which a later expansion is found in vs. 1.
38. The temple took seven and a half years to build, and it was finished in the autumn, a month too late for the great autumnal feast of Ingathering, which was celebrated at the fullness of the harvest moon. Bul was the second month of the pre-exilic calendar, roughly equivalent to the eighth month, Heshvan, of the postexilic calendar.

3. THE PALACE BUILDINGS (7:1-12)

7:1-12. The temple was part of a larger scheme which involved twenty years' work in all (cf. 9:10). The whole set of buildings was enclosed within a great court surrounded by three courses of hewn stones and one course of cedar beams. The temple court was on the north side. To the south of the temple court was the palace court, containing 2 ¶ He built also the house of the forest of Lebanon; the length thereof was a hundred cubits, and the breadth thereof fifty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits, upon four rows of cedar pillars, with cedar beams upon the pillars.

3 And it was covered with cedar above upon the beams, that lay on forty-five pillars, fifteen in a row.

4 And there were windows in three rows, and light was against light in three ranks.

5 And all the doors and posts were square, with the windows: and light was against light in three ranks.

6 ¶ And he made a porch of pillars; the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth thereof thirty cubits: and the porch was before them: and the other pillars and the thick beam were before them.

7 ¶ Then he made a porch for the throne where he might judge, even the porch of judgment: and it was covered with cedar from one side of the floor to the other.

8 ¶ And his house where he dwelt had another court within the porch, which was of the like work. Solomon made also a house for Pharaoh’s daughter, whom he had taken to wife, like unto this porch.

9 All these were of costly stones, according to the measures of hewed stones, saved with saws, within and without, even from the foundation unto the coping, and so on the outside toward the great court.

10 And the foundation was of costly stones, even great stones, stones of ten cubits, and stones of eight cubits.

11 And above were costly stones, after the measures of hewed stones, and cedars.

12 And the great court round about was with three rows of hewed stones, and a row of cedar beams, both for the inner court of the royal palace with the house of Pharaoh’s daughter immediately behind it in the northwest corner. To the south of the palace court there was the throne hall, with an entrance through the hall of pillars on the south side. South again, and standing by itself, separate from all the rest, was the House of the Forest of Lebanon. The foundations of all the buildings were of huge stones, with walls of hewn stones, paneled with cedar parable to the king’s dwelling. Calling in Nathan the prophet. David said: “See now, I dwell in a house of cedar, but the ark of God dwelleth within curtains. And Nathan said to the king, Go, do all that is in thine heart; for the Lord is with thee” (II Sam. 7:2-8). When Solomon fulfilled his father’s dream of building the house of the Lord, he spent seven years on it, and then thirteen years on his own house. The Lord did not hold as large place in the heart of the son as in that of the father. The spiritual eclipse had begun.

7:2-51. The Best for the Highest.—It was Solomon’s conviction that altar and throne

13 ¶ And king Solomon sent and fetched Hiram out of Tyre.

14 He was a widow's son of the tribe of Naphtali, and his father was a man of Tyre, a worker in brass: and he was filled with wisdom, and understanding, and cunning to work all works in brass. And he came to king Solomon, and wrought all his work.

15 For he cast two pillars of brass, of eighteen cubits high apiece: and a line of twelve cubits did compass either of them about.

16 And he made two chapiters of molten brass, to set upon the tops of the pillars: the height of the one chapiter was five cubits, and the height of the other chapiter was five cubits:

so had the inner court of the house of the LORD, and the vestibule of the house.

13 And King Solomon sent and brought Hiram from Tyre. 14 He was the son of a widow of the tribe of Naphtali, and his father was a man of Tyre, a worker in bronze; and he was full of wisdom, understanding, and skill, for making any work in bronze. He came to King Solomon, and did all his work.

15 He cast two pillars of bronze. Eighteen cubits was the height of one pillar, and a line of twelve cubits measured its circumference; it was hollow, and its thickness was four fingers; the second pillar was the same. 16 He also made two capitals of molten bronze, to set upon the tops of the pillars; the height of the one capital was five cubits, and the height of the other inside from floor to roof, with cedar columns in the house of pillars and three rows of fifteen columns each in the house of the forest of Lebanon.

4. HIRAM THE TYRIAN CRAFTSMAN (7:13-14)

13-14. Solomon brings from Tyre a skilled craftsman by the name of Hiram. He was a worker in bronze, and he made the bronze furniture for the temple, both the massive fixtures and the implements for use in worship. The craftsman's name was probably Hûrûm-‘âbî (i.e., “Hiram is my father”; cf. II Chr. 2:13; 4:16). In II Chr. 2:14 it is stated that his mother was a Danite, but there is nothing there about her being a widow. Possibly the reference to Hiram's widowed mother is to suggest that he was of pure Israelitish descent—a sound Deuteronomic principle.

5. THE TWO BRONZE PILLARS (7:15-22)

Such a pair of pillars was customary at the entrance of temples, not erected within the vestibule, but detached and separate. There have been many suggestions as to their significance—phallic emblems, sun obelisks, representations of deities male and female, etc. The most probable explanation is that they represented the two mountains which flanked the path to the mountain of the gods away to the north, according to the ancient myth. They are called “the sides of the north” (Ps. 48:2; Isa. 14:18; Ezek. 38:6, 15). Similar pillars have been found at the entrances to temples at Tyre, Shechem, Byblos (ca. 1500 B.C.), Hierapolis, Paphos, Sardis, Khorsabad, and generally in the East from Asia Minor through to Babylonia (R. B. Y. Scott, “The Pillars Jachin and Boaz,” Journal of Biblical Literature, LVIII [1939], 143-49). The original significance of the pillars consisted in their symbolism of the approach to the house of God. Whoever would approach the actual dwelling place of the god must pass between the two mountains which flanked the way. The worshiper similarly entered the localized home of the god by passing between the symbolic mountains. It is not easy to say to what extent the twin pillars at Jerusalem had been conventionalized and were there simply because that was the proper traditional way to build entrances to temples. Possibly the names Jachin and Boaz indicate that a measure of reinterpretation had already taken place. The LXX regarded them as proper names here, but in II Chr. 3:17 translated them “setting-right” and “strength.” R. B. Y. Scott suggests (ibid., p. 148) that 17 And nets of checkerwork, and wreaths of chainwork, for the chapiters which were upon the top of the pillars; seven for the one chapiter, and seven for the other chapiter.

18 And he made the pillars, and two rows round about upon the one network, to cover the chapiters that were upon the top, with pomegranates: and so did he for the other chapiter.

19 And the chapiters that were upon the top of the pillars were of lily work in the porch, four cubits.

20 And the chapiters upon the two pillars had pomegranates also above, over against the belly which was by the network: and the pomegranates were two hundred in rows round about upon the other chapiter.

they are the first words of two sentences: “He will establish the throne of David and his kingdom forever,” and “In the strength of the Lord shall the king rejoice,” or some such similar phrase. The pillars were made of bronz, a word which is used of copper ore (Deut. 8:9; Job 28:2) hardened with tin to form an alloy which we now call bronze. Formerly any alloy of copper, especially if it contained tin, was called brass, but in modern times brass is an alloy of copper and zinc. The pillars were twenty feet in circumference (i.e., nearly six and a half feet in diameter) and thirty feet high. The suggestions that the pillars represent deities, male or male and female, rest upon misapprehensions. A single pillar usually represented a god, and many pillars represented many gods, unless some of them were altars. If the pillars represented gods, it is not easy to see why there were two only, or why they were situated in front of the vestibule. If the pillars represented male and female (i.e., Baal and Astarte), one would probably have been made of stone and the other of wood.

17. The reading net is correct; so the LXX and Lucian. The M.T. differs by one letter, reading מַעֲשֵׂים (seven) for מַעֲשֶׂים. 18. It is clear from vs. 20 that the translation pomegranates (RSV) is correct, especially since the rendering pillars (KJV) makes no sense. They are emblems of fertility because of the extraordinary number of pips which they contain.

19-22. In the LXX and in Lucian vss. 19-20 follow vs. 21, and vs. 22 is missing altogether. A postexilic editor has been assimilating the text to make it coincide with moned from Tyre because there was a dearth of distinguished craftsmanship in Israel. Since Hiram’s mother was an Israelite, it may be supposed that he was acquainted with Israel’s God and did his work in a devout spirit. While art is here brought into the service of religion, it is not lowered to the status of a handmaid. Beauty is not sacrificed to piety. Beauty is an ultimate value along with truth and goodness.

stand or fall together. Each sustained the other. If the sign of Solomon’s worldliness appears in the fact that he spent thirteen years on his own house and only seven years on the house of the Lord, there is something to counteract this weakness in the quality of work given to both buildings. There is a religious quality in work well done. And Solomon was satisfied with nothing less than the best. Hiram was sup-

23 ¶ And he made a molten sea, ten cubits from the one brim to the other: it was round all about, and his height was five cubits: and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

24 And under the brim of it round about there were knops compassing it, ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about: the knops were cast in two rows, when it was cast.

25 It stood upon twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

26 And it was a handbreadth thick, and the brim thereof was wrought like the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies: it contained two thousand baths.

what he knew of the second temple. Judging by Jer. 52:23, the wreaths were two to each column, each wreath made of a hundred pomegranates, and festooned so that four were fastened and ninety-six were hanging free. On the top of each column there was a bronze collar, and above this a many-petaled bronze flower open to the sky.

6. The Bronze Sea (7:23-26)

The bronze sea was a huge basin, some seven feet in diameter and just over three feet deep. Around the rim there was a double row of gourds similar to those which were a feature of the carving of the second temple (6:18). They were cast in the same mold as the bronze basin itself, a very clever piece of craftsmanship. The thickness of the casting was a handbreadth, i.e., about three inches, the same thickness as the casting of the two bronze columns outside the vestibule. The bronze sea was a representation of the primeval ocean of the Mesopotamian creation myth. Before the world began, or ever the earth and the heavens were formed, there was a great fight between the hero-god and the sea monster of Chaos. The Hebrews took primitive pagan material and used it for their own religious purposes. They made this ancient myth tell the story of the great fight between God and the powers of evil. Still more important, they wove the story into their history so that it became the story of the work of the Savior-God. The overthrow of every oppressor was a repetition in history of what God had been doing since before the beginning of time. They identified the enemy of God with Rahab the dragon, so that Egypt is Rahab (Isa. 50:7), Pharaoh (Ezek. 29:3-6; 32:2-8), Nebuchadnezzar (Jer. 51:34; cf. Jonah). See especially Isa. 51:9-11, where the defeat of the primeval Rahab is connected first with the crossing of the Red Sea and then with the rescue from Babylon. Finally the dragon is antichrist, the beast that rises from the sea (Rev. 13:1; cf. Amos 9:8), and at last he will be overthrown, nevermore to rise (for further details see Hermann Gunkel, Schöpfung und Chaos in Urzeit und Endzeit [2nd ed.; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1921]; N. H. Snaith, Studies in the Psalter [London: Epworth Press, 1934], pp. 94-109).

25. The bronze sea was supported by twelve bulls, in four groups of three, pointing toward the four points of the compass. The bull is the ancient symbol of fertility, and 27 ¶ And he made ten bases of brass; four cubits was the length of one base, and four cubits the breadth thereof, and three cubits the height of it.

28 And the work of the bases was on this manner: they had borders, and the borders were between the ledges:

29 And on the borders that were between the ledges were lions, oxen, and cherubim: and upon the ledges there was a base above: and beneath the lions and oxen were certain additions made of thin work.

30 And every base had four brazen wheels, and plates of brass: and the four corners thereof had undersetters: under the laver were undersetters molten, at the side of every addition.

31 And the mouth of it within the chapter and above was a cubit: but the mouth thereof was round after the work of the base, a cubit and a half: and also upon the mouth of it were gravings with their borders, foursquare, not round.

32 And under the borders were four wheels; and the axletrees of the wheels were joined to the base: and the height of a wheel was a cubit and half a cubit.

33 And the work of the wheels was like the work of a chariot wheel: their axletrees, and their naves, and their felloes, and their spokes, were all molten.

34 And there were four undersetters to the four corners of one base: and the undersetters were of the very base itself.

35 And in the top of the base was there a round compass of half a cubit high: and on the top of the base the ledges thereof and the borders thereof were of the same.

27 He also made the ten stands of bronze; each stand was four cubits long, four cubits wide, and three cubits high.

28 This was the construction of the stands: they had panels, and the panels were set in the frames and on the panels that were set in the frames were lions, oxen, and cherubim. Upon the frames, both above and below the lions and oxen, there were wreaths of beveled work. Moreover each stand had four bronze wheels and axles of bronze; and at the four corners were supports for a laver. The supports were cast, with wreaths at the side of each. Its opening was within a crown which projected upward one cubit; its opening was round, as a pedestal is made, a cubit and a half deep. At its opening there were carvings; and its panels were square, not round.

32 And the four wheels were underneath the panels; the axles of the wheels were of one piece with the stands; and the height of a wheel was a cubit and a half. The wheels were made like a chariot wheel; their axles, their rims, their spokes, and their hubs, were all cast. There were four supports at the four corners of each stand; the supports were of one piece with the stands. And on the top of the stand there was a round band half a cubit high; and on the top of the stand its stays and its panels the God of the Hebrews was worshiped at Bethel and at Dan in the image of a bull. The cult goes back to the desert days, and Jeroboam's establishment of the bull worship at Bethel was a revival of the worship of the golden calf (cf. 12:28; Exod. 32:4, 8). There is no connection with the Apis bull worship of Egypt. The cult is of general Semitic association.

7. The Ten Bronze Lavers on Wheels (7:27-39)

27-39. This section is complicated because there are two interwoven accounts in which the details differ. A bronze stand of late Mycenaean workmanship has been discovered at Larnaka in Cyprus, and it is evidently a small scale reproduction of such bronze wheeled stands as are described here. The trolley laver from Cyprus is fifteen inches high by nine inches square. Those in Solomon's temple were four feet six inches high by six feet square (Burney, Notes on Hebrew Text of Kings, Pl. I; see also Pl. II, a photograph of a wheelless laver stand from Enkomi, Cyprus). They were used, according to II Chr. 4:6, for washing "such things as they offered for the burnt offering," 36 For on the plates of the ledges thereof, and on the borders thereof, he graved cherubim, lions, and palm trees, according to the proportion of every one, and additions round about.

37 After this manner he made the ten bases: all of them had one casting, one measure, and one size.

38 ¶ Then made he ten lavers of brass: one laver contained forty baths: and every laver was four cubits: and upon every one of the ten bases one laver.

39 And he put five bases on the right side of the house, and five on the left side of the house: and he set the sea on the right side of the house eastward, over against the south.

40 ¶ And Hiram made the lavers, and the shovels, and the basins. So Hiram made an end of doing all the work that he made king Solomon for the house of the Lord:

41 The two pillars, and the two bowls of the chapters that were on the top of the two pillars; and the two networks, to cover the two bowls of the chapters which were upon the top of the pillars;

42 And four hundred pomegranates for the two networks, even two rows of pomegranates for one network, to cover the two bowls of the chapters that were upon the pillars;

43 And the ten bases, and ten lavers on the bases;

44 And one sea, and twelve oxen under the sea;

45 And the pots, and the shovels, and the basins: and all these vessels, which Hiram made to king Solomon for the house of the Lord, were of bright brass.

but this statement must be accepted with reserve, for the same verse continues by saying that the bronze sea "was for the priests to wash in." This can scarcely have been the original significance of the great bronze sea in Solomon's temple, though it is possible that the Chronicler was right so far as the second temple is concerned. The ancient symbols may easily have been reinterpreted in the postexilic period, and we know that it was the Chronicler's custom generally to invest the events of other days with the garments of his own times.

8. The Bronze Objects (7:40-47)

40-47. A summary of all the bronze objects which Hiram cast for the temple and its services. The LXX has an addition in vs. 45 referring to forty-eight pillars partly for the king's house and partly for the temple. As there is no reference elsewhere to these objects, their function and location are unknown. The actual casting was done in the Jordan Valley, the nearest site where there was any considerable clay deposit (George 46 In the plain of Jordan did the king cast them, in the clay ground between Succoth and Zarthan. 47 And Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, because they were exceeding many: neither was the weight of the brass found out. 48 And Solomon made all the vessels that pertained unto the house of the LORD: the altar of gold, and the table of gold, whereupon the showbread was, 49 And the candlesticks of pure gold, five on the right side, and five on the left, before the oracle, with the flowers, and the lamps, and the tongs of gold, 50 And the bowls, and the snuffers, and the basins, and the spoons, and the censers of pure gold; and the hinges of gold, both for the doors of the inner house, the most holy place, and for the doors of the house, to wit, of the temple.

9. THE GOLDEN OBJECTS (7:48-51)

48-51. A summary of all the golden objects which were made for the temple and its services. There are considerable variations in this section between the M.T., the LXX, and Lucian. According to Lucian vs. 48a says, “And Solomon placed the vessels in the house of the Lord,” but he has the rest of vss. 48-50 substantially as in the M.T. Similarly for the LXX. Probably these three verses come from a late postexilic addition, since the golden altar was not known even in the first days of the second temple. The original text, as it left the hand of the earlier editor, comprised vss. 48a, 51.

The golden altar was the altar of incense, mentioned first in Exod. 30:27, by no means the earliest stratum of the Priestly Code. The burning of incense was a postexilic development belonging to the more elaborate ritual of later days and due to the influence of Babylonian religion. Originally the incense consisted of frankincense, the sweet-smelling resin of an Indian tree, imported into Palestine through Arabia. According to Exod. 30:34, four other spices were added, each in equal quantities, but in the first century A.D. there were thirteen ingredients (Josephus Jewish War V. 5. 5; VI. 8. 3). The reason for the use of incense is rooted in the Oriental's pleasure in fragrances. In the Mesopotamian flood story the gods are pictured as delighting in the fragrance of the sacrificial smoke: “The gods smelled the savor, The gods smelled the goodly savor, The gods gathered like flies over the sacrifice” (Gilgamesh Epic, Tablet XI, ll. 160-62). Such primitive notions are not found in Hebrew story, for much of the anthropomorphic crudeness has been refined away. The idea nevertheless is that the savor of the sacrifices is well pleasing to God. In course of time the burning of incense was regarded as having atoning effectiveness, an idea which became attached more and more to the whole of the sacrificial system. Propitiation tends to replace reconciliation.

The golden table for the bread of the Presence, i.e., for the showbread, belonged to the second temple also, but the custom of placing bread before the deity is at least as old as I Sam. 21:6, and was doubtless an ancient and general custom. The original pagan idea was that of providing food for the deity. Among the Hebrews the rite came to stand for Israel's acknowledgment of her continual dependence upon God. In 51 So was ended all the work that King Solomon made for the house of the LORD. And Solomon brought in the things which David his father had dedicated; even the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, did he put among the treasures of the house of the LORD.

8 Then Solomon assembled the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, the chief of the fathers of the children of Israel, unto king Solomon in Jerusalem, that they might bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of the city of David, which is Zion.

2 And all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto king Solomon at the feast postexilic times the twelve loaves (for the twelve tribes) were arranged in two piles. By the time of the Chronicler the tradition had developed to the extent of ten tables, five on each side of the temple (II Chr. 4:8). The ten lampstands are mentioned elsewhere only in Jer. 52:19 and in the Chronicler’s parallel (II Chr. 4:7, 20). Presumably the tradition of the ten lampstands, in two groups of five before the inner shrine, is a genuine tradition of the first temple; it gave rise to the other tradition of the ten tables for the showbread. The usual reference is to the seven-branched candlestick, which definitely belonged to the second temple, as is witnessed by the Arch of Titus in Rome.

C. Dedication of the Temple (8:1-66)

This chapter contains an account of the dedication of the temple by Solomon, but it is very far from being in its original state. Vss. 1-13 have been heavily glossed and are found in the LXX in a much shorter form. Vss. 14-61, which form the speeches and prayers made by the king, are thoroughly Deuteronomic in ideas and phrases. Vss. 14-43 date from ca. 610 B.C., and are from the first editor, but vss. 44-61 presuppose the Exile, and must be allocated to the later editor. Vss. 62-66 form the original ending to the narrative of vss. 1-13, but they too have been worked over.

1. The Ark Comes Home at Last (8:1-13)

Now that the temple is completed, Solomon brings the sacred ark into it. The priests carry the ark into the inner shrine, and when they come out the holy cloud fills the temple. God has taken up his abode in his new home, there to remain forever.

8:1-2. The LXX has these two verses in a shorter and original form: “Then King Solomon assembled all the elders of Israel in Zion to bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD from the city of David, which is Zion, in the month Ethanim.” The phrases the heads of the tribes and the leaders of the fathers’ houses are insertions by an editor under the influence of the Priestly Code, with its love for all proper divisions and categories.

8:1-10. The Ark of the Covenant.—It remained to put the keystone in the arch of Solomon’s building. What could give strength to all this splendor? It was the ark of the covenant. The Israelites were ever to be kept mindful of their covenant relationship with the Lord, who had brought them out of Egypt. In their dealings with God he was the party of the first part. God had given the terms of the covenant on Sinai. The ark containing the Sinaitic code was placed in the Holy of Holies.

Ralph Adams Cram, the eminent American architect, used to say that the house of God should become more beautiful the farther it goes. So often builders begin with an elaborate exterior or façade and then, as their rein the month Ethanim, which is the seventh month.
3 And all the elders of Israel came, and the priests took up the ark.
4 And they brought up the ark of the Lord, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, even those did the priests and the Levites bring up.
5 And king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel, that were assembled unto him, were with him before the ark, sacrificing sheep and oxen, that could not be told nor numbered for multitude.
6 And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place, into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubim.

Ethanim is the month of the ever-flowing streams, i.e., when all seasonal streams have dried up in the summer drought. It was the first month of the pre-exilic year, beginning with the harvest moon. The identification of it with the seventh month is due to the postexilic change of calendar.

At the feast in the month Ethanim: This was known as the feast of Ingathering (' dsiph), the great harvest feast which began on the night of the harvest full moon. It marked the end of one agricultural year and the beginning of the next. It was the most important of the three great pilgrimages (Hebrew, הָעִיון; Arabic, ُحَاجَّ) feasts of Canaanite religion, all three of which the Hebrews took over when they entered the land. At each of these feasts the people journeyed to their local or favorite shrine to offer their first fruits. These were barley at the feast of Mazzoth (Unleavened Cakes), wheat at the feast of Shabuoth (Weeks), and the vintage at 'dsiph (Ingathering). It was not until the time of the Deuteronomistic reforms that all men had to appear at the Jerusalem temple. After the Exile, the feast of Ingathering was split into three parts. The main feast, now called Sukkoth (Booths, Tabernacles), was kept on the full moon, now the fifteenth of Tishri, and other elements gravitated to the first of Tishri (festival of Trumpets) and to the tenth of Tishri (day of Atonement). Even when the Passover became very popular during the last years of the second temple, on account of messianic expectations (cf. Jer. 31:8 LXX), the feast of Tabernacles was still "by far the greatest and holiest feast" (Josephus Antiquitates VIII. 4. 1). Some scholars have been puzzled by the fact that although the temple was finished in the month of Bul, Solomon did not dedicate it until eleven months later. This need occasion no difficulty. He celebrated the opening at the New Year feast. "In Mesopotamia the New Year's festival appears as the confluence of every current of religious thought" (Henri Frankfort, Kingship and the Gods [Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1948], p. 519). What was true of Mesopotamia was probably true of Palestine. He dedicated the temple not when he would, but when he must. This was the high festival of the whole year, and there was no other proper time for such a pre-eminent occasion.

3-4. The LXX says, "The priests carried up the ark and the tent of meeting and the holy vessels which were in the tent of meeting." If these phrases are taken out of the M.T. we get, "And all the elders of Israel brought up the ark of the Lord," which looks very like the original, with the reading of the LXX as an addition to express the postexilic point of view, according to which only the priests might carry the ark. The phrase at the end of vs. 4, the priests and the Levites brought them up (i.e., the holy
For the cherubim spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubim covered the ark and the staves thereof above.

And they drew out the staves, that the ends of the staves were seen out in the holy place before the oracle, and they were not seen without: and there they are unto this day.

There was nothing in the ark save the two tables of stone, which Moses put there at Horeb, when the Lord made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt.

And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the Lord,

So that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord.

7 For the cherubim spread out their wings over the place of the ark, so that the cherubim made a covering above the ark and its poles. 8 And the poles were so long that the ends of the poles were seen from the holy place before the inner sanctuary; but they could not be seen from outside; and they are there to this day. 9 There was nothing in the ark except the two tables of stone which Moses put there at Horeb, where the Lord made a covenant with the people of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt. 10 And when the priests came out of the holy place, a cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud; for the glory of the Lord filled the house of the Lord.

The priests and the Levites is a phrase belonging to the time of the latest development of the priesthood. The true Priestly Code phrase for the priests is “the priests, the sons of Aaron”; in Deuteronomy the phrase is “the priests, the Levites.” In the earliest days of the settlement in Canaan any man could be a priest if he was properly consecrated, but it was better to have a Levite (Judg. 17–18). Up to the time of the reforms under King Josiah under Deuteronomic influence (621 B.C.), the general situation was: Levites at the southern shrines generally, but Zadokites at Jerusalem; non-Levitical priests at the northern shrines generally, but the sons of Moses at Dan in the far north (Judg. 18:30), and probably the sons of Aaron at Bethel. Josiah attempted to bring all the Levite priests to share in the service of the Jerusalem altar, but the Zadokites resisted (II Kings 23:9), with the result that the Levites in the end had to content with the inferior offices in the temple. After the Exile the only legitimate priests were known as “the sons of Aaron,” even though two thirds of them were Zadokites. The distinction between the priests and the Levites was rigidly maintained, and it was not until the last days of Herod’s temple, in the time of Herod Agrippa II, that the Levites were permitted to wear the white robes which distinguished the priesthood (N. H. Snaith, “Worship,” in Record and Revelation, ed. H. Wheeler Robinson [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1938], pp. 263-74).

10-11. The cloud was that which was believed to shroud the presence of God. In ancient days the presence of the Lord had been manifested in the pillar of cloud which sources become limited, cheapen the interior. Cram’s contention was that the genuineness of a church is symbolized by making the interior richer than the exterior. Solomon was therefore religiously correct in making the ark the focal point of the temple. In it was the pledge of the Lord’s presence with them and the purpose of their building for him.

11. The Glory of the Lord.—The great day of dedication had come. The priests brought the ark of the covenant to its place in the inner shrine of the house. When the carriers of the ark came out of the holy place, a cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud; for the glory of the Lord filled the house of the Lord.

How a modern newsman would have reported the event we cannot say. Smoke as the symbol of the divine presence is recorded by Isaiah in his vision (Isa. 6:4). The Lord made his appearance to Ezekiel accompanied by fire (Ezek. 1:27). But let not puzzlement over the symbolism distract us from the central fact that the worshipers felt the glory of the Lord filling the temple. G. A. Johnston Ross used to tell his 12 Then spake Solomon, The LORD said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.

12 Then Solomon said, "The LORD has set the sun in the heavens, but has said that he would dwell in thick darkness.

Gk: Heb lacks has set the sun in the heavens, but protected the marching Israelites (Exod. 14:19-20), or in the cloud which came down and remained by the door of the tent when God spoke with Moses (Exod. 33:9). Similar occasions are the smoke which filled the temple at the time of Isaiah’s vision (Isa. 6:4) and the luminous cloud of the Transfiguration (Mark 9:7). At other times the presence of the Deity is manifested in a brightness of burning fire. This is to be noted in the story of the bush (Exod. 3:2), the fire which surrounded the figure in Ezekiel’s vision (Ezek. 1:27), and the Shekinah of the rabbis. The luminous haze is generally supposed to have its origin in the brightness which marks the center of the thunderstorm. Allied with this theme is the variant picture of the God that is hidden in darkness because of the awful dread of his majesty (cf. vs. 12).

12-13. The original dedication by Solomon was in the form of an ancient song which the LXX says was taken from the Book of Jashar (“upright”), the early saga of Israel’s wars from Egypt to Canaan (Josh. 10:16; 2 Sam. 1:18). The first half of the first line is missing in the M.T., but has been supplied in the RSV from the LXX.

In thick darkness (RSV): In the thick darkness (KJV) is a more accurate translation of the M.T. The reference is not to thick darkness generally but to the particular thick darkness, the heavy cloud (Hebrew, ‘arāphel) in which God dwells (Exod. 20:18; Deut. 4:11; etc.). The ark, which was the visible sign of the Lord’s presence in the midst of his people, was placed in the shrine (dēbhīy) in complete darkness, so that Solomon did actually build a place of thick, impenetrable darkness in which God could, according to the ideas of the time, happily dwell.

Solomon declares that he has built a house in which the Lord will be able to dwell forever. This verse has received additional meaning from material found at Ras Shamra (the ancient Ugarit). The particular texts involved are V AB (see Charles Virolleaud, students at Union Theological Seminary that the primary aim of every religious service is to help the worshiper to become conscious of the presence of God. Religious instruction and moral exhortation fall short of the goal, which is to feel that the Lord is near. The purpose of the meetinghouse is to meet God.

The glory of the LORD is an expression which has been carried in our ecclesiastical vocabularies so long that, like a coin worn smooth, it has lost its identification marks. We tend to avoid its use in realistic religious discussion because the word “glory” is regarded by most of us as an emotional word, empty of thought content. At the camp meetings which used to be—and in some areas still are—held each summer, in the heat of the revivalism persons would often break out with shouts of “Glory!” or “Hallelujah.” Such effervescent expressions could hardly be analyzed. But the fact that a feeling is unanalyzable is not sufficient reason to discard it. After James Russell Lowell heard Ralph Waldo Emerson deliver the Phi Beta Kappa address at Harvard in 1867, he wrote: “Emerson’s oration . . . began nowhere and ended everywhere, and yet, as always with that divine man, it left you feeling that something beautiful had passed that way—something more beautiful than anything else, like the rising and setting of stars.” So is it with the glory of God. His majesty “disturbs us with the joy of elevated thoughts”; his mercy starts songs of gratitude singing in the back of our minds; his love lifts us out of our littleness; our feelings outrun our logic; and our hearts leap up to join the angelic chorus, shouting, “Glory to God in the highest.”

A little boy, babbling with questions, looked up at his grandfather and asked, “What is the wind?” The grandparent replied, “I cannot tell you, my lad, what the wind is, but I know how to hoist a sail.” The glory of the LORD defies adequate definition, but no minister who has not felt it, and cannot help others feel it, will move a congregation in the right direction.

12-21. The Fruit of Frustration.—Why David was denied the privilege of building the temple of his dreams has been the subject of much Albright, “Recent Progress in North-Canaanite Research,” Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research, No. 70 [1938], pp. 18-24) and II AB (Virolleaud, “Un nouveau chant du poème d’Aleîn Baal,” Syria, XIII [1932], 113-63; also Albright, “New Light on Early Canaanite Language and Literature,” and “More Light on the Canaanite Epic of Aleyân Baal and Môt,” Bulletin of American Schools of Oriental Research, No. 46 [1932], pp. 15-20; No. 50 [1983], pp. 13-20; Cyrus H. Gordon, Ugaritic Literature [Roma: Pontificium Institutum Biblicum, 1949], pp. 28-38). Both these texts, particularly the first, have to do with the building of a house for Baal. The text II AB opens with a lament that Baal has no temple, and both texts have to do with the building of this temple. There is difference of opinion as to the significance of the Ugaritic parallels. Ivan Engnell (Studies in Divine Kingship in the Ancient Near East [Uppsala: Almqvist & Wiksell, 1943], p. 114) connects the Ras Shamra texts with the death and resurrection of the god, thus bringing them into line with his general theories of divine kingship and fertility cults. On the other hand Julian Obermann (Ugaritic Mythology [New Haven: Yale University Press, 1948], pp. 83-87) thinks that the texts have to do with the changing of the supreme authority over the pantheon from El to Baal. His view is that other Ras Shamra texts have this same motive, e.g., VI AB and the new fragment of III AB published by Virolleaud (ibid., p. 15; Virolleaud, “Fragments mythologiques de Ras-Shamra,” Syria, XXIV [1944], 1-12). Possibly both theories are right, and the triumph of Baal comes to be the story of an annual liturgy, but the texts clearly state that the building of the house on earth for Baal is a counterpart to Baal’s establishment with authority in the Mountain of the Gods.

Goes up to his house (V AB, A, ll. 21-22).

Further, when Baal sits enthroned in his house, he says:

I have now been made king,
I have been brought as king,
The earth of my realm has rest (II AB, col. 7, ll. 43-44).

Then

Thou shalt take thy eternal kingdom,
Thy dominion for generation after generation (III AB, A, 12-13).

So far as Solomon’s building of the temple in Jerusalem is concerned, the inference from the Ras Shamra texts is that he is establishing the Lord as supreme god of all, discussion. The record here does not reveal the reason but does commend the dream. Solomon in his address at the dedication declared: “The Lord said to David my father, ‘Whereas it was in your heart to build a house for my name, you did well that it was in your heart; nevertheless you shall not build the house, but your son who shall be born to you shall build the house for my name.’”

Roughly speaking, David had four great aims in his royal career. He desired to win his nation’s wars, to secure its independence, to build its capital city, and to crown that capital with a fitting temple to Yahweh. May it not be that he did better the first three things because there was a fourth which was beyond his grasp? It sometimes seems to be a fact that our best work is done when we are driven by the urge to accomplish the apparently insuperable. At the time of the preparations for Queen Victoria’s second jubilee, Rudyard Kipling promised the Times a poem for that great event. He could 14 And the king turned his face about, and blessed all the congregation of Israel: and all the congregation of Israel stood;
15 And he said, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, which spake with his mouth unto David my father, and hath with his hand fulfilled it, saying, not only in an earthly house, but also in the great Mountain of the North, the home of the gods. He is proclaiming, in fact, that the Lord alone is lord of heaven and earth, making for him an exalted house, a place for [him] to dwell in for ever, and this not only on earth, but also in some sense in the "eternal" home of the Deity.

The establishment of Jerusalem alone as the one abode on earth for the Lord created difficulties when the fate of exile befell the people. How could they worship their God if Jerusalem was the only place where he could be worshiped, when they were far away in Babylon? The answer was provided by Ezekiel, who saw in a vision that the throne of God was not fixed and firm, immovable, as Isaiah had seen it (Isa. 6), but that it was a chariot, both wheeled and winged, the wheels being wheels within wheels so that they could run north and south, east and west, and the wings so that no distance or intervening mountain could act as barrier. This chariot of the Lord appears to his people in exile (Ezek. 1), since wherever God's people are and need him, there he is to be found. God's love for his house on Mount Zion is shown in the stages by which he leaves his home which Solomon had built, as though he could scarce prevail upon himself to depart from it (Ezek. 10:4 [as far as the threshold]; 10:19 [as far as the east gate of the house]; 11:29 [as far as the Mount of Olives to the east of the city]), till at last he arrives in Babylon by the river Chebar among the captives (1:1; 10:20).

2. Solomon’s Speech to the People (8:14-21)

The king tells the people that at first God chose no city for his temple, but chose David to rule the people. David was minded to build a temple for God, but it was God’s will and promise that David’s son should build such a house of God. This speech and the prayer which follows it give the full Deuteronomic interpretation and expansion write nothing that he liked. The Times sent letters, then telegrams, asking for the promised poem So Kipling shut himself in his room, searched through his notes, found only one phrase he liked, “Lest we forget.” Around those words he composed the “Recessional.” “That poem,” he said, “gave me more trouble than anything I ever wrote.”

The lure of the rock that is too high for us enables us to do better the tasks on our reachable level. When we are tempted toward impossible perfections we are helped to perfect the possible. “Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect” (Matt. 5:48). This counsel of the Christ is pregnant with practical power—a truth which much of our popular and so-called “practical” preaching fails to grasp. In trying to make Christianity appealing we too often pick out the parts of Christ's gospel which seem sensible to the hardheaded businessman; we seek to show how “practical” are the principles of Jesus in promoting sales, winning friends, and influencing people. In thus lowering the Master of life to a servant of what we call successful living, we lose “the power from on high.” To be sure, there are perfectionists who are so impatient with imperfect instruments and intermediate steps that they become stalled in futility. But the failures of Christian perfectionists are few in comparison with the lowered standards of the gospel revisionists.

All great living is inspired by the vista of the unattained. When Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes reached his ninetieth birthday, rich in honors, still in possession of life’s enjoyments, he received many tributes. Of him Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes said that he had attained the most beautiful and rarest thing in the world, a complete life. Yet despite the seeming completeness of such a well-rounded life, Justice Holmes a year later wrote a letter to the Federal Bar Association in which he said: “Life seems to me like a Japanese picture which our imagi-

16 Since the day that I brought forth my people Israel out of Egypt, I chose no city out of all the tribes of Israel to build a house, that my name might be therein; but I chose David to be over my people Israel.

17 And it was in the heart of David my father to build a house for the name of the Lord God of Israel.

18 And the Lord said unto David my father, Whereas it was in thine heart to build a house unto my name, thou didst well that it was in thine heart.

19 Nevertheless thou shalt not build the house; but thy son that shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house unto my name.

20 And the Lord hath performed his word that he spake, and I am risen up in the room of David my father, and sit on the throne of Israel, as the Lord promised, and have built a house for the name of the Lord God of Israel.

21 And I have set there a place for the ark, wherein is the covenant of the Lord, which he made with our fathers, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt.

of II Sam. 7. Why has not David built a temple? The reason there given is that God prefers the ancient tent with its curtains (II Sam. 7:6-7), but here the explanation is that God prefers to wait until he has chosen Jerusalem (so more precisely LXX in vs. 16 and in the parallel II Chr. 6:6) and David to rule over Israel.

16. The phrase my name is a reverent circumlocution for “I” (of God). This custom developed steadily through the centuries until in N.T. times we find the Palestinian Gospel using the phrase “the kingdom of heaven” (Matt. 5:3), whereas the Greek-speaking Luke has “the kingdom of God.” Other similar substitutions are the Holy One, the Place, and always in the M.T. the Lord for the divine Name.

21. According to vs. 9, “There was nothing in the ark except the two tables of stone which Moses put there at Horeb,” to which the LXX adds “the tables of the covenant . . . which the Lord made with the sons of Israel when they went forth out nation does not allow to end with the margin. We aim at the infinite and when our arrow falls to earth it is in flames.”

However long or full a life may be, it faces frustration at some points. When we set out seriously to challenge the things that thwart us, and when we summon the aid of “him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us” (Eph. 3:20), it is almost impossible to set a limit to what we can do. The testimony of experience attests the number of those heroic personalities who refused to surrender to the seemingly inevitable and as a result achieved the seemingly incredible. One such lies buried in an English churchyard and the headstone bears this epitaph, “She hath done what she couldn't.” Nevertheless, like David, the best of persons must leave some things undone. Of them it is said, “These all died in faith, not having received the promises” (Heb. 11:13). Yet those who go on working with God in faith come to accept some of their frustrations not only with fortitude but even with gratitude, for what seems to be frustration often serves as a time lock on life's great treasure vault. On the small safe in a man's office may be a combination lock which he can open 22 And Solomon stood before the altar of the Lord in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven:

of the land of Egypt." The reference therefore is to the tables of stone. The later tradition (Exod. 16:33; Num. 17:10; Heb. 9:4) is that the ark also contained "a golden urn holding the manna, and Aaron's rod that budded."

3. Solomon's Prayer (8:22-53)

Solomon first offers thanks that God has kept the covenant with David and raised up an heir of David to rule in his place (vss. 23-24). He prays that the promise may be confirmed forever of the establishment of David's line conditional upon the fulfillment of the Deuteronomic way of life (vss. 25-26). Next Solomon prays that the temple may always be the place to which Israel may turn for forgiveness (vss. 27-30). The remainder of the prayer consists of particular instances of intercession which may arise, dealings between man and man (vss. 31-32), defeat in battle (vss. 33-34), drought (vss. 35-36), famine and plagues of every kind (vss. 37-40). Then there comes a plea for the foreigner, that his prayer also may be heard and answered (vss. 41-43), and this is followed by a prayer for victory in war (vss. 44-45). The concluding section presupposes the Exile and therefore presumably is an addition by the exilic editor of ca. 550 B.C., unless, as is perhaps more likely, it presupposes the Diaspora rather than the Babylonian exile, and must therefore be placed at a much later date.

22. Solomon stood . . . and spread forth his hands toward heaven: This is the attitude adopted universally in olden time for prayer (cf. Exod. 9:29; II Macc. 3:20).

at any time, but down in the large city banks the vaults are equipped with time locks which open only when the appointed time has arrived. Similarly in life, we have little treasure chests of desire from which we can get what we want when we want it. But for opening the great, deep, lasting satisfactions of life, there are time locks which God has set to go off in his own good time. Often when we have to wait for God's hour of opening we feel frustrated, we complain that our prayers are not answered, that if there is a God he is no friend of ours. Must we not confess that many times if we had got what we wanted it would have proved a curse rather than a blessing? What looks like defeat may prove only a divine delay, designed for our good.

Furthermore, if our lives and purposes are headed toward great ends they outrun the span of a single generation. The frustration of the parents may prove the opportunity of the children. So it was in the case of David. And so runs the perfecting principle: "These all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect" (Heb. 11:39-40). When power is pointed toward a loving and righteous purpose it is like a stream headed for the sea. It may be dammed up or diverted, but sooner or later it reaches water level. Christlike power may be thwarted and crucified, but it is headed Godward and eventually it gets home.

22-26. Enlarging Religious Understanding.—Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple reveals a stage in the growing conception of God. O LORD, God of Israel, there is no God like thee, in heaven above or on earth beneath, keeping covenant and showing steadfast love to thy servants who walk before thee with all their heart. Yahweh is here regarded as more than merely one of the tribal deities, having claims upon Israel equivalent to those of other gods upon their chosen clans (Judg. 11:24). In this second stage of revelation Yahweh is seen as superior to all other gods.

Solomon's concept of God is similar to that voiced on what might be called "Israel's V-E Day," when a song was sung to commemorate the triumph over the pursuing Egyptians at the Red Sea. "I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea. . . . Thy right hand, O Lord, is become glorious in power. . . . Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods?" (Exod. 15:1, 6, 11.) The Israelites saw their victories under Moses and David as the work of Yahweh. He was their patron, and they were his people. He had entered into covenant relations with them whereby he would fight for them if they would be faithful to him. They were to show their loyalty to him by having no
23 And he said, Lord God of Israel, there is no God like thee, in heaven above, or on earth beneath, who keepest covenant and mercy with thy servants that walk before thee with all their heart:
24 Who hast kept with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him: thou spakest also with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day.

23. The statement there is no God like thee marks a definite stage in the development of monotheism, i.e., the belief that there is but one God and none other. The belief of the early days of the occupation of Palestine is reflected in Judg. 11:24, where Chemosh of Moab is regarded as having rights over Moab similar to those which the Lord had over Israel. The next stage is seen in Exod. 15:11; Deut. 3:24; and here, where the claim is that there is no god to be compared with the God of Israel, neither in the heavens above nor on the earth beneath. The statement is that the Lord is unique among the gods. It is not denied that there are other gods. This denial is found explicitly in the writings of the Exile, especially in Isa. 40–55; e.g., Isa. 44:6; 46:9, and frequently in ch. 45 (Millar Burrows, An Outline of Biblical Theology [Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1946], pp. 54-60; A. B. Davidson, The Theology of the Old Testament [New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1981], pp. 58-67).

The rendering who keepest covenant and mercy is preferable to keeping covenant and showing steadfast love. The word translated mercy, steadfast love is hesed, and it is used here particularly and definitely of God's faithfulness in his covenant with Israel. The insertion of showing in particular tends to make the phrase suggest general affability, especially when it is allied with the words steadfast love. Anything that tends toward this identification is to be deprecated. This matter is important because in this word hesedh we have the roots of the N.T. doctrine of grace. The grace of God is not general benevolence showered upon all and sundry, but that particular care which Christians know. It is true that God "maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust" (Matt. 5:45). This is his providence, and all creatures live by it, whether they are conscious of it or not. In the case of man, they live by it even when they deny his existence. But grace is concerned with that consciousness of being right with God which none can know except those who have definitely been chosen to love him with all the heart and to do his will. They then become conscious of a personal relationship with God, which on God's part involves an utter self-giving, arising out of a love that is completely and absolutely unselfish. This is the love that is manifested on the Cross, and when we speak of "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ" we mean this utter self-giving, not merely that general providence which is the basis of any life at all on this earth. Providence is concerned with ordinary physical life.

other gods before him, by obeying his laws and offering their sacrifices. Their relationship to him was a neat and simple covenant, attested by special and visible providences.

Life, however, is too complex to leave people long content with such a naive concept. Religious faith cannot rest safely on special providences and spectacular interventions. When British troops were trapped at Dunkerque in 1940 and escaped across the channel, many persons, even preachers, pointed to the calmness of the water at that particular time as proof of God's intervention on behalf of the English against the German aggressors. But shortly afterward two large British battleships were sunk off Singapore by some Japanese planes which swept out of a concealing cloud bank. If we attribute the calmness of the channel to God's special concern for the English forces, what are we to say about the clouds at Singapore?

The habit of looking for divine favor in special good fortune, and of seeing God's displeasure in our defeats, leads to confusion and doubt. Hence, as the Hebrew people grew more mature, they rose to a higher conception of the divine relationship. The drama of Job shattered 25 Therefore now, LORD God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him, saying, There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit on the throne of Israel; so that thy children take heed to their way, that they walk before me as thou hast walked before me.

26 And now, O God of Israel, let thy word, I pray thee, be verified, which thou spakest unto thy servant David my father.

27 But will God indeed dwell on the earth? behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded?

25 Now therefore, O Lord, God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father what thou hast promised him, saying, 'There shall never fail you a man before me to sit upon the throne of Israel, if only your sons take heed to their way, to walk before me as you have walked before me.' 26 Now therefore, O God of Israel, let thy word be confirmed, which thou hast spoken to thy servant David my father.

27 "But will God indeed dwell on the earth? Behold, heaven and the highest heaven cannot contain thee; how much less

Grace is concerned with that life which is of the spirit. Providence is concerned with all who are "born of the flesh," but grace with all who are "born of the Spirit" (John 3:6). The difference comes at the point when a man enters a new relationship with God. In the O.T. this relationship was the covenant first sealed at Sinai, and the proper relationship within that covenant is described as hêshed. On God's part it involved a faithfulness that nothing can destroy, and mercy and forgiveness which seemed always to be necessary because of Israel's continued apostasy. In Christ "the middle wall of partition" is broken down, and the condition of being within the covenant is no longer one of race or of the fulfillment of the law. It is primarily of faith, complete and utter trust, and secondarily of the implementation of that faith by those good works which are the outcome of that faith in God.

25. The condition of the continued favor of God is made quite plain. The sons of David must take heed to their way, to walk as David walked. Here we get the idealizing of David into the perfect Deuteronomistic king; cf. the standard in the Deuteronomistic formula whereby the kings of Judah are judged (15:11).

27. Cf. this verse with vs. 12-13. In that ancient couplet we have little more than the appreciation of the mysterium tremendum of the numinous, with its elements of awfulness, overpoweringness, and energy or urgency (Rudolph Otto, The Idea of the the neat little patterns of special providence. The voice out of the whirlwind summoned the stricken Job to consider the vastness of a creation in which the faithfulness of the Lord is to be seen in his infinite and creative providence rather than in his special interventions. Job discovers that the Lord is not a mere Yahweh, greater than all other gods in heaven or on earth, but the Lord of heaven and earth. And the more deeply the Hebrew people lived their way into the power of God, the more confident they became of a divine purpose running through all creation. God's ways are higher than man's ways, as the heavens are high above the earth; but the great Hebrew prophets who lived on the moral mountaintops became convinced that they could trace the divine directions. With eyes undimmed by defeat but washed bright by tears of exile, a prophet confidently asserts, "Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him" (Isa. 40:10). To God "the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance: behold, he taketh up the isles as a very little thing" (Isa. 40:15).

The insight into God's nature continues to grow. After Isaiah declares that the Lord's mighty arm shall be revealed in the ruling of the nations, he immediately asserts: "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young" (Isa. 40:11). Combined with the majesty and power of God are tenderness and grace. The more mature men become the more clearly they recognize the gentleness of true gianthood. When the Hebrew prophetic mind rose to this conception of God it was being prepared for the supreme revelation in Christ, for it could understand the majesty of power which can fit the measurement of a manger.

27-29. The Trysting Place of the Spirit.—At first reading Solomon's words seem to negate the purpose of building the temple. They seem to 28 Yet have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O Lord my God, to hearken unto the cry and to the prayer, which thy servant prayeth before thee to-day:

_Old Testament_:

_Holy_, tr. J. W. Harvey [London: Oxford University Press, 1923], pp. 5-30). Here, in vs. 27, we have a conception of God approximating to the idea of omnipresence, a god who is above the limitations of nature—so great that the whole heavens are too small to be his dwelling place. The translation the _highest heaven_ is an excellent rendering of the Hebrew, which is, lit., the _heaven of heavens_. This construction is a Hebrew idiom used to express that which is superlative to an exceptional degree, e.g., “the most holy place” (vs. 6), or “the most excellent song of all” (lit., “the song of songs”): and especially Gen. 9:25, where the original is “servant of servants,” and the meaning “lowest of servants” (E. F. Kautzsch, ed., _Gesenius’ Hebrew Grammar_, tr. A. E. Cowley [2nd English ed.; Oxford: The Clarendon Press, 1910], p. 481, sec. 138 i). The actual phrase _heaven of heavens_ is here a reminiscence of Deut. 10:14 and is found elsewhere five times only, including the Chronicler’s parallel (11 Chr. 6:18).

Parallel the position of those numerous persons who claim to find God better outside the church. _But will God indeed dwell on the earth? Behold, heaven and the highest heaven cannot contain thee; how much less this house which I have built! Yet have regard to the prayer of thy servant and to his supplication, O Lord my God, hearkening to the cry and to the prayer which thy soul watcheth above._

Jesus himself sought to correct the conceptions which limited the worship of God to institutions and buildings. “God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth” (John 4:24).

Yet it is the very illimitableness of God which makes shrines of worship necessary. The infinite must be brought within reach of man’s finite mind. Our souls need trustyng places with the eternal and the invisible. Solomon’s prayer reveals this fact: That thy eyes may be open night and day toward this house, the place of which thou hast said, “My name shall be there,” that thou mayest hearken to the prayer which thy servant offers toward this place. Spirit with spirit can meet, but their meeting is aided by symbols and places. Our spirits are so dependent on our senses for impression that visual aids are of value if, like Moses, we are able “as seeing him who is invisible” (Heb. 11:27). And unless our spirits find expression through verbal vehicles, the commerce of the soul is halted. A husband may love and respect his wife, but if he never gives voice or visibility to his affection, the romance does not remain. Words without love become sounding brass and tinkling cymbal; but love without words can lose its music too. Some ritual of affection is needed to keep love alive between persons, and also between man and God. We are affected by the power of suggestion, sympathy, and imitation. The sight of others praising God strengthens our feeling that God is praiseworthy. The architectural symbols with their eloquent silence, the rhythmic surge of religious music, the historic ritual of the church reminding us that a great procession of persons like ourselves has walked the same paths of experience, the sermon which at least stirs the conscience if it does not always feed the mind—all these combine to lift our spirits Godward. A worshiping soul in the house of God is lifted as a ship is lifted in the locks of a canal. When one sluice gate of the mind is closed on things secular and another is opened on things invisible and eternal, then the influences of symbol and ritual, of prayer and message, become the “means of grace,” flowing under the human spirit and lifting it to a higher level whence it sails away, better able to carry its cargo of personal and public responsibilities.

To be sure, this lifting power of spiritual communion may be felt by souls in solitude. And it may often seem that one can come closer to God in the secrecy of his closet or under the spell of nature’s loveliness than in a church with its crowd and commotion. But Evelyn 29 That thine eyes may be open toward this house night and day, even toward the place of which thou hast said, My name shall be there: that thou mayest hearken unto the prayer which thy servant shall make toward this place.

30 And hearken thou to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, when they shall pray toward this place: and hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place: and when thou hearest, forgive.

29. My name shall be there: It is most probable that we have here something more than the reverent circumlocution of vs. 16. The connection of "the Name" with the Jerusalem sanctuary is especially characteristic of Deuteronomy (cf. 12:5; etc.). It is a development of the ancient idea that the mention of the true name has in itself effective power. This idea is very clear in Gen. 32:29, and to a lesser extent in Judg. 13:6. The knowledge of the Name would have given power to a mortal over the divine one. The idea of hiding the real name of a person is common among primitive peoples the world over (Frazer, Folk-lore in the O.T., III, 170-72, 191, etc.; also E. F. Kautzsch, "Religion of Israel," in James Hastings, ed., A Dictionary of the Bible [New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1904], Extra Vol., p. 640), because of the power which can then be exercised over that person when the name is known and spoken. The magical spells of N.T. times consisted largely in the rapid recitation of a number of powerful names until the most effective name caused the expulsion of the demon. When the Deuteronomists said that

Underhill in her books reminds us that in the long run the mystical power of common worship has proved more effective than that of private devotion. David and Solomon had a sure sense of spiritual direction in building the temple as the central trysting place, for unless men worship together they tend to neglect their private devotions. The devout soul's direct experience of God is like the artist's intense appreciation of beauty or the poet's inspired glimpse of truth. But these lovely flashes of luminous insight do not give a sufficiently steady light to live by, any more than flashes of lightning furnish adequate light for the motorist to drive by. Left to ourselves, our moods fluctuate. There come hours of exultant faith wherein we feel convinced of God's goodness. There come moments of mystic insight when the atmosphere clears and the very foothills of heaven are visible. But we also have low moods which send us to the basements of our natures. We have cynical hours when we impugn the motives of others and lose faith in noble causes. These high and low tides of the spirit come to us, and in the handling of them we need the help of others. Knowing that Christianity's new converts from Judaism would feel this ebb and flow of religious enthusiasm, the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews exhorts them: "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; . . . and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together" (Heb. 10:23-25). The presence of fellow seekers helps to make God more real, not only because we catch the contagion of their faith but also because we must discipline ourselves to their differences. One value of going to church is that we worship with people whom we may not naturally like and in ways which may not be entirely congenial. A good spiritual exercise is to do some unpleasant duty each day just to stretch one's soul; for if we do only what we like to do, and mingle only with the people we like to meet, our range of pleasures shortens and our circle of friends shrinks.

God is a Spirit, and when we ascend to the plane of pure spirit our communion with the heavenly Father will need no material aids. In his vision of the new Jerusalem, John "saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it" (Rev. 21:22). But the Jerusalem of Solomon's day needed a temple, for man's finite nature must have its trysting places with the Infinite.

30. 34, 36, 39, 50. The Strands of Forgiveness.

—The recurring motif of Solomon's prayer is when thou hearest, forgive. As a study in eloquent and effective praying, the repetition of this plea is worthy of note.

Sir Oliver Lodge said that modern man is too busy to think about the forgiveness of sin. However we bright little modern folk may dull 31 ¶ If any man trespass against his neighbor, and an oath be laid upon him to cause him to swear, and the oath come before thine altar in this house:

32 Then hear thou in heaven, and do, and judge thy servants, condemning the wicked, to bring his way upon his head; and justifying the righteous, to give him according to his righteousness.

33 ¶ When thy people Israel be smitten down before the enemy, because they have sinned against thee, and shall turn again to thee, and confess thy name, and pray, and make supplication unto thee in this house:

34 Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them again unto the land which thou gavest unto their fathers.

God would put his Name in the sanctuary at Jerusalem, they meant not only that prayers made in that place would be effective, but also that Yahweh would there reveal his will in a special manner. The ultimate prayer must always be "Thy will, not mine, be done."

31-32. These verses deal with the case of a charge made against a man when there is no evidence. Everything, therefore, in such a case depends upon the statement of the accused, since there are no witnesses whereby his word can be substantiated or otherwise. He is brought before the altar and there is made to swear an oath. The prayer is that God will ensure that this trial by oath will settle the matter (cf. the trial by ordeal in Num. 5:14-30).

Vs. 32 shows the Deuteronomic system at work. The theory was that the wicked man was rewarded in this life with misfortune according to his wickedness, while the innocent man was rewarded with good fortune according to his innocence. The Deuteronomists were quite sure that this is a moral world in which morality brings prosperity. They were sure also that they ought to see it working, but the experience of the generations taught them that this principle did not work in so far as the life of the individual is concerned, nor in the case of the nation.

33-34. The military defeat of the nation is judged to be due to sin and apostasy from God. Equally, when the people repent and turn back again to God, defeat will be turned to victory and all will once more be well. The word translated turn again is זָרָפָה, "turn back" (cf. Isa. 7:3, where the name of Isaiah's son, Shear-jashub, does not mean "a remnant shall return" from exile, but "a remnant shall repent"; cf. also Isa. 10:21).

the sensitivity of our consciences by dashing about, the stubborn fact of sin remains, and the search for its forgiveness has been the burden of weightiest thought from Greek dramatists and Hebrew prophets down to Eugene O'Neill. As Luther saw, the forgiveness of sin is a knot which needs God's help to unravel. If I trespass against another, he may forgive me; but can I forgive myself? Or suppose I sin against society by not doing my duty as a citizen; can I not make it up later by extra service? Suppose I am a wastrel until I am forty, and then settle down and do unusually good work; does that not balance up? Or even if I sin so flagrantly that my transgression is called a crime, can I not alone for my offense by paying a fine or serving a term in prison? Why bring God into the matter at all?

The reason is that sin has at least three aspects. For one thing, there is the record. However kind a man may be now, the fact remains that he once cruelly hurt someone. However law-abiding the man is now, he once was in prison. And along with the record is a second aspect of sin, the habit. Evil imaginings and desires, wishes unfulfilled as well as deeds done, 35 ¶ When heaven is shut up, and there is no rain, because they have sinned against thee; if they pray toward this place, and confess thy name, and turn from their sin, when thou afflictest them:

36 Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy servants, and of thy people Israel, that thou teach them the good way wherein they should walk, and give rain upon thy land, which thou hast given to thy people for an inheritance.

37 ¶ If there be in the land famine, if there be pestilence, blasting, mildew, locust, or if there be caterpillar; if their enemy be

The last phrase and bring them again to the land . . . fathers suggests a knowledge of the Exile. It is an addition to the work of the original Deuteronomic editor and belongs to the work of the later editor (ca. 550 B.C.).

35-36. Drought, with its consequent famine and pestilence, is regarded in the O.T. as a mark of the divine disfavor because of sin. Palestine was a land where the failure of the seasonal rains meant starvation. Prayers for a good autumn rain formed a regular feature of the autumnal feast, both of the pre-exilic feast of Ingathering and of the postexilic feast of Tabernacles. This was especially the case since the “former rain” was due to fall so very soon after the conclusion of the feast. If this October rain did not fall, the ground, baked hard as iron by the long summer drought, could not be plowed. The concern for rain at this feast may be seen in Zech. 14:16-17, and the tragedy of the delayed rains is depicted in Jer. 8:20. See also the Mishnah, Taanith 1:1-3:8, where there is a description of the ceremonies performed to ensure the fall of the seasonal rains if they were long delayed after the end of the feast (Snaith, Jewish New Year Festival, pp. 64, 174-76). The conditions for the divine gift of rain in its season are prayer and repentance, but with forgiveness always dependent upon the good will of God. This insistence upon the sovereignty of God is essential to an understanding of the effectiveness of ritual acts (see G. B. Gray, Sacrifice in the Old Testament [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1925], pp. 316-17).

37-40. This paragraph bears indications of the work of a Priestly Code writer: see the literary style of the opening phrases, where the Hebrew noun comes before the conjunction, and the catalogue of woes which follow in the train of famine.

are buried in our subconscious and may erupt like smoldering volcanoes. Moreover, sin has its influence as well as its record and habit. The influence of an evil deed has gone forth into the atmosphere of a situation, and the doer can no more recall it than he can recapture his breath. The strands of sin cannot be untangled by merely shaking hands all round and letting bygones be bygones. When Peer Gynt found himself among the trolls, the devilish spirits of Scandinavian folklore, he asked what was the basic difference between trolls and men. He was told that whereas among men the motto was “To thyself be true,” among the trolls the motto was “To thyself be enough.” ¹ Peer, not liking the rigid requirements of being true to himself, welcomed the new principle of self-sufficiency and pursued it to the point of self-strangulation.

Solomon’s prayer not only recognizes the all-pervasiveness of sin—for there is no man who does not sin (vs. 46)—but also the divine involvement of sin. The correction of sin cannot be kept on the human level because the conception of sin is as of a divine-human affair: If they sin against thee . . . and thou art angry with them, and dost give them to an enemy . . . far off or near (vs. 46). The divine motives and methods are conceived in primitive, concrete, and direct terms; but the prayer makes clear that the strands of sin cannot be unwound by man’s self-sufficiency.

The sinning people must repent with all their mind and with all their heart (vs. 48). And repentance is shown when they turn again to

38. The phrase the plague of his own heart, thus following the Hebrew exactly, is unique. It is an admirable example of the way in which the Hebrew word ד"ה ("heart") is used to denote the very inner core of a man's being. The paraphrase each knowing the affliction of his own heart is sound, but the meaning seems to be "when the plague strikes right home to each man." The hope involved in such phrases is that God will, through plague and sickness, awaken in man's heart the consciousness of sin, in order that man may repent and turn in penitence to God. The Hebrew ideas of punishment for sin are often said to be penal, and undoubtedly this element is strong, especially in the Deuteronomic writings. On the other hand, such a passage as this shows that beyond even penal, retributive punishment there can be a redemptive aim. In Ezek. 18 the idea of exact justice is put forward and worked out with all the rigidity that the most impersonal idea of justice could demand. And yet, this very chapter concludes with one of the most impassioned pleas for repentance that is to be found anywhere. The doctrine of exact retribution (here in vs. 39; cf. also Jer. 17:10; Ezek. 18:20-32) received steady emphasis from Deuteronomic times onward. It created difficulties later when the problem of undeserved suffering came to the fore (cf. Isa. 53-8-10; Job and several psalms). It was seen in the end that retribution could not be restricted to the individual, nor could it be confined to this life alone. Out of this dilemma there grew ultimately on the one hand the idea of vicarious suffering so far as this world is concerned, and on the other hand the idea of a resurrected life after death, so far as the next world is concerned. No man lives to himself alone, and human destiny cannot be dealt with on the level of this world only.
39. The idea that God knows the hearts of all the children of men, and that he judges according to these inmost thoughts, is a definite milestone in the growth of man's knowledge of the nature and the ways of God. The earliest tendency was to think of God as judging by actions independent of true intentions. This notion appears clearly in the story of the fate of Uzzah, who put out his hand apparently with the best of intentions in order to steady the ark and prevent it from falling and being damaged when the oxen bolted. According to the historian (II Sam. 6:6-7), Uzzah was forthwith smitten dead for this action. But with the prophets the emphasis came more and more to be placed on the motive that lies behind the action, so that intention counts for more than the actual deed. Writers in the priestly tradition were more conservative (e.g., II Chr. 26:18-19), and there was always a party among the scribes who thought in terms of deeds rather than of motives. Yet the idea that God judges by the heart rather than by the outward appearance is as old as I Sam. 16:7, where Samuel is at first attracted by the features and the height of David, David's eldest brother. The classical exposition of the prime importance of motive is Mark 7:21.

41-43. This paragraph belongs to that strand of Jewish religion which welcomed the foreigner who sought to worship the God of the Jews. There were many such among...
42 (For they shall hear of thy great name, and of thy strong hand, and of thy stretched out arm;) when he shall come and pray toward this house:

43 Hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee: for: that all people of the earth may know thy name, to fear thee, as do thy people Israel; and that they may know that this house, which I have built, is called by thy name.

44 ¶ If thy people go out to battle against their enemy, whithersoever thou shalt send them, and shall pray unto the Lord toward the city which thou hast chosen, and toward the house that I have built for thy name:

45 Then hear thou in heaven their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their cause.

46 If they sin against thee, (for there is no man that sinneth not,) and thou beareth their iniquity:

The Dispersion in the time of the apostle Paul, the “devout persons” whom he found in the cities of Asia Minor. The paragraph finds its counterpart in the conclusion of Isa. 2:1-4, especially when this is compared with the conclusion of the parallel passage in Mic. 4:1-5. It is to be seen also in such missionary tracts as Ruth and Jonah. The contrast is found in Deut. 23:5-8 and Neh. 13:1-3. Josephus (Antiquities VIII. 4. 3) makes the most he can of this passage in his eagerness to commend his people to the Romans. He claims that the Jews of his day were “not unnatural nor hostile to strangers,” as was indeed alleged, for instance, somewhat later by Tacitus (History V. 5), who said that “toward the rest of mankind they nourish a sullen and inveterate hatred.”

42. The word יָד (hand) is regularly used to denote authority, power, control (cf. Josh. 8:20, which reads, lit., “there was not in them pairs of hands to flee”). The phrase containing hand is earlier than Deuteronomy, but the following phrase, thy outstretched arm, is found first in Deut. 4:34, and thereafter five times by itself, apart from its usual use in the present combination.

44-45. This paragraph, as its language and style show, is exilic, as also is the next. It is a prayer for success in battle. It is a characteristic of all peoples that they pray to their god for success in war; such prayers are no criterion of primitive civilization.

46-53. A prayer for all exiles, whether far or near, not only for those captive in Babylonia, but for all such in whatever place or time.

46. Here we find the statement that there is no man who does not sin. It is true that “the idea of total depravity . . . is . . . unsupported by the Bible,” but it is nevertheless “an observed and undeniable fact that all men are sinners” (Burrows, Outline of Biblical Theology, pp. 170, 172). See also Pss. 130:3; 143:2—passages which, together with this verse, have to be taken into account in any comprehensive study of the extent with Christ’s great commission (Matt. 28:19-20). This early petitioner feels no compulsion to seek out the foreigner or to send the message of Yahweh to him. Help is asked only for those who come to the temple as seekers. When he comes and prays toward this house, hear thou, . . . and do according to all for which the foreigner calls to thee; in order that all the peoples of the earth may know thy name and fear thee.

When did Israel awaken to a spiritual concern for the peoples beyond her borders? Has Judaism a missionary passion today? How does this prayer’s desire to impress the foreigner with the Lord’s greatness compare with Jesus’ counsel, “Let your light so shine before men, is no man who does not sin — and thou art angry with them, and dost give them to an enemy, so that they are carried away captive to the land of the enemy, far off or near; 47 yet if they shall bethink themselves in the land whither they were carried captives, and repent, and make supplication unto thee in the land of them that carried them captives, saying, We have sinned, and have done perversely, we have committed wickedness; 48 And so return unto thee with all their heart, and with all their soul, in the land of their enemies, which led them away captive, and pray unto thee toward their land, which thou gavest unto their fathers, the city which thou hast chosen, and the house which I have built for thy name: 49 Then hear thou their prayer and their supplication in heaven thy dwelling place, and maintain their cause, and the prevalence of sin. All three passages are late and belong to the time of the Diaspora.

47. This verse contains three words for “sin,” and they are translated We have sinned, and have acted perversely and wickedly. Etymologically the three words used stand for three different conceptions of sin. The first word is hātā, which properly means “miss the goal.” The verb is used in this sense in Prov. 19.2. In Judg. 20:16 it is used of men slingling stones at a hair and not “missing.” From this point of view, therefore, the conception of sin is that of aiming at what is right, and failing. The second word is āwāḥ. The corresponding verb in Arabic means “to err from the way,” but in Hebrew the noun and its derivatives are used of “iniquity” rather than of “error,” as though the result of deliberate action and not of failure through weakness or lack of knowledge. The third word is rāsha. It is used in Arabic of being loose in the limbs and thus disjointed, irregulated, abnormal. In this way sin refers to being out of the straight, not conforming to what is right and true, in contrast to ādāhāh (“righteousness”).

48. Repent with all their mind and ... heart: The Hebrew actually is “with all their ḫāš [lit., heart] and with all their šāh [lit., “life,” soul].” The meaning is not necessarily, as the RSV suggests, “with all their thinking and emotional powers,” although both these are certainly involved, but with the whole of their being, right down to the very roots of it. It is the Hebrew idiom for expressing the idea that the repentance must be thorough and complete.

that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven” (Matt. 5:16)? Is the primary motive to promote the glory of God or the welfare of the foreigner, and what is the relation between these two objectives? How far is Solomon’s interest in the outsider from the good Samaritanism of Jesus? In convincing the foreigner of Yahweh’s power, was there an underlying desire to demonstrate Israel’s strength? Have Christian missions been purged of all nationalism and imperialism? Such are some of the seed questions embedded in the soil of Solomon’s prayer. They could be fruitfully cultivated in current thought.

When the Nobile expedition made its ill-fated flight over the North Pole in 1928, the report came back via Leningrad that a Swedish scientist had been left to die in the snow by two of his comrades when he was unable to keep up the trek. A considerable outcry was raised by the Russians at the inhumanity of such an act. Yet at just about that time representatives of an American church were in Russia distributing food supplies to relieve the starvation due to 50 And forgive thy people that have sinned against thee, and all their transgressions wherein they have transgressed against thee, and give them compassion before them who carried them captive, that they may have compassion on them:

51 For they be thy people, and thine inheritance, which thou broughtest forth out of Egypt, from the midst of the furnace of iron:

52 That thine eyes may be open unto the supplication of thy servant, and unto the supplication of thy people Israel, to hearken unto them in all that they call for unto thee.

53 For thou didst separate them from among all the people of the earth, to be thine inheritance, as thou spakest by the hand of Moses thy servant, when thou broughtest our fathers out of Egypt, O Lord God.

50. Transgressions: The Hebrew ציד means “rebellion,” and this certainly ought to be the translation here. The difference between the two renderings is considerable. To use the word “transgression” involves thinking of sin as transgressing a law, but to use the word “rebellion” involves thinking of sin as a revolt against a person. This is the general attitude of the prophets, so that the expression of Isa. 53:6, “We have turned every one to his own way,” is truly characteristic of the prophetic attitude. At root the difference involves two ways of thinking about religion: one presupposes a set of rules or laws which must be obeyed, the other involves a particular attitude to a person. It is because the prophetic attitude to God is primarily that of loyalty to a Person that the ethical standards of the Bible grow to be far higher and deeper than any human standard could ever demand.

53. Israel’s special claim upon God is his special choice of Israel, wholly undeserved. The Deuteronomic writers are continually emphasizing this idea (Deut. 7:7-8; 9:4-5; 23:5). This belief of special choice is to be found throughout the Bible; indeed the crop failure. A Soviet commissar came to one of the church workers and asked, “Why are you over here? What are you trying to get out of us anyway?” The Soviet mentality could understand why one should not leave a comrade to die at his feet, but it could not understand why one should go halfway around the world to save people who were dying. The first is humanity, the second is Christianity.

53. A Chosen People.—There is no truer test of character than the attitude a man takes toward his inheritance. To a person of high sensitivity what is bequeathed to him becomes a sacred trust. It is a matter of honor to keep faith with the dead who no longer are present to reward or restrain. Solomon therefore closes his dedicatory prayer on a strategic note by reference to Israel’s heritage. For thou didst separate them from among all the peoples of the earth, to be thy heritage, as thou didst declare through Moses, thy servant, when thou didst bring our fathers out of Egypt, O Lord God (cf. Deut. 7:6). Charles W. Eliot of Harvard used to say that the strongest appeal he could make to a wayward student was to remind him of parental sacrifices and expectations. But while we may feel a sense of honor sufficient to keep faith with our own parents and to preserve our personal inheritance, many do not have the same regard for their social and national heritage. What is everybody’s business is often nobody’s business. The Deuteronomic writer foresaw that prosperity would tend to beget individualism and warned against wasting Israel’s national inheritance (Deut. 9:26). From Moses on, the recurring emphasis on Israel’s divine heritage and mission proved of immeasurable value in sustaining morale through suffering and exile.

In so far as the consciousness of our inheritance keeps us humbly grateful, it is wholesome.
54 And it was so, that when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and supplication unto the Lord, he arose from before the altar of the Lord, from kneeling on his knees with his hands spread up to heaven.

55 And he stood, and blessed all the congregation of Israel with a loud voice, saying, 56 Blessed be the Lord, that hath given rest unto his people Israel, according to all that he promised: there hath not failed one word of all his good promise, which he promised by the hand of Moses his servant.

57 The Lord our God be with us, as he was with our fathers: let him not leave us, nor forsake us:

58 That he may incline our hearts unto him, to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, which he commanded our fathers.

Now as Solomon finished offering all this prayer and supplication to the Lord, he arose from before the altar of the Lord, where he had knelt with hands outstretched toward heaven; 55 and he stood, and blessed all the assembly of Israel with a loud voice, saying, 56 "Blessed be the Lord who has given rest to his people Israel, according to all that he promised; not one word has failed of all his good promise, which he uttered by Moses his servant. 57 The Lord our God be with us, as he was with our fathers: may he not leave us or forsake us; 58 that he may incline our hearts to him, to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, his statutes, and his ordinances, which he commanded our fathers.

Bible is written with this fundamental motif. The emphasis of the prophets is always that the choice was due wholly to God's free and unconditioned love, i.e., not conditioned by Israel's deserving or by anything at all outside his nature. It was wholly and entirely his own unfettered choice, and all of grace. The idea of Israel as a nation separate from the rest of the peoples becomes articulate in Amos 3:2, and from that time there is a steady development in the Deuteronomic writings, becoming rigorously exclusive in the postexilic period.

4. Solomon's Blessing (8:54-61)

Solomon blesses the people, and prays that God's ancient promise shall be fulfilled in them. To that end he prays that God will so incline their hearts that they will keep the Deuteronomic laws with full zeal.

54. The attitude of kneeling during prayer was not common, though it is mentioned some seven times altogether (cf. 19:16). The usual attitude was that of standing with hands outstretched (cf. vs. 22).

56. The faithfulness of God in fulfilling his promises is a recurrent theme throughout the Bible. It comes to its full fruition in the Epistle to the Hebrews, where "faith" largely is that which enables men to live and die "not having received what was promised, but having seen it and greeted it from afar" (Heb. 11:13).

58. The writer recognizes that if men are to do the will of God then it must be because he is pleased to incline our hearts to him. This idea presents a contradiction which the human mind cannot solve. It is true that every man has a free choice either 59 And let these my words, wherewith I have made supplication before the Lord, be nigh unto the Lord our God day and night, that he maintain the cause of his servant, and the cause of his people Israel at all times, as the matter shall require:

60 That all the people of the earth may know that the Lord is God, and that there is none else.

61 Let your heart therefore be perfect with the Lord our God, to walk in his statutes, and to keep his commandments, as at this day.

62 ¶ And the king, and all Israel with him, offered sacrifice before the Lord.

63 And Solomon offered a sacrifice of peace offerings, which he offered unto the Lord, two and twenty thousand oxen, and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep. So the king and all the children of Israel dedicated the house of the Lord.

64 The same day did the king hallow the middle of the court that was before the house of the Lord: for there he offered to do God's will or to refuse. It is also true that even those first stirrings in the human heart which bring men to him are the work of the Holy Spirit. The degree of emphasis on this point is a safe criterion of the depth of Christian experience.

5. The sacrifices and the feast (8:62-66)

Solomon offers an enormous number of animals for the sacred feast. He dedicates the temple by inaugurating the regular daily sacrifice. All this took place at the great autumnal harvest new-year feast which began with the full moon known to us as the harvest moon. The feast lasted seven days and the people all returned home on the eighth day.

63. The LXX omits all reference to the slaughtering of the sheep, recording only the slaughter of the twenty-two thousand oxen. Josephus mentions twelve thousand sheep, and his figures rarely err on the low side. It is possible that the numbers of the M.T. have grown with the years, but these beasts were slain for the eating of the worshipers, and large numbers of animals would certainly be needed.

64. This is the first mention of the bronze altar. There is no evidence that there was such an altar in Solomon's temple. It belonged to the second temple. The verse value was "unearned increment." When we consider the unearned increment of social values which we enjoy we feel ourselves in debt far beyond our power to repay. Only a debtor complex can keep us humbly serving (cf. Rom. 1:14-15). When we are ever mindful that our blessings were bought with a price, that the element of sacrifice runs through the linked generations as the red strand runs through the rope of the British navy to show that it belongs to the crown, then we dedicate ourselves to the task of leaving a world better than we found it.

To waste the privilege for which our fathers paid so dearly is to betray the dead, cheat our children, and dishonor the God who prepared our people to be his heritage. Society is a compact between the living, the dead, and the yet unborn, to use Edmund Burke's formula. Moreover, to Israel it was a covenant between God and his chosen people.

But what is it to be a chosen people? At this point enters the pride which perverts humble gratitude into national preening. It is one thing to be chosen for a special mission; it is another burnt offerings, and meat offerings, and the fat of the peace offerings: because the brazen altar that was before the LORD was too little to receive the burnt offerings, and meat offerings, and the fat of the peace offerings.

65 And at that time Solomon held a feast, and all Israel with him, a great congregation, from the entering in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt, before the LORD our God, seven days and seven days, even fourteen days.

66 On the eighth day he sent the people away: and they blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart for all the goodness that the LORD had done for David his servant, and for Israel his people.

shows definite traces of editing under the influence of the Priestly Code. This is especially evident in the fact that the word נְצֹּץ, cereal offering, is used in its postexilic sense of the cereal offering which accompanied every meat offering consumed on the altar (cf.
Exeg. on 4:21). The king here is said to be instituting the regular daily offering which was customary in the postexilic temple. This fact is clear in the RSV, with its reference to the burnt offering and the cereal offering, both words being in the singular. It is obscured in the KJV because the words there are in the plural, as though he made a multiplicity of offerings because of the very special and unique nature of the occasion.
The peace offerings were for the great feast in which all the worshipers shared. It was only the fat of these slaughtered beasts which was consumed on the altar. In any case, the tradition is that the beasts were so many that the fat from them was burned in the middle of the court, not on any altar which may have been there.

65. From the entrance of Hamath to the Brook of Egypt is the ideal extent of the Holy Land from north to south. The entrance of Hamath is the pass between Hermon and the Lebanon, due north of the Sea of Galilee and in latitude 33° 30', the same latitude as both Sidon and Damascus. Seven days was the period of the pre-exilic feast of Ingathering. According to Deut. 16:13, 15, the people made ready to go back home on the eighth day (cf. vs. 66). This is the custom described here. The postexilic custom was to hold an נְצֹּץ, i.e., "a closing assembly" on the eighth day (cf. the parallel and postexilic account in II Chr. 7:8-10). The addition in the M.T., and seven days, even fourteen days, is due to the mistaken enthusiasm of a scribe who thought that the dedication feast and the normal seven-day feast were separate and distinct.

Seven is the sacred number in all areas which were subject to Mesopotamian influence.

EN ROGEL DRAGON'S SPRING TO WADI GABID
And it came to pass, when Solomon had finished the building of the house of the Lord, and the king's house, and all Solomon's desire which he was pleased to do,

2 That the Lord appeared to Solomon the second time, as he had appeared unto him at Gibeon.

3 And the Lord said unto him, I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication, that thou hast made before me: I have hallowed this house, which thou hast built, to put my name there for ever; and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually.

4 And if thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, in integrity of heart, and in uprightness, to do according to all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep my statutes and my judgments;

5 Then I will establish the throne of thy kingdom upon Israel for ever, as I promised to David thy father, saying, There shall not fail thee a man upon the throne of Israel.

6 But if ye shall at all turn from following me, ye or your children, and will not keep my commandments and my statutes which I have set before you, but go and serve other gods for the knowledge of God until it rose to monotheism, which preserved a saving remnant through exile, despair, and dismemberment, and established a moral law which “was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ” (Gal. 3:24)—such a nation may well claim the title of a chosen people, which the Lord God didst separate... from among all the peoples of the earth, to be thy heritage. God has a mission for every individual life which he brings into the world. Horace Bushnell's historic sermon, “Every Man's Life a Plan of God,”

D. Solomon's Apogee and Decline (9:1-11:43)

1. Solomon's Second Vision (9:1-9)

The king receives a confirmation at Jerusalem of his first vision at Gibeon and an assurance that his dedicatory prayer has been heard and will be answered. Everything is conditional upon the proper observance of the Deuteronomic principles. The whole section is Deuteronomistic, the first five verses from the earlier editor (ca. 610 B.C.), the last four from the later editor (ca. 550 B.C.). The change of person at vs. 6 (preserved in the KJV but hidden in the RSV) and the fact that vss. 6-9 envisage apostasy from God and speak (cf. O.L. and Syriac) of the temple as a heap of ruins support the 7 Then will I cut off Israel out of the land which I have given them; and this house, which I have hallowed for my name, will I cast out of my sight; and Israel shall be a proverb and a byword among all people:

8 And at this house, which is high, every one that passeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss; and they shall say, Why hath the LORD done thus unto this land, and to this house?

9 And they shall answer, Because they forsook the LORD their God, who brought forth their fathers out of the land of Egypt, and have taken hold upon other gods, and have worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath the LORD brought upon them all this evil.

10 ¶ And it came to pass at the end of twenty years, when Solomon had built the contention that the last part only of the section is postexilic (so Burney against the majority of scholars).

9:8. The true reading of the M.T. is "and this house shall be high" (ASV mg.). In the KJV the smoothed reading of the parallel II Chr. 7:21 has been adopted, this house, which is high, but the O.L. and Syriac are correct with will become a heap of ruins. The alteration may well have been deliberate in the M.T. on the ground that God could scarcely say that the temple would be a heap of ruins.

2. Further Details of Solomon's Magnificence and Wisdom (9.10–10:29)

their fathers out of the land of Egypt, and laid hold on other gods, and worshipped them and served them; therefore the LORD has brought all this evil upon them (vs. 9). The early Hebrew sees here glimpse the basic truth of retribution for sin, although they have not yet lifted the principle from the low level of give-and-take between Yahweh and his subjects. Modern experience through social and psychological laboratories confirms the evil consequences of wrongdoing, even when no intervening deity is cited to explain them. Twentieth-century writers may not use the words which Isaiah interprets the Lord as speaking to Sennacherib, "Therefore will I put...my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest" (Isa. 37:29); but they cannot gainsay the fact that "pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall" (Prov. 16:18), that power is lost through abuse, and that the way of the transgressor becomes harder and narrower (Prov. 18:15). As a disillusioned youth once said, "We took what we wanted until we no longer wanted what we took." The dictator who takes law into his own hands finally discovers laws which he cannot handle, and he goes the way of the Napoleons and the Hitlers.

As Jesus looked around the table at the Last Supper he said, "Woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed!" (Mark 14:21). Who punished Judas? Not the company of Jesus whose confidences he had betrayed. Not the Jewish people whose noblest Son he had turned over to the hostile Roman government. No outside agency was called in to condemn Judas. He punished himself. This is the significant thing about playing false to the divine principles. It proves to be playing false to oneself. As Francis Thompson heard the Hound of Heaven say, "All things betray thee, who betrayest Me." Disobedience toward God makes us traitors to ourselves. Solomon was to learn this truth the hard way.

10:28. The Pay-Off.—Splendor such as Solomon's can be bought only at a high price. And two houses, the house of the Lord, and the king's house.

11 (Now Hiram the king of Tyre had furnished Solomon with cedar trees and fir trees, and with gold, according to all his desire,) that then king Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities in the land of Galilee.

12 And Hiram came out from Tyre to see the cities which Solomon had given him; and they pleased him not.

13 And he said, What cities are these which thou hast given me, my brother? And he called them the land of Cabul unto this day.

Solomon had built the two houses, the house of the Lord and the king's house, and Hiram king of Tyre had supplied Solomon with cedar and cypress timber and gold, as much as he desired, King Solomon gave to Hiram twenty cities in the land of Galilee. 12 But when Hiram came from Tyre to see the cities which Solomon had given him, they did not please him. 13 Therefore he said, "What kind of cities are these which you have given me, my brother?" So they are called the land of biography, short statements for the most part. There has also been some considerable editorial activity. The order in the LXX is quite different, but is no improvement. The reconstruction proposed by Burney (Notes on Hebrew Text of Kings, p. 133), partly on the basis of the LXX, is the probable original order in the biography. So far as ch. 9 is concerned, this order is vss. 10, 17-19, 15, 20-23. This arrangement gives first the full list of Solomon's building operations and then the details of the conscripted labor with which he carried out his schemes. Into this description is dovetailed the story of Solomon's sale to Hiram of Tyre of twenty cities in Galilee (vss. 11-14). The amount of gold received was equivalent to nearly one and a half million dollars.

a) Sale of Galilean Territory (9:10-14)

Hiram, having paid the money, comes to inspect the territory and is dissatisfied with the bargain. The story accounts for a popular explanation of the name Galilee as being "as good as nothing."

11. The original statement from the biography began with the mention of the twenty cities. The timber which Hiram had sent to Solomon had nothing to do with this financial transaction, since Solomon had already paid for that (cf. 5:11). Solomon was short of ready money and had to cede territory in order to get it. This is disguised by the introduction of the parenthesis, necessarily so because the editor's theory is that all went well until toward the end of the reign when Solomon allowed the worship of foreign deities through pressure from his many foreign wives. But the troubles of ch. 11 belong to a much earlier period of the reign than is suggested there, and the loss of Edom and Damascus must have created financial difficulties for Solomon, so that his grandiose building schemes were more expensive than he could actually afford. In the Chronicler's parallel (II Chr. 8:2) the whole transaction is reversed, and Hiram cedes territory to Solomon.

13. Cabul: Ewald's explanation, "like nothing," is probably correct, but represents a popular rather than accurate etymology. The explanation "displeasing" is found in Josephus (Antiquities VIII. 5. 3).

now it begins to appear that what the exalted monarch had paid was to give him trouble.
The twenty cities in Galilee which he gave to Hiram for his services did not please the latter;
how Hiram was eventually placated we are not told. Also the forced labor which Solomon levied on his subjects was to prove the seed of a future bitter harvest. He spared his own people of Israel this slave labor. He made them soldiers, officials, commanders, and placed them over the Amorites, the Hittites, and the other subject peoples within his borders. But all this weakened the national structure and unity, for a nation is not safe when half slave and half free.

Then instead of giving himself to the righting of wrongs and the spreading of liberty and justice to all, Solomon went on in his greed for glory. He built a fleet to bring the gold of Ophir for further enrichment of his splendor. Thus ambition weaves the familiar and fatal pattern.
14 And Hiram sent to the king sixscore talents of gold.
15 ¶ And this is the reason of the levy which king Solomon raised; for to build the house of the Lord, and his own house, and Millo, and the wall of Jerusalem, and Hazor, and Megiddo, and Gezer.
16 For Pharaoh king of Egypt had gone up, and taken Gezer, and burnt it with fire, and slain the Canaanites that dwelt in the city, and given it for a present unto his daughter, Solomon’s wife.
17 And Solomon built Gezer, and Bethhoron the nether.
18 And Baalath, and Tadmor in the wilderness, in the land, 19 And all the cities of store that Solomon had, and cities for his chariots, and cities for his horsemen, and that which Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, and in Lebanon, and in all the land of his dominion.
20 And all the people that were left of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites, which were not of the children of Israel, 21 Their children that were left after them in the land, whom the children of Israel also were not able utterly to destroy, upon those did Solomon levy a tribute of bondservice unto this day.
22 But of the children of Israel did Solo-

b) Forced Labor Levy (9:15-23)

Solomon accomplished his huge building program by labor gangs levied on the Northern Kingdom of Israel. The original account seems to have consisted of vs. 15a, 20-23, and into this has been interpolated an account of all the buildings which Solomon erected by means of the corvée system. Yet again, vs. 16 is another interpolation, explaining how it came about that Gezer, the dowry of Pharaoh’s daughter, had to be rebuilt by Solomon. This verse really belongs to 3:1.

15. The Millo was part of the fortifications of the old Jebusite city of Jerusalem. It was apparently a tower, particularly strong and especially needed there because of the natural weakness of the place on the north side. The word is usually explained as being of Canaanite origin, meaning “that which is filled up.”

21. Destroy utterly: Both this and the similar phrase in the KJV are inadequate as a translation of the Hebrew. The verb means “put to the ban.” The noun (hērm) describes that which is sacred to a god other than the Lord and must therefore be utterly destroyed. The same root is used with the same significance on the Moabite stone (I. 17) of the complete destruction of the altar hearth (?) of the Lord which was captured by Mesha of Moab and dragged before the Moabite god Chemosh and utterly destroyed. In Arabic the root is the normal root for “holy,” e.g., the modern name for the ancient temple area at Jerusalem is Haram esh-Sherif.

22. His captains is a conjectural translation. In II Chr. 8:9 the word is combined with the previous word to read “the chiefs of his [?] captains.”
Solomon made no slaves; they were the soldiers, they were his officials, his commanders, his captains, his chariot commanders and his horsemen.

23 These were the chief officers who were over Solomon's work: five hundred and fifty, which bare rule over the people that wrought in the work.

24 But Pharaoh's daughter came up out of the city of David unto her house which Solomon had built for her: then did he build Millo.

25 And three times in a year did Solomon offer burnt offerings and peace offerings upon the altar which he built unto the Lord, and he burnt incense upon the altar that was before the Lord. So he finished the house.

26 And king Solomon made a navy of ships in Ezion-geber, which is beside Eloth, on the shore of the Red sea, in the land of Edom.

27 And Hiram sent in the navy his servants, shipmen that had knowledge of the sea, with the servants of Solomon.

28 And they came to Ophir, and fetched... from thence gold, four hundred and twenty talents, and brought it to king Solomon.

And when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord, she came to prove him with hard questions.

And she came to Jerusalem with a very great train, with camels bare and precious stones: and when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart.

And Solomon told her all her questions: there was not any thing hid from the king, which he told her not.

second, the Ethiopian coast of the Red Sea, known to the Egyptians as Punt; third, Mashonaland, the ruins of Zimbabwe between the Zambezi and Limpopo rivers. The last is an attractive suggestion, especially since it is known that there were Phoenician settlements along the east coast of Africa. The second is too near for a three-year voyage. The first is the most likely, since the area was famous for its gold in ancient times and was on the regular trade routes to South India, both the overland Arabian route and the Red Sea water route. The words used in 10:22 for “apes,” “sandalwood” and perhaps “peacocks” are of Sanskrit origin and still in use to this day on the Malabar Coast.

f) Visit of the Queen of Sheba (10:1-13)

This story is told to illustrate the surpassing wisdom of Solomon, so great that it spread throughout Arabia among those very tribes which were famous for their wisdom from ancient times. Both Solomon and the queen of Sheba are prominent in Eastern legends. The Arabs called her Bilquis, but in Ethiopian legends her name is Makeda. Sheba was the great trading community of southwestern Arabia, and at this period controlled the overland trade routes.

10:1. There is general agreement that hard questions is the best rendering of the Hebrew תַּפַּרְשָׁה, partly on the ground that the kind of riddle which is found in the Samson story (Judg. 14:12, 14, 18) is too futile. But Josephus (Antiquities VIII. 5. 3)

10:1-13. Not Won by Wonder.—Solomon had prayed that the glory of the temple might turn the minds of foreign visitors to “know thy name and fear thee” (8:13). A test of the temple’s power was given in the case of the queen of Sheba. She came to Jerusalem, beheld its splendors, and admitted that Solomon surpassed in wisdom and prosperity all that had been told her (vv. 6-7). In her enthusiasm she cried, Blessed be the Lord your God, who has delighted in you and set you on the throne of Israel! But the record of the queen’s visit closes thus: King Solomon gave to the queen of Sheba all that she desired, whatever she asked besides what was given her by the bounty of King Solomon. So she turned and went back to her own land, with her servants. There is no mention that the queen sought any further knowledge of Solomon’s God or came to share the king’s faith. The temple had aroused her wonder, but it had not won a new convert. She had been impressed with what the Lord had done for Israel, but she did not bring him home to herself.

We are familiar with the expression, “bringing a thing home to ourselves.” We mean thereby taking it into those vital centers of interest where we really live, so that it affects our daily conduct and stirs us broad awake or, to use an American colloquialism, “gets under the skin.” This personal penetration of one’s inmost being by the Lord is what the queen of Sheba apparently failed to experience. Men praise the Lord. They build shrines in his name. They make offerings at his altar. But they do not bring him home to themselves.

With the institutional growth of a religion its externalism and formalism tend to increase. In the early pioneering days of a religious movement the emotional experience of its fol-
4 And when the queen of Sheba had seen all Solomon’s wisdom, and the house that he had built,

5 And the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel, and his cupbearers, and his ascent by which he went up unto the house of the Lord; there was no more spirit in her.

6 And she said to the king, “The report was true which I heard in my own land of by wisdom. 7 but I did not believe the reports until I came and my own eyes had seen it; and, behold, the half was not told me: thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard.

8 Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom.

says that Hiram and Solomon indulged in such a contest of wits. Similarly, in modern times Charles M. Doughty tells how he spent the evenings with the old man Nejm and his fellow Arabs and when he himself propounded the ancient riddle of the Sphinx, they were all delighted with the homely interpretation. He says, “This kind of parabolical wisdom falls to the Semitic humour and is very pleasant to the Arabs” (Travels in Arabia Deserta [New York: Random House, 1946], p. 237).

5. She had no courage left wherewith to continue to compete with him in the interchange of wise and hidden sayings. The Hebrew נָט (spirit) normally carries the idea of power, so that as a psychological term it denotes the dominant impulse or characteristic disposition of the individual. It stands for that energy and determination which is the mainspring of action, and this is its significance here.

lowers pours forth like the hot lava of a volcano, to be transformed by time into traditions and institutions as rigid and lifeless as the encrustation of a once-active crater. Spectators wonder at the power which once was there, but they do not feel it. To David the simple ark of the covenant was a source of life; to Sheba’s queen the magnificent temple was only a spectacle for a momentary thrills. Organization is as necessary in the religious realm as in other spheres of human activity. We can no more channel the currents of complex social life Godward without the aid of ecclesiastical institutions than we can carry the modern world’s commerce in canoes. But as groups and organizations grow, the individual tends to shrink. How preserve the personal from the dwarfing pressure of numbers and the stifling formalism of institutions? The vast cathedrals, the throng of worshipers, the national and world councils of churches impress us with God’s greatness; but all this must be supplemented by a sense of his nearness. Impressions can become the food of our souls; but as George Tyrrell reminded us, if they are to become so, we must ruminate them, as cows do their food. To take the inspiration gained from a great service of worship and meditate on it until it becomes the motive power of personal action; to catch world outlooks from the church at large and then to translate these into racial sympathies sweetening the church in the local community; to join with others in common prayer and lofty liturgy and then to transpose these into the first person singular of “my sin,” “my Lord,” “my faith”—these are among the tasks involved in bringing religion home from the temple. And if in earlier days it was a matter of great difficulty to fix the attention of men on the world within them, because “the largest part of mankind are nowhere greater strangers than at home,” it is even more difficult as machine culture tends to make meditation a lost art.

Furthermore, the family has an indispensable

9 Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel: because the Lord loved Israel for ever, therefore made he thee king, to do judgment and justice.

10 And she gave the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices very great store, and precious stones: there came no more such abundance of spices as these which the queen of Sheba gave to king Solomon.

11 And the navy also of Hiram, that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug trees, and precious stones.

12 And the king made of the almug trees pillars for the house of the Lord, and for the king's house, harps also and psALTERIES for singers: there came no such almug trees, nor were seen unto this day.

13 And King Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, besides that which Solomon gave her of his royal bounty. So she turned and went to her own country, she and her servants.

9. The queen of Sheba ascribes praise to God for the wisdom of Solomon. God has fulfilled the promise of the dream of Gibeon. The blessing takes a Deuteronomic turn in that God has shown his love for Israel in establishing Solomon upon the throne as a king who shall fulfill the Deuteronomic ideals of justice and righteousness.

11-12. The references to the spices and precious stones in vs. 10 have led to the insertion, from 9.26-28, of these two verses in order to complete the tale of the exotic wares which Solomon received by land and sea. The almug trees are now generally held to be logs of sandalwood, bright red in color, heavy, and close-grained, and therefore admirably suitable for decorative carving and for the fashioning of musical instruments. On the other hand, Josephus (Antiquities VIII. 7. 1) was careful to explain that the almug tree was like pine wood, “but whiter, and [it] glistens more.”

13. The bounty probably refers to Solomon's hospitality in general, but he far and away exceeded this in his generosity to the Arabian queen.

function in bringing religious faith down from its formal and public manifestations to its personal realization and application. George Santayana, the Spaniard who taught so long and brilliantly at Harvard, became the master of exquisite English, but he confessed that the roots of the language never quite reached the center of his soul, because he did not imbibe in childhood its homely cadences and ditties. Religious faith, like language, is brought home to us in the home. When God in Christ is made head of the house he imparts a lifting purpose which lightens the load of housekeeping. He lessens the frictions which so frequently take the luster off marital love. He infuses the inti-

g) CLIMAX OF SOLOMON’S SPLENDOR (10:14-29)

These verses contain miscellaneous details, taken doubtless from the biography of Solomon, all to demonstrate that God more than fulfilled the promises he had made to the young king.

14. Six hundred and sixty-six talents of gold were the equivalent of about sixteen and a quarter million dollars, and this does not include the taxes he levied on traders. The figure seems to be very high, especially in view of the purchasing power of gold, which was considerably higher than even the pre-1914 level. On the other hand, it is small in comparison with modern expenditure, and the items detailed in vss. 16-21, together with the cost of the standing army of chariots, both purchase and maintenance, would demand an enormous income.

15. The governors were vassal princes who paid tribute to Solomon and were allowed to exercise their authority subject to his will. It is unlikely that the reference is to Solomon’s administrative officers (4:7-19), since the context deals with foreigners. Further, the word נוד הוא an Assyrian loan word meaning “viceroy.”

16. The larger shields were oblong and were made to cover the whole body like the Roman scutum, weighing about twenty pounds. The smaller shields were round, like the Roman clipeus, weighing about five pounds. They were used by the royal bodyguard on ceremonial occasions (cf. 14:26-28).

Some reflections about Christianizing industry, but broad generalizations are not enough. Each employer must look at his relations with his men in the light of Christ’s teachings to see if he is out primarily to make profits or to develop persons, to see if he puts property values above human values. The employer must look at his pay envelope in the light of Christ’s principles to see if he is giving a just return for wages received. Individuals cannot delegate their relations with God to a corporation or a labor union. To the Christian Christ should ever be a personal influence in his place of work, as F. W. Robertson, the beloved minister of Brighton, was to a certain shopkeeper in that city. The man kept a picture of Robertson in a room back of his little shop, and he said that when he was tempted to do something mean, to take advantage of a customer, or to be unkind, he would step back and look at Robertson’s face. From the temple to the closet, the home, the office; from general praise to particular situations; from obedience to obedience—such are some of the steps by which God becomes a reality to individuals. Solomon’s temple impressed the queen of Sheba, but she went back to her own land and her own gods.

10:14–11:3. The Gold Tarnishes.—Solomon’s reign received more Scriptural publicity than that of any other monarch. The detail into were stays on either side on the place of the seat, and two lions stood beside the stays. 20 And twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps: there was not the like made in any kingdom.

21 ¶ And all king Solomon's drinking vessels were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold; none were of silver: it was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

22 For the king had at sea a navy of Tharshish with the navy of Hiram: once in three years came the navy of Tharshish, bringing gold, and silver, and ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

23 So king Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and for wisdom.

24 ¶ And all the earth sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom, which God had put in his heart.

25 And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and garments, and armor, and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year.

26 ¶ And Solomon gathered together chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he bestowed in the cities for chariots, and with the king at Jerusalem.

27 And the king made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones, and cedars made he to be as the sycamore trees that are in the vale, for abundance.

28 ¶ And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

22. The fleet of ships of Tarshish was a merchant fleet of "ocean-going liners." Tarshish is probably the ancient Tartessos, on the Guadalquivir in Spain, a Phoenician settlement. A ship of Tarshish was a ship large and stout enough to venture on what in those days was a long and hazardous voyage.

27. The sycamore of the Shephelah, i.e., of the low hills between the Judean highlands and the sea, is of the same genus as the fig, and is known to botanists as Ficus sycomorus. The tree is not to be confused with the common sycamore, which is of the same genus as the maple. The wood of the sycamore (spelled variously sycomore and sycamine) is light and porous, much used in Egypt for making mummy cases. The tree was very common in Palestine in ancient times, as is shown by the ancient Greek name for Haifa, which was Sycamopolis. The wide-spreading branches of the tree afforded plenty of shade, made it greatly esteemed as a wayside tree, and gave a characteristic aspect to the countryside.

28. Most scholars agree with Lenormant and Winckler that מָרוּ does not here refer to Egypt, as usually, but to Mugri in north Syria. Similarly, it is generally held...
29 And a chariot came up and went out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty: and so for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, did they bring them out by their means.

11 But king Solomon loved many strange women, together with the daughter of Pharaoh, women of the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites;

2 Of the nations concerning which the LORD said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall not go in to them, neither shall they come in unto you: for surely they will turn that the difficult word רבק, linen yarn, hides the place name Kue, in the plains of Cilicia. This latter is actually the reading of the Vulg. (de Coo), and it was found in one variant quoted by Field. This double identification of two place names from the area north of Palestine is supported by Ezek. 27:14, where Togarmah (north Syria and Asia Minor) is given as the name of the area whence the Tyrians imported horses for riding, war horses, and mules. On the other hand, both Deut. 17:16 and Isa. 31:1 say that horses were imported from Egypt. It is possible that Deut. 17:16 is late enough for a mistake to be made in favor of the better-known country, but it is difficult to see how Isa. 31:1 could be wrong. It is therefore better to follow Koenig, who agrees that the second name is Kue, but retains Egypt for the first.

3. SOLOMON'S FOREIGN WIVES AND HIS IDOLATRY (11:1-13)

The editor has now told the whole story of Solomon's greatness and splendor. The king who built the temple which was so dear to the Deuteronomic editor fulfilled the Deuteronomic law, was a model king, and was therefore most prosperous. But there was another side to the story of Solomon's reign. The editor has reserved this to the end. Things were far from being as rosy as the preceding chapters suggest. That much can be gathered from this chapter. The editor has so arranged his material as to suggest that all went well at first, and that it was only toward the end of his reign that Solomon failed in his duty as a Deuteronomic king.

11:1. The LXX reads, "a lover of women; and he married many foreign wives." In the original biography of Solomon the statement doubtless appeared without any adverse comments. It may well be that according to the ideas of the time the possession of many wives, especially when some of them were of foreign extraction, was a matter for praise rather than blame. Certainly the marriage with Pharaoh's daughter is regularly represented as being a matter of considerable congratulation.

2. The crime of Solomon's marriages is clearly set forth. It was not so much that he married Pharaoh's daughter, but rather that he married nationals with whom intermarriage was forbidden in Deuteronomic law (Exod. 34:16; Deut. 7:3-4).

which the record goes reveals the delight which the recorder takes in the glory that was Solomon's. Later generations found vicarious pride in looking back from their lowered estate to "the good old days" when their Jerusalem was the capital of the world's wealth. But his patriotic zeal did not prevent the Chronicler from exposing the perils inherent in such a regime as Solomon's. The gold begins to tarnish. Solomon's steps of descent are the reverse of Paul's ladder of hope: "Tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope" (Rom. 5:3-4). Here we see that power works pride; and pride, arrogance; and arrogance, forgetfulness of God. And then the sensuousness of Solomon leads to sensuality. Here is the sequel to his splendor: Now King Solomon loved many foreign women.
away your heart after their gods: Solomon clave unto these in love.

3 And he had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines: and his wives turned away his heart.

4 For it came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods: and his heart was not per-

3. There is no need to doubt the accuracy of these numbers.

11:4a. Temptations of the Strong.—In ch. 10 Solomon is shown at the peak of his power. That is a point of danger. History is filled with figures who rose on the steppingstones of their virtues to heights of success and then revealed defects that worked their downfall. Power confronts character with subtler temptations than does weakness. Compare with Solomon the case of King Uziah, of whom it was written: “And his name spread far abroad; for he was marvelously helped, till he was strong. But when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction” (II Chr. 26:15-16). Here the record is:

For when Solomon was old his wives turned away his heart after other gods. If the ability of his wives to pervert Solomon’s conscience had rested on their physical appeal, he would have been led astray in the younger years of his stronger passions. But now in his age power had gone to his head and heart. His was the weakness hidden in human strength.

Strength is very deceitful. Take the matter of physical health. A wise person is aware that he cannot trust his own feelings as an accurate guide in keeping himself fit. It has been said that those who boast most about their buoyant unbroken health during their first fifty years are quite often the ones who break most quickly after fifty. It quite frequently happens that the bodily organ we think the strongest proves the weakest. In the mental realm strength is even more deceptive. All human knowledge pretends to be more true than it is. Minds are always in danger of being stunted by intellectual pride, which is ignorance of ignorance. Charles F. Kettering, the eminent inventor, has pointed out that progress is due to what he terms “intelligent ignorance.” Pioneers of intellectual advance have known enough to know how little they knew. One quality of the meek is that they know their limitations and thus live on the growing edge of life. And in the moral sphere strength is even more dangerously deceitful. How often it happens that a person’s character is weakest at the point where he thinks himself strongest. Good traits of character are in personality somewhat as the grain is in wood. It is the grain which gives beauty to lovely wood, but if you wish to split the wood, just hit it along the grain. Similarly, it is along the grain of his good traits that a man’s character is most easily cracked open. Men may feel so sure of their strong points that they leave them unguarded. Or they may become proud of them, and pride makes any good trait bad. Let a man become too proud of his purity, and he becomes prigish and prudish. Let a man become too proud of his thrift, and he is likely to turn penurious and greedy. Let a person pride himself on his strong convictions, and he tends to become dogmatic and intolerant.

Solomon, who “excelled all the kings of the earth in riches and in wisdom” (10:28), had undoubtedly allowed pride to deceive him as to his own strength. It is reported of Francis of Assisi, whose humility of spirit shines across the centuries, that when he was tempted to think too highly of himself because of compliments paid him, he would ask some fellow friar to sit down with him and tell him his faults. That is a service which a good wife renders to a successful man. But Solomon, with all his wives and concubines, presumably had no one of such status and ability that she could correct the king’s mounting self-esteem. In fact, the possession of such an enormous household only contributed to his corrupting sense of power, and thus his wives turned away his heart from humble submission to Yahweh after other gods whom he felt rich enough to patronize as well as placate.

Another temptation which besets the strong is the tendency to abuse their power. Signs of this may be seen in Solomon. The forced labor which he levied (9:15 ff.) and the discrimination made between the children of Israel and the captured foreigners whom he enslaved (9:20-22) reveal that the king was playing fast and loose with his power. Ecclesiastes turns our minds to a sad chapter of human history with his observations, as thoughtfully he ponders “what goes on within this world whenever men have power over their fellows” (Eccl. 8:9 Moffatt). Man has achieved such superb dominion over the earth, the sea, the air, the impersonal things; but when it comes to exercising power...

5 For Solomon went after Ashtoreth the goddess of the Sidonians, and after Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites.

6 And Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord, and went not fully after the Lord, as did David his father.

5. The M.T. has Ashtoreth, but the correct spelling is “Ashtarte.” She was known as Ishtar in Mesopotamia, but in Syria was the female consort of Baal. She was the goddess of fertility and consequently of sexual love, the parallel to, and also one of the models for, the Greek Aphrodite. She had a great temple in Sidon, which was visited by the second-century A.D. Greek writer Lucian (The Syran Goddess 4). She was often depicted on Sidonian coins as standing on the prow of a galley, leaning forward with right hand outstretched, being thus the original of all figureheads for sailing ships. She was in a special sense the goddess of the Sidonians.

The spelling of the M.T. is due to the Masoretes, who substituted the vowels of the word bôsheth ("shame") regularly in idolatrous names. In the present verse, at the end, over his fellow men, he has made a sorry job of it.

The abuse of power plays havoc in every sphere of life. In the industrial realm it transforms the comradeship of fellow producers into a struggle for control between management and labor. In governmental affairs the badge of authority often makes petty tyrants out of little people, and the possession of power is perverted into dictatorship. In the sphere of religion one of the dire tragedies of history is that ecclesiastical groups which plead for tolerance when they are in the minority refuse to practice tolerance when they are in the majority. Power is safe only when held in humble hands for the purpose of service. "Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant; even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister" (Matt. 20:25-28). There we have the contrast between the pagan and the Christian use of power. The sons of men want power for the sake of domination; “the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister.” That is one reason why the Christ has outlived the Caesars of the first century and the dictators of the twentieth.

Solomon began by humbly praying for wisdom with which to judge and serve his people. The power which he received deceived him, and he abused it. Power for deteriorated into power over. That is the beginning of its end.

4b. Not with the Whole Heart.—It would perhaps be unfair to say that Solomon was only halfhearted in his allegiance to the Lord; but his heart was not wholly true to the Lord his God, as was the heart of David his father. 5 For Solomon went after Ashtoreth the goddess of the Sidonians, and after Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites. 6 So Solomon did what was evil in the sight of the Lord, and did not wholly follow the Lord, as David his father had done.
7 Then did Solomon build a high place for Chemosh, the abomination of Moab, in the hill that is before Jerusalem, and for Molech, the abomination of the children of Ammon.

8 And likewise did he for all his strange wives, which burnt incense and sacrificed unto their gods.

9 ¶ And the LORD was angry with Solomon, because his heart was turned from the LORD God of Israel, which had appeared unto him twice,

10 And had commanded him concerning this thing, that he should not go after other gods: but he kept not that which the LORD commanded.

11 Wherefore the LORD said unto Solomon, Forasmuch as this is done of thee, and thou hast not kept my covenant and my statutes, which I have commanded thee, I will surely rend the kingdom from thee, and will give it to thy servant.

the word shiqqêš, abomination, has actually been substituted for the word “god” (cf. LXX). The name Milcom means “king,” though the vowels have been altered (cf. vs. 7, where the word mêêlekh, “king,” actually is found, though with the vowels of bôshêth).

7. Solomon built shrines for the gods of Moab and Ammon on the Mount of Olives, which is to the east of Jerusalem. The M.T. has before, i.e., east, which is correct.

8. According to the Greek version of Lucian, it was Solomon who burned and slew sacrificial animals to the foreign gods. As elsewhere, the meaning is that Solomon burned whole offerings on the altar and slew animals for the sacred feasts which were a leading feature of all pre-exilic religion in Palestine, whether truly orthodox or tainted with Canaanite rites and interpretations.

9-13. These verses contain the Deuteronomic condemnation of Solomon (cf. also Deut. 17:16-20, which owes a great deal to the misdeeds of this king). The editor makes it appear that all Solomon’s sins and troubles belonged to the king’s later years. A closer examination of vss. 14-48 shows that the revolts belonged to the earlier part of wind” (Hos. 8:7). Just as a gentle breeze can be whipped into the destructive rage of a whirlwind, so a little easy, breezy looseness of attitude can develop into gusty passion. In the first stages it may be called tact or agreeableness. The slight compromise of principle may seem quite harmless. But how often the gentle going with the wind of circumstance accelerates the loosening until conscience is “gone with the wind.” A British inventor, some time ago, devised a gadget for decreasing automobile accidents. Many of these, he believes, are due to the fatigue of the driver and the resultant relaxing of grip. Hence he designed a buzzer which can be kept quiet only by a firm hand on the wheel. However feasible such an invention may be in the automobile world, it suggests a genuine value in the moral realm. We need warning signals to tighten our grip on the steering gear of conscience. We need some fixed standards amid our vague ideals.

In the struggle with sin, those who like Solomon try to keep one foot in the godly way and the other outside have a sorry time. A religious experience that is only skin-deep is likely to be full of irritations and pricks, for our nerves are most numerous nearest the surface. When we get under the skin down toward the vital organs, the pain of the wound seems to grow less. Superficial Christians are always bemoaning the burdensome obligations of the church. Their contributions are a continuing source of irritation. But the truly devout man whose religion has become deeply vital never thinks of his 12 Notwithstanding, in thy days I will not do it for David thy father's sake: but I will rend it out of the hand of thy son.

13 Howbeit I will not rend away all the kingdom; but will give one tribe to thy son for David my servant's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake which I have chosen.

14 And the Lord stirred up an adversary unto Solomon, Hadad the Edomite: he was of the king's seed in Edom.

the reign. It is almost certain that the building of the apostate shrines also was much earlier than the Deuteronomic editor would allow.

12. The official theory of the O.T. is that sin meets with immediate and sudden doom, so that any lapse of time between the sin and the calamity is due to the forbearance of God. In Ps. 75:18-20 the psalmist accepts this theory, but comforts himself for the untoward flourishing of the wicked with the thought that the doom will be all the more sudden when it comes. God shows forbearance toward the house of David in that, in spite of all Solomon's wickedness, he will not punish the house of David forthwith but will delay the punishment till Solomon is dead.

13. There is always an uncertainty as to whether Benjamin was to be counted among the northern tribes or with Judah. The official numbering is ten for the north and one for the south (cf. vs. 32). Possibly this virtual omission of Benjamin is a reflection of the decimation of that tribe recorded in Judg. 20.

4. Two Revolts (11:14-25)

There were two revolts during the reign of Solomon, for both Hadad of Edom and one of Hadadezer's vassals (cf. II Sam. 10:19) set up independent kingdoms. The author makes it appear that these two revolts, which seriously diminished Solomon's power and resources, took place toward the end of his reign, and thus formed a Deuteronomic judgment on him. It is probable that they belonged to a much earlier time in his reign (see vss. 21, 25).

a) Revolt of Hadad (11:14-22)

Winckler has disentangled with considerable plausibility two interwoven stories in these verses (Burney, Notes on Hebrew Text of Kings, pp. 158-60). According to one religious duties as a sacrifice. Henry Drummond once said that he who seeks first the kingdom of God will have some problems, but that he who seeks the kingdom of God second will have nothing but problems.

The record contrasts Solomon's lack of whole-hearted loyalty to the Lord with David's perfect devotion (cf. 15:3). David had sinned, as in the memorable case of Uriah. But David's sin of fleshly passion lacked the deteriorating and damning quality inherent in sins of the mind and heart. In the life of the spirit slow changes need more to be watched than sudden shocks. Some sins are a rash, breaking out like measles in a single night. But the seven deadly sins, as traditional theology lists them, suggest slow decay rather than sudden outbreak. Pride, covetousness, lust, anger, envy, glutony, and sloth are sins which gradually harden the arteries of the spirit and sap the energies of the will. For this reason Jesus, in line with the record here, is more severe in condemning the sins of the mind and heart than the sins of physical passion and open shame. The latter beget bodily effects and a social disgrace which tend to awaken a spirit of repentance; but the former may be carried so secretly and respectfully that there is no sting of the conscience. Consequently, Jesus said to the chief priests and the elders, whose sin-calloused minds were smugly complacent, "The publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you" (Matt. 21:31).

14:43. Does God Send Adversaries?—In this early record Yahweh is pictured as one who in anger vows vengeance. His punishments are prompt and direct. The Lord had said to Solomon, "Since this has been your mind and
11:15  THE INTERPRETER'S BIBLE

15 For it came to pass, when David was in Edom, and Joab the captain of the host was gone up to bury the slain, after he had smitten every male in Edom;
16 (For six months did Joab remain there with all Israel, until he had cut off every male in Edom:)
17 That Hadad fled, he and certain Edomites of his father's servants with him, to go into Egypt; Hadad being yet a little child.
18 And they arose out of Midian, and came to Paran: and they took men with them out of Paran, and they came to Egypt, unto Pharaoh king of Egypt; which gave him a house, and appointed him victuals, and gave him land.
19 And Hadad found great favor in the sight of Pharaoh, so that he gave him to wife the sister of his own wife, the sister of Tahpenes the queen.
20 And the sister of Tahpenes bare him Genubath his son, whom Tahpenes weaned was of the royal house of Edom. 15 For when David was in Edom, and Jo'ab the commander of the army went up to bury the slain, he slew every male in Edom 16 (for Jo'ab and all Israel remained there six months, until he had cut off every male in Edom); 17 but Hadad fled to Egypt, together with certain Edomites of his father's servants, Hadad being yet a little child. 18 They set out from Mid'ian and came to Paran, and took men with them from Paran and came to Egypt, to Pharaoh king of Egypt, who gave him a house, and assigned him an allowance of food, and gave him land 19 And Hadad found great favor in the sight of Pharaoh, so that he gave him in marriage the sister of his own wife, the sister of Tah'penes the queen. 20 And the story (so Winckler), Hadad was a small boy when David conquered Edom. He was saved from the general massacre and carried off to Egypt, where he was brought up by Pharaoh's wife Tahpenes among the sons of Pharaoh. He returned to Edom after both David and Joab were dead (vs. 25 LXX) and made himself king over Edom. The second story is of a Midianite prince named Adad, who fled to Egypt with some Edomites. He married the sister of Tahpenes and had a son named Genubath, who was brought up in Pharaoh's household. He returned to Midian and set up an independent kingdom there. This second story, as reconstructed by Winckler, is not as convincing as the first, though it may well be true. What does seem to be clear is that Hadad the Edomite revolted quite early in Solomon's reign.

19. The word translated queen is הָרִיבָה. It refers strictly to the "chief lady" of the harem. Sometimes, therefore, the reference is to the queen mother, and at other times to the queen herself; cf. the important position held by Bathsheba (2:19) and also the special note concerning the removal of Asa's mother from this position (15:13).

you have not kept my covenant and my statutes which I have commanded you, I will surely tear the kingdom from you and will give it to your servant" (vs. 11). And the Lord raised up an adversary against Solomon (vs. 14; cf. also vs. 29).

Can such passion and promptness be ascribed to God? Our modern minds say no; for we have learned the lesson of Job, that direct connections cannot be traced between goodness and its reward, or between badness and its punishment. As the voice out of the whirlwind revealed to the ancient sufferer, the creator of our vast complex universe does not deal with us after the fashion of an office bookkeeper or a petty police court. His ways are higher than our ways, as the heavens are high above the earth. But while one should not impute to God our human desire for vengeance or our impatience for direct action, one must not let the primitive ethics of this passage blind us to the stern fact of moral retribution. Evil does defeat itself. The abuse of power begets the loss of power. Our Bible begins with the Genesis story of a gate closing behind those who have sinned their way out of a garden. Some of our moral codes are mere conventions which vary with different countries and different times. Some things which were considered right in the days of Solomon were wrong in the days of Jesus, because "New occasions teach new duties, Time makes ancient good uncouth." 8 But some ethical laws are so basic that they are embedded in the very texture in Pharaoh's house: and Genu'bath was in Pharaoh's household among the sons of Pharaoh.

21 And when Hadad heard in Egypt that David slept with his fathers, and that Joab the captain of the host was dead, Hadad said to Pharaoh, Let me depart, that I may go to mine own country.

22 Then Pharaoh said unto him, But what hast thou lacked with me, that, behold, thou seekest to go to thine own country? And he answered, Nothing: howbeit let me go in any wise.

23 ¶ And God stirred him up another adversary, Rezon the son of Eliadah, which fled from his lord Hadadezer king of Zobah:

24 And he gathered men unto him, and became captain over a band, when David slew them of Zobah: and they went to Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.

b) REVOLT OF REZON (11:23-25)

23-25. Some have thought that this whole story is due to a confusion between יִשָּׂרֵא‎ (Edom) and יָם (Aram), two words which are most easily confused in the Hebrew, as indeed they are so confused in vs. 25. But the whole story is much too detailed for this and fits in too well with the story of II Sam. 10. Rezon refused at that time to submit either to his former overlord Hadadezer or to his new overlord David. He was for a time a captain of freebooters, like David, and also like David he took advantage of the difficulties of the true king through invaders. He established himself king, as also did David under similar circumstances, and founded the powerful kingdom of Aram-Damascus (Syria). This kingdom was a grievous thorn in the flesh of the Israelite kings of the ninth and eighth centuries, especially in the time before Ahab's victory (20:23-34) and again after Jehu had adopted an isolationist policy.

of human nature. And when we cut through the layers of moral convention which change with time and place, we come to bedrock distinctions on which common universal decency rests.

Solomon had broken his covenant with Yahweh. He had taken the law into his own hands. He had put his own interests first. And the egoist who puts himself first eventually gets in his own way. Jacob, who let no moral concerns stand in the way of his material desires, comes back to meet his brother Esau. In the lonely night watch on the eve of meeting the brother he had wronged, "Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day" (Gen. 32:24). Who was the man? Certainly it was no other human being. We may call this adversary an angel of the Lord, or as Lincoln would say, the "better angel" of Jacob's nature. The truth behind the story is that Jacob had at last come face to face with the fact that his way was being blocked not by his brother Esau, nor by his father-in-law Laban, but by himself. He had discovered that he was standing in his own way. When a person does stand in his own way, he begins to blame others for being in his way. The spoiled child pouts because he thinks every family regulation is a restriction of his own liberty. The libertine who follows his own impulsive desires looks upon each social decency as a puritanical blue law. The person who takes the road of self-indulgence and self-interest, as followed by Jacob and Solomon, finds himself halted by the exhaustion of his own desires. The prodigal is delighted for a time in the gaiety of the far country, but eventually finds himself surrounded with husks. Francis Thompson may have tried delights of the flesh, but after he had fled from his conscience, "down the nights and down the days," and "under running laughter," he heard the Hound of Heaven pursuing him.
25 And he was an adversary to Israel all the days of Solomon, besides the mischief that Hadad did: and he abhorred Israel, and reigned over Syria.

26 ¶ And Jeroboam the son of Nebat, an Ephrathite of Zereda, Solomon's servant, whose mother's name was Zeruah, a widow woman, even he lifted up his hand against the king:

27 And this was the cause that he lifted up his hand against the king: Solomon built Millo, and repaired the breaches of the city of David his father.

5. Jeroboam's Early History (11:26-40)

The author is here giving the prologue to that revolt of the ten northern tribes which robbed the Davidic dynasty of the larger and more prosperous part of its own native territory. He makes it quite plain that this disaster was due to Solomon's neglect of his clear duty as a king after the Deuteronomic pattern. Solomon fostered the worship of other deities, among them the deities of Moab and Ammon, who are particularly to be abhorred in this connection (Deut. 23:3; Neh. 13:1). The insistence upon the worship of the Lord alone is absolute. Nevertheless, God does show his forbearance. Properly, he ought to have punished Solomon forthwith and torn the whole of his kingdom away from him. But God is forbearing and long-suffering. He shows these characteristics here by allowing Solomon to retain the whole kingdom until his death, and then by allowing his son to retain one tribe.

There is a parallel account in the LXX of the whole story of Jeroboam's activities both during Solomon's reign and in connection with the revolt of the Northern Kingdom after Solomon's death. The only difference in the two variant traditions before 12:24 is that in the LXX when the people came to lay their grievances before Rehoboam, Jeroboam was not with them, although he had returned to Israel at the news of Solomon's death. But in the long LXX insertion at 12.24, it is stated that after Solomon had put Jeroboam in charge of the forced labor gangs of the house of Joseph (i.e., of Israel), Jeroboam built Sareira in the hill country of Ephraim, raised a force of three hundred chariots, fortified the city (LXX adds "of David"), and "aspired to the kingdom." This account gives a reason for the statement in the M.T. (11:26) that Jeroboam lifted up his hand against the king, i.e., revolted against Solomon.

26. The LXX spelling of Zeredah, Jeroboam's birthplace, is Sareira, the scene, according to the LXX, of both of Jeroboam's revolts, one abortive (12:24b) and the other successful (12:24f). The name of Jeroboam's mother is given in the M.T. as Zeruah, which means "leprous." The name is not found in the LXX, and may well be malicious southern propaganda, invented by southern scribes because of their hatred of the man who broke up the kingdom and set up the idolatrous worship at Bethel. She is called a harlot in the LXX (12:24b; cf. John Skinner, Kings [New York: Oxford University Press, 1904; "The New-Century Bible"], p. 181).

with the words, "All things betray thee, who betrayest Me."

Who are the adversaries the Lord raises up against an egoistic and self-indulgent king? We need not be puzzled to explain the Lord's hand in the insurrections of Hadad and Rezon. Solomon betrayed himself. The straight and narrow way in which he had started his reign had been broadened by compromise. In his affluence and expansiveness his principles had been adjusted to expediency. He had at last come up against the fact embedded in the story of Balaam, who had started on the road of compromise only to find that "the angel of the Lord stood in the way for an adversary against him" (Num. 22:22). The ass which he rode turned, but Balaam pulled the beast back. Then the angel took his stand in a still narrower 28 And the man Jeroboam was a mighty man of valor: and Solomon seeing the young man that he was industrious, he made him ruler over all the charge of the house of Joseph.

29 And it came to pass at that time when Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem, that the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite found him in the way; and he had clad himself with a new garment; and they two were alone in the field:

30 And Ahijah caught the new garment that was on him, and rent it in twelve pieces:

31 And he said to Jeroboam, Take thee ten pieces: for thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, Behold, I will rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and will give ten tribes to thee:

28 The man Jeroboam was very able, and when Solomon saw that the young man was industrious he gave him charge over all the forced labor of the house of Joseph. 29 And at that time, when Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem, the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite found him on the road. Now Ahijah had clad himself with a new garment; and the two of them were alone in the open country. 30 Then Ahijah laid hold of the new garment that was on him, and tore it into twelve pieces. 31 And he said to Jeroboam, "Take for yourself ten pieces; for thus says the Lord, the God of Israel, 'Behold, I am about to tear the kingdom from the hand of Solomon, and will give you ten

29. According to the correct Masoretic reading, Ahijah the Shilonite was the prime mover in the revolt, though he is not mentioned in the LXX until the story is told there (before Jeroboam becomes king, according to the LXX) of the sickness of Jeroboam's son. The revolt had the strong and vigorous support of the descendants of the house of Eli, who had been priests of the ark at Shiloh, and indeed from the earliest days (1 Sam. 2:27-28). Later Ahijah the Shilonite became bitterly hostile to Jeroboam, but this was after Jeroboam had made Bethel the chief religious center of the north and a royal sanctuary. Perhaps if Jeroboam had not turned away from the priests of Shiloh and elevated those of Bethel to the royal priesthood the whole story of the north might have been different.

It is necessary to insert the phrase from the LXX, "and he turned him aside from the road," in order to explain how the two of them were alone in the open country. The expression open country is a sound rendering of the Hebrew נֶגֶר, usually translated field. Strictly, the word refers to the open country near the town; e.g., "the flower of the field" (Isa. 40:6) is really "the wild flower," the flower that grows of itself in the open country which is not cultivated garden.

31-39. Ahijah's exhortation to Jeroboam is fully Deuteronomic in tone and in phrase. Jeroboam is even promised that if he proves to be a sound Deuteronomic king as David was, his house will stand forever ruling the ten tribes of Israel. Just how this place, and the ass lay down. In the figurative language of Oriental imagery is revealed the truth that when man takes the road of broad and easy compromise he finds it growing narrower and eventually blocked. While we cannot in primitive fashion pick out particular figures and designate them as adversaries sent of God, we can see the truth in Isaiah's interpretation of God's restraining power: "Therefore will I put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest" (Isa. 37:29). God does reign in the wrongdoer.

In the mid-twentieth century a new volcano began to form in Mexico, and grew into a mountain two thousand feet high. Its mighty groaning roar could be heard for miles. From a subsidiary crater near the top a red stream of lava poured like blood from a huge wound. At night the whole mountain was a cone of fire. A Mexican guide turned to two ministers in a party of visitors and said, "You men tell us to be good, but this volcano makes us want to be good." To him the fiery scene was the symbol of divine punishment. While the listeners were not impressed by the volcanic fury as the sign of eternal torment, they were awed into silence by the suggestion of divine power. As they stood watching a force which dwarfed the military might of the warring nations, the words of the psalmist came to mind, "The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved: he 34 Howbeit I will not take the whole kingdom out of his hand: but I will make him prince all the days of his life for David my servant's sake, whom I chose, because he kept my commandments and my statutes:

35 But I will take the kingdom out of his son's hand, and will give it unto thee, even ten tribes.

36 And unto his son will I give one tribe, that David my servant may have a light alway before me in Jerusalem, the city which I have chosen me to put my name there.

37 And I will take thee, and thou shalt reign according to all that thy soul desireth, and shalt be king over Israel.

Nevertheless I will not take the whole kingdom out of his hand; but I will make him ruler all the days of his life, for the sake of David my servant whom I chose, who kept my commandments and my statutes; 35 but I will take the kingdom out of his son's hand, and will give it to you, ten tribes. 36 Yet to his son I will give one tribe, that David my servant may always have a lamp before me in Jerusalem, the city where I have chosen to put my name. 37 And I will take you, and you shall reign over all that your soul desires, and you shall be could have happened is far from clear, unless the author thought that Jeroboam ought to have reigned over the north, but still to have worshiped at Jerusalem. Possibly he regarded the establishment of the Northern Kingdom, in accordance with the will of God, as the necessary punishment of Solomon's flagrant violation of Deuteronomistic standards; at the same time he maintained his Deuteronomic principle of centralized worship at only one sanctuary.

36. The reference to the lamp was formerly explained on the analogy of the light which is kept burning continually in poor homes in Palestine, in the belief that when the light is extinguished, so also is the family. The more modern explanation would make this popular custom part of a much wider attitude. The house of David is itself a perpetual light, nēr tāmīḏ, and the well-being of the nation depends upon the continued life and vigor of the king (cf. 15:4; II Sam. 21:17; II Kings 8:19; W. O. E.

uttered his voice, the earth melted...Be still, and know that I am God” (Ps. 46:6, 10).

36. God's Bundle of Life.—At least four times in this chapter the Lord is interpreted as withholding certain punishments for the sake of his servant David. When God announces to Solomon that his kingdom is to be taken from him because of his transgression, he adds, “For the sake of David your father I will not do it in your days” (vs. 12). And when the Lord promises Jeroboam that he is to have Solomon's kingdom, he holds back the tribe of Judah, that David my servant may always have a lamp before me in Jerusalem (cf. vss. 12, 32, 34; 15:4).

The persistence of David's power with God recalls the prediction of Abigail in her plea to him, “The soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God” (1 Sam. 25:29). Life is always bound in bundles, and growth is ever toward enlarging and enmeshing relationships. The child normally begins its career in the bundle called the family. Then through friendships he begins to enlarge that life, sharing in the joys and sorrows of those linked to him by love. The youth goes to 38 And it shall be, if thou wilt hearken unto all that I command thee, and wilt walk in my ways, and do that is right in my sight, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as David my servant did, that I will be with thee, and build thee a sure house, as I built for David, and will give Israel unto thee.

39 And I will for this afflict the seed of David, but not for ever.

40 Solomon sought therefore to kill Jeroboam. And Jeroboam arose, and fled into Egypt, unto Shishak king of Egypt, and was in Egypt until the death of Solomon.

41 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Solomon, and all that he did, and his wisdom, are they not written in the book of the acts of Solomon?

42 And the time that Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel was forty years.

43 And Solomon slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David his father: and Rehoboam his son reigned in his stead.

12 And Rehoboam went to Shechem: for all Israel were come to Shechem to make him king.

38. The last phrase of the verse is not in the LXX, neither is vs. 39.

6. Death of Solomon (11:41-43)

41-43. The typical Deuteronomic obituary notice for the kings of Judah appears here for the first time.

III. The Two Kingdoms (I Kings 12:1–II Kings 17:41)

A. The Schism (12:1–14:31)

1. Jeroboam I of Israel (12.1-33)

The Deuteronomic editor tells the story of the revolt. Having thus begun his account with Jeroboam as the main actor, he continues to tell the whole story of Jeroboam's reign over Israel, the Northern Kingdom. Then having duly recorded the death of Jeroboam, he turns back to give an account of the kings who have succeeded to the throne of Judah, the Southern Kingdom, during that period. This is his usual custom.

school, and the strands in the bundle are increased not only by the fellowship of teachers and other students, but also by comradeship with great minds whose spirits live after them in their books. Then through the church he enters into co-operative comradeship with fellow seekers after righteousness in the whole family of God. From the O.T. concept of being bound in the bundle of life with God, the Christian rises to the concept of membership in the body of Christ. Individuals are not units linked by social contract. They are cells in a social body. And when the causes for which they live are of God, their lives are preserved in his purposes and programs. "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out" (Rev. 3:12). David had put his life into the Lord's work. He had served for God's sake. God would go on serving Israel "for David's sake."

Jeroboam lived through two reigns of southern kings and on into the reign of the third king, Asa.

a) Revolt of the Ten Tribes (12:1-20)

When Rehoboam came to Shechem to be installed king of Israel the leaders of Israel demanded a change of policy. They refused to submit any longer to the forced labor system by which Solomon had built palaces and temple. When the negotiations broke down, both parties resorted to arms.

There is a long variant (see Skinner, Kings, pp. 443-46; also Burney, Notes on Hebrew Text of Kings, pp. 163-69) in the LXX after vs. 24, in which it is stated that Jeroboam did not get permission from Pharaoh to leave his court and return to his own country immediately after the death of Solomon. He was thus not present when Rehoboam first went to Shechem (cf. vs. 20 in M.T. and English versions; also part of vs. 2). On the contrary, Pharaoh bribed him to stay in Egypt by giving him A’no, sister of his Queen Tahpenes, as wife, who bore Jeroboam a son, Abijah. Only after this, according to the LXX, was Jeroboam given permission to return. He then gathered the people together and built a fort at his home town Sareira (Zeredah). Then there follows the incident of his son’s illness (14:1-18 M.T.), and Ahijah appears for the only time and denounces Jeroboam. The latter then gathers the northern tribes to Shechem, whither Rehoboam also comes. The incident of the torn garment is now told, but the prophet’s name is Shemaiah (cf. vs. 22). After Jeroboam is designated king, the story follows the same course as the M.T. (vs. 25).

The LXX account is not nearly as satisfactory as that of the M.T. The reference to the marriage with the sister of Pharaoh’s wife looks like a copy of the story of Hadad, including the birth of Genuhath. Further, there is no reason for the antagonism of Ahijah, such as is provided in the story of the M.T. (cf. 14:9).

12:1. Rehoboam has to come to Shechem to be installed as king of the north because Shechem was the ancient capital of the north, and there only could any man be anointed king. There was a famous sacred tree at Shechem, venerated from early times, where first Abram worshiped the Lord in the Promised Land (Gen. 12:6). This sacred tree is mentioned time and again in the early histories. Jacob erected an altar there and it was the first “parcel of ground” (so ASV) which he possessed in Canaan (Gen. 33:18-20). There Joseph was buried (Josh. 24:32), and the first attempt at a kingdom was made (Judg. 9:1-5). It was the center of Ephraimite activity all the days of Joshua, just as Hebron was the center of the south.

2. It is evident that Jeroboam did not return from Egypt immediately upon the death of Solomon, so there is a certain amount of truth in the story of the LXX (vs. 24de), though whether he was delayed long enough for a son to be begotten and born is open to question (see also vs. 20). It is necessary, therefore, to treat the substance of vs. 2 with reserve, and to delete the name of Jeroboam from vss. 3 and 12. Even according to the general tenor of the M.T., Jeroboam was not present when the first conversations took place at Shechem.

revolution. In Israel as in France, the floodgates had been opened by the softening of luxury, the hard ness of slave labor, the loosening of moral restraints. Praise for the services of Solomon was now drowned in storms of complaint about his oppression. The revolt against Solomon’s luckless son Rehoboam was not motivated by righteous indignation against the godlessness of the rule or by a demand for a return to the true worship. It was a protest against 3 That they sent and called him. And Jeroboam and all the congregation of Israel came, and spake unto Rehoboam, saying,
4 Thy father made our yoke grievous: now therefore make thou the grievous service of thy father, and his heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter, and we will serve thee.
5 And he said unto them, Depart yet for three days, then come again to me. And the people departed.
6 ¶ And king Rehoboam consulted with the old men, that stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, and said, How do ye advise that I may answer this people?
7 And they spake unto him, saying, If thou wilt be a servant unto this people this day, and wilt serve them, and answer them, and speak good words to them, then they will be thy servants for ever.
8 But he forsook the counsel of the old men, which they had given him, and consulted with the young men that were grown up with him, and which stood before him:
9 And he said unto them, What counsel give ye that we may answer this people, who have spoken to me, saying, Make the yoke which thy father did put upon us lighter?
10 And the young men that were grown up with him spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou speak unto this people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy. Now therefore lighten the hard service of your father and his heavy yoke upon us, and we will serve you."
5 He said to them, "Depart for three days, then come again to me." So the people went away.

6 Then King Rehoboam took counsel with the old men, who had stood before Solomon his father while he was yet alive, saying, "How do you advise me to answer this people?" 7 And they said to him, "If you will be a servant to this people today and serve them, and speak good words to them when you answer them, then they will be your servants for ever." 8 But he forsook the counsel which the old men gave him, and took counsel with the young men who had grown up with him and stood before him. 9 And he said to them, "What do you advise that we answer this people who have said to me, 'Lighten the yoke that your father put upon us'?" 10 And the young men who had grown up with him said to him, "Thus shall you speak to this people who said to you, 'Your father made our yoke heavy and material discomforts. People as well as princes had lost their spirituality. Rebellion people easily seek and find in public cir-cumstances means which they can use to justify their revolt.

Rehoboam was both stupid and arrogant. He heavy, but make thou it lighter unto us; thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my father’s loins.

11 And now whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke: my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

12 ¶ So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam the third day, as the king had appointed, saying, Come to me again the third day.

13 And the king answered the people roughly, and forsook the old men’s counsel that they gave him;

14 And spake to them after the counsel of the young men, saying, My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke: my father also chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people; for the cause was from the Lord, that he might perform his saying, which the Lord spake by Ahijah the Shilonite unto Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16 ¶ So when all Israel saw that the king hearkened not unto them, the people answered the king, saying, What portion have we in David? neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: to your tents, O Israel: now see to thine own house, David. So Israel departed unto their tents.

11. Scorpions: This saying is explained by the Targ. and Syriac as meaning “scourges,” probably correctly. The Romans used a scourge made of a long bag of leather filled tightly with sand and studded with spikes, and called this “the scorpion.”

15. Rehoboam does not seem to have the slightest understanding of the gravity of the situation. The last man in the world he ought to have sent to quell the disturbance was the one man he did send, Adoram, who had been in charge of the forced labor which caused the trouble. His extraordinary folly is accounted for by the author as a “turn” (so the Hebrew) from the Lord, or as the Targ. puts it, “a fated lot.”

16. The reply of the people was in rhythmical form, and is rightly so printed in the RSV. The first line is almost exactly the cry raised by Shimei (II Sam. 20:1) when he led an Israeliite revolt against Judah, except that there is a definite negative used there. The phrase To your tents does not mean “to arms,” but “back home,” being an old-fashioned phrase and a survival of the old desert life. The English versions rightly insert own in the last line of the reply. The whole point of the people’s answer is in the complete divergence between the two groups. The LXX and Targ. read ἀνήρ, “to feed as a shepherd,” and so “to rule as a king” for ἄνήρ, “see,” and it may be that this is the correct reading. The Hebrew word רֹדֶה, “shepherd,” is often used as a synonym for “king,” “ruler” (cf. Ps. 23:1, where Vulg. has Dominus regit me, translated in the Douay Version as “the Lord ruleth me”).

yoke heavy, but do you lighten it for us; thus shall you say to them, ‘My little finger is thicker than my father’s loins.

11 And now whereas my father laid upon you a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke. My father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.’ ”

12 So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam the third day, as the king said, “Come to me again the third day.”

13 And the king answered the people harshly, and forsoaking the counsel which the old men had given him, he spoke to them according to the counsel of the young men, saying, “My father made your yoke heavy, but I will add to your yoke; my father also chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.”

15 So the king did not hearken to the people; for it was a turn of affairs brought about by the Lord that he might fulfil his word, which the Lord spoke by Ahijah the Shilonite to Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16 And when all Israel saw that the king did not hearken to them, the people answered the king, “What portion have we in David? We have no inheritance in the son of Jesse.

To your tents, O Israel!

Look now to your own house, David.”
17 But as for the children of Israel which dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.
18 Then king Rehoboam sent Adoram, who was over the tribute; and all Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. Therefore king Rehoboam made speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.
19 So Israel rebelled against the house of David unto this day.
20 And it came to pass, when all Israel heard that Jeroboam was come again, that they sent and called him unto the congregation, and made him king over all Israel: there was none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah only.
21 ¶ And when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he assembled all the house of Judah, with the tribe of Benjamin, a hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against the house of Israel, to bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam the son of Solomon.
22 But the word of God came unto Shemaiah the man of God, saying,
23 Speak unto Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and unto all the house of Judah and Benjamin, and to the remnant of the people, saying,
24 Thus saith the Lord, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel: return every man to his house; for this thing is from me. They hearkened therefore to the word of the Lord, and returned to depart, according to the word of the Lord.

17. This verse is not in the LXX, but is based upon II Chr. 11:16, where it is said that a number of pious Israelites emigrated to Judah in order to remain under the rule of the Davidic king, and thus worship the true God in the true way at Jerusalem.

20. Here is the usual discrepancy concerning the number of the tribes who clung to Rehoboam. The LXX avoids the contradiction by adding "and Benjamin" in this verse, thus making the statement here agree with that in vs. 21.

b) Civil War Is Averted (12:21-24)

According to this paragraph, Shemaiah managed to stop civil war between the two groups of tribes. Whether this statement is accurate is to be doubted, since according to 14:30 the two sections never ceased fighting all the time Rehoboam reigned in Judah. Shemaiah's action is probably as fictional as his part in the torn garment incident of the LXX insertion which follows this section.

23. It is best to avoid the word remnant (KJV) and to read rest (RSV), since the former has a technical sense in the O.T., standing for the faithful and pious nucleus of the people of God. The idea of the remnant occurs first in the name of Isaiah's son Shear-jashub (Isa. 7:3; cf. 10:21-23).
25 ¶ Then Jeroboam built Shechem in mount Ephraim, and dwelt therein; and went out from thence, and built PenueL 26 And Jeroboam said in his heart, Now shall the kingdom return to the house of David:
   27 If this people go up to do sacrifice in the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, then shall the heart of this people turn again unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam king of Judah, and they shall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam king of Judah.
28 Whereupon the king took counsel, and made two calves of gold, and said unto them, It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

The new king takes precautions against any movement for a return to Judah. He builds and fortifies Shechem and PenueL, then sets up the golden bulls at Bethel and Dan to provide centers for worship other than the shrine which Solomon had built at Jerusalem.

25. Jeroboam makes Shechem his capital, thus taking full advantage of the ancient traditions of the place as the center of northern Israelite history. PenueL is by the river Jabbok, east of Jordan in the same latitude as Shechem. It dominates the road east from the Jordan Valley, a favorite route for nomad invaders (cf. Judg. 8:8). PenueL was thus built as a forward defense for Shechem.

28-29. Jeroboam sets up the golden bulls at Bethel and Dan. He tells the people that they have gone up to Jerusalem long enough, and then follows with the selfsame cry with which the people of old had greeted the golden calf which Aaron made (Exod. 32:4, 8). Here, in his establishment of Shechem as his capital, Jeroboam was reverting to ancient custom against the innovations of Solomon. W. F. Albright (From the Stone Age to Christianity [2nd ed.; Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press, 1946], p. 203) maintains that these bulls were not representations of Yahweh, but that “the golden calf simply formed the pedestal, on which the invisible Yahweh stood” (cf. the space between the cherubim in Solomon’s temple at Jerusalem). It may very well be that the Mosaic religion was strongly “aniconic,” and the modern tendency is to give Moses credit for much more advanced ideas than were formerly allowed to be his. The general opinion is that while there was a movement in favor of an imageless worship sponsored by (at any rate) some Levites, yet the Lord was worshiped with images during the time of the judges and during at least part of the time of the kingdoms. The prohibitions against “graven” images (Exod. 20:4 [E, a northern tradition, which incidentally would not exclude the Bethel bull]) and against “molten” images (Exod. 34:17 [J, a southern tradition which would exclude the Bethel bull]) were necessary from the reformers’ point of view. It is definitely stated that the people had been making sacrifices to the took counsel of his courtiers rather than of his Lord. And he took the rash advice of his hot-headed young comrades rather than the more sensible counsel of his seasoned courtiers. By losing his head he lost the larger part of his kingdom. Solomon had sown the wind and Rehoboam reaped the whirlwind.

25-33. The Gods of Convenience.—After Jeroboam had taken the ten tribes from Rehoboam and set up the Northern Kingdom, he was worried about the fact that his devout subjects still felt obliged to worship Yahweh at the temple in Jerusalem. Jeroboam feared that if his people were to continue their pilgrimages to Jerusalem 29 And he set the one in Bethel, and the other put he in Dan.
30 And this thing became a sin: for the people went to worship before the one, even unto Dan.

bronze serpent until Hezekiah destroyed it in his reforming zeal (II Kings 18:4). A good case can be made out for believing that this serpent was the Jebusite fetish image cared for by the original Jerusalem Zadokite priesthood, and that it remained there as the divine symbol even after David had conquered the city (H. H. Rowley, “Zadok and Nehushtan,” Journal of Biblical Literature, LVIII [1939], 113-41; Adolphe Lods, Les prophètes d'Israel, [Paris: La Renaissance du Livre, 1935], p. 150). In the north the divine symbol was the bull. There is a curious phrase in Deut. 33:17, where Joseph is called “the first-born of his bull.” Such a passage as Gen. 49:24 suggests that there was a time when the bull was indeed the divine symbol for the Joseph tribes, and this is the most natural explanation of Deut. 33:17. Perhaps this goes back to desert times, but it may be that Jeroboam was reading back the bull image into desert times, just as in the south they read back the serpent into that same period of the wanderings. There are numerous references in the Ras Shamra texts to Shôr-êl (“the Bull-El”), the same word being used for “bull” as in Deut. 33:17. It is evident that El, the “high god” of Syria, the great creator god, was worshiped in the form of a bull. The setting up of the golden bulls at Bethel and at Dan was fully in accordance with ancient and native Syrian-Canaanite ideas. These images did actually involve a syncretism between the Lord and the gods of Syria (Engnell, Studies in Divine Kingship, pp. 136, 154, etc.). This explains why the Deuteronomists regarded the cultus at Bethel with particular horror. It was precisely against this kind of syncretism that all their hatred was directed. Again and again they wrote of the dreadful sin of forgetting the Lord so as to “walk after other gods, and serve them, and worship them” (Deut. 8:19; cf. 6:14; 13:6-7).

Jeroboam’s action had not only a religious but also a political aspect. It was necessarily part of his deliberate policy to prevent the people from going up regularly to worship at the Jerusalem shrine. He therefore was compelled politically to do everything he could to encourage them to make their pilgrimages to their own sanctuaries, and in particular to his own royal shrine at Bethel. If he provided good facilities for the proper enjoyment of the harvest meals (cf. I Sam. 1:18 [LXX], Judg. 9:27), local patriotism would doubtless do the rest. He therefore took pains to make the ancient shrine of Bethel worthy in every way to be a royal sanctuary, and the measure of his success can be judged by the vehemence of the threats which Amos uttered against it a century or so later (Amos 3:14; 5:6; 9:1).

30. The RSV is correct here in following Lucian’s version.

they might come under the influence of Rehoboam, who ruled in that city. He hit upon a plan to obviate this danger. He set up two golden calves and then said to his people, It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: behold thy gods (vs. 28).

Jeroboam’s appeal to convenience seems quite in line with our modern idea of progress. If we were asked how present-day civilization is superior to former modes of living, would not most of us cite our material comforts and conveniences? Our houses are more commodious, hours of work are shorter, labor is being delivered from drudgery. Ours has been called “a sitting civilization.” Jeroboam was applying the principle of comfort and convenience to the realm of religion. And so do we. Our churches are moved to be near our homes. Moreover, we are told that the church would succeed if it gave the people what they want. And the argument sounds plausible. The church is to serve the people. It must therefore reach the people. Religion should be made winsome and attractive. Make the sanctuary as beautiful and comfortable as possible; improve the music; popularize the themes. But how far can this cult of comfort be safely carried in the sphere of religion? There is a certain propriety in the church’s studying how to attract people, how to make its message appealing, how to bring to 31 And he made a house of high places, and made priests of the lowest of the people, which were not of the sons of Levi.

32 And Jeroboam ordained a feast in the eighth month, on the fifteenth day of the month, like unto the feast that is in Judah, and he offered upon the altar. So did he in Bethel, sacrificing unto the calves that he had made: and he placed in Bethel the priests of the high places which he had made.

33 So he offered upon the altar which he had made in Bethel the fifteenth day of the eighth month, even in the month which he kept the other as far as Dan. J 31 He also made houses on high places, and appointed priests from among all the people, who were not of the Levites. 32 And Jeroboam appointed a feast on the fifteenth day of the eighth month like the feast that was in Judah, and he offered sacrifices upon the altar; so he did in Bethel, sacrificing to the calves that he had made. And he placed in Bethel the priests of the high places that he had made. 33 He went up to the altar which he had made in Bethel on the fifteenth day in the eighth month, in the month which he had devised of his own will.

31. It was legitimate for any devout Israelite to worship the Lord at any of the local shrines. The prohibition of worship at such places belongs to the period following the Deuteronomic reforms. Similarly, it was legitimate for a non-Levite to act as a priest, though as early as the time of the judges there was a popular assumption that a Levite was to be preferred (Judg. 17:5, 10).

32. The feast of Ingathering was celebrated at Bethel in the eighth month of the postexilic calendar, i.e., in Bul, the second month of the pre-exilic calendar. Vs. 33 says that this was an innovation due to Jeroboam's own devising, the author evidently being of the opinion that the first month of the pre-exilic calendar was the proper month everywhere. But Jeroboam was no innovator. On the contrary, he was all for the proper re-establishment of true northern customs against the innovations of the south, and a large part of his success in setting up the Northern Kingdom depended upon this attitude. The feast was held probably a month later in the north than in the south: "The people went to the shrine of their choice at the first full moon after the completion of the harvests of their agricultural year" (see Snaith, Jewish New Year Festival, p. 52, where the whole problem of the different dates is discussed). The difference in the climate between the various parts of the country can be judged by the fact that the wheat harvest in Palestine extends from April in the Jordan Valley and in the maritime plain to as late as June in parts of the hill country.

33. Here as elsewhere the pre-exilic meaning of פָּרָה is "to sacrifice" and not to burn incense.

aching hearts the healing touch of the Great Physician. But one must remember that the church of the living God must serve the needs of men rather than cater to their desires, must make people be good rather than merely feel good. The cross is not a couch, and the gospel of the crucified Christ cannot be harmonized with physical comfort.

After Jeroboam appeals to his subjects to worship the gods conveniently near at hand, the record adds, And this thing became a sin (vs. 30). Why?

To the writer of 1 Kings the sin lay in the idolatrous worship of golden calves in Dan and Bethel. But transposed into modern thought, the cult of convenience becomes a sin by separating a soul from the one true God. God is a Father, and we his children keep in communion with him by cultivating the same attitudes which hold children to an earthly parent. If a child is to keep a wholesome relationship with a normal father, he must develop it through obedience, discipline, study, and self-sacrifice. The child's petulant desires of the moment must yield to the parent's longer experience. If the child grows up seeking always his own convenience and pleasure, he becomes spoiled, thus automatically alienating himself from understanding fellowship with the parent. The lad who never learns to put himself out to help or please his father does not learn how to take in what his father can give him. Families who try to run on the principle of personal comfort without sacrificial co-operation are headed for had devised of his own heart; and ordained a feast unto the children of Israel: and he offered upon the altar, and burnt incense. 13 And, behold, there came a man of God out of Judah by the word of the Lord unto Bethel: and Jeroboam stood by the altar to burn incense. 2 And he cried against the altar in the word of the Lord, and said, O altar, altar, thus saith the Lord; Behold, a child shall fall from it. 2 And the man cried against the altar by the word of the Lord, and said, “O altar, altar, thus says the word of the Lord: Behold, a child shall fall from it.”

2. THE MAN OF GOD FROM JUDAH (13:1-34)

The style of the chapter, as Burney points out, is similar to that of the annals of Josiah’s time, so that the story as it is told here apparently comes from the hand of the compiler (ca. 610 B.C.). Other indications are the specific mention of Josiah by name (vs. 2), which is unlikely 330 years before his time, and, especially if this last is held to be an interpolation, the reference (vs. 82) to the cities of Samaria (LXX has Samaria only). The town was not built until Omri’s time (16:24). Wellhausen suggested that the story owes much to Amos’ visit to Bethel (Amos 7:10-16), coupled with the tirade against Bethel in Amos 9:1-9. Budde held that the account is a homiletic story whose sound moral is the sole justification for the telling of it. There is no adequate reason for doubting that this is an ancient tale; the Deuteronomistic compiler revived it in order to show that Jeroboam had received full warning and, incidentally, that Judeans should avoid all relations with northerners.

13:1-10. A prophet from Judah appears at Bethel while Jeroboam is actually sacrificing there. He prophesies the destruction of both altar and priests, and gives a sign that his word is true. Jeroboam’s arm is paralyzed, the altar is rent, and the ashes are scattered. The man of God relents so far as to permit Jeroboam’s arm to be restored, but he follows his divine instructions and firmly refuses all hospitality.

1. The prophet is sent under compulsion of the word of God; this word has the power to get itself spoken, and when it has been spoken, to bring to pass that which has been expressed.

2. The word הִצָּלָה originally meant “to slaughter,” and this rendering is suitable here.

The only way to make room for God in our lives is to put ourselves out. And those who will not be “put out” for him separate themselves from him and stunt their own growth. The ego is like a cell which overasserts itself and causes cancer. The self-centered, self-willed person who wants everything, even his religion, adjusted to suit his own convenience is starting a cancerous growth within his spirit. The gods of comfort lead but to the grave.

13:12-25, 27-34. This Treasure in Earthen Vessels.—The O.T. writers were realistic in treating the men of God as well as the kings of men.

be born unto the house of David, Josiah by name; and upon thee shall he offer the priests of the high places that burn incense upon thee, and men's bones shall be burnt upon thee.

3 And he gave a sign the same day, saying, This is the sign which the Lord hath spoken; Behold, the altar shall be rent, and the ashes that are upon it shall be poured out.

4 And it came to pass, when king Jeroboam heard the saying of the man of God, which had cried against the altar in Bethel, that he put forth his hand from the altar, saying, Lay hold on him. And his hand, which he put forth against him, dried up, so that he could not pull it in again to him.

5 The altar also was rent, and the ashes poured out from the altar, according to the sign which the man of God had given by the word of the Lord.

6 And the king answered and said unto the man of God, Entreat now the face of the Lord thy God, and pray for me, that my hand may be restored me again. And the man of God besought the Lord, and the king's hand was restored him again, and became as it was before.

7 And the king said unto the man of God, Come home with me, and refresh thyself, and I will give thee a reward.

8 And the man of God said unto the king, If thou wilt give me half thine house, I will not go in with thee, neither will I eat bread nor drink water in this place:

The Lord: 'Behold, a son shall be born to the house of David, Josi'ah by name; and he shall sacrifice upon you the priests of the high places who burn incense upon you, and men's bones shall be burned upon you.' 3 And he gave a sign the same day, saying, "This is the sign that the Lord has spoken: 'Behold, the altar shall be torn down, and the ashes that are upon it shall be poured out.'" 4 And when the king heard the saying of the man of God, which he cried against the altar at Bethel, Jerobo'am stretched out his hand from the altar, saying, "Lay hold of him." And his hand, which he stretched out against him, dried up, so that he could not draw it back to himself. 5 The altar also was torn down, and the ashes poured out from the altar, according to the sign which the man of God had given by the word of the Lord. 6 And the king said to the man of God, "Entreat now the favor of the Lord your God, and pray for me, that my hand may be restored to me." And the man of God entreated the Lord; and the king's hand was restored to him, and became as it was before. 7 And the king said to the man of God, "Come home with me, and refresh yourself, and I will give you a reward." 8 And the man of God said to the king, "If you give me half your house, I will not go in with you. And I will not eat bread or drink water in this place:

The custom of burning dead men's bones upon an altar had its object in desecrating the sacred site and making it unfit for any sacred purpose.

4. The Hebrews, in complete contradistinction to modern ways of thinking, thought of God himself as being immediately active in all the processes of his world. In this sense a miracle is not a violation of any rule, but rather an outstanding and unusual incident whereby God's active participation in the conduct of his world is particularly evident and designed to point out some religious truth.

6. Entreat now the favor of the Lord is, lit., "make sweet the face of the Lord." The phrase is a strong anthropomorphism describing the process of smoothing away traces of anger from the human face. It is foolish to criticize the use of anthropomorphisms as a matter of principle. The cruder examples are clearly undesirable, but on the other hand, it is impossible for man to speak intelligently of a personal God except in terms borrowed from human experience.

Truly we have the treasure of God in earthen vessels. The unnamed man of God who appeared before Jeroboam at Bethel was a messenger of truth, and he demonstrated divine power. If his record had ended with the restoration of the king's hand and his refusal to return by the way he had come to Bethel, he would have left the scriptural stage unsullied.
9 For so was it charged me by the word of the Lord, saying, Eat no bread, nor drink water, nor turn again by the same way that thou camest.
10 So he went another way, and returned not by the way that he came to Bethel.
11 ¶ Now there dwelt an old prophet in Bethel; and his sons came and told him all the works that the man of God had done that day in Bethel: the words which he had spoken unto the king, them they told also to their father.
12 And their father said unto them, What way went he? For his sons had seen what way the man of God went, which came from Judah.
13 And he said unto his sons, Saddle me the ass. So they saddled him the ass: and he rode thereon, 14 And went after the man of God, and found him sitting under an oak: and he said unto him, Art thou the man of God that camest from Judah? And he said, I am.
15 Then he said unto him, Come home with me, and eat bread.
16 And he said, I may not return with thee, nor go in with thee: neither will I eat bread nor drink water with thee in this place:
17 For it was said to me by the word of the Lord, Thou shalt eat no bread nor drink water there, nor turn again to go by the way that thou camest.
18 He said unto him, I am a prophet also as thou art; and an angel spake unto me by the word of the Lord, saying, Bring him back with thee into thine house, that he may eat bread and drink water. But he lied unto him.

place; 9 for so was it commanded me by the word of the Lord, saying, ‘You shall neither eat bread, nor drink water, nor return by the way that you came.’ 10 So he went another way, and did not return by the way that he came to Bethel.
11 Now there dwelt an old prophet in Bethel. And his sons came and told him all that the man of God had done that day in Bethel; the words also which he had spoken to the king, they told to their father.
12 And their father said to them, “Which way did he go?” And his sons showed him the way which the man of God who came from Judah had gone. 13 And he said to his sons, “Saddle the ass for me.” So they saddled the ass for him and he mounted it. 14 And he went after the man of God, and found him sitting under an oak; and he said to him, “Are you the man of God who came from Judah?” And he said, “I am.” 15 Then he said to him, “Come home with me and eat bread.” 16 And he said, “I may not return with you, or go in with you; neither will I eat bread nor drink water with you in this place; 17 for it was said to me by the word of the Lord, ‘You shall neither eat bread nor drink water there, nor return by the way that you came.’” 18 And he said to him, “I also am a prophet as you are, and an angel spoke to me by the word of the Lord, saying, ‘Bring him back with you into your house that he may eat bread

9. The command to eat no bread with any inhabitant of the north country is to be explained by the Eastern idea that two persons who partake of the same food establish between themselves a kind of covenantal relationship.

11-32. The man of God from Judah is deceived by a prophet from Israel, who says that he has had a command through an angel that the visitor must eat with him. On his way home the man of God is slain by a lion. The prophet thereupon requests that, when he dies, he be buried with the man of God, because his words will surely come true.

18. The idea of the delivery of the divine message by an angel is a sign of lateness. Earlier the phrase “the angel of the Lord” was used, but apart from this instance the first occurrences of an angel-messenger are to be found in Ezekiel. We have thus additional evidence that the present story is told in terms which belong to the end of the seventh century B.C. On the other hand, the prophet either was mistaken or else he was lying, and it may be that either he or the compiler hesitated to say directly that it was the word of God, and introduced the angel in order to account for the false message. The pre-19 So he went back with him, and did eat bread in his house, and drank water.

20 ¶ And it came to pass, as they sat at the table, that the word of the Lord came unto the prophet that brought him back:

21 And he cried unto the man of God that came from Judah, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Forasmuch as thou hast dis obeyed the mouth of the Lord, and hast not kept the commandment which the Lord thy God commanded thee, 22 But camest back, and hast eaten bread and drunk water in the place, of which the Lord did say to thee, Eat no bread, and drink no water, thy carcass shall not come unto the sepulchre of thy fathers.

23 ¶ And it came to pass, after he had eaten bread, and after he had drunk, that he saddled for him the ass, to wit, for the prophet whom he had brought back.

24 And when he was gone, a lion met him by the way, and slew him: and his carcass was cast in the way, and the ass stood by it, the lion also stood by the carcass.

25 And, behold, men passed by, and saw the carcass cast in the way, and the lion standing by the carcass: and they came and told it in the city where the old prophet dwelt.

26 And when the prophet that brought him back from the way heard thereof, he said, It is the man of God, who was disobedient and drank water.’” But he lied to him. 19 So he went back with him, and ate bread in his house, and drank water.

20 And as they sat at the table, the word of the Lord came to the prophet who had brought him back; 21 and he cried to the man of God who came from Judah, “Thus says the Lord, ‘Because you have disobeyed the word of the Lord, and have not kept the commandment which the Lord your God commanded you, 22 but have come back, and have eaten bread and drunk water in the place of which he said to you, ‘Eat no bread, and drink no water’; your body shall not come to the tomb of your fathers.’” 23 And after he had eaten bread and drunk, he saddled the ass for the prophet whom he had brought back. 24 And as he went away a lion met him on the road and killed him. And his body was thrown in the road, and the ass stood beside it; the lion also stood beside the body.

25 And behold, men passed by, and saw the body thrown in the road, and the lion standing by the body. And they came and told it in the city where the old prophet dwelt.

26 And when the prophet who had sumption is that this detail is due to the late compiler, since it is unlikely that the man of God from Judah would be deceived by a message if there had been anything abnormal in it.

22. Not to have burial was a calamity, since it prevented a man from “sleeping with his fathers”—the only consolation which the righteous had after death, according to the ideas of the time.

23. The last phrase is omitted by the LXX. It is the only place in the story where the man of God who came from Judah is called a prophet, this latter word being elsewhere wholly reserved for the Israelite. Presumably a prophet might be a false prophet, but a man of God is always a man of God.

24. Lions were common in Palestine in the early period, and again after the depopulation of the north which followed the Assyrian conquests (II Kings 17:26).

But the man of God who resisted a king's invitation yielded to the seduction of a fellow prophet. He was strong enough in his will power but weak in his spiritual perception. He allowed himself to be deceived by his colleague’s false assertion that he had received a new commandment from the Lord setting aside the first. He was punished for lack of confidence in his divine commission. Yet the man who deceived him realized the worth of the erring man of God and asked that his own bones might be buried in the same grave. The whole story has a confused ethic, but human motives are mixed, and even men of God have weak links in their armor.

26. O Night, What of the Watchman?—Familiar and timely is the anxious and repeated cry, “Watchman, what of the night?” (Isa. 21:
ent unto the word of the Lord: therefore the Lord hath delivered him unto the lion, which hath torn him, and slain him, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake unto him.

27 And he spake to his sons, saying, Saddle me the ass. And they saddled him.

28 And he went and found his carcass cast in the way, and the ass and the lion standing by the carcass: the lion had not eaten the carcass, nor torn the ass.

29 And the prophet took up the carcass of the man of God, and laid it upon the ass, and brought it back: and the old prophet came to the city, to mourn and to bury him.

30 And he laid his carcass in his own grave; and they mourned over him, saying, Alas, my brother!

31 And it came to pass, after he had buried him, that he spake to his sons, saying, When I am dead, then bury me in the sepulchre wherein the man of God is buried; lay my bones beside his bones:

32 For the saying which he cried by the word of the Lord against the altar in Bethel, and against all the houses of the high places which are in the cities of Samaria, shall surely come to pass.

11). The world is still living on the defensive, as in the days of Jeroboam. The nights are not filled with the same terrors, but human fears have increased. We are surrounded by very real dangers. Our institutions and ideas are threatened. The faster men and events move the farther ahead is it necessary to look. There are more professional watchmen than ever before—columnists, radio news commentators, government spies. The hurried and worried crowd count heavily on these secular seers, and keep ever asking: "Watchman, what of the night? Will there be war? Will the dawn of peace and justice soon come?"

But what of the watchmen? So much depends on their ability and character. Irresponsible watchmen are worse than none, for they deceive with a false security. Emotional watchmen are a menace, for they excite without cause. Prejudiced watchmen are a peril, for they distort dangers and arouse anxieties in the wrong directions. And worst of all are those professional propagandists who find it more popular and profitable to play upon people's fears and hatreds than upon their sympathy and love. In O.T. times much dependence was put on the divine watchmen. The prophets of God were the seers of the nation. Samuel the prophet served as guide in choosing Israel's first king, and remained his counselor until Saul lapsed from his high duties. And so on down the list of the great Hebrew prophets. The Christian church played a similar role in the nations of Christendom. Her spokesmen were the watchmen who gave warning of dangers without and within. They served as the nerves of the nations, crying out when human values were imperiled. They have been the keepers of conscience.

In this chapter is the somewhat tangled story of two unnamed prophets. One is called the man of God. He came up out of Judah to Bethel, where he boldly confronted King Jeroboam and declared the Lord's condemnation of his apostasy. The king tried to flatter and bribe him, but he resisted the temptation. He announced that he had been commanded of the Lord not to eat bread or drink water in Jeroboam's country, and not to return by the way which he had come to Bethel (vs. 9). All three of these commandments he kept. But a certain "old prophet in Bethel" pursued the departing man of God, overtook him, deceived him with a lying report of having received a more recent command of the Lord, and persuaded him to stop and break bread. As a result of this violation, the man of God was slain by 33 After this thing Jeroboam returned not from his evil way, but made again of the lowest of the people priests of the high places: whosoever would, he consecrated him, and he became one of the priests of the high places.

34 And this thing became sin unto the house of Jeroboam, even to cut it off, and to destroy it from off the face of the earth.

At that time Abijah the son of Jeroboam fell sick.

2 And Jeroboam said to his wife, Arise, I pray thee, and disguise thyself, that thou 33-34. The compiler picks up once more the thread of the main narrative (12:31), repeating part of the last verse and adding a true Deuteronomic moral to the story of the institution of the Bethel altar. The technical term for the consecration of a priest is “to fill the hand”—a phrase used in the same sense in Akkadian. The reference is probably to the first offering made by the priest when he “waved” the prescribed portions in front of the altar according to established rule.

3. Death of Jeroboam’s Son (14:1-18)

Abijah is ill and likely to die. Jeroboam sends his wife, disguised as an ordinary woman, to the aged and now-blind Ahijah the Shilonite to inquire about the fate of the child. The prophet, blind though he is, recognizes her, tells her even before she asks that the child will die, denounces the king and all his line, prophesies the downfall of the Northern Kingdom. The story ends with the death of the boy.

The original story is to be found in vss. 1-6, 12, 17; the remainder is due to the Deuteronomic compiler who is following his customary habit of pointing out the moral. The LXX parallel is found in the interpolation which follows 12:24, where the incident is recorded as having taken place before Jeroboam becomes king. The M.T. story and its place are preferable.

33 After this thing Jeroboam did not turn from his evil way, but made priests for the high places again from among all the people; any who would, he consecrated to be priests of the high places. 34 And this thing became sin to the house of Jeroboam, so as to cut it off and to destroy it from the face of the earth.

At that time Abijah the son of Jeroboam fell sick. 2 And Jeroboam said to his wife, “Arise, and disguise your-a lion. When the prophet who had misled him saw the body he exclaimed, It is the man of God, who disobeyed the word of the Lord.

Amid the lights and shadows of this portrayal of two prophets a few points are worthy of notice. First, the man of God was faithful to his main and most difficult commission. He had delivered the word of the Lord at great personal risk. Second, he failed in one of the minor commandments. He was undone by his lapse at a point of detail. Having fortified himself for the hard task of denouncing the king, he left himself unguarded against one of his own profession. Perhaps it was the softening reaction which sometimes follows courageous effort. Even the best of men have the “trough” experiences when the crest of the wave has passed. Then, too, he appears to have disobeyed his original command because he innocently believed the other prophet’s report of a new revelation from the Lord. But are ignorance and innocence excusable in a man of God?

Third, the value of his service was not utterly canceled by his later lapse. The treatment of his body and the tribute to him from the false prophet attest the fact that his courageous stand against Jeroboam’s idolatry had not gone for nought. Divine judgment discriminates. There is no cancellation in the moral realm. “Be ye steadfast, unmoving, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord” (1 Cor. 15:58)—even if by some slip you later fall from grace. The good works of the man of God followed him, although he died for his disobedience. But the watchmen of God must be ever on the alert. Unguarded moments often prove the undoing of courageous servants of the Lord.

14:1-31. The Paths of Glory Lead But to the Grave.—Jeroboam received his last divine warning for his sins through the illness of his son. In his dire distress the reprobate king turned be not known to be the wife of Jeroboam; and get thee to Shiloh: behold, there is Ahijah the prophet, which told me that I should be king over this people.

And take with thee ten loaves, and cracknels, and a cruse of honey, and go to him: he shall tell thee what shall become of the child.

And Jeroboam's wife did so, and arose, and went to Shiloh, and came to the house of Ahijah. But Ahijah could not see; for his eyes were set by reason of his age.

And the Lord said unto Ahijah, Behold, the wife of Jeroboam cometh to ask a thing of thee for her son; for he is sick: thus and thus shalt thou say unto her: for it shall be, when she cometh in, that she shall feign herself to be another woman.

And it was so, when Ahijah heard the sound of her feet, as she came in at the door, that he said, Come in, thou wife of Jeroboam; why feignest thou thyself to be another? for I am sent to thee with heavy tidings.

Go, tell Jeroboam, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Forasmuch as I exalted thee from among the people, and made thee prince over my people Israel, it was solely to disguise herself from the prophet Ahijah (Antiquities VIII. 11: 1). This latter explanation is probably correct. Jeroboam had been glad enough of Ahijah's support at the beginning, but evidently he had changed his loyalty after he had become king and had favored the priests of Bethel instead of those of Shiloh, who had been instrumental in raising him to the throne of Israel. Note that the child's name is Abijah, a compound name of which one element is a shortened form of the divine name. This is evidence that Jeroboam, in his action of establishing the cult of the calves at Bethel, was not conscious of being an apostate from the worship of the Lord.

3. The word cracknels is still in use in England (mainly in the south) to describe small crisp biscuits (cookies), either crescent-shaped or hollow. The word is also used in country districts generally to mean small pieces of pork crisply fried. The Hebrew word is used in Josh. 9:5 of the old dried bread which the Gibeonites used to deceive Joshua. By derivation it has to do with dots, marks, specks, and is used in Ethiopic of worm-eaten wood. A word derived from the same root is used of the speckled sheep in Laban's flock (Gen. 30:32; etc.). The LXXA says that the queen took the crisp biscuits for Ahijah's children. In any case, it was certainly the custom to take a present, however small (I Sam. 9:8), when an oracle was sought from a prophet-seer.

The cruse or jar was a narrow-necked bottle, so called from the gurgling sound made in pouring out the water: ḇaqḇūq.

5. She came to the prophet in order to seek an oracle concerning her son.

from his hireling priests and false prophets to the man of God, Ahijah. The blind old seer spared no words in denouncing the sins of Jeroboam and predicting the death of his son. He declared the relentless law that sins of the fathers are visited on their offspring. Did Ahijah think that the death of the son would turn the father's heart to God? Sometimes it takes such a 8 And rent the kingdom away from the house of David, and gave it thee: and yet thou hast not been as my servant David, who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his heart, to do that only which was right in mine eyes;

9 But hast done evil above all that were before thee: for thou hast gone and made thee other gods, and molten images, to provoke me to anger, and hast cast me behind thy back:

10 Therefore, behold, I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam, and will cut off from Jeroboam him that pisseth against the wall, and him that is shut up and left in Israel, and will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone.

11 Him that dieth of Jeroboam in the city shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth in the field shall the fowls of the air eat: for the Lord hath spoken it.

12 Arise thou therefore, get thee to thine own house: and when thy feet enter into the city, the child shall die.

9. Anger is an emotion often ascribed to God in the Bible. It stands for his settled attitude toward sin and unrepentant sinners. It is not a sudden, passionate emotion, but a steady reasoned antagonism. Attempts have been made to regard the anger of God as an archaic description of the cause-effect relationship between sin and its consequences, working automatically in the world, and to some extent independently of God (C. H. Dodd, The Epistle of Paul to the Romans [London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1932; “The Moffatt New Testament Commentary”], pp. 20-24). But this modern idea, with its tendency toward deism, does not do justice to the biblical idea of the definite and personal opposition to sin which is evident everywhere on the part of God.

The phrase cast me behind your back is used of apostasy in Ezek. 23:35; of neglect of God’s law in Neh. 9:26; and of the remission of sins in Isa. 38:17. It means “out of sight, out of mind,” and in the last case, “out of existence” also—a unique simile for the forgiveness of sins.

10. Bond and free represents a phrase whose general sense is clear, but its immediate significance is obscure. The Hebrew phrase is alliterative, so that “fettered and free” (C. F. Keil, The Book of Kings, tr. James Martin [2nd ed.; Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1877], p. 211) is an apt rendering. It means “restrained and loosed,” and the two categories obviously include all males. Ewald suggested “kept in [by legal defilement] and at large”; Schmidt, “under and over age [i.e., under wardship]”; while the Arabic use of ’azibh suggests ‘married and celibate.” The phrase may actually mean “slave and freeman,” since Solomon sold men as slaves into Egypt (Deut. 17:16), and there is the definite evidence of Exod. 21:16; II Kings 4:1.

calamity to effect a conversion. There is no record that Jeroboam's heart was softened by its breaking.

As for Rehoboam, his ill-starred reign in Judah was five years shorter than Jeroboam's rule in the Northern Kingdom. His people turned from the true worship to the pagan shrines. His kingdom was invaded by the armies of Egypt, which carried away the richest treasures of Solomon's temple and the royal palace.
13 And all Israel shall mourn for him, and bury him: for he only of Jeroboam shall come to the grave, because in him there is found some good thing toward the Lord God of Israel in the house of Jeroboam.
14 Moreover the Lord shall raise him up a king over Israel, who shall cut off the house of Jeroboam that day: but what? even now.
15 For the Lord shall smite Israel, as a reed is shaken in the water, and he shall root up Israel out of this good land, which he gave to their fathers, and shall scatter them beyond the river, because they have made their groves, provoking the Lord to anger.

13. Nadab, Jeroboam’s son who succeeded him, died a violent death, and that was the end of Jeroboam’s dynasty (15:28). The rabbis have a tradition that the action which was found pleasing to the Lord occurred when Jeroboam instructed Abijah to prevent the people from going up to worship at the Jerusalem temple, but Abijah tore down the barriers which Jeroboam had set up in order to restrain the people from going up.

15. The river, as elsewhere regularly, is the Euphrates. This reference to the Assyrian deportations can scarcely have been foreseen in the tenth century; it is a clear indication that the speech of Ahijah the Shilonite is the work of the Deuteronomistic compiler.

The Asherim were wooden poles commonly set up, either singly or in company with a stone pillar (maccēbāh), at a Canaanite hill shrine beside the altar. There is little justification for the translation groves, a reference which is doubtless due to classical associations. An asherah was a wooden pole, stripped of its branches, and it was always associated with a female deity. When the wooden pole was in company with a stone pillar it represented Astarte, the consort of Baal (Jer. 3:9), and this provides the reason for the confusion in Judg. 2:13; 3:7 between “Ashtaroth” and “Aseroth” (ASV). But there is an increasing amount of evidence that there was also a goddess named Asherah. This goddess is mentioned in the Tell el-Amarna tablets (fourteenth century B.C.; the name ‘Abad-’Ashrat is found, i.e., “servant of ‘Ashrat,” on tablet No. 68 in Knudtzon’s list [British Museum Bulletin 88-10-13, 58]) and frequently in the Ras Shamra tablets (fifteenth to thirteenth centuries B.C.; J. W. Jack, The Ras Shamra Tablets [Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1935], pp. 25, 50; the references are common in the Ras Shamra texts known as I AB and II AB, published by Virolleaud in Syria, XII [1981], 193-224; XIII [1932], 113-68; and XV [1934], 226-43). This is the goddess who is associated with the wooden pole when it is not found in company with a stone pillar (e.g., 18:19; II Kings 21:7). She is often styled “Lady Asherah of the Sea” (rḥt ’Ashrṭ ʾytn; often in I AB and II AB) —a designation which gives additional point to the title “goddess of the Sidonians” (11:5). On the other hand, there is already confusion in the Tell el-Amarna texts and in the Ras Shamra texts between Astarte, Asherah, and the Babylonian goddess Anath, “the queen of heaven,” so that the Israelite confusion was doubtless inherited from the Canaanites whose religion the masses largely adopted. The confusion is not therefore due to a lack of knowledge of the later scribes only (see also René Dussaud, Les 19 And the rest of the acts of Jeroboam, how he warred, and how he reigned, behold, they are written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel.

20 And the days which Jeroboam reigned were two and twenty years: and he slept with his fathers, and Nadab his son reigned in his stead.
21 ¶ And Rehoboam the son of Solomon reigned in Judah. Rehoboam was forty and one year old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city which the LORD did choose out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess.
22 And Judah did evil in the sight of the LORD, and they provoked him to jealousy with their sins which they had committed, above all that their fathers had done.

17. Tirzah was probably a few miles northeast of Shechem, the modern Nablus, though the site is not certainly identified. It was the royal residence in Jeroboam's time and continued so until the time of Omri, who built Samaria in the seventh year of his reign (16:24). The city was famed for its beauty (Song of S. 6:4).

4. DEATH OF JEROBOAM I (14:19-20)

19-20. The Deuteronomistic compiler, having rounded off the story of the sickness and death of Jeroboam's son (vs. 18), now adds his formal obituary notice for the kings of Israel, except that he usually inserts a comparison with Jeroboam son of Nebat himself. Obviously he cannot do that in this particular case.

5. REHOBOAM OF JUDAH (14:21-31)

a) CHARACTERISTICS OF REHOBOAM'S REIGN (14:21-24)

These verses form the Deuteronomistic notice for the accession of a new king, giving all the customary formal details (vs. 21). The editor follows with a summary of the king's reign, a story of apostasy and abomination. It is evident that Rehoboam allowed a complete syncretism of the cult of the Lord and the cults of Canaan.

22. The ascription of jealousy to God has caused great difficulty. The Hebrew word אֵלָי refers primarily to the color produced in the face by violent emotion; the corresponding Arabic word means "to become intensely red or black with dye."
23 For they also built them high places, and images, and groves, on every high hill, and under every green tree.

24 And there were also sodomites in the land: and they did according to all the abominations of the nations which the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

Evil. If our enemy drags us into the gutter to fight him, then he has to that extent at least defeated us. The forces of good must eradicate the evils which poison the minds of sinners. Granted that communism is a pernicious system, its cure lies not in killing the poor victims of its perverted thinking but in removing the poverty, the inequities, the ignorance, the bitterness which breed communists. The abominations practiced by the Canaanite cults were not eradicated by Israel; they were assimilated.

Rehoboam's followers reversed the course of action adopted by the godly man as described in Ps. 1. He too had his residence in the midst of an ungodly and perverse generation. But of him it was said that he "walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly" (Ps. 1:1). Ungodliness may not wear the garb of wickedness. It may observe the social decencies. It simply leaves God out of consideration. Its gods are of this world, as were those of the Canaanite cults. The distinction between godliness and worldliness is not that the former forgoes the enjoyments of this world while the latter revels in them. To enlightened godly persons the world is a joy and a grace; but to them there is something higher, in the name of which they would renounce, if need be, the things of earth. The worldly, on the other hand, are ungodly in the sense that they revere nothing higher than earthly values. Nothing is sufficiently sacred to them that they would sacrifice for it the things they enjoy here and now.

The ungodly are those who, having no sacred spots to safeguard, have taken down the "No
25 ¶ And it came to pass in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, that Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem:

26 And he took away the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house; he even took away all: and he took away all the shields of gold which Solomon had made.

feature of Canaanite religion and was common in Mesopotamia from early times. There were three types of sacred prostitutes, two belonging to the temples: the qadishtu (the Hebrew word is qedhēšāh or, as here, the male qādēšh) and the ishtaritu, i.e., a woman connected with the cult of Ishtar. The prophets from Amos to Ezekiel uniformly and vigorously condemned these practices. After the Exile there was no need for condemnation, since the worship was henceforth completely free from sexual ritualism.

b) The Invasion of Sheshonk (14:25-28)

Shishak (so M.T.) or Sheshonk (Shoshonq) was the first king of the Twelfth Dynasty. His invasion affected both Israel and Judah, though, judging from the inscriptions on the walls of the temple of Amon at Karnak, Judah suffered the more severely. He is said to have reigned ca. 950 B.C., though W. F. Albright (Archaeology and Religion of Israel, p. 130) proposes the dates ca. 940-920 B.C.

26. Evidently the glory of Solomon's state occasions did not last very long, for in the fifth year of his successor the marvelous golden shields were seized by Pharaoh Sheshonk. The substitute shields of bronze were no longer kept in the forest house of Lebanon but in the guardroom.

Trespass" signs. To walk with them, therefore, is like going with the careless crowd over a lawn without fences and signs, until the lovely green has become a dirty, muddied brown. Living without reverence reduces life to commonness. And he that "walketh . . . in the counsel of the ungodly" finds his sense of duty beginning to weaken. It may be ever so slightly and subtly, just a little lowering here and there of the moral standards, just a little more lenient excusing of shortcomings, just a little more catering to lower natures, just a bit more compromising with the crowd.

Growing up with nothing to reverence, nothing to hold to, he drifted with the crowd which hung about the street corners. There he heard the talk of evil and steeped his mind in it. In short, he stood in the way of sinners until his imagination was caught and his conduct conditioned.

The assimilation of evil is the same in principle, whether the victim is caught in the net of the law or immersed in "polite society." There are well-dressed sins which hang around the corners of fashionable society, sins of smugness and pride, of prejudice and bigotry, of self-interest and self-indulgence. If we stand in the way of such sins, if we let our minds dwell on them, if our thoughts return to such sins in our relaxed moments, then we are on the way downward. When we walk in the counsel of the ungodly, we lose our reverence; when we stand in the way of sinners, we lose our virtue. Hetty Sorrel, as George Eliot portrays her in Adam Bede, first lost her reverence, then her self-respect, then her purity.

The next step of moral deterioration is to sit "in the seat of the scornful" (Ps. 1:1). When a 28 And it was so, when the king went into the house of the Lord, that the guard bare them, and brought them back into the guard chamber.

29 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Rehoboam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

30 And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all their days.

31 And Rehoboam slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David. And his mother's name was Na'amah an Ammonitess. And Abijam his son reigned in his stead.

15 Now in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam the son of Nebat reigned Abijam over Judah.

c) DEATH OF REHOBOM (14:29-31)

29-31. The formal obituary notice for Rehoboam, according to the regular pattern of the Deuteronomic compiler. The name of the successor is mentioned. The Hebrew text gives the name as Abijam, but the versions presuppose "Abijah." Opinion varies as to which spelling is accurate. Many scholars maintain that Abijah is right, but in this case it is difficult to account for the reading Abijam. It may of course be a simple error on the part of some Hebrew scribe, but perhaps it is better to regard the M.T. as being right, with the versions changing the last letter in favor of the better-known name.

B. EARLY WARS BETWEEN ISRAEL AND JUDAH (15:1-16:28)

1. ABIJAM OF JUDAH (15:1-8)

This chapter and the next are the work of the original Deuteronomic compiler of ca. 610 B.C., who embodied various extracts from his annalistic sources of the kings of Israel and Judah, and wove them into his general didactic scheme. Vss. 1-3 contain the usual notice with its general estimate of the character of the king in comparison—since he was a king of Judah—with David, the compiler's model king of the days before the good king Josiah. Vss. 7-8 contain the customary obituary notice, with its mention of the successor.

person has given up trying to be good he begins to make light of goodness. He scorns the old patterns of morality as outmoded and looks upon reformers as narrow souls who do not want others to enjoy the pleasures which they are afraid to take for themselves. Flippantly he says, "Let conscience be your guide," and then wheedles it into a pettifogging attorney for the defense of his desires. And why take conscience seriously, since it is only the echo of social custom? Such is the frosty cynicism which kills the nerves of conscience and faith. From "the counsel of the ungodly" to "the way of sinners" to "the scat of the scornful" is the path toward conformity with the world. The godly man resists this downward drift (cf. Ps. 1); but Rehoboam's subjects yielded to it until they did according to all the abominations of the nations which the Lord drove out before the people of Israel.

15:1-94. Civil War.—There are no feuds so bitter as family feuds. Similarities and associations seem to provide places for enmities to fester. The continuing strife between the two Hebrew kingdoms constitutes a sordid story. The Chronicler makes it clear that this tragic hostility was due to godlessness. One god-fearing king redeems this chapter of Hebrew history from unbroken darkness. For forty-one years Asa ruled in Jerusalem doing what was right in the eyes of the Lord. He removed idols and restored the votive gifts of true worship. But so
2 Three years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abishalom.

3 And he walked in all the sins of his father, which he had done before him: and his heart was not perfect with the LORD his God, as the heart of David his father.

4 Nevertheless for David's sake did the LORD his God give him a lamp in Jerusalem, to set up his son after him, and to establish Jerusalem:

5 Because David did that which was right in the eyes of the LORD, and turned not aside from any thing that he commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite.

6 And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all the days of his life.

7 Now the rest of the acts of Abijam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah? And there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam.

8 And Abijam slept with his fathers; and they buried him in the city of David: and Asa his son reigned in his stead.

2. The same statement, that the king's mother was Maacah the daughter of Absalom (in each case with the same abnormal spelling, Abishalom) is made of Asa in vs. 10. Various suggestions have been made to solve the difficulty. It may be that Asa was Abijam's brother and not his son (Wellhausen). Another suggestion is that the mothers of the two kings had in actual fact the same name and that the phrase the daughter of Abishalom was wrongly inserted in vs. 10 (Gesenius). Ewald, more probably, proposed that Maacah continued to be head of the harem (her proper title being gebhīrāh) during the time of her grandson Asa until he took the unusual step of removing her because of her idolatries (vs. 17). This suggestion is all the more probable because Abijam was king for three years at most, and Asa may well have been a minor for some time after he became king. The LXXB says that Asa's mother was named Ana (so in vs. 10), but there is no support for this, and it has every indication of being an attempt at correction. Josephus (Antiquitates VIII. 10. 1) says that Maacah was the granddaughter of Absalom, and that her mother was Tamar (II Sam. 14:27). This is probable since Absalom's daughter must certainly have been older than Rehoboam.

5. The compiler explains why it is that Abijam was permitted to reign in spite of his idolatries. It was because of David's uprightness (11:36). There is a qualification added by some honest scribe who remembered the incident of the wife of Uriah the Hittite, and could not bring himself to let the statement on a perfect David pass without comment. The qualification is not in the LXX.

6. This verse is not in the LXX, and was probably added from 14:30 by some scribe in order to make the record as complete here as it was there.
9 In the twentieth year of Jerobo'am king of Israel Asa began to reign over Judah. 10 And he reigned forty-one years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Ma'acah the daughter of Abishalom. 11 And Asa did what was right in the eyes of the LORD, as did David his father. 12 And he put away the male cult prostitutes out of the land, and removed all the idols that his fathers had made. 13 And also Maacah his mother, even her he removed from being queen, because she had made an idol in a grove; and Asa destroyed her idol, and burnt it by the brook Kidron. 14 But the high places were not removed: nevertheless Asa's heart was perfect with the LORD all his days. 15 And he brought in the things which his father had dedicated, and the things

a) The King's Reforms (15 9-15)

The Deuteronomic compiler introduces his account of the reign of Asa with his customary formula. He passes an entirely favorable judgment on the king, in spite of the fact that the latter did not do away with the local shrines according to the perfect pattern of a good king as demanded by the later Deuteronomic reforms. Asa certainly was a great reformer, who did away with the abuses in the cultus of the Jerusalem temple which were due to the assimilation of Canaanite cults that had been permitted in the previous reigns.

12. Cult-prostitutes: See Exeg. on 14:24. The rendering idols is inadequate to express the full significance of the Hebrew gillālm. This word with its proper vowels (M.T. has given it the vowels of shiqqû; cf. Exeg. on 11:5) may well have been a proper and respectful term for a god, for the same root is often used in Arabic for the greatness of the dignity of Allah. The Masoretes treated the word as an opprobrious term to mean either "idol-blocks," i.e., logs that can be rolled about or, less likely (though it is the rabbinical exegesis), "balls of dung."

13. Queen mother (RSV) is better than queen (KJV) though it should be realized that she was probably his grandmother.

It is uncertain what precisely this abominable image (so M.T.) was which Maacah had made. The Hebrew word is found only here and in the parallel II Chr. 15:16. The root means "to tremble," "to shudder," but anything more than this is guesswork. The Vulg. sees a reference to the cult of the phallus, an explanation adopted by some modern scholars. The other versions do not help us. Maacah made the image "to the Asherah" (so the Hebrew). This may mean as an image of the goddess or it may have been something else belonging to the cult of the goddess. The rendering grove is due to the LXX &mug;ov, followed by the Vulg. lucus.

The king burned the abominable image in the Kidron Valley. This is the deep depression to the east of Jerusalem, between the temple heights and the Mount of Olives. It is dry in the summer season and in the winter season also except after heavy rains, though the remains of ancient cave dwellings suggest that in very early times the water supply in the valley was good and regular. From the time of Asa this valley became the regular place where reforming kings destroyed all idolatrous cult objects.
which himself had dedicated, into the house of the Lord, silver, and gold, and vessels.

16 ¶ And there was war between Asa and Baasha king of Israel all their days.

17 And Baasha king of Israel went up against Judah, and built Ramah, that he might not suffer any to go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

18 Then Asa took all the silver and the gold that were left in the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house, and delivered them into the hand of his servants: and king Asa sent them to Ben-hadad, the son of Tabrimmon, the son of Hezio, king of Syria, that dwelt at Damascus, saying,

19 There is a league between me and of his father and his own votive gifts, silver, and gold, and vessels.

16 And there was war between Asa and Ba'asha king of Israel all their days. 17 Ba'asha king of Israel went up against Judah, and built Ramah, that he might permit no one to go out or come in to Asa king of Judah. 18 Then Asa took all the silver and the gold that were left in the treasures of the house of the Lord and the treasures of the king's house, and gave them into the hands of his servants; and King Asa sent them to Ben-ha'dad the son of Tabrim'mon, the son of He'zi-on, king of Syria, who dwelt in Damascus, saying, 19 "Let there be

b) War Between Asa of Judah and Baasha of Israel (15:16-22)

The war had continued, apparently with little intermission if any, since the days of the secession of the north under Jeroboam. In Asa's time the war had gone so much in favor of the north that the warlike Baasha was able to build a fortress close to Jerusalem itself. Asa then appealed to the Syrian king of Damascus, whom he bribed to attack Baasha and thus relieve the pressure on Judah. In this way Asa rescued his country from a most difficult and awkward predicament.

17. Ramah is only two hours north of Jerusalem, and was evidently the northern limit of the kingdom of Judah at this time. It shows how weak Judah was compared with Israel, since Asa made no attempt himself to hold the town of Ramah, even when Baasha was forced to withdraw. He took the stones with which Baasha had been fortifying Ramah and used them to fortify (probably) Gibeah of Saul, about an hour's journey north of Jerusalem.

18. Some would identify this Ben-hadad with the king of the same name in 20:1, but 20:34 is against that. Hadad is the name of "the atmospheric high god" of the Ras Shamra tablets (Engnell, Studies in Divine Kingship, pp. 81, 213). He is the Mesopotamian Adad, and was equated with Baal. He "appears to have been adopted at a relatively late date by the Phoenicians" (Dussaud, Les découvertes de Ras Shamra, p. 697), and this seems to be reflected in the difficulty of securing the permission of El for the building of a house for Baal (Obermann, Ugaritic Mythology, pp. 1-4). The fact that the name Ben-hadad means "son of Hadad" cannot be taken as evidence that the king actually was regarded as the son of the god (Engnell, op. cit., p. 80), since the similar name Benaiah was not the name of any king in Israel. This latter fact supports the statement of S. A. Cook that Ben-hadad "may be a perfectly general name" (J. B. Bury, S. A. Cook, F. E. Adcock, eds., The Cambridge Ancient History [New York: The Macmillan Co., 1925], III, 362, n. 3).

The name Tabrimmon means "Rimmon is good," and is comparable to the Hebrew Tobiah (as LXX infers). Rimmon is the Assyrian storm god Rammanu, who thus easily becomes equated with Hadad (cf. Zech. 12:11, where the cult is the cult of Tam-muz), but it is notoriously difficult to keep the cult of the high storm-god separate from that of the vegetation-god.

Ben-hadad's father, here called Hezio, may be the Rezon of 11:23-24, who founded the kingdom of Damascus. There is division of opinion concerning this, but the spelling of the LXX tends to support the identification.

19. If there was indeed a league between the two fathers, then Let there be a league cannot be right. This reading arises from the rendering of the LXX. On the other 20 So Ben-hadad hearkened unto king Asa, and sent the captains of the hosts which he had against the cities of Israel, and smote Ijon, and Dan, and Abel-beth-maacha, and all Chinneroth, with all the land of Naphtali.

21 And it came to pass, when Baasha heard thereof, that he left off building of Ramah, and dwelt in Tirzah.

22 Then king Asa made a proclamation throughout all Judah; none was exempt: and they took away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha had builded; and king Asa built with them Geba of Benjamin, and Mizpah.

23 The rest of all the acts of Asa, and all his might, and all that he did, and the cities which he built, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah? Nevertheless in the time of his old age he was diseased in his feet.

24 And Asa slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David his father: and Jehoshaphat his son reigned in his stead.

25 And Nadab the son of Jeroboam began to reign over Israel in the second year of Asa king of Judah, and reigned over Israel two years.

hand, if there was already a league in operation between the two kingdoms it is difficult to see why Asa should send such great treasure to the Syrian king. The easiest solution is that there was a lapsed covenant alliance which Asa is seeking to renew. In this case the rendering of the LXX and the RSV has justification, since the syntax of the Hebrew will allow the renderings of both the KJV and the RSV. Asa's sending treasure is, however, really a sending of tribute.

20. The Syrian king raided the whole of the northwestern Israelite territory, including all Chinneroth, the fertile plain to the northwest of the Sea of Galilee, now known as el-Ghuwer.

c) Death of Asa (15:23-24)

23-24. The regular obituary notice for a king of Judah. To this there is added a note to the effect that Asa in his old age . . . was diseased in his feet. The disease may not actually have been in his feet, since this word is sometimes used as a euphemism for the reproductive organs. If this is the case, the note may mean that Asa ceased to be king before his death, since any man so afflicted would be ineligible to retain any "sacred" office, whether that of priest or of king.

3. Nadab of Israel (15:25-32)

25-32. The account of Nadab's short reign, before he himself was murdered by another usurper, is without significance, except that his destruction of the whole family 26 And he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the way of his father, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin.

27 ¶ And Baasha the son of Ahijah, of the house of Issachar, conspired against him; and Baasha smote him at Gibbethon, which belonged to the Philistines; for Nadab and all Israel laid siege to Gibbethon.

28 Even in the third year of Asa king of Judah did Baasha slay him, and reigned in his stead.

29 And it came to pass, when he reigned, that he smote all the house of Jeroboam; he left not to Jeroboam any that breathed, until he had destroyed him, according unto the saying of the LORD, which he spake by his servant Ahijah the Shilonite:

30 Because of the sins of Jeroboam which he sinned, and which he made Israel sin, by his provocation wherewith he provoked the LORD God of Israel to anger.

31 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Nadab, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

32 And there was war between Asa and Baasha king of Israel all their days.

33 In the third year of Asa king of Judah began Baasha the son of Ahijah to reign over all Israel in Tirzah, twenty and four years.

34 And he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the way of Jeroboam, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin.

16 Then the word of the LORD came to Jehu the son of Hanani against Baasha, saying, of Jeroboam was in harmony with contemporary ideas. If the whole family was wiped out there was no avenger of blood left, and the murderer was safe. This wholesale slaughter was the regular procedure, and commonly took place on all such occasions (cf. II Kings 10:17).

4. BAASHA OF ISRAEL (15:33–16:7)

These verses contain the customary introduction and the customary obituary notice, together with a short oracle foretelling the speedy doom of Baasha's house.

16:1. JEHU son of Hanani is mentioned by the Chronicler as being responsible for a history which was "inserted into the book of the kings of Israel" (II Chr. 20:34).

16:1. Messengers of God.—And the word of the LORD came . . . . This phrase now becomes a frequent expression in the book (cf. 17:8; etc.). Nothing is more certain than that some persons at some moments are carried beyond the usual range of their thought and receive insights which seem to be given them from a higher wisdom. The narrow matter-of-fact work-
2 Forasmuch as I exalted thee out of the dust, and made thee prince over my people Israel; and thou hast walked in the way of Jeroboam, and hast made my people Israel to sin, to provoke me to anger with their sins;

3 Behold, I will take away the posterity of Baasha, and the posterity of his house; and will make thy house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

4 Him that dieth of Baasha in the city shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth of his in the fields shall the fowls of the air eat.

5 Now the rest of the acts of Baasha, and what he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

According to II Chr. 19:2, he also rebuked Jehoshaphat after the death of Ahab in 852 b.c. This was fully fifty years later, and it is just barely possible that the same man receives the promise of Christ: “It shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you.” (Matt. 10:19-20)

In studying the nature of mystical insight and divine revelation we need not magnify the mystery of the experience. Imagination at times becomes creative and with a leap of intuition outruns the leaden feet of logic. The poet’s insight and the artist’s vision are roads to reality, even though they cannot be surveyed with the measuring rod of science. “Poetry,” said Shelley, “redeems from decay the visitations of the divinity in man.” Moreover, the scientist’s flash of discovery bears much resemblance to the intuitive insight of the artist, the poet, and the religious seer. Theories may be verified by elaborate demonstration, but it is creative vision which projects the theories. When asked how he had discovered the law of gravity, Sir Isaac Newton replied: “By thinking about it continuously. . . . I keep the object of my research constantly before me, waiting until the first light begins to dawn, little by little; finally this changes and at last the light is complete.”

In addition to observation, imagination, and intuition, there is a moral set of the soul pre-

8 Essay, “A Defense of Poetry.”
6 So Baasha slept with his fathers, and was buried in Tirzah: and Elah his son reigned in his stead.

7 And also by the hand of the prophet Jehu the son of Hanani came the word of the Lord against Baasha, and against his house, even for all the evil that he did in the sight of the Lord, in provoking him to anger with the work of his hands, in being like the house of Jeroboam; and because he killed him.

8 ¶ In the twenty and sixth year of Asa king of Judah began Elah the son of Baasha to reign over Israel in Tirzah, two years.

9 And his servant Zimri, captain of half his chariots, conspired against him, as he was in Tirzah, drinking himself drunk in the house of Arza steward of his house in Tirzah.

10 And Zimri went in and smote him, and killed him, in the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah, and reigned in his stead.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, when he began to reign, as soon as he sat on his throne, was responsible for both incidents. The statement that Jehu son of Hanani spoke against Baasha is repeated in vs. 7, after the customary closing formula of the 610 B.C. compiler; it is most probably an addition made by the 550 B.C. editor.

5. ELAH OF ISRAEL (16:8-14)

This time the two customary notices are divided by a short account of the rebellion of Zimri, an incident which ended the short-lived dynasty of Baasha.

11. Zimri prevented a blood feud against his house by exterminating all Elah’s kinsmen, i.e., every male relation who could act as Elah’s gd’el. The function of the gd’el requisite to capturing the revelatory experience. As John A. Mackay put it: “There can be no true knowledge of ultimate things, that is to say, of God and man, of duty and destiny, that is not born in a concern and perfected in a commitment.” The seeker must crave to be something, not merely to know something. The will of God must have his vote before he can get its vision. The seeker must keep faith with God if he would receive the revelation from God.

When revelatory events occur, their recognition as divine revelation is always “internal history,” to use H. Richard Niebuhr’s expression. The external or case history of a hospital patient as kept by the doctors is very different from the autobiographical experience, or “inner history,” of the sick person as he climbs back up the road to health. Yet both are real, and both are history. Case histories cannot be written of those experiences wherein the word of the Lord came to Jehu or Elijah. The exaltation in which Isaiah “saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up” (Isa. 6:1) was an experience which no cameraman could photograph and no anatomist could dissect. The study of revelation must be approached by way of preparing the mood to receive it. We must look with the seers rather than at them. We cannot show the footprints of revelation, but we can start others on the stairs which lead to the throne of God. The genuine mystical element is probably the greatest single lack in the modern pulpit. Mystical insight must of course be safeguarded by social outlooks. Indi-he had seated himself on his throne, he killed all the house of Ba'asha; he did not leave him a single male of his kinsmen or his friends. 12 Thus Zimri destroyed all the house of Baasha, according to the word of the Lord, which he spoke against Baasha by Jehu the prophet, was that of executor and general vindicator of the deceased. It was his business to see that the deceased got his rights and that his name was perpetuated in Israel. He raised up a posterity to the deceased, if childless, by cohabiting with the widow until a son was born who would then inherit the name and the property of the dead man. It was the further duty of the go'êl, if the deceased man had been unjustly slain, to avenge his relative's death (Num. 35:19, 21; etc.).

13 For all the sins of Baasha, and the sins of Elah his son, by which they sinned, and by which they made Israel to sin, in provoking the Lord God of Israel to anger with their vanities.

13. The M.T. has vanities which the RSV rightly interprets as idols. The Hebrew word hêthel properly means “vapor,” “breath,” and it can be used adverbially to mean “to no purpose” (cf. Eccl. 1:2; etc.).

vild individual confrontation of the Holy Spirit may evaporate without generating any redemptive power. One may experience the apparent symptoms of inspiration without catching a revelation of God. There were false and true prophets in Israel. The two breeds still persist.

12. Does God Guide?—The specific and concrete evidence of divine guidance and judgment given in this primitive record arouses skepticism in the modern reader. Repeated reference is made to defeats and destruction which took place according to the word of the Lord. Such definitive tracing does not convince, but the question of how and how far God guides will not down.

When we lift our gaze to the long perspective of history it is hard to explain the nexus of events as the push of a “viewless, voiceless Turner of the Wheel,” as Thomas Hardy termed the blind purposeless will working through this world. It may be primitive and naive to see the destruction of the house of Baasha as determined by the Lord, but Hebrew history from Baasha to Bethlehem is hardly to be called

we think that out of the jungle of beastly gianthood the more intelligent and co-operative animals survived; when our minds try to grasp the stages through which man has worked up from savagery to the arts of speech, music, and painting, to the sciences of telegraphy and television, the only explanation which seems to account for this progress is that behind the universe there is an intelligent purpose, a guiding hand. Can intelligence in man evolve out of an unintelligent creation? Can man's concern for moral values be explained if there is nothing at the heart of the universe that cares?

But nothing that the universe viewed in the large gives evidence of divine guidance, can God be counted on as guide in the concrete affairs of individuals and nations? The wisdom writer speaks with assurance, “In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths” (Prov. 3:6). The singers of Israel in numerous psalms echo the same confidence. The prophets of Israel claim God's guidance for themselves, and offer it to those who commit the mind and will to him. Hosea puts it very personally when he interprets God as saying, “I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love” (Hos. 11:4). The cords of a man are not mechanical coercion like the harness of a horse. They are not outside pressure, but inner prescience and intuition. If we could get Hosea's point here, it would help to clear up some misconceptions about divine guidance.

If we are to apprehend God's guiding hand, 14 Now the rest of the acts of Elah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

15 ¶ In the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah did Zimri reign seven days in Tirzah. And the people were encamped against Gibbethon, which belonged to the Philistines.

16 And the people that were encamped heard say, Zimri hath conspired, and hath also slain the king: wherefore all Israel made Omri, the captain of the host, king over Israel that day in the camp.

17 And Omri went up from Gibbethon, and all Israel with him, and they besieged Tirzah.

6. Civil War (16:15-22)

15-22. Zimri, who commanded half the chariotry, assassinated Elah while he was feasting, and sought to make himself king, but when the army heard what had happened they supported the claims of their commander, Omri. In the subsequent fighting Omri captured Tirzah, and when Zimri fled into the palace he burned it over his head. This was not the end of the matter, however, for Omri still had to deal with another adversary in his quest for the throne. This man’s name was Tibni, but who exactly he was is nowhere stated. It is evident that the civil war was a much more serious and prolonged affair than a cursory reading of the story would suggest. The LXX has an addition at the end of vs. 22 to the effect that “Tibni died and Joram his brother at that time, and Omri reigned instead of Tibni.” The civil war seems to have lasted for four years (cf. vss. 16, 23) and, if the LXX is right, Tibni was at one time in a much stronger position than Omri.

we must look for him in the realm of mind and spirit rather than in external physical manifestations. “God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth” (John 4:24). If we are to worship God in spirit, we must expect God to work with us and for us through the spirit. One trouble is that we materially-minded folk look for God’s guidance in external, mechanical ways. If there is a washout on the railroad, causing us to miss our appointment, it is not for us to see in that an evidence of God’s will that we should not have made the appointment. Or suppose that the train which we had planned to take, but missed, is wrecked with the loss of many lives. Are we to interpret that as God’s special providence for us? If so, how shall we explain his attitude toward the unfortunate dead? We must beware lest we confuse coincidence with divine concern, and our personal whims with God’s purposes. Nor on the other hand should we make divine guidance a trivial matter. We should begin each day with a prayer for divine illumination and leading, but we should not stop to ask God at every turn which road to take, which person to speak to, which book to pick up. God leads us “with cords of a man,” reason, evidence, and luminous thinking, not by the leading strings of a child.

In addition to the long perspective and the spiritual outlook, we need patience in our apprehension of divine guidance. Devout persons give amazing testimonies to quick answers to prayer. A minister told of needing a thousand dollars for a church enterprise. He prayed for it one evening, and the next morning a check for that amount was in his mail. He believed that was a direct answer to his prayer. It may have been. But when we get to thinking of God working in such quick fashion, we are likely to lose faith when higher help lingers. Too many of us are religious speculators rather than religious investors. We look for the quick returns of religion and are too impatient to be content with long-term investments. Those who gamble on God usually lose their faith, or else deal in counterfeit currency. But devoted souls who put their energies into godly enterprises and sacri-
18 And it came to pass, when Zimri saw that the city was taken, that he went into the palace of the king's house, and burnt the king's house over him with fire, and died, 19 for his sins which he sinned in doing evil in the sight of the LORD, in walking in the way of Jeroboam, and in his sin which he did, to make Israel to sin. 20 Now the rest of the acts of Zimri, and his treason that he wrought, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

21 ¶ Then were the people of Israel divided into two parts: half of the people followed Tibni the son of Ginath, to make him king; and half followed Omri.

22 But the people that followed Omri prevailed against the people that followed Tibni the son of Ginath: so Tibni died, and Omri reigned.

23 ¶ In the thirty and first year of Asa king of Judah began Omri to reign over Israel, twelve years: six years reigned he in Tirzah.

7. Omri of Israel (16:23-28)

23-28. Omri must have been a capable, successful, and powerful king, but the southern Deuteronomic writer passes by his reign almost in silence, saying little more than that he built Samaria and reigned wickedly for twelve years. The compiler was interested mainly in religious matters, and in them only in so far as they affected the Deuteronomic principles which were the actual occasion of his writing. Happily we know something of the prowess of Omri from the Moabite Stone. According to II. 4-8, “Omri king of Israel afflicted Moab many days. . . . And Omri had taken possession of the [land?] of Mēḥēḏēḇa, and [Israel] dwelt therein during his days and half his son’s days, even forty years” (Burney, Notes on Hebrew Text of Kings, pp. 371-72). Nothing is mentioned of this subjugation of Moab by Omri in the Bible narrative, though there is a reference to Mesha of Moab’s successful revolt (II Kings 3:4). A further tribute to Omri’s greatness is found in the annals of the Assyrian King Shalmaneser II, who refers to Jehu as “Ja-u-a . . . the son of Omri” (ibid., p. 375). The Assyrian kings continue to refer to Israel as “the land of the house of Omri” right down to the time when they conquered the country and incorporated it as a province in the Assyrian Empire.

official service, looking for guidance through spiritual channels, never felt cheated at the end of life. “I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day” (II Tim. 1:12).

25, 30. The Momentum of Evil.—Ahab . . . did more evil than all who were before him. Ahab his son was even worse. Sin rarely stops where the men who start it may expect it to halt. It develops a mounting momentum which gets beyond control.

This truth can be traced in the career of a single individual or generation. Those who sow the wind often live to reap the whirlwind (Hos. 8:7). When Lot ungenerously chose the Jordan plain for his inheritance, he “pitched his tent toward Sodom” (Gen. 13:12). Lot at first probably had no intention of mingling with the sinners of Sodom. If such a thing had been mentioned to him, he would probably have replied that it was farthest from his thought. But while it was far from intention, it was not far enough from his imagination. His tent was pitched toward the wicked city. That Sodom slope may be gradual, but gravity is at work;
24 And he bought the hill Samaria of Shemer for two talents of silver, and built on the hill, and called the name of the city which he built, after the name of Shemer, owner of the hill, Samaria.

25 But Omri wrought evil in the eyes of the LORD, and did worse than all that were before him.

26 For he walked in all the way of Jero-boam the son of Nebat, and in his sin wherein he made Israel to sin, to provoke the LORD God of Israel to anger with their vanities.

27 Now the rest of the acts of Omri which he did, and his might that he showed, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

28 So Omri slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria: and Ahab his son reigned in his stead.

29 And in the thirty and eighth year of Asa king of Judah began Ahab the son of Omri to reign over Israel: and Ahab the son of Omri reigned over Israel in Samaria twenty and two years.

30 And Ahab the son of Omri did evil in the sight of the LORD above all that were before him.

It is evident that they regarded Omri as the founder of the kingdom, and his fame must have been considerable. His building of Samaria showed sound political insight, and it is comparable in wisdom to David's choice of Jerusalem as his capital. The city of Samaria stood on the top of a hill rising some three hundred feet from the surrounding plain, a tremendously strong position for the warfare of those days, and with distinct possibilities for defense even in these. The reference in Mic. 6:16 to "the statutes of Omri" is further testimony to his greatness, since that verse was written some considerable time after Omri's death.

C. Ahab and Elijah (16:29–22:40)

1. Ahab of Israel (16:29–34)

The formal accession notice is given in vss. 29-30, and the obituary notice is in 22:39-40. We have four other verses in ch. 16 which give additional details of Ahab's and Lot, whose character was revealed by his choice of the low and fertile country, drifted toward further satisfaction of his selfish desires until he found himself caught in the calamities of the corrupt city. When sin has the longer slope of heredity its momentum increases from generation to generation. An evil father furnishes both blood stream and mental environment as channels for sin's cumulative force. Omri does more evil than his predecessors (but see Exeg.), and Ahab, the son who comes after him, outstrips his father's sins.

On the wide social scale sin often has the aspects of a flood. Evil thoughts and practices keep falling like rain back in the hills of men's minds. Tributaries pour their muddy waters into the social mind. The dams of restraint give way. The flood rises with frightening and unbelievable rapidity, engulfing the unsuspecting and sleeping victims. In the kings and people of Israel from Solomon on, the momentum of evil gathers in individual, hereditary, and tribal channels, until in Omri and Ahab it is at the flood.
31 And it came to pass, as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, that he took to wife Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal king of the Zidonians, and went and served Baal, and worshipped him.

32 And he reared up an altar for Baal in the house of Baal, which he had built in Samaria.

33 And Ahab made a grove; and Ahab did more to provoke the LORD God of Israel to anger than all the kings of Israel that were before him.

34 ¶ In his days did Hi'el the Beth-elite build Jericho: he laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his firstborn, and set up the gates thereof in his youngest son Segub, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake by Joshua the son of Nun.

were before him. 31 And as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jerobo'am the son of Nebat, he took for wife Jez'e'bel the daughter of Eth ba'al king of the Sid o'ni ans, and went and served Ba'al, and worshiped him. 32 He erected an altar for Ba'al in the house of Ba'al, which he built in Samar'ia. 33 And Ahab made an As he'rah. Ahab did more to pro-voke the LORD, the God of Israel, to anger than all the kings of Israel who were before him. 34 In his days Hi'el of Bethel built Jericho; he laid its foundation at the cost of Abi'ram his first-born, and set up its gates at the cost of his youngest son Segub, according to the word of the LORD, which he spoke by Joshua the son of Nun.

greater crimes against the true worship of the God of Israel and also make mention of the rebuilding of Jericho, which had been a desolate site for several hundred years. Otherwise, apart from such formal notices as that in II Kings 3:2-3, where the compiler had to mention the accession of a new king, the whole section from I Kings 17:1–II Kings 10:31 is an interpolation from the three or four unnamed sources which have been called "Tales of the North" in the Intro.

31. Ahab's greatest crime in the eyes of the Deuteronomists was that he married Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal, priest-king of Tyre. Whether this marriage was so regarded in the north is open to doubt, since Ps. 45 bears every indication of being a love song in which Ahab and Jezebel appear to be the hero and the heroine (cf. vss. 8, 12-15). Jezebel's father was Ithobal I. According to Josephus (Against Apion I. 18. 8), this Ithobal was a priest of Astarte who, at the age of thirty-six, murdered the fratricide Phelles, and then reigned for thirty-two years. Josephus also says that twenty-two years after Ithobal's death, his granddaughter fled from her brother and built Carthage. This is that Dido whom Aeneas is fabled to have met on his journey from Troy to Rome. The zeal of Jezebel for the Tyrian cult may thus be traced to her father's double function and earlier training. This house of Ithobal certainly bred masterful women, for of them three close kinswomen, Jezebel, Athaliah, and Dido, were born to rule.

32. Jezebel's god was Baal-Melkart, tutelary god of Tyre, whose worship was partly assimilated to that of the Baal of the Ras Shamra texts, and who in later years was identified with Hercules (II Macc. 4:19).

34. Hi'el of Bethel built Jericho . . . at the cost of . . . his first-born and of his last-born. Thus the ancient curse of Josh. 6:26 accomplished its inevitable fulfillment. Some scholars have thought of this tragedy in terms of a voluntary sacrifice on the part of the father, the spirits of the children being regarded henceforth as guardians of the gate. Others hold that some tragic fate overtook them and that popular opinion recognized a connection with the ancient curse. It is quite possible that we have here an example of the ancient custom of foundation sacrifices, common in widely separated lands. The theory is that the victims were buried beneath the foundations "in order to give strength and stability to the edifice or to guard against enemies" (Frazer, Folk-lore in the O.T., I, 421). Actual examples of such burials have been found at Gezer. Under the foundations of a building there, the excavators found the upper half of the skeleton of an eighteen-year-old boy and two complete skeletons of men (R. A. S. Macalister, The Excavation of Gezer [London: J. Murray, 1912], II, 428).
And Elijah the Tishbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead, said unto Ahab, As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word.

2 And the word of the Lord came unto him, saying,

3 Get thee hence, and turn thee eastward, and hide thyself by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

2. The Feeding of Elijah (17:1-24)

Elijah is fed at first by the notoriously voracious ravens, and when the drought has persisted so long that the Wadi Cherith is dried up, he is fed by a poor widow of Phoenicia, herself on the point of starvation when Elijah first searches her out. The chapter concludes with the story of the death and restoration of the widow’s son.

17:1. The name Elijah means “Yah is El,” El being the general Semitic name for the High God. Thus Elijah’s own name is the proclamation of his message (see 18:8). It is one of a number of instances in which, perhaps by deliberate intent, the name fits the character or the mission: e.g., Isaiah (“Yah is salvation,” cf. Isa. 30:15), Barnabas (“Son of exhortation,” Acts 4:36), and even Jesus (Matt. 1:21).

The older scholars follow the M.T., of which the natural interpretation is that Elijah came from Tishbe in Naphtali (cf. Tob. 1:2), but that he had settled among the Gileadites east of the Jordan. Modern scholars are unanimous in following the LXX, which reads different vowels (mittishbē for mittōshābhē), and says that Elijah was a Tishbite, of Tishbe in Gilead. It is more than likely that this latter interpretation is right. The word סביא (“sojourner,” “setler”) is late, the only other case out of a total of fourteen where it is not certainly postexilic being Ps. 39:12, and that reference may be postexilic also.

Josephus says (Antiquities VIII. 13. 2) that according to Menander there was a full year’s drought in the time of Ethbaal, father of Jezebel, “but when he made supplications there came great thunders.”

3. Tradition says that the brook Cherith is the Wadi el-Kelt, the traditional Valley of Achor, near which Jericho is situated, but the O.T. makes it plain that it was east of Jordan, one of those rocky defiles through which torrents rush headlong into the Jordan in the time of the rains.

17:24. God’s Mysterious Moves.—How a modern reporter would describe the events pictured in this chapter, we do not know. When we confront the biblical account of miracles we are impelled to ask just what did happen. Of this we cannot be absolutely sure, because of the changed modes of observing and recording. And when we also ask how the events happened, again we cannot be sure, because our body of scientifically observable data is but an island of charted knowledge surrounded by an ocean of mystery. The larger the island grows, the larger the shoreline of the mysterious. The more we learn, the more we realize how much is beyond our knowing. The eminent physicist, Sir James Jeans, very properly entitled his memorable book The Mysterious Universe.

The actual world of the mathematician who wrote Alice in Wonderland was as puzzling as the realm described in the little book. Alice was puzzled because the balls and mallets did not stay put in her game. In her wonderland things moved without her moving them. Like the child, we adults have to learn that we are not the only players in the game of living. Things do not always remain as we leave them. Things happen that we do not ask for. There is One also present “able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us” (Eph. 3:20). The living God in his living universe has a range of activity beyond ours, somewhat as the shades of color exceed our reach of vision. Our eyes can catch the colors of the spectrum, and now
4 And it shall be, that thou shalt drink of the brook; and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there.

5 So he went and did according unto the word of the Lord: for he went and dwelt by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

6 And the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening; and he drank of the brook.

7 And it came to pass after a while, that the brook dried up, because there had been no rain in the land.

8 ¶ And the word of the Lord came unto him, saying,

9 Arise, get thee to Zarephath, which belongeth to Sidon, and dwell there: behold, I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee.

10 So he arose and went to Zarephath. And when he came to the gate of the city, behold, the widow woman was there gathering of sticks: and he called to her, and said, Fetch me, I pray thee, a little water in a vessel, that I may drink.

11 And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thine hand.

12 And she said, As the Lord thy God liveth, I have not a cake, but a handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse: and, behold, I am gathering two sticks, that I may go in and dress it for me and my son, that we may eat it, and die.

4. Attempts to rationalize the story have turned the ravens into merchants or into Arabians (both reading 'arabhím instead of 'ôrebhím, but it is best to leave the story as it is. We have a whole series of wonder stories in these "Tales of the North," and a more-than-human ingenuity is required in order to excise all miraculous elements from them.

9. Zarephath is commonly identified with the village of Šarafand, some nine miles south of Sidon on the Mediterranean coast.

we have discovered that beyond the red are the infrared and beyond the violet are rays of color called ultraviolet. Who can say what remains to be detected beyond these? As in the days of Elijah, we do not know what wonders are waiting around the corners of the tomorrows. Yet while

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform, he is not a whimsical, capricious despot. God does not reverse himself, issuing one order today, and repealing it tomorrow. God's surprises are the surprises not of whim but of plus. Elijah hears the divine call to hide himself by the brook Cherith. The brook dries up. But its drying leads him to new opportunities and resources. Following the Lord's further leading, the prophet is guided from the problem of saving his own life to the privilege of saving a widow's faith and her son's life.

This chapter is a study in the relationship between produce and providence. When Jesus bade his disciples, "Take . . . no thought for the morrow" (Matt. 6:34), he was not counseling them to overlook the morrow, but to look 13 And Elijah said unto her, Fear not; go and do as thou hast said: but make me thereof a little cake first, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and for thy son.
14 For thus saith the LORD God of Israel, The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the LORD sendeth rain upon the earth.
15 And she went and did according to the saying of Elijah: and she, and he, and her house, did eat many days.
16 And the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake by Elijah.
17 ¶ And it came to pass after these things, that the son of the woman, the mistress of the house, fell sick; and his sickness was so sore, that there was no breath left in him.
18 And she said unto Elijah, What have I to do with thee, O thou man of God? art thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?
19 And he said unto her, Give me thy son. And he took him out of her bosom, and carried him up into a loft, where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed.
20 And he cried unto the LORD, and said, O LORD my God, hast thou also brought evil upon the widow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son?

18. The English versions all paraphrase the Hebrew idiom, which in the O.T. (Judg. 11:12; II Sam. 16:10; 19:22; etc.) and in the N.T. (Matt. 8:29; 27:19; John 2:4) refers to undesired outside interference. It is best therefore to translate, "What have you to do with me?"

The widow thinks that the man of God has brought God so close to her that he has discovered some hidden sin, and that the untimely death of her son is the punishment. Such a primitive idea of God as one who is seeking out unwitting or long-forgotten sins, and being fervent in dealing out strict penalties, is far from dead even today (cf. the frequent question, "What have I done to deserve this?").

20. Elijah regards the death of the boy as an act of arbitrary injustice on the part of God. This had happened to the very widow whom God himself had chosen to feed over it to catch the long views of the kingdom ahead. Elijah the Tishbite is being prepared through his contacts with the dribbling brook and the widow's cruse for his larger dealings with kings and entrenched religious cults. A miracle is an event with which human comprehension has not yet caught up. It is not an interruption of law, but the working of a law which human reason has not yet charted. Difficulty in understanding the precise methods of God's dealing with Elijah should not deter us from standing open-eyed and open-minded be-21 And he stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the LORD, and said, O LORD my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again.

22 And the LORD heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived.

23 And Elijah took the child, and brought him down out of the chamber into the house, and delivered him unto his mother: and Elijah said, See, thy son liveth.

24 ¶ And the woman said to Elijah, Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the LORD in thy mouth is truth.

18 And it came to pass after many days, that the word of the LORD came to Elijah in the third year, saying, Go, show thyself unto Ahab; and I will send rain upon the earth.

I sojourn, by slaying her son?" 21 Then he stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried to the LORD, "O LORD my God, let this child's soul come into him again." 22 And the LORD hearkened to the voice of Eli'jah; and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived.

23 And Eli'jah took the child, and brought him down from the upper chamber into the house, and delivered him to his mother; and Eli'jah said, "See, your son lives." 24 And the woman said to Eli'jah, "Now I know that you are a man of God, and that the word of the LORD in your mouth is truth."

18 After many days the word of the LORD came to Eli'jah, in the third year, saying, "Go, show yourself to Ahab; the prophet during the long drought and the subsequent famine and, as if she had not had enough anxiety and privation in the general distress, he has added this extra visitation. It is evident that the ideas concerning the nature and character of God in the ninth century B.C. emphasized his arbitrariness rather than his justice and his mercy. This is a survival of the ancient ideas concerning the denizens of the spirit world, and it behooved all men to be careful since no one knew whether the spirit powers would act for man's weal or woe.

21. The LXX says that Elijah "breathed into the child," but this technique of stretching over the child is mentioned in the other two recorded cases of this type (II Kings 4:34-35; Acts 20:10).

The number three shares with the number seven a special magico-religious power (cf. 8:65). It is easy, however, to exaggerate the importance and significance of the number three in primitive ideas. The threefold repetition of an action is not regarded as being effective nearly as often as is generally supposed. Certainly in ancient Hebrew lore the true magic number is seven.

22. The translation the soul of the child came into him again is misleading, since it supports the illusion that the word "soul" is used in the Bible for some part of man's nature which is immortal and therefore survives death. Neither the Hebrew nēphesh nor the N.T. Greek ψυχή refers to an immortal soul of man, even though both words are regularly translated "soul," 460 times in the O.T. and 57 times in the N.T. Usually the best rendering of nēphesh is "life," in the sense of that ordinary, physical life which ends at death. In the LXX the Greek ψυχή is used in precisely the sense of the Hebrew nēphesh, and this sense of the word is carried over into the N.T. (N. H. Snaith, "Life after Death," Interpretation, I [1947], 309-13).

3. Elijah at Carmel (18:1-46)

The drought is about to end, and Elijah is bidden to appear again before Ahab. The king and his chief steward, Obadiah, are searching the whole country for fodder to keep the chariot horses alive, when suddenly Elijah appears to Obadiah. The narrator interrupts his story to tell of how Obadiah, a faithful adherent of the Lord, has nourished a hundred faithful prophets during the drought and Jezebel's persecution. Obadiah is loath to obey Elijah and to report his presence to Ahab, lest when Ahab comes, Elijah should have disappeared in that strange and miraculous way which men had learned 2 And Elijah went to show himself unto Ahab. And there was a sore famine in Samaria.

3 And Ahab called Obadiah, which was the governor of his house. (Now Obadiah feared the Lord greatly:

4 For it was so, when Jezebel cut off the prophets of the Lord, that Obadiah took a hundred prophets, and hid them by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water.)

5 And Ahab said unto Obadiah, Go into the land, unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks: peradventure we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive, that we lose not all the beasts.

6 So they divided the land between them to pass throughout it: Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

And I will send rain upon the earth.” 2 So Eli’jah went to show himself to Ahab. Now the famine was severe in Samaria. 3 And Ahab called Obad’i’ah, who was over the household. (Now Obad’i’ah revered the Lord greatly; 4 and when Jez’e’bel cut off the prophets of the Lord, Obad’i’ah took a hundred prophets and hid them by fifties in a cave, and fed them with bread and water.) 5 And Ahab said to Obad’i’ah, “Go through the land to all the springs of water and to all the valleys; perhaps we may find grass and save the horses and mules alive, and not lose some of the animals.” 6 So they divided the land between them to pass through it; Ahab went in one direction by himself, and Obad’i’ah went in another direction by himself.

to associate with him. But Elijah swears an oath that he will stay, with the result that Ahab comes. Elijah then bids the king stage a contest on Mount Carmel, in order that all Israel may see who it is that brings the rain, whether the Syrian Baal or the God of Israel. After the failure of the Baal prophets, Elijah calls down fire from heaven. The sacrifice is consumed; Elijah mounts the hill to watch for the coming clouds, and the chapter closes with the deluge of the long-delayed rains; Ahab races across the edge of the Plain of Esdraelon, with Elijah running ahead, lest he be caught in the mud before he reaches the higher ground of the Vale of Jezreel.

18:2. The famine "had a firm hold" on the country. The same word is used of Absalom's head being firmly held by the branches of the tree (II Sam. 18:9).

4. The prophets of the Lord were the "sons of the prophets," i.e., the groups of prophets who were attached to the various shrines (II Kings 2:3, 5), or who roamed the countryside (I Sam. 10:5-13; Aubrey R. Johnson, The Cultic Prophet in Ancient Israel fore the demonstration of power when a surrendered spirit becomes the instrument of the Infinite.

18:3. Being Good in Bad Places.—Elijah was sent by the Lord to interview King Ahab, of whom it was written that he "did more to provoke the Lord, the God of Israel, to anger than all the kings of Israel who were before him" (16:33). Jezebel, the wife of Ahab, was so conspicuous for her evil-doing that her name has become a synonym for colorful wickedness. She incurred the bitter condemnation of the O.T. writers by her espousal of the priests of Baal. And now Elijah is on his way to bear these royal wrongdoers in their den of idolatry.

Just before Elijah's arrival, Ahab summons the overseer of his household, Obadiah. In describing this official, the record says, Now Obadiah revered the Lord greatly. It is a plain little parenthetical statement, but it gives the character of Obadiah a symbolic significance. He was a good man in a bad place. Should a person who reveres the Lord remain in a pagan court? How can one preserve his reverence and righteousness in such evil surroundings? Can a good man change a bad situation when it is embedded in a system? Obadiah's plight raises many searching questions which are as pertinent today as in the time of Ahab. Even within so-called Christian lands this is still a rather pagan world. Society, as we have it, is the immense and unruveled result of the actions and inactions of an infinite number of people who have wished to be as free from trouble as possible. They therefore have followed the lines of least resistance. These lines have crisscrossed the landscape on which we have to live and have been worn into grooves of convention and compromise. Hence when a person sets out to follow God and his own conscience he has to make his way through a meshwork of systems and traditions.

Just before World War II, the president of an American college said to a graduating class:
7 And as Obadiah was in the way, behold, Elijah met him: and he knew him, and fell on his face, and said, Art thou that my lord Elijah?

8 And he answered him, I am: go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

9 And he said, What have I sinned, that thou wouldst deliver thy servant into the hand of Ahab, to slay me?

10 As the Lord thy God liveth, there is no nation or kingdom, whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee: and when they said, He is not there; he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that they found thee not.

11 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

12 And it shall come to pass, as soon as I am gone from thee, that the Spirit of the Lord shall carry thee whither I know not;

[Cardiff: University of Wales Press Board, 1944], especially p. 21). Such men have been a common feature of religions from early times, and they are still to be met with in the shams of Siberia and the dervishes of the Near East.

7. It has been suggested that Obadiah had never seen Elijah before but recognized him only from the memory of popular description. This is unlikely in view of Obadiah’s important position at court. Furthermore, his words should be translated, “Is it really you, Elijah?” The form of this question can be sufficiently well explained by Elijah’s most mysterious absence during three years and more, and also by his continued disappearance, in spite of the most rigorous search on the part of the king with all the resources at his disposal.

12. It is difficult to be sure whether the word רוח should here be translated by Spirit or “wind,” since probably the author himself had no thought of making such a distinction. Obadiah means that the mysterious power of God may wait the prophet away and hide him miraculously as had apparently happened during the preceding three years. On account of this belief, Obadiah refuses to carry the message to Ahab until Elijah has

“I feel sorry for you as you leave these halls and go out into the world. I feel sorry for you because of what the world will do to you and to your ideals. Too often a man’s ideals are in inverse ratio to his distance from college.” True indeed! But the temptations which tear at a person’s ideals do not begin after graduation from college. Many a student faces at school and college some of the fiercest moral struggles of his life. And the test of being good in bad places comes often before the campus is reached. Not all our homes are wholesome for growing children. Sometimes the character of one or both parents is so bad that the shell of the home has to be broken so that the children can grow up decently. When family attitudes are selfish, when family interests are materialistic, when family loyalties are weakened by distrust and deceit, the home is a hard place in which to be good. The larger the group, the more difficult it is to permeate it with the principles of personal goodness. In the words of Mandell Creighton:

Christianity beautifies many an individual life and sheds a luster over many a family. Its influence is less conspicuous in the life of business; it pales in the sphere of what is called society and is still dimmer in politics. In the region of international obligations it can scarcely be said to exist.*

What can the individual do when he finds himself in a bad place? Sometimes the best thing to do in an evil situation is to leave it. Many of the early Christians did just that. A Christian should get out of a business which is a perpetual rebuke to his conscience. A Christian may have and when I come and tell Ahab, and he cannot find thee, he shall slay me: but I thy servant fear the LORD from my youth.

13 Was it not told my lord what I did when Jezebel slew the prophets of the L ORD, how I hid a hundred men of the L ORD's prophets by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water?

14 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here: and he shall slay me.

15 And Elijah said, As the LORD of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, I will surely show myself unto him to-day.

bound himself by a most solemn oath to stay where he is (vs. 15). It is likely that Obadiah did actually think of Elijah as being carried away by a wind, but he would also think of the wind as being sent especially by God for that purpose.

15. The origin of the full and solemn title L ORD of hosts (Yahweh 'ĕbha`ôth) is disputed. The most generally accepted explanation is founded on 1 Sam. 17:45, where the phrase occurs, “The L ORD of hosts, the god of the armies of Israel.” The reference here is to the actual battalions of the kingdom of Israel, and may be a later insertion, but even if this is the case it is nevertheless a very early explanation of the meaning of the divine title. The phrase L ORD of hosts seems largely to belong to the prophets. Smend suggested that it meant originally the armies of heaven, i.e., the elements and the natural forces of the world, with Amos (e.g., 9:5-6) as the pioneer in using it. Another view is that the reference is to armies of angels, the angelic servants of the King of heaven. Actually, the phrase belongs to the ninth century B.C., and it is to be explained on the same lines as the phrase “the chariots of Israel and its horsemen” (II Kings 2:12), an expression especially, and indeed peculiarly, associated with Elijah and his successor Elisha. It is a reference to the armies of God, those angelic beings who obey his commands.

to dissociate himself from a social group whose ideals are low and whose practices are degrading. A clean-cut withdrawal has an eloquence of protest which no verbal expostulation can parallel. But as a general rule righteous individuals do not save a situation by merely withdrawing from it. Furthermore, while a man can leave a situation, he cannot so easily leave the whole system in which he is caught. He may pull out of a particular business, but if he is to make a living he cannot easily withdraw from the whole business system. He may feel impelled to leave a political party, but if he is to exercise his duties as a citizen, he must vote in some party, and where is the perfect one? He may conscientiously object to his government's program, as in time of war, but when 90 per cent of a nation's economy is geared to the war effort, even the pacifist can hardly separate himself completely from the system. We are social beings, involved in social systems, and we cannot separate ourselves from all the groups which do things contrary to our consciences. In fact, there can be no effective moral isolation in God's family. The godly person has to get along with the crowd well enough to help get the crowd along. Jesus prayed for his followers, “Not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil” (John 17:15).

Jesus suggested memorable ways by which his followers might leaven and sweeten bad situations. “Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted?” (Matt. 5:13.) However evil the place, is the savor of goodness still in us? Can we identify ourselves in fellowship with others and yet keep our judgments independent of theirs? Do we have the courage of our convictions and yet have compassion for those we are trying to convince? Do we have the saltlike quality of bringing out the natural flavor of other personalities? The Master used another figure: “Ye are the light of the world” (Matt. 5:14). And he added that the Christian's light is not to be hid under a bushel but to be set where it can give light to all that are in the house. The godly person must make clear where he stands on 16 So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him: and Ahab went to meet Elijah.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, when Ahab saw Elijah, that Ahab said unto him, Art thou he that troubleth Israel?

Associated with this is the fact that in the narratives of Elijah and Elisha the manifestations of the Lord are regularly in fire, e.g., vs. 38, the fire of the Lord, which we may assume to be lightning.

16. According to the LXX, Ahab “ran forth” to meet Elijah, a natural and picturesque addition, especially considering that for years so very much had depended upon Ahab’s seeing Elijah. It was only according to the spoken word of this prophet that the rains could come (17:2).

17. Ahab sees in Elijah the man who stirs up needless trouble in Israel. The king never really understood what Elijah’s object was, and why he did all the things that caused so much difficulty. Two of Ahab’s sons had Yahwistic, theophoric names, viz., Ahaziah and Jehoram. It is most unlikely that Ahab would have consented to such a practice unless he had believed himself to be a true worshiper of Yahweh of Israel. In common with most of the people, perhaps in common with all except the prophetic bands (the sons of the prophets), Ahab did not see why he could not combine the worship of the God of Israel with the cult of Baal. Such syncretism is a marked feature of moral principles. He must stand up and show his colors. He can count for righteousness only as he has the courage to stand up and be counted. When his goodness is radiant, it becomes pervasive.

When a good man finds himself in a bad situation, he must not yield to the paralysis of perfectionism. When he is willing to work with imperfect instruments, to use half measures when whole ones are impossible, to do the duty next to him when the ultimate goal is hidden in the haze of distance, he joins his efforts with One “that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us” (Eph. 3:20). Moreover, there is a cell principle by which group life can be affected. One thoroughgoing Christian can impart a godly spirit to a family, even though every other member of it may be pagan. A half-dozen devout members, if sufficiently devoted, can change the atmosphere of a church. Group and systems may be more than mere aggregations of atomistic units; they are often organisms possessing a characteristic life of their own. And if a minority, or even a single individual, gets into the blood stream of such a living organism, the results are illimitable.

During World War II a white officer was assigned to take charge of a company of Negro soldiers in training for commissions. Because of his family background, the white commander was so angered by his assignment that he declared, “If any of you get commissions, it will be in spite of me.” This so incensed the Negroes that some cried, some cursed, some were for waylaying the officer. But one quiet member of the company spoke up: “Listen fellows, we are men and soldiers. We are loyal Americans. We are Negroes. Our honor is at stake. We represent the best that our race affords. The eyes of America are upon us. Let’s play square soldier for this man, and trust in God.” The men heeded his advice. They outdid themselves to obey instructions. As a result 55 per cent, a larger percentage than usual, received commissions. At the close of the training a reception was given by the Negro community to the new officers. The white commander attended, and made a public confession of his change of heart, declaring, “I’m your friend until I die.”

Good men in bad places can often do by demonstrations what reformers try and fail to do by agitation.

17. Divine Troublers.—Twice elsewhere Elijah is hailed as coming to make trouble (17:18; 21:20). The prophet of God is always a disturber of worldly peace. He comes to give a peace, but “not as the world giveth” (John 14:27). One of the finest tributes ever paid to a modern prophetic preacher was by a layman who said, “He always makes me feel uncomfortable.” The prophet is as disturbing to a sinner as heat is to a person who is freezing to death. There comes a stage in the freezing process, so we are told, when it would be more comfortable to sink farther into fatal numbness. With heat there comes pain; but pain is the sign of returning life. At the approach of Jesus a man with an unclean spirit cried, “Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus
18 And he answered, I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim.

19 Now therefore send, and gather unto me all Israel unto mount Carmel, and the prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves four hundred, which eat at Jezebel's table.

20 So Ahab sent unto all the children of Israel, and gathered the prophets together unto mount Carmel.

in all the Ras Shamra texts, and a great deal of evidence in the O.T. shows that the prophets, from Elijah to Jeremiah—in fact, actually in the time of Moses himself and right down to the times of the Maccabees—had to fight hard against it.

18. The Baals are the local fertility gods, worshiped at every village shrine. They are all local manifestations of the sky-god Baal, who controlled the weather and therefore gave or withheld fertility.

19. Mount Carmel is a ridge which confronts the Mediterranean Sea on the northwest and the Plain of Esdraelon on the southeast. Especially on its southern side it was the most fertile strip of land in the whole country, hence its name “The Carmel,” “The Garden Land” (always with the definite article). When Amos (1:2) speaks of the withering of the ridge of Carmel, he means that the last and final disaster which drought can bring has taken place. The actual site of Elijah’s exploit is commonly identified with El-Muharka, i.e., “place of burning,” a platform just below the summit on the southern edge, some sixteen hundred feet above sea level, with the brook Kishon (Nahr el-Muqatta’a) below, and near to it the Tell el-Qassis (“priest’s mound”), the traditional site of the slaughter of the priests of Baal.

of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us?” (Mark 1:24). To him, as to Ahab, the presence of God’s representative meant the pain of life coming into lethargy, of light breaking into the darkness loved by evildoers.

The prophet or the Christ disturbs the smugness of complacency. Like those Corinthians who “measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise” (II Cor. 10:12), men seek comfort by settling into moral mediocrity. They develop a clubbable atmosphere of mutual exoneration. Then the appearance of a towering moral personality shames them in their littleness and haunts them with the vision of the “might have been.” In the presence of Christlike purity their virtues look like cheap stage jewelry when brought into the sunlight.

Moreover, the prophet often appears as a troublemaker because he awakens men to added responsibilities. Some years ago a layman said to his minister: “You preachers are making a mistake. We tired businessmen come to church with our problems and burdens, looking for light and lift. And then you of the pulpit leave us with more problems than when we came.” Some sympathy is due his complaint. The church surely ought to comfort the depressed and lighten the loads of the oppressed. But the church is the place where the mind and spirit are stretched in order that they may grow into the fullness of the stature of Christ Jesus our Lord. The church is the body of the Christ who said, “Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.” But read on: “Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me” (Matt. 11:28-29). Christ rests weary men with a yoke, because our deepest need is to be needed, and our souls are not at rest unless they are growing, and souls do not grow toward the fullness of Christ unless they bear “one another’s burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ” (Gal. 6:2).

The purpose of the prophet, as of the Christ, is to cure, not merely to comfort. In its efforts to attract the crowd the pulpit is prone to forget this fact. The strategy of good preaching is to meet people at the level of their desires and lead them up to the level of their needs. Men think they know what they want; they do not always know what they need. Jesus has been likened to a great moral huntsman sweeping 21 And Elijah came unto all the people, and said, How long halt ye between two opinions? if the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word.

22 Then said Elijah unto the people, I, even I only, remain a prophet of the Lord; but Baal's prophets are four hundred and fifty men.

23 Let them therefore give us two bullocks; and let them choose one bullock for themselves, and cut it in pieces, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under: and I will dress the other bullock, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under:

24 And call ye on the name of your gods, and I will call on the name of the Lord: and the God that answereth by fire, let him be God. And all the people answered and said, It is well spoken.

21. Both the KJV and the RSV are interpreting. The actual Hebrew word had to do with “clefts,” and since it is also used of branches and boughs (Isa. 17:6) we may suppose that in this latter case it means the branching out of the tree, dividing just as legs and limbs divide from the trunk of a human being. Indeed, we do speak of the “limbs” of a tree. There seems to be every justification for Albrecht's claim that the word here means “legs.” Elijah’s question to all the people is therefore, “How long will you keep hopping [lit., limping] from one leg to another?” The emphasis on the need of a choice between Yahweh of Israel and any other god is the contribution of the ninth-century b.c. prophets to the Hebrew religion. They seem to have had no objection to the bull cult of Bethel, but they did maintain that no man could worship any other god if he served the God of Israel. They stood for one God and one God only for Israel—a necessary step if a genuine monotheism was ever to be taught, and perhaps, indeed, a unique characteristic of Yahweh from early times.

23. The test is going to be which god can bring the rain after the long drought. The agreement between the two contending parties is that the god who himself kindles the sacrifice is the God who gives the rain, and therefore is responsible for fertility and life for both land and people. Is it to be Baal, Jezebel's Tyrian god and the rain god of Syria, or is it to be the Lord, the God of Israel, once the God of a desert people (cf. Hos. 2:8)?

across the landscape of history, digging men out of the little burrows of complacency and respectability in which they had ensconced themselves.

21. Dangers of the Middle Road.—Life flourishes best in the temperate zones. This is true geographically. Our sturdiest races have developed in the zones between the torrid borders of the equator and the frigid circles around the poles. Spiritually, as well as physically, life is healthiest when it avoids certain extremes. Jesus was an illuminating example of sane moderation. He did not join on the one side with the religious radicals of his day, the Essenes and Nazirites, nor on the other side with the conservative Pharisees. He practiced self-control but he was not an ascetic. There was none of the narrowness of the fanatic about the Man of Nazareth, who dined with Pharisees and publicans, who chose a Samaritan foreigner as hero for one of his parables, and paid high compliments to Roman centurions.

Nevertheless, true tolerance and genuine moderation have many counterfeits. The middle road between extremes is beset with many pitfalls which have to be avoided if men are not to go, like Ahab's countrymen, limping weakly between two sides. For one thing, they must look to their motives. Are they keeping to the 25 And El'ijah said unto the prophets of Ba'al, Choose ye one bullock for yourselves, and dress it first; for ye are many; and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under.

26 And they took the bullock which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Ba'al from morning even until noon, saying, O Ba'al, hear us. But there was no voice, nor any that answered. And they leaped upon the altar which was made.

27 And it came to pass at noon, that El'ijah mocked them, and said, Cry aloud: for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepest, and must be wakened.

28 And they cried aloud, and cut themselves after their manner with knives and lancets, till the blood gushed out upon them.

29 And it came to pass, when midday was past, and they prophesied until the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that there was neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded.

26. Limped (RSV) is the more accurate rendering (cf. KJV). The reference is to the ritual dance of the priests, who encircled the altar, bending and leaping as they danced around it with innumerable body contortions.

27. The phrase he has gone aside may be a corrupt repetition of the previous phrase. Otherwise it is to be regarded as a euphemism. The following phrase, he is on a journey, is correctly interpreted by the LXX as "he is engaged on business."

28. The shedding of blood on the part of the worshiper is a custom well established for Syria generally. W. Robertson Smith claimed that the Syriac word 'ethkashshaph is evidence of the idea's widespread popularity, since the word is used to mean "to make supplication," but means, lit., "to cut oneself" (W. Robertson Smith, Lectures on the Religion of the Semites [3rd ed.; New York: The Macmillan Co., 1927], p. 321).

29. According to the KJV the prophets of Baal continued to "prophesy" when midday was past. The RSV has raved on. The word used in the Hebrew means "to act as a prophet," but the sense here is that they behaved in an ungoverned manner, having whipped themselves up into a frenzy. This prophetic frenzy or ecstasy was a characteristic feature of early prophecy (I Sam. 18:10; II Kings 9:11; Jer. 29:26). It is Canaanite in origin (T. H. Robinson, Prophecy and the Prophets in Ancient Israel [New York: Charles Scribner’s Sons, 1923], p. 34; Harold Knight, The Hebrew Prophetic Consciousness [London: Lutterworth Press, 1947], pp. 70–90). The raving dance in which they lashed themselves with whips and gashed themselves with knives was native to Palestine and Asia Minor. It spread into Egypt by the fifth century B.C., and from thence it accompanied the mystery cults throughout the Mediterranean world (W. O. E. Oesterley and T. H. Robinson, Hebrew Religion, Its Origin and Development [2nd ed.; New York: The Macmillan Co., 1937], p. 185; Robinson, Prophecy and Prophets, pp. 30–37). The dance continued until the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice. The word evening is not found in the original, and in II Kings 3:20, where the same phrase occurs, it is the morning sacrifice that is intended. The time is not likely the evening twilight (“between the two evenings,” Exod. 29:39 ASV mg.), but was probably about three o’clock in the afternoon—the traditional ninth hour of prayer.

30. Apparently there had been a true Yahweh altar on Mount Carmel, probably destroyed by the “reforming” zeal of Jezebel. According to Tacitus (History II. 78; also Suetonius, Lives of the Caesars, Vespasian V) Vespasian offered sacrifice on Carmel, “the name both of a god and a mountain; but there is neither image nor temple of the god; such are the ancient traditions; we find there only an altar and religious awe.”

31. This verse and vs. 32a are interpolations by the postexilic Priestly Code editor. In the LXX they are found in the middle of vs. 30.

32. Two seals (measures) of seed amount to about five gallons. This can scarcely have been the cubic capacity of the whole trench. The phrase is used in the Mishnah ment. “Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple” (Luke 14:27). In saying that, Jesus was making no more arbitrary demand than is made by any good physician. A doctor cannot demonstrate his ability to cure a patient until the patient puts himself into the physician’s hands and submits to his regimen. Obedience is the way to physical cure and also to spiritual knowledge.

Yahweh and Baal were not guests to be entertained by the Israelites. They were masters to be obeyed and served. “No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other” (Luke 16:13). Elijah was trying to change his hearers from would-be patrons of religion to the only genuinely religious attitude, that of servant. And in religion, as in the state, there must be a seat of sovereignty.

How long would Israel defer decision? To put things off to a more convenient time is one of our deep-seated tendencies. It shows itself in trifles. It has been said that the attics of our houses are filled with our deferred decisions, old, worn-out objects which we cannot quite bring ourselves to discard. And in the serious business of living, who can compute how much folly and failure and sin have resulted from vacillation? The man who is unable to make up his mind is a torment to himself and an object of reproach to others who frequently suffer from his hesitation and fickleness.

The power of decision possesses contagious force. When a person of decisive mind appears in our midst, he disposes men to follow him, as floating objects are drawn into the wake of a speeding vessel. It is men of decision who bring order into a demoralized situation and rally the forces of reconstruction. It was said of William 33 And he put the wood in order, and cut the bullock in pieces, and laid him on the wood, and said, Fill four barrels with water, and pour it on the burnt sacrifice, and on the wood.

34 And he said, Do it the second time. And they did it the second time. And he said, Do it the third time. And they did it the third time.

35 And the water ran round about the altar; and he filled the trench also with water.

36 And it came to pass at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near, and said, LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word.

37 Hear me, O LORD, hear me, that this people may know that thou art the LORD God, and that thou hast turned their heart back again.

(Shebiith 3:2) as a square measure of a field requiring this quantity of seed. If this is the explanation, then the trench enclosed an area thirty yards square, but this seems to be just as large as the other estimate was small.

33. The pouring of the water was not to make the burning of the sacrifice more difficult, nor was it to preclude any charge of sharp practice. It was the ancient method of procuring rain by sympathetic magic. The operation was repeated thrice to ensure its efficacy. The feature of the incident has occasioned considerable difficulty and has given rise to a legion of rationalizing explanations. The most "efficient" explanation is that they poured naphtha over the sacrifice, since, it is alleged, there was an oil well on or below the ridge of Carmel. The most satisfactory explanation is that the author was telling exactly the truth, and that it was water which was poured out there. The whole incident was a fight between two opposing cults, for Elijah made the giving of the rains the clear central issue. Julian Morgenstern (Amos Studies [Cincinnati: Hebrew

Pitt that he formed his plans with such promptitude and executed them with such vigor that no one ever spent five minutes with him in conference without leaving a braver man than when he entered. Strength of character is developed by clinching our convictions with decisive action. And our moral foundations are undermined by deferring decisions. How pointedly Jesus or his biographer put this truth at the conclusion of those sayings which we call the Sermon on the Mount. "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand . . . and it fell" (Matt. 7:24-27). To hear the call of duty and do nothing about it; to have our emotions repeatedly stirred and turn away like a theater crowd; to keep on weighing religious opinions and never put them to work—all this disintegrates the rock of character into shifting sand. In view of the dangers of the middle road and deferred decisions, How long will you go limp ing with two different opinions?

37. Ordeal by Fire.—The activity of Elijah on Mount Carmel makes exciting drama. There is a wealth of preaching and teaching value in the sheer courage of the lone prophet pitting himself against the 450 priests of Baal. Such bold faith is bound to win converts even when no miraculous accomplishment seems to authen-
38 Then the fire of the LORD fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench.

39 And when all the people saw it, they fell on their faces: and they said, The LORD, he is the God; the LORD, he is the God.

40 And Elijah said unto them, Take the prophets of Baal; let not one of them escape. And they took them: and Elijah brought them down to the brook Kishon, and slew them there.

41 ¶ And Elijah said unto Ahab, Get thee up, eat and drink; for there is a sound of abundance of rain.

42 So Ahab went up to eat and to drink. And Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; and he cast himself down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees, and spake nothing.

Union College Press, 1941], I, 305-12) produces a considerable amount of evidence on this point. According to Louis Finkelstein (The Pharisees [Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1988], I, 108), the water pouring is an ancient nomadic rite, and Elijah is here insisting on the efficacy of the old desert ways of the God of Israel against the Canaanite rites with its bloodletting and all the extravagances in posturing and frenzy. Certainly he takes care to act and to speak with a calmness and a serenity which are in marked contrast to the excitement and agitation of the Baal priests, and the contrast is made all the more clear by the way in which he continues to mock them while they are frantically performing their rites.

38. The fire of the LORD is a supernatural fire, frequently in the O.T. associated with the appearance of God. Physically speaking, it may well have been lightning in this particular case, since the long, hot drought of a semitropical country naturally ends in thunderstorms of a violence not known in more temperate climates. But to give a physical explanation of the phenomenon does not do away with the miraculous element in it. The real point of the incident is that the lightning, if indeed it was actually lightning, came at that particular time apparently in direct response to Elijah's acted (water pouring) and spoken prayer. The Hebrew conviction was that whenever the thunder and the lightning come, they are sent by God, but that there are special occasions such as this one when he sends them for a particular purpose. The miracle consists in this "coincidence." He sends the lightning when he wills, but there are times fraught with destiny when he sends it as a specific display of divine grace.

41. Better, "the sound and roar of the downpour." The Hebrew word ושע is used of the heavy seasonal rains (cf. Ezra 10:9). "In the rainy season the falls are usually...
43 And said to his servant, Go up now, look toward the sea. And he went up, and looked, and said, There is nothing. And he said, Go again seven times.

44 And it came to pass at the seventh time, that he said, Behold, there ariseth a little cloud out of the sea, like a man’s hand. And he said, Go up, say unto Ahab, Prepare thy chariot, and get thee down, that the rain stop thee not.

45 And it came to pass in the mean while, that the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. And Ahab rode, and went to Jezreel.

46 And the hand of the LORD was on Elijah; and he girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab to the entrance of Jezreel.

heavy, and are accompanied by thunder and lightning, while the wind comes from the W. or S.W.” (E. Hull, “Rain,” in Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, IV, 195). This is precisely what is happening here. The deluge which follows the burning up of the sacrifice on Mount Carmel is the first downpour of the so-called “former rain,” that autumnal rainy season which had been missing for three long years.

43. The seventh look is effective (cf. 8:65). The rain rite and the rain prayer are answered with a thoroughness that satisfies even the most ardent devotee, and should convince the greatest doubter.

46. The hand of the LORD is a regular metaphor for the power of God. The distance from the scene of the sacrifice to the entrance to the Pass of Jezreel is about seventeen miles. This distance Elijah runs in a strength that is not his own, for the hand of the LORD was on Elijah. Ahab must hurry to pass through the valley of Esdraelon before it is turned into a quagmire (“black gumbo”) as in the days of Sisera and Jael (Judg. 5:21). The race to Jezreel marks the end of Elijah’s great demonstration that the Lord is the true God of Israel, he who gives the rain and its consequent fertility, the God to whom alone Israel must look. The victory was apparently short lived, as the next chapter shows. Jezebel was not the woman to take calmly such a feat, nor was she the sort of woman who would let pass the slaughter of the Baal prophets. She threatened vengeance, and Elijah fled. The entire story must be read against the background of the time. The wholesale and ruthless slaughter of the prophets of Baal was considered to be a righteous deed by the oppressed Yahwistic worshipers. The fact that Elijah built up again the altar to the Lord on Carmel is commended in the story as being meritorious. Such an action was contrary to the principles of the Deuteronomists, who held it against all the kings of Israel and some of the kings of Judah that they permitted altars and shrines elsewhere than at Jerusalem. But in the ninth and eighth centuries such altars were allowed, and the establishment of a true altar to the Lord was to be commended, no matter on what hill it was erected.

Carmel which convinced the spectators that Yahweh was superior to Baal. The event changed the course of Israel’s religious history.

This scene of fire and slaughter should be reviewed in the afterglow of Elijah’s experiences as described in succeeding chapters. The author is tracing the training and taming of a prophet. The “man of God” who prayed for his answer by fire on Carmel is to learn on Horeb that the Lord is not to be found in the wind and fire. This discovery points in the direction of that wilderness experience centuries later, wherein Jesus of Nazareth resisted the temptation to depend on the spectacularly miraculous to demonstrate divine power. According to the record, the miracle of fire consuming the sacrifice on Carmel converted the early Israelites. The greater miracle is that the sacrifice on Calvary
And Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, and withal how he had slain all the prophets with the sword.

2 Then Jezebel sent a messenger unto Elijah, saying, So let the gods do to me, and more also, if I make not thy life as the life of one of them by to-morrow about this time.

3 And when he saw that, he arose, and went for his life, and came to Beer-sheba, which belongeth to Judah, and left his servant there.

4. Elijah at Horeb (19:1-21)

The reaction sets in and Elijah, threatened by Jezebel, loses his nerve and flees south through the Judahite territory, where he sleeps the sleep of utter exhaustion. He is aroused by an angel and is given supernatural food, in the strength of which he continues his long journey to Horeb, the ancient home of the desert faith. There he hears the voice of God, receives new encouragement, and accepts from God a new policy which he proceeds to put into practice.

19:2-3. Jezebel was apparently not in a position to put Elijah to death in summary fashion, for we may expect her to have acted first and talked afterward if she was in a position to do so. But she did manage to scare Elijah out of the country. (It is best to follow the LXX and Syriac he was afraid, a reading which depends on the same consonants but assumes different vowels.) The LXX prefaces Jezebel's message with "As sure as you are Elijah and I am Jezebel." Elijah flees for his life out of Ahab and Jezebel's jurisdiction, and keeps on traveling till he reaches the farthest confines of the settled country. There on the southern boundary of the cultivated land he leaves his servant and continues a day's journey into the southern wilderness.

19:3. The Aftermath of Valor.—The courage of Elijah in confronting singlehanded the hundreds of Baal priests on Mount Carmel remains an epic undimmed by the difficulty of comprehending the ordeal by fire. How a modern reporter would have described the event, we do not know; but that Elijah routed the priests and aroused the people to their destruction is attested by the results which followed. Jezebel, the patron of the Baal priests, vowed to wreak vengeance on Elijah. Then he was afraid, and he arose and went for his life. Just as certain generals like Hannibal and Frederick the Great and Washington were never so dangerous as on the day after a defeat, so some persons are never so vulnerable as on the day after a victory. Elijah's spectacular triumph over the priests had been followed by a reaction. He was passing through that trying time experienced by all idealists when they discover that there are no permanent victories. He was disgusted at the fickleness of the public which had cheered him on Carmel and then turned to follow his foe, Queen Jezebel. It seemed to him that even the Lord had let him down by leading him into a crisis and then deserting him. Depressed and frightened, he fled into the wilderness.

Courage is the keystone in the arch of character. It gives strength and stability to all our other qualities. If we are not brave, of what avail is our desire for honesty or our concern for justice? And imperative as is the need of valor for overcoming dangers in a crisis, quite as necessary is the quality of fortitude to keep us from being overcome when things run over us. The fleeing Elijah was in need of beliefs to make him brave. One of these was a belief in himself. He needed that resilient courage which enabled young Disraeli to come back confidently after his first speech in Parliament had been jeered down. But it must be something more than mere self-sustained confidence. Elijah needed a God-given belief in himself. "Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart" (Ps. 27:14). Such courage differs in quality from the cocksureness of mere self-reliance. It is more than a success complex built up by repeated triumphs over competitors. The psalmist was counseling a courage rooted in a soil deeper than the subconscious
4 But he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness, and came and sat down under a juniper tree: and he requested for himself that he might die; and said, It is enough; now, O LORD, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers.

4 But he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness, and came and sat down under a broom tree; and he asked that he might die, saying, "It is enough: now, O LORD, take away my life; for I am no better than my fathers.

Elijah stops and shelters, exhausted and disillusioned, under a broom tree. This bush sometimes grows to a height of as much as ten feet, and is common in the desert wadies of the south. It provides no great amount of shade against the desert sun, but it is the best shade there is. Elijah is utterly at the end of his own courage and his own strength, and dejectedly confesses that in spite of all he has done at Carmel he is no better than his fathers.

mind. He was saying that when we wait on the Lord he strengthens our hearts with the feeling that he believes in us, and that begets a belief in ourselves. Elijah had lost faith in himself because he felt the Lord had lost faith in him.

The frightened prophet also needed the belief of others in him. "I, even I only, am left" (vs. 10). Courage has to be sustained by the encouragement of others. It is hard to say how long personal courage could survive in complete isolation of soul. Heroic individuals have put up what we call "lone fights." Athanasius stood so alone against the popular religious trend of his time that the saying arose, "Athanasius against the world." But behind the scenes there must have been a coterie of personal friends whose sympathy sustained the theologian. Gethsemane is the loneliest spot of heroism in all history, for even his own disciples did not keep awake to watch and pray with Jesus; but even there he knew that he had the love of his disciples, wavering as they were. Everyone who has enjoyed the love of another knows how it puts courage and nerve into the soul. To know that there is someone whose heart beats faster when your step is heard on the stair; to know there is one who keeps tryst with you in thought, although absent in person; to know there is one who believes in you when the crowd is howling you down—those are beliefs which make us brave. These Elijah thought he lacked.

49. Lifted Out of Our Littleness.—Elijah was in the cave mood. He came to a cave, and lodged there (vs. 9). Both his mind and heart had gone into hiding. He was still free from Ahab and Jezebel, but he was a prisoner of himself. He had shut the sunlight out of his mind. He had drawn the shutters of his heart. When doors are slammed against us, we are prone to draw into ourselves and lock our hearts against others. Distrust begets distrust.

In healthy mood, the Hebrews had a dread of being hemmed in. Repeatedly the psalmist sings of the Lord's deliverance as of being led into large places. "He brought me forth also into a large place; he delivered me, because he delighted in me" (Ps. 18:19). "I called upon the Lord in distress: the Lord answered me, and set me in a large place" (Ps. 118:5). Elijah was in need of a larger setting. A mind, like a home, needs proper landscaping. Sometimes this is secured by enlargement of physical outlook. A wise old minister was accustomed throughout a long pastorate to preach one sermon a year on astronomy. When his youthful assistant inquired why the preacher talked about a subject so far removed from the daily walks of life, the pastor replied, "Of course it is no use at all, but it greatly enlarges my idea of God." 1 When a person is shut into the cave mood, he needs a larger mental setting in time as well as in space. However imprisoning the present physical circumstance, the windows of the mind can always be opened to the wisdom of other ages. The physically shut in and the socially shut out can keep company with Plato and Augustine, with Shakespeare and Luther. And the outlook of time can be enlarged into eternity. Whether a dweller in a humble hovel or the hounded victim of disease or persecution, the spirit can catch visions of the Father's house of many mansions (cf. John 14:2).

But mere enlargement of setting does not lift us out of our littleness. Bismarck, while he was the Prussian "Iron Chancellor," expanded his activities to imperial proportions and then, after he was relieved of his command by the young kaiser, retired to his vast estate where he felt himself hemmed in like a prisoner. Bismarck's scale of public operations did not develop in him bigness of soul. John Bunyan, on the other hand, confined in Bedford jail, glimpsed the turrets of the Celestial City.

Elijah needed enlargement of nature as well as of outlook. He had slumped into smallness of soul, where he was victimizing himself by a 5 And as he lay and slept under a juniper tree, behold, then an angel touched him, and said unto him, Arise and eat.

6 And he looked, and, behold, there was a cake baked on the coals, and a cruse of water at his head. And he did eat and drink, and laid him down again.

7 And the angel of the Lord came again the second time, and touched him, and said, Arise and eat; because the journey is too great for thee.

8 And he arose, and did eat and drink, and went in the strength of that meat forty days and forty nights unto Horeb the mount of God.

5-7. The thought of angel intermediaries between God and the prophets is not earlier than the Exile. The LXX here has “someone,” so that there is every likelihood that the angel is a postexilic interpretation of the original Hebrew. There is a reference to an angel in 13:18, but this particular section is generally held to be a postexilic insertion. The phrase the angel of the Lord occurs in vs. 7. This is doubtless the supernatural being of Gen. 16:7, who appears in the earlier histories (J and E) in theophanies as a manifestation of God in human form. The date of the Elijah narratives cannot be far distant from the date of E.

8. Elijah finds his way back to Horeb the mount of God, not in his own strength, but in the miraculous strength given to him in the angel’s food. Here at Horeb, according to the northern tradition, was the ancient home of the God of Israel, since the name Horeb is peculiar to E and D (Exodus and Deuteronomy). It is the J tradition which has the name Sinai. It is evident that the author of this story knows the E story of Moses at Horeb, there being sufficient similarity in detail between the two accounts to suggest dependence, but at the same time sufficient difference to make that dependence oral rather than literary, cf. the fast of forty days and forty nights (Exod. 34:28) and the “passing across” (M.T. 72v in each case) of God. On the other hand, Moses stood in a cleft of the rock, while Elijah stood in the mouth of a cave; or again, Moses’ face is covered by the hand of God, whereas Elijah wraps his face in his mantle. Perhaps even the seven thousand of vs. 18 is in part a reminiscence of the thousands of Exod. 34:7, with whom the Lord keeps faith according to the covenant.

vindictive spirit. Fretted by the injustice inflicted upon him, he had lost generosity of judgment and magnanimity of spirit. He was vowing vengeance. Magnanimity is one of the rarest of virtues, for it is much harder to admit merit in others than to achieve it in oneself. Heine, the poet, was only half in jest when, in describing his notion of happiness, he said: “My wishes are a humble dwelling with a thatched roof, a good bed, good food, flowers at my windows, and some fine tall trees before my door. And if the good God wants to make me completely happy he will grant me the joy of seeing six or seven of my enemies hanging from the trees.”

Elijah had nursed his depression and vindictiveness into self-pity, one of the mind’s most vicious circles. The person who goes around pitying himself bores others with the repeated story of his troubles, and the result is that he is left more and more to himself. Thus he becomes the only audience to which he can pour out his woes, and as these are poured back into himself, they foam up into an ever more bitter and intoxicating drug.

5-18. Freed from Bitterness.—Note the steps by which the Lord delivered Elijah from his discouragement. When the despairing prophet had fallen asleep under the broom tree, the divine message to him was, Arise and eat (vs. 5). First of all, he was to get up. The body and the will have their part to play in mastering mental depression. God does not spoon-feed minds lying on their backs. Some effort on the 11 And he said, Go forth, and stand upon the mount before the LORD. And, behold, the LORD passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the LORD; but the LORD was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but the LORD was not in the earthquake:

12 And after the earthquake a fire; but the LORD was not in the fire: and after the fire a still small voice.

13 And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entering in of the cave. And, behold, there came a voice unto him, and said, What dost thou here, Elijah?

9. What are you doing here? The construction is similar in part to that in 17:18, where the person addressed is considered to be outside his province, where he had no business to be. Vss. 9a-11a constitute a repetition, though earlier than the LXX, of vss. 13b-14, destroying the dramatic development of the story. The LXX attempts to smooth out the difficulty by inserting "tomorrow," and so also does Josephus (Antiquities VIII. 13. 7), perhaps influenced by Exod. 34:2.

12. The traditional rendering is a still small voice, but the Hebrew is "a sound of a gentle stillness" (ASV mg.; cf. Job 4:16). The writer thinks of an eerie stillness, so still that it can be heard. The wind, the earthquake, and the fire are the outrunners (cf. II Sam. 15:1) which herald the coming of the king. Such phenomena as these are the regular O.T. accompaniments of a theophany (Exod. 19:16, 18; Ps. 18:7-15).

13. Moses hid his face at the bush because he was afraid to look upon God (Exod. 3:6).

part of the patient is called for. Not yet out-moded by modern psychology is the old maxim, "You never know what you can do till you try." With pleased surprise we all, now and again, complete tasks which we first thought were beyond our powers. Bonaro W. Overstreet would supplement the old sayings with a revised version:

You never try till you know what you can do. The ability and the will to try are not conjured up out of nothing. They are made largely out of past efforts that have brought pleasant rather than painful results. These efforts, many of them, lie so far back in our infancy and childhood that we have no conscious memory of them. But they are summed up in an attitude that we call self-confidence in life.

This modern version parallels the advice given by Paul to Timothy: "Stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands. For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind" (II Tim. 1:6-7). Buried within us are reserves of confidence stored up by past achievements. Elijah, like Timothy, was bidden to draw upon 14 And he said, I have been very jealous for the LORD God of hosts: because the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away.

15 And the LORD said unto him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus: and when thou comest, anoint Hazael to be king over Syria:

16 And Jehu the son of Nimshi shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel: and Elisha the son of Shaphat of Abel-meholah shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.

17 And it shall come to pass, that him that escapeth the sword of Hazael shall Jehu slay: and him that escapeth from the sword of Jehu shall Elisha slay.

18 Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him.

“What are you doing here, Eli‘jah?” 14 He said, “I have been very jealous for the LORD, the God of hosts; for the people of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thy altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away.” 15 And the LORD said to him, “Go, return on your way to the wilderness of Damascus; and when you arrive, you shall anoint Haz‘ael to be king over Syria; 16 and Jehu the son of Nimshi you shall anoint to be king over Israel; and Eli’sha the son of Shaphat of A‘bel-meho’lah you shall anoint to be prophet in your place. 17 And him who escapes from the sword of Haz‘ael shall Jehu slay; and him who escapes from the sword of Jehu shall Eli’sha slay. 18 Yet I will leave seven thousand in Israel, all the knees that have not bowed to Ba’al, and every mouth that has not kissed him.”

14. The Douay Version here has “zealous,” which is more in accordance with the modern usage of the words “jealous” and “zealous” (cf. Exeg. on 14:22).

15. In the sequel it was Elisha who was actually responsible for the anointing of Jehu (II Kings 9:1-6), and also for inciting Hazael to murder his master and to usurp the throne of the Syrian kingdom of Damascus (II Kings 8:7-15). It is therefore assumed, partly because of this, that the Elisha narratives belong to a different cycle of tradition from that of the Elijah stories. The anointing of a prophet is not usual. Apart from Ps. 105:15 (patriarchs as prophets) and Isa. 61:1, only kings are anointed, and priests in the postexilic period only, and then none but the high priest. There is one further exception, that of Cyrus, who is thus divinely commissioned to free the exiles (Isa. 45:1). This last could not have been an actual anointing, so that we have this much evidence that the phrase “anointing” can be used of a special call independently of whether there is any actual ceremony or not.

18. The actual Hebrew refers definitely to the future, so that I have left me is wrong. On the other hand, I will leave is a paraphrase. It is best to translate, “Yet I will keep a remnant,” because the verb which is used is from the same root as she‘ār, a word which later became the regular and proper term for “the remnant of Israel.” The teaching of Isa. 10:20; 11:11-16 is thus anticipated in the Elijah cycle of northern traditions. In spite of all the waywardness and apostasy of the many, there is always a small but solid nucleus of men faithful to Yahweh.

The custom of kissing idols is confirmed in Hos. 13:2; cf. the classical attitude in prayer (Latin, adoro), which involved putting the hand to the mouth and moving toward the right. This rite survives in the Moslem custom of kissing the sacred stone by the counsel to look up, Go forth, and stand upon the mount before the LORD (vs. 11). A fainting spirit may be revived by a dash of cold water, but mere repetitions of that treatment do not cure anemia. Elijah’s mental blood content had to be built up. When Mark Twain these by bestirring himself. Some physical action, some duty near at hand and within range of present effort, may serve to start the restoration of confidence, even while the fog of despair hides the distant goal.

The Lord’s command to get up was followed 19 So he departed thence, and found Elisha the son of Shaphat, who was plowing with twelve yoke of oxen before him, and he with the twelfth: and Elijah passed by him, and cast his mantle upon him.

20 And he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said, Let me, I pray thee, kiss my father and my mother, and then I will follow thee. And he said unto him, Go back again: for what have I done to thee?

21 And he returned back from him, and took a yoke of oxen, and slew them, and boiled their flesh with the instruments of the oxen, and gave unto the people, and they did eat. Then he arose, and went after Elijah, and ministered unto him.

20 And Ben-hadad the king of Syria gathered all his host together: and there were thirty and two kings with him, and horses, and chariots: and he went up and besieged Samaria, and warred against it.

19. The prophet's mantle was made of skin and covered with hair, probably of goat's skin with the hair turned outward. It was the distinctive clothing of the prophet (II Kings 1:8; Matt. 3:4; and especially Zech. 13:4). The mantle was the physical means by which the prophetic power was transferred from Elijah to Elisha (II Kings 2:13-14). The modern point of view would lead us to suppose that any transference of power by this means was symbolic, but the storytellers of the time probably accepted the necessity of some object through which or by means of which the special power could be transferred.

20. The answer of Elijah is difficult, and is most often interpreted to mean "I have done nothing to you which would prevent a proper leave-taking from your people." Josephus (Antiquities VIII. 13.7) says: "And when he desired leave to salute his parents, Elijah gave him leave so to do." This, however, is not satisfactory as a translation of the Hebrew, and we must assume some such translation as "Go [to your parents], and return [to me], for what have I done to you?" i.e., "You know that I have anointed you in the name of the Lord, and that he has called you to a special service."

5. AHAB AND THE SYRIANS (20:1-43)

The continuous wars between Syria and Israel have reached the stage when the Syrian king and his thirty-two vassals have besieged Samaria, Ahab's capital, and reduced the garrison to the last stage of despair. Ben-hadad, the Syrian king, demands the complete surrender of the city, and Ahab submits to the harsh terms, but when the Syrian king adds humiliation to defeat Ahab calls his leading subjects together, and 2 And he sent messengers to Ahab king of Israel into the city, and said unto him, Thus saith Ben-hadad,
3 Thy silver and thy gold is mine; thy wives also and thy children, even the goodliest, are mine.
4 And the king of Israel answered and said, My lord, O king, according to thy saying, I am thine, and all that I have.
5 And the messengers came again, and said, Thus speaketh Ben-hadad, saying, Although I have sent unto thee, saying, Thou shalt deliver me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children;
6 Yet I will send my servants unto thee to-morrow about this time, and they shall search thine house, and the houses of thy servants; and it shall be, that whatsoever is they all agree to resist to the end. Guided by a prophet, Ahab makes a desperate sally with the few troops at his disposal and inflicts a crushing defeat on the too confident Syrian king. Ahab is warned that the Syrians will come again, but he wins another victory, and thus frees himself from vassalage to the Syrians, a state of affairs which he seems to have inherited from his father Omri, who had ceded territory to Syria-Damascus and had been forced even to concede trading rights in Samaria itself.

The major difficulty in chs. 20 and 22 is their relation to the circumstances of the Battle of Qarqar (853 B.C.). Opinion differs widely, but the most probable solution is that the battle was fought within a year or so of Ahab’s death, and thus between the dates recorded in ch. 20 and those recorded in ch. 22. This makes Ahab, already free from his vassalage, the willing ally of Ben-hadad (Hadad-ezer) at Qarqar when they fought as leaders of the Aramean league against the Assyrian Shalmaneser III. The Assyrian king claims that he utterly routed his enemies on that occasion, but he does not appear to have continued his advance. Presumably Ahab took advantage of the respite from Assyrian threats which followed the Battle of Qarqar to continue his anti-Syrian policy and to regain what his father had lost, only to meet with his death in the process (W. O. E. Oesterley and T. H. Robinson, A History of Israel [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1932], I, 292-97).

This chapter comes from a source which is favorable in its judgment of Ahab and antagonistic to the Syrians. This is not the attitude of the narrator of chs. 17-19 or of ch. 21. There we find antagonism to Ahab and all his house, while the Syrians are regarded as being something in the nature of a “rod of the Lord’s anger” with which he intends to punish Israel for her waywardness and her apostasy. Here Ahab is the savior of his country, generous, wise, and full of courage (cf. 22:35). In particular, his attitude to a beaten foe is in marked contrast to the ruthlessness of the prophetic party who would have every enemy of the Lord mercilessly destroyed.

20:6. Commentators have found a difficulty in realizing that the second demands of Ben-hadad are more fargoing than the first. The difference between the two is that was not in the noisy phenomena. It was after the still small voice (vs. 12) that the divine presence became real. The blustering physical forces were superseded by the quiet spiritual resources. The stormy Elijah was learning the gentleness of true gianthood.

A further step was needed to free Elijah’s spirit from bitterness. Having gotten up and looked up, he was now bidden to link up. Go, return on your way to the wilderness of Damascus (vs. 15). What awaited him there? New work and new friends. He would anoint Hazael pleasant in thine eyes, they shall put it in their hand, and take it away.
7 Then the king of Israel called all the elders of the land, and said, Mark, I pray you, and see how this man seeketh mischief:
for he sent unto me for my wives, and for my children, and for my silver, and for my gold; and I denied him not.
8 And all the elders and all the people said unto him, Hearken not unto him, nor consent.
9 Wherefore he said unto the messengers of Ben-hadad, Tell my lord the king, All that thou didst send for to thy servant at the first I will do: but this thing I may not do.
And the messengers departed, and brought him word again.
10 And Ben-hadad sent unto him, and said, The gods do so unto me, and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me.
11 And the king of Israel answered and said, Tell him, Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.
12 And it came to pass, when Ben-hadad heard this message, as he was drinking, he and the kings in the pavilions, that he said unto his servants, Set yourselves in array.
And they set themselves in array against the city.
13 ¶ And, behold, there came a prophet unto Ahab king of Israel, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Hast thou seen all this great servants, and lay hands on whatever pleases them, and take it away.'
7 Then the king of Israel called all the elders of the land, and said, “Mark, now, and see how this man is seeking trouble;
for he sent to me for my wives and my children, and for my silver and my gold, and I did not refuse him.”
8 And all the elders and all the people said to him, “Do not heed or consent.”
9 So he said to the messengers of Ben-ha’dad, “Tell my lord the king, ‘All that you first demanded of your servant I will do; but this thing I cannot do.’” And the messengers departed and brought him word again.
10 Ben-ha’dad sent to him and said, “The gods do so to me, and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people who follow me.”
11 And the king of Israel answered, “Tell him, ‘Let not him that girds on his armor boast himself as he that puts it off.’”
12 When Ben-ha’dad heard this message as he was drinking with the kings in the booths, he said to his men, “Take your positions.” And they took their positions against the city.
13 And behold, a prophet came near to Ahab king of Israel and said, “Thus says the first demands involve a complete surrender, but the second a humiliation to the king and his courtiers such as was not originally intended.

to be king over Syria and Jehu to be king over Israel. He would find seven thousand of the faithful who had not bowed the knee to Baal.
And best of all, he would enter into fellowship with Elisha. The prophet who had been wrapped up in himself, cooped in the cave of self-pity, was to find the enlargement that comes from widened interests. He who had been vainly trying to put comfort and faith into himself was now to put himself into the work of comforting and encouraging others. In those self-forgetting associations Elijah would find his own spirit reinforced by shoulder-to-shoulder contact in service. The prophet whose courage had ebbed during his lonely picket duty in the mountains was returning to the Lord’s army.
14 And Ahab said, By whom? And he said, Thus saith the Lord, Even by the young men of the princes of the provinces. Then he said, Who shall order the battle? And he answered, Thou.
15 Then he numbered the young men of the princes of the provinces, and they were two hundred and thirty-two: and after them he numbered all the people, even all the children of Israel, being seven thousand.
16 And they went out at noon. But Ben-hadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions, he and the kings, the thirty and two kings that helped him.
17 And the young men of the princes of the provinces went out first; and Ben-hadad sent out, and they told him, saying, There are men come out of Samaria.
18 And he said, Whether they be come out for peace, take them alive; or whether they be come out for war, take them alive.
19 So these young men of the princes of the provinces came out of the city, and the army which followed them.
20 And they slew every one his man: and the Syrians fled; and Israel pursued them: and Ben-hadad the king of Syria escaped on a horse with the horsemen.
21 And the king of Israel went out, and smote the horses and chariots, and slew the Syrians with a great slaughter.
22 ¶ And the prophet came to the king of Israel, and said unto him, Go, strengthen thyself, and mark, and see what thou dost: for at the return of the year the king of Syria will come up against thee.

14. The word medhinōth, districts, is found four times in this chapter, rarely elsewhere out of a Persian context. It is an Aramaic word, and became prevalent in the West because Aramaic was the language which the Persians used in their official dealings with their western provinces. They used the word in the sense of provinces and its use in this chapter shows that it had a northern origin. In Syriac and in Arabic the word means "city" and is best known in the form 'el-Medina, the city par excellence of Islam.

17. It is much better to follow the LXX (cf. RSV) as against the M.T. (cf. KJV).

19. The plan of campaign seems to have been to send out a small force only, but composed of desperate fighting men (cf. the modern commandos) who should seem too insignificant in numbers to disturb the feasting Syrians. These men suddenly attacked the unsuspecting Syrians, threw them into confusion, and were quickly reinforced by the seven thousand men whom Ahab had held in reserve. The plan succeeded beyond Ahab's wildest hopes. The Israelites captured (so RSV correctly in vs. 21) the chariots, and used it with devastating effect on the fleeing enemy.
And the servants of the king of Syria said unto him, Their gods are gods of the hills; therefore they were stronger than we; but let us fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they.

And do this thing. Take the kings away, every man out of his place, and put captains in their rooms;

And number thee an army, like the army that thou hast lost, horse for horse, and chariot for chariot: and we will fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they. And he hearkened unto their voice, and did so.

And it came to pass at the return of the year, that Ben-hadad numbered the Syrians, and went up to Aphek, to fight against Israel.

And the children of Israel were numbered, and were all present, and went against them: and the children of Israel pitched before them like two little flocks of kids; but the Syrians filled the country.

And there came a man of God, and spake unto the king of Israel, and said, Thus saith the Lord, Because the Syrians have said, The Lord is God of the hills, but he is not God of the valleys, therefore will I deliver all this great multitude into thine hand, and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

And they pitched one over against the other seven days. And so it was, that in the seventh day the battle was joined: and the children of Israel slew of the Syrians a hundred thousand foot sol-

23. Here is the crux of the whole story (cf. vs. 28). The Syrians were guilty of belittling the greatness of Israel's God. They said that the Lord is a god of the plains only, not of the hills. The whole story is an account of the punishment of the impious attitude of the Syrians (cf. II Kings 19:20-34).

Hostilities were renewed at the return of the year, a phrase which is interpreted in the RSV to mean in the spring. This interpretation depends upon the Western practice of waging spring campaigns, a practice which seems to have originated with Caesar in the Gallic Wars. It so happens that the two great modern world wars have begun at the close of the harvest rather than at the beginning of spring. In any case, the time when the kings of the Near East went to war was the autumn (Judg. 6:4, 11; II Sam. 17:19; I Sam. 28:1). They had to wait till the harvest was secured. This was for two reasons. In the first place, these lands were too near to starvation ever to risk the loss of a harvest; in the second place, the able-bodied men would not respond to the call until the harvest was gathered (Snaith, Jewish New Year Festival, pp. 32-34).

There is a division of opinion as to whether Aphek was in the northern part of the Plain of Sharon, eight miles from the sea and fifteen miles northwest of Samaria, or whether it is an unidentified site in the Plain of Esdraelon.

30. But the rest fled to Aphek, into the city; and there a wall fell upon twenty and seven thousand of the men that were left. And Ben-hadad fled, and came into the city, into an inner chamber.

31. And his servants said unto him, Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the house of Israel are merciful kings: let us, I pray thee, put sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads, and go out to the king of Israel: peradventure he will save thy life.

32. So they girded sackcloth on their loins, and put ropes on their heads, and came to the king of Israel, and said, Thy servant Ben-hadad saith, I pray thee, let me live. And he said, Is he yet alive? he is my brother.

33. Now the men did diligently observe whether any thing would come from him, and did hastily catch it: and they said, Thy brother Ben-hadad. Then he said, Go ye, bring him. Then Ben-hadad came forth to him; and he caused him to come up into the chariot.

diers in one day. 30 And the rest fled into the city of Aphek; and the wall fell upon twenty-seven thousand men that were left.

Ben-ha'dad also fled, and entered an inner chamber in the city. 31 And his servants said to him, “Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the house of Israel are merciful kings; let us put sackcloth on our loins and ropes upon our heads, and go out to the king of Israel; perhaps he will spare your life.” 32 So they girded sackcloth on their loins, and put ropes on their heads, and went to the king of Israel and said, “Your servant Ben-ha’dad says, ‘Pray, let me live.’” And he said, “Does he still live? He is my brother.” 33 Now the men were watching for an omen, and they quickly took it up from him and said, “Yes, your brother Ben-ha’dad.” Then he said, “Go and bring him.” Then Ben-ha’dad came forth to him; and he caused him to come up into the chariot. 34 And Ben-ha’dad said to him, “The cities which my father took from your father I will restore; and you may establish bazaars for yourself in Damascus, as my father did in Samaria.”
And Ahab said, “I will let you go on these terms.” So he made a covenant with him and let him go.
35 And a certain man of the sons of the prophets said unto his fellow at the command of the Lord, “Strike me, I pray.” But the man refused to strike him. 36 Then he said to him, “Because you have not obeyed the voice of the Lord, behold, as soon as you have gone from me, a lion shall kill you.” And as soon as he had departed from him, a lion met him and killed him. 37 Then he found another man, and said, “Strike me, I pray.” And the man struck him, smiting and wounding him. 38 So the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, and disguised himself with ashes upon his face. 39 And as the king passed by, he cried unto the king: and he said, Thy servant went out into the midst of the battle; and, behold, a man turned aside, and brought a man unto me, and said, Keep this man: if by any means he be missing, then shall thy 35-43. This section is not from the same source as the rest of the chapter. It is violently antagonistic to that clemency and generosity which is to us such a welcome feature in Ahab’s character as portrayed in the previous verses. It reflects the violent ruthlessness of the prophets during this period, when they were at enmity with Ahab because of the syncretism which he encouraged through his alliances with the neighboring peoples. They demanded an isolationist policy and the merciless destruction of all forms, rites, and individuals who were not loyal to the God of Israel. In this particular case the prophet declares to the king that the ancient ban ought to have been enforced whereby the wholesale slaughter of the enemy was demanded (cf. I Sam. 15:3, 21-23; see Snaith, Distinctive Ideas of O.T., pp. 38-41).

35. The sons of the prophets (a phrase which first occurs here) are members of the prophetic guilds which flourished at that time, and were fanatical in their exclusive devotion to the Lord. This idiomatic Hebrew phrase denotes members of a class, e.g., when Amos says that he is not the son of a prophet, he is not thereby denying that his father was a prophet. He is denying that he was a member of the prophetic guilds which by that time had fallen into disrepute.

36. The insistence upon the absolute obedience to the word of the prophet is to be seen also in ch. 13, which doubtless is from the same origin as these present verses. The similarity extends even to the death by the lion.

37. This acted symbolism is a feature of the technique of the prophets, partly because of its effectiveness as a means of delivering their message, but also because the doing of it in itself was supposed to have “magic” power in actually bringing their acted word to pass.

39. A talent of silver was worth about sixteen hundred dollars.
life be for his life, or else thou shalt pay a talent of silver.

40 And as thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone. And the king of Israel said unto him, So shall thy judgment be; thyself hast decided it.

41 And he hasted, and took the ashes away from his face; and the king of Israel discerned him that he was of the prophets.

42 And he said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Because thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I appointed to utter destruction, therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people.

43 And the king of Israel went to his house heavy and displeased, and came to Samaria.

And it came to pass after these things, that Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard, which was in Jezreel, hard by the palace of Ahab king of Samaria.

Now Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard in Jezreel, beside the palace

42. For the man whom I had devoted to destruction the M.T. has “the man of my hērem,” i.e., “ban” (cf. 9:21 and Exeg. on vss. 35-43).

6. NABOTH’S VINEYARD (21:1-29)

Ahab wishes to buy Naboth’s vineyard which adjoins his palace in Jezreel. Naboth refuses either to sell or to exchange his ancestral plot of land. Ahab goes home vexed and out of temper, lies down with his face to the wall, and refuses to eat. Jezebel finds him thus, discovers the reason, takes action, and has Naboth condemned and executed, all this on the false charge that he had cursed God and the king. Ahab takes possession of the vineyard, but Elijah hears the whole story and threatens Ahab and all his house. The dogs that licked up the dead Naboth’s blood will lick up Ahab’s blood. To this there is added an even worse fate for Jezebel, and none of Ahab’s race will find rest in a grave. Ahab humbles himself before God, and the doom of his house is postponed for a generation.

a) Naboth’s Refusal (21:1-4)

21:1-4. Naboth refuses to part with his vineyard. This vineyard was Naboth’s inheritance from his fathers, the hereditary property of his family. It did not therefore belong to the king of Israel. Naboth is not covetous, but his father’s vineyard is his father’s by right of inheritance, not by right of purchase. As long as it remained in his family the king could not appropriate it to his own use or even sell it to another. Naboth draws a clear line between the ‘good things of this life’ and the ‘good things of God’s creation’: As long as the vineyard was in his family the king could not appropriate it to his own use or even sell it to another. The vineyard belonged to God. He can take nothing except what he has given. And the possession of this vineyard is not an accident, but a result of the Lord’s will. But the people of Israel were not so good. They did not love the vineyard, but they loved the palaces.

20:40. Too Busy for the Main Business.—When Ahab allowed the Syrian King Ben-hadad to escape he committed a sin in the eyes of Israel’s prophets. It seemed to undo the results of the sacrifices already made. It left the enemy of Israel still abroad, with more trouble to be expected. The incidents of the escape form an interesting story, and the ruse by which the prophet revealed the Lord’s judgment to Ahab is dramatic. Ahab’s treatment of his war prisoner and the prophet’s interpretation of the Lord’s will need not concern us, for the ethics of the primitive time furnish no adequate precedent for our Christian Era. But the explanation of the escape is of perennial significance: As your servant was busy here and there, he was gone. The prophet interpreted Ahab’s failure to his being too busy with other things, his concern to get back the conquered cities, his interest in new trade and profits from Damascus (vs. 34). Too active in his own pursuits, he allowed his divinely-given opportunity to be lost. Thus embedded in the ancient record is a principle which keeps on causing failure.

Like Ahab, we are often too busy to succeed in our main business because excessive activity keeps us from seeing God’s priorities. Our minds are sometimes too active for sleep or for orderly thinking. Trains of thought run through our minds, taking on odd and sundry
And Ahab spake unto Naboth, saying, Give me thy vineyard, that I may have it for a garden of herbs, because it is near unto my house: and I will give thee for it a better vineyard than it; or, if it seem good to thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money.

And Naboth said to Ahab, The Lord forbid it me, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee.

And Ahab came into his house heavy and displeased because of the word which Naboth the Jezreelite had spoken to him: for he had said, I will not give thee the inheritance of my fathers. And he laid him down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no bread.

belong to Naboth, but to his whole family, past and yet to be born. He was perfectly within his rights in refusing to part with the property. Indeed, properly speaking, he could not do otherwise, neither was any other plot of land a suitable exchange. Ahab here found himself in conflict with ancient custom, the rights of the peasant from time immemorial. Ahab himself seems to have realized that there was nothing further he could do about it, but Jezebel with her highhanded action solved his problem. The price they paid for Naboth's vineyard was to make the prophets the champion of the rights of the common man. There were united against them religious zeal and democratic fervor, always a dangerous and usually an effective combination.

passengers, but going round and round over the tracks of fixed ideas, getting nowhere. Our bodies add to the restlessness. Physical motion becomes a substitute for sustained thought. Our eagerness to devour new sensations diverts our attention and deteriorates our thinking into "thobbing," to use Henshaw Ward's word. Or the pressure of things to be done drives us toward distraction. The intoxication of activity keeps us going, without reflection as to why we go or whither we go. Like "homeless, drunken mercenaries," we rush hither and yon, selling our labor for that which is not bread.

Our faith in God through Christ should help us to see the divine pattern for our lives. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness" (Matt. 6:33). When we take time to see the outlines of the life pattern, God's priorities begin to appear in concrete forms. We are enabled to distinguish ends from means. We recognize God as our master and mammon as our servant. We get a singleness of eye which keeps us from darkening and distracting comparisons (Matt. 6:22). We get a singleness of aim which imparts a sense of direction and a sureness of touch.

In Dickens' Christmas Carol the miserly Scrooge is confronted by the ghost of his dead partner, Jacob Marley, who in life had been as stingy as Scrooge. Now from the realm of shadow Marley's ghost tries to save his partner from his own fate. Scrooge seeks to comfort him by saying, "But you were always a good man of business, Jacob." Whereupon Marley's ghost cries: "Business! Mankind was my business. The common welfare was my business; charity, mercy, forbearance, and benevolence, were, all, my business." Too late he had discovered God's priorities.

Activism also allows opportunity to escape by being too busy to keep God's pace. When Ahab impulsively called Ben-hadad into his chariot, he made hasty judgments and rushed from principle to expediency. When we act on the spur of the moment, we are likely to ride recklessly. "He that believeth shall not make haste" (Isa. 28:16). Faith in God does not ignore the urgency of situations, but it avoids the haste that makes waste. "In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength" (Isa. 30:15). The prophet was trying to recall his countrymen from their political expedients to the calm of reasoned judgment and divine trust.

Jesus, like the prophets and psalmists before him, sought to help men keep pace with God. He turned to the restless crowds, tiring themselves by their futile strivings, and said: "Come 5 But Jezebel his wife came to him, and said unto him, Why is thy spirit so sad, that thou eatest no bread?
6 And he said unto her, Because I spake unto Naboth the Jezreelite, and said unto him, Give me thy vineyard for money; or else, if it please thee, I will give thee another vineyard for it: and he answered, I will not give thee my vineyard.
7 And Jezebel his wife said unto him, Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel? arise, and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry: I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite.
8 So she wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal, and sent the letters unto the elders and to the nobles that were in his city, dwelling with Naboth.
9 And she wrote in the letters, saying, Proclaim a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people:

b) JEZEBEL'S PLOT (21:5-12)

8. The word hōrām means "freeborn," "freedman" in other Semitic languages, but in Hebrew it refers to men of somewhat higher station in life, and even means nobles. It is properly an Aramaic word, used in the north, and not appearing in the southern literature until the late period, i.e., the time of Nehemiah. It occurs twice in Jeremiah (27:20; 39:6), but neither of these two passages is found in the LXX (S. R. Driver, An Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament [rev. ed.; New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1918], p. 558, n.).

9. A fast is called at a time of grave national emergency, caused by a crime which brings the whole of the people into danger from the anger of God. In the O.T. a fast is called at such a time of crisis, either as a sign of contrition or by way of intercession. It was associated with any period fraught with destiny, when a man believed himself to be close to that borderline which divides this world from the other. Thus, in primitive religion the time of death, i.e., the seven days of death, is a time for fasting (I Sam. 31:13), probably on account of the nearness of the spirit world. The fast which Jezebel proclaimed was destined to prepare the people for the alleged approach of the deity, which in turn is due to a serious crime committed against him. God has drawn near, so that a crisis is at hand. Fasting in worship has the same ancient and primitive origin, though here the custom has been re-explained on more developed spiritual lines.

unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me. . . . For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light" (Matt. 11:28-30). The young ox must be "broken" to the yoke. At first it is fractious and fuming, rushing ahead, then holding back, wearing itself sore with the yoke. But eventually it learns the timing of the steady, experienced animal with which it is teamed. So Christ's followers were to be his teammates, falling into step with him, and finding thereby a restful pace. And Jesus' own yoke was easy because he was teamed with the Eternal. He was so at one with his heavenly Father that he took things in God's stride. There was urgency in Jesus' program, "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day" (John 9:4). But he did not give the impression of being hurried. He had time to talk with little children, to attend festive occasions, to "come apart and rest awhile." He moved calmly, steadily, "with unperturbed pace" toward his goal. He did not allow regret for joys that were past or anxiety for troubles ahead 10 And set two men, sons of Belial, before him, to bear witness against him, saying, Thou didst blaspheme God and the king. And then carry him out, and stone him, that he may die.
11 And the men of his city, even the elders and the nobles who were the inhabitants in his city, did as Jezebel had sent unto them, and as it was written in the letters which she had sent unto them.
12 They proclaimed a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people.
13 And there came in two men, children of Belial, and sat before him: and the men of Belial witnessed against him, even against Naboth, in the presence of the people, saying, Naboth did blaspheme God and the king. Then they carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him with stones, that he died.

10. Two witnesses were essential according to ancient law, laid down clearly and specifically by the Deuteronomists (Deut. 17:6; 19:15; Num. 35:30; cf. also Matt. 26:60; Moses and Elijah [Mark 9:5] are the two witnesses to Messiah).

The phrase sons of Belial is generally understood to mean “sons of worthlessness” or base fellows, “lewd fellows of the baser sort.” If this interpretation is correct, the word Belial is a compound word made up of beli (“not”) and yad ("profit"), i.e., “good-for-nothings.” An alternative derivation produces the meaning “ne'er-do-wells,” although Burney is of the opinion that such compound words are late, and that we are here dealing with a word which the Masoretes revocalized. He suggests that the word is connected with the root yāl (“to swallow up”), and therefore means “engulfing ruin” (Notes on Hebrew Text of Kings, pp. 245-47).

The Hebrew has “blessed,” a euphemism which has been deliberately substituted because even to mention the sin of blasphemy is a sin. The English versions have rightly changed the word back again to cursed. (The euphemistic usage is found elsewhere in the O.T., e.g., Job 1:5; 2:3, 9; Ps. 10:5.)

c) Naboth’s Death (21:13-16)

13. Here is the crime of which Naboth is accused (cf. Exod. 22:28). It seems strange to us that so much importance should be attached to a spoken curse, for today 14 Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, Naboth is stoned, and is dead.
15 ¶ And it came to pass, when Jezebel heard that Naboth was stoned, and was dead, that Jezebel said to Ahab, Arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money: for Naboth is not alive, but dead.
16 And it came to pass, when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, that Ahab rose up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, to take possession of it.
17 ¶ And the word of the Lord came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying, 18 Arise, go down to meet Ahab king of Israel, which is in Samaria: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth, whither he is gone down to possess it.
19 And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the Lord, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine.

a curse is a curse and nothing more. In the ninth century B.C. ancient ideas concerning curses still held. People believed that a curse, like a blessing, had itself active power and therefore itself caused real damage. The speaking of the curse itself did real harm to the one who was cursed, and even a curse against God was supposed in some strange way to have an effectiveness. Everything therefore had to be done to wipe out him who uttered the curse because of the supposed anger of the Deity, who would certainly take action against this man who sought to inflict harm and damage upon God.

15. According to II Kings 9:26, Naboth’s sons were also stoned to death. This was necessary in order to prevent the fulfillment of the curse, since they, being his sons, were regarded as being agents in the matter. Further, from Jezebel’s point of view this was necessary in order to enable Ahab to become possessor of the vineyard, possession of which reverted to the crown when there was no heir.

16. According to Josephus (Antiquities VIII. 13. 8) “Ahab was glad at what had been done, and rose up immediately from the bed whereon he lay,” but the LXX says that he “rent his clothes and put on sackcloth.”

ELIJAH’S INTERVENTION (21:17-29)

17-29. Vss. 20b-22, 24 are the work of the earlier Deuteronomistic compiler (ca. 610 B.C.). The dynasty of Omri is to be wiped out as the dynasty of Jeroboam son of Nebat was 20 And Ahab said to Elijah, Hast thou found me, O mine enemy? And he answered, I have found thee: because thou hast sold thyself to work evil in the sight of the LORD.

21 Behold, I will bring evil upon thee, and will take away thy posterity, and will cut off from Ahab him that pisseth against the wall, and him that is shut up and left in Israel, 22 And will make thine house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and like the house of Baasha the son of Ahijah, for the provocation wherewith thou hast provoked me to anger, and made Israel to sin.

23 And of Jezebel also spake the LORD, saying, The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel.

24 Him that dieth of Ahab in the city the dogs shall eat; and him that dieth in the field shall the fowls of the air eat.

25 ¶ But there was none like unto Ahab, which did sell himself to work wickedness in the sight of the LORD, whom Jezebel his wife stirred up.

26 And he did very abominably in following idols, according to all things as did the Amorites, whom the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

27 And it came to pass, when Ahab heard those words, that he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and fasted, and lay in sackcloth, and went softly.

wiped out, and for the same reason: neither line of kings had been faithful to the Deuteronomic ideas. Vss. 25-26 are also Deuteronomic in tone and style, but come from the later Deuteronomic editor (ca. 550 B.C.).

Vs. 23 interrupts the sequence. Possibly it is part of the original story of Naboth and his fate, since it is clear that the action of Jezebel was really the action to which the prophet took such grave exception. It is more likely to be part of the original story day's expected events. It also gives power and responsiveness. With a perspective of God's priorities, and an adjustment to God's pace, we are ready for life's "big moments," whether good or bad, and we are not too busy to succeed in our main business.

The record is that when Ahab recognized the prophet and realized the loss he had suffered, he "went to his house resentful and sullen" (vs. 43). Alongside Ahab, consider a father of our own day. Ambitious to succeed, engrossed in his various pursuits, he neglected to cultivate and enjoy the company of his only son. At twenty the lad was taken. Imagine the father's anguish as he looked up to God and cried, As your servant was busy here and there, he was gone.

21:20. Selling One's Soul.—The evil course of Ahab seemed to reach its nadir in his killing of Naboth in order to get possession of a vineyard. His petty greed, his pliability in the hands of the unscrupulous Jezebel, his permission of the trumped-up charge against Naboth, and his complicity in the execution of the innocent man constitute a chapter of unrelied blackness. When he saw Elijah approaching, the bloodstained Ahab cried, Have you found me,
28 And the word of the Lord came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying,
29 Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself before me? because he humbleth himself before me, I will not bring the evil in his days: but in his son's days will I bring the evil upon his house.

And they continued three years without war between Syria and Israel.

And it came to pass in the third year, that Jehoshaphat the king of Judah came down to the king of Israel.

22 For three years Syria and Israel continued without war. But in the third year Jehoshaphat the king of Judah than an interpolation based on II Kings 9:36, especially since there is evidence both in vss. 27-29 and in the LXX statement in vs. 16 that Ahab clothed himself in sackcloth and ashes, and showed true and real repentance. There is no need at all to assume that the penitence of Ahab was not real.

7. Ahab's Last Battle (22:1-40)

Apparently part of the territory which Ben-hadad of Syria-Damascus ought to have returned to Ahab after the battle of Aphek (20:34) included Ramoth-gilead. Ahab takes steps to secure the return of this city, important because of its proximity to the eastern caravan route through Gilead. Ahab commands his vassal, Jehoshaphat of Judah, to join him. The Judahite king wishes to consult the prophets over the wisdom of the venture, and they all with one accord prophesy victory. But there is one prophet, Micaiah, whom Ahab has not called, because his oracles are consistently unfavorable to the king. Micaiah is called. He prophesies the death of Ahab and the defeat of Israel. Ahab takes every precaution to prevent the fulfillment of the prophet's words, even to requesting that Jehoshaphat, his vassal, wear his armor. But an archer shoots an arrow without taking particular aim, and Ahab, dressed as a common chariot soldier, is pierced and slain. The dogs of Samaria lick up his blood, and the Deuteronomist adds his customary obituary notice.

In the LXX and Lucian this chapter follows ch. 20, since they have placed ch. 21 after ch. 19. This arrangement is much sounder, since chs. 20 and 22 both tell of Ahab's wars with Ben-hadad of Syria-Damascus.

22:1. The Assyrian menace has passed with the Battle of Qarqar, and Ahab renews his wars against Syria, seeking to repossess all that his father had lost. It appears that Ben-hadad had not fulfilled his promise to give Ramoth-gilead back to Ahab, so Ahab proceeds to take it. Josephus (Antiquities VIII. 15. 3) makes the explicit statement that Ben-hadad had taken this city from Omri.

2. Jehoshaphat of Judah comes to Ahab of Israel at the latter's bidding. This involves vassalage on the part of Jehoshaphat. Such a state of affairs is confirmed by O my enemy? To a guilty conscience the prophet of God always looks like an enemy. And Elijah replied, I have found you, because you have sold yourself to do what is evil in the sight of the Lord.

Ahab had sold his soul for the price of his neighbor's vineyard. Our minds are arrested by the thought of selling our souls outright as in this case, or as did Faust in the familiar legend, or as George Eliot's Silas Marner sold his soul for his pile of gold, or as did Cardinal Wolsey for political power. When we contemplate such dramatic cases, we say at once, "What a bad bargain!" The agonized cry of Faust as he contemplates the thought of eternal hell which awaits him, and the mournful soliloquy of Wolsey as he considers the present hell which he has brought on himself, haunt us. Some hold that if we would stress, as our grandfathers did, the dread judgment laid up for such sinners, we could restrain the current trends to evil. But one wonders whether it is the severity
3 And the king of Israel said unto his servants, Know ye that Ramoth in Gilead is ours, and we be still, and take it not out of the hand of the king of Syria?

4 And he said unto Jehoshaphat, Wilt thou go with me to battle at Ramoth-gilead? And Jehoshaphat said to the king of Israel, I am as thou art, my people as thy people, my horses as thy horses.

5 And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, Inquire, I pray thee, at the word of the Lord to-day.

6 Then the king of Israel gathered the prophets together, about four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall I go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, Go up; for the Lord will deliver it into the hand of the king.

7 And Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the Lord besides, that we might inquire of him?

8 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet one man, Micaiah the son of Imlah, by whom we may inquire of the Lord: but I hate him; for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil.

came down to the king of Israel. 3 And the king of Israel said to his servants, “Do you know that Ramoth-gilead belongs to us, and we keep quiet and do not take it out of the hand of the king of Syria?” 4 And he said to Jehosh’aphat, “Will you go with me to battle at Ramoth-gilead?” And Jehosh’aphat said to the king of Israel, “I am as you are, my people as your people, my horses as your horses.”

5 And Jehosh’aphat said to the king of Israel, “Inquire first for the word of the Lord.” 6 Then the king of Israel gathered the prophets together, about four hundred men, and said to them, “Shall I go to battle against Ramoth-gilead, or shall I forbear?” And they said, “Go up; for the Lord will give it into the hand of the king.”

7 But Jehosh’aphat said, “Is there not here another prophet of the Lord of whom we may inquire?” 8 And the king of Israel said to Jehosh’aphat, “There is yet one man by whom we may inquire of the Lord, Mica’iah the son of Imlah; but I hate him, for the part that the Judean king plays in the battle, where the LXX says correctly that Ahab caused Jehoshaphat to array himself in his (Ahab’s) robes. This is really clear from the M.T. in vs. 22, where it is evident that the Syrians thought they were attacking Ahab himself, and it was only when Jehoshaphat cried out that they realized their error.

4. The horses mentioned here were not riding horses, but chariot horses, since the Hebrew word is יונים, not סוסים.

6. The different point of view from that of ch. 18 is plain. Ahab can call upon four hundred prophets of the Lord who are favorable to him and fully loyal. There is but one prophet who takes the attitude which Elijah took, one of antagonism to the house of Ahab, and this prophet is a certain Micaiah ben Imlah.

of the punishment or the subtlety of the selling which needs to be watched and emphasized. We can lose possession of our souls without selling them outright.

For instance, we may gradually lose possession of our souls by mortgaging them. We do something shady. Somebody “gets something” on us, as we say, and that gives him a hold over us. It is like a mortgage plastered on our personalities. In the presence of some people we cannot call our souls our own, because we have done things which keep us from being our true selves. Take the case of a teacher. As such, he is dedicated to the imparting of truth. But the school where he teaches is subjected to certain pressure groups which insist that he shall give a desired color to the content of his teaching.

In order to hold his position he gives consideration to pleasing those groups. Thereupon he ceases to be the free agent that Spinoza was when he refused to accept the chair of philosophy at Heidelberg because it might curtail his independence of thought. Or consider a minister of the gospel. As a minister, he is ordained to preach the word of God as sincerely as he can know it. But he asks himself, “What good is it to proclaim God’s word if I have few to hear it? Am I not the pastor of a congregation, and must I not seek to give my message in such a way that it will win acceptance by my people?” Yet in trying to get his words across, it is so easy to allow his concern for their acceptability to soften the truth! To be a servant of one’s parishioners and also a prophet of one’s God is
And Jehoshaphat said, Let not the king say so.

9 Then the king of Israel called an officer, and said, Hasten hither Micahah the son of Imlah.

10 And the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah sat each on his throne, having put on their robes, in a void place in the entrance of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets prophesied before them.

11 And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah made him horns of iron: and he said, Thus saith the Lord, With these shalt thou push the Syrians, until thou have consumed them.

12 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for the Lord shall deliver it into the king's hand.

13 And the messenger that was gone to call Micaiah spake unto him, saying, Behold now, the words of the prophets declare good unto the king with one mouth: let thy word, he never prophesies good concerning me, but evil." And Jehoshaphat said, "Let not the king say so." 9 Then the king of Israel summoned an officer and said, "Bring quickly Mica'ah the son of Imlah." 10 Now the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah were sitting on their thrones, arrayed in their robes, at the threshing floor at the entrance of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets were prophesying before them. 11 And Zedeki'ah the son of Chena'ananah made for himself horns of iron, and said, "Thus says the Lord, 'With these you shall push the Syrians until they are destroyed.' " 12 And all the prophets prophesied so, and said, "Go up to Ramoth-gilead and triumph; the Lord will give it into the hand of the king."

13 And the messenger who went to summon Mica'iah said to him, "Behold, the words of the prophets with one accord are..."
I pray thee, be like the word of one of them, and speak that which is good.

14 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, what the LORD saith unto me, that will I speak.

15 ¶ So he came to the king. And the king said unto him, Micaiah, shalt we go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall we forbear? And he answered him, Go, and prosperous: for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

16 And the king said unto him, How many times shall I adjure thee that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the LORD?

17 And he said, I saw all Israel scattered upon the hills, as sheep that have not a shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master: let them return every man to his house in peace.

18 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would prophesy no good concerning me, but evil?

19 And he said, Hear thou therefore the word of the LORD: I saw the LORD sitting on the throne, and beside him sat the children of heaven.

14. This is the word of the true prophet, who will speak only the true word of the Lord to him. He is influenced neither by kings nor by majorities. When Micaiah gives a favorable oracle (vs. 15), Ahab is immediately suspicious of it. He knows his man.

17. Micaiah now gives his true oracle, prophesying the doom of Ahab. The oracle is composed in the customary rhythmic and poetical form, being in a 2+2 meter. Micaiah is made to speak this true oracle by the oath with which Ahab adjures him. He can do no other than say exactly what he believes to be the truth.

19. The reference to the angelic host, attendant upon the Lord as he sits on his heavenly throne, as the host of heaven is unusual in the books of Kings, where this phrase normally refers to the stars (see II Kings 17:16). We have therefore additional evidence here of the different source from which the material in this chapter has been taken.

his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left. And the Lord said, Who shall persuade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one said on this manner, and another said on that manner.

21 And there came forth a spirit, and stood before the Lord, and said, I will persuade him.

22 And the Lord said unto him, Wherewith? And he said, I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also: go forth, and do so.

23 Now therefore, behold, the Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and the Lord hath spoken evil concerning thee.

24 But Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah went near, and smote Micaiah on the cheek, and said, Which way went the Spirit of the Lord from me to speak unto thee?

20-24. The problem of the false prophet is one of the most difficult in the O.T. The court prophets were doubtless honest men whose zeal for their country and whose devotion to the successful Ahab made them sure of Ahab's victory. They believed this to be the veritable word of the Lord. Further, even Micaiah, who knew that their message was false, believed that since they were prophets they were actually speaking the word which God had given to them. That is what the prophet does when he speaks. The explanation given, therefore, is that God had deliberately deceived them in order to lure Ahab to his death. It is evidence of various stages in the development of man's ideas about God. The author, equally with Micaiah, believed that all prophecy had a more-than-human origin. If the man himself is in control of his faculties, the word is his and so are the actions. But if a man is not in control of his own faculties, e.g., a prophet in his ecstasy or perhaps a well-known prophet under all circumstances, then either the word of the prophet is the word of the Lord or else it is a message from some spirit alien to God. The prophet Micaiah is enough of a monotheist to reject the idea of any prophetic inspiration in Israel other than that which has been inspired by the God of Israel, so he has to say that the Lord deliberately put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these your prophets (vs. 25). By the next century, in the time of Amos, such an answer could scarcely be possible. Yet Jeremiah, in the late seventh century, can talk of God deceiving him when the expected result does not come to pass (Jer. 20:7). Even Paul is not wholly emancipated from this strange way of thinking (II Thess. 2:11-12). The solution of 1 John 4:1 is that some spirits are not under God's control. The full development in the O.T. is that true prophecy is inspired by "the Spirit of the Lord," רוחוֹ 'adhônāy, and it is this phrase which foreshadows in the O.T. the Holy Spirit of the every secular cause; but it takes a terrific toll from the church when it lures her preachers as spokesmen for so many secondary and spurious causes. It is one thing to be used of truth; it is quite another to have one's voice and office used to give partisan and passing causes the 25 And Micaiah said, Behold, thou shalt see in that day, when thou shalt go into an inner chamber to hide thyself.

26 And the king of Israel said, Take Micaiah, and carry him back unto Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king’s son;

27 And say, Thus saith the king, Put this fellow in the prison, and feed him with bread of affliction and with water of affliction, until I come in peace.

28 And Micaiah said, If thou return at all in peace, the LORD hath not spoken by me. And he said, Hearken, O people, every one of you.

29 So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah went up to Ramoth-gilead.

30 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, I will disguise myself, and enter into the battle; but put thou on thy robes. And the king of Israel disguised himself, and went into the battle.

31 But the king of Syria commanded his thirty and two captains that had rule over his chariots, saying, Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king of Israel.

N.T., and ultimately the Third Person of the Trinity of Christian doctrine (N. H. Snaith, “The Spirit of God in Jewish Thought,” The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit [London: Epworth Press, 1987], pp. 11-21, especially p. 17). The use of the phrase “the Spirit of the Lord” to denote true prophecy may be seen in vs. 24. Zedekiah smites Micaiah on the cheek and demands of him what authority he has to say that he (Micaiah) is right and all the rest of them wrong. The way Zedekiah puts the question is How did the Spirit of the Lord go from me to speak to you?

28. The concluding phrase and he said, “Hear, all you peoples” is not found in the LXX, but it is a quotation from the opening words of Micah (1:2), inserted on account of a wrong identification of Micaiah ben Imlah with Micah of Moresheth-gath.

31. The command to attack Ahab only is partly a recognition of the skill and prowess of Ahab as soldier and general, but partly also due to the idea that if “the light of Israel” fails, then Israel fails also (cf. II Sam. 21:17). The welfare of the nation is identified with the welfare of the king (see also Exeg. on 11:36).

32. Instead of turned . . . against him, it is better to follow the LXX and the parallel II Chr. 18:31, reading “surrounded him.” The variation in the Hebrew is small (יָרָד for יָרֵד).

And they turned aside to fight against him: and Jehoshaphat cried out. 33 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, that they turned back from pursuing him. 34 And a certain man drew a bow at a venture, and smote the king of Israel between the joints of the harness: wherefore he said unto the driver of his chariot, Turn thine hand, and carry me out of the host; for I am wounded. 35 And the battle increased that day: and the king was stayed up in his chariot against the Syrians, and died at even: and the blood ran out of the wound into the midst of the chariot. 36 And there went a proclamation throughout the host about the going down of the sun, saying, Every man to his city, and every man to his own country. 37 ¶ So the king died, and was brought to Samaria; and they buried the king in Samaria. 38 And one washed the chariot in the pool of Samaria; and the dogs licked up his blood; and they washed his armor; according unto the word of the LORD which he spake. 39 Now the rest of the acts of Ahab, and all that he did, and the ivory house which houses which a century later the wealthy magnates of Amos' time favored (Amos 3:15). Additional evidence as to Ahab's prowess in this respect is to be seen in the LXX of Jer. 22:15, where the reading is, "Shalt thou be king because thou dost eagerly strive to excel Ahab?" The preceding verses make it clear that the reference is to building. See also Ps. 45:9, which may well be connected with the marriage of Ahab and Jezebel (cf. the reference to "the daughter of Tyre" in vs. 12).

D. THE ELISHA NARRATIVES (I Kings 22:41—II Kings 8:29)

1. JEHOSHAFOHAT OF JUHAD (22:41-50)

The major events of the reign of Jehoshaphat have already been mentioned in the story of Ahab and Ramoth-gilead. This fact was due to the custom of the Deuteronomistic editor who deals wholly with the life of one king before he turns back to the reigns of the kings who have meanwhile succeeded in the other kingdom. Most of these verses are from the hand of the editor and contain the usual introductory and obituary notices proper to a king of Judah. Vss. 46-49 are from the annals. From them we learn that Edom was vassal to Jehoshaphat, and that a disastrous attempt was made to open up once more that foreign trade with the East, based at Ezion-geber at the head of the Gulf of Aqabah, which had brought great profit and luxury to Solomon.

church would give me what I want, I would attend its services." Religion, however, cannot be sold on the department store principle that the customer is always right. Ahab got from the false prophets the message which he liked, and it led to the loss of his life. People think they know what they want; they do not always know what they need. And the minister's prophetic function is to lead men from what they want to what they need.

In 1940 the editors of Fortune chided the church's shepherds with following rather than leading their flocks. The result, they said, was a vicious spiral of spiritual disillusionment. And 46 And the remnant of the sodomites, which remained in the days of his father Asa, he took out of the land.
47 There was then no king in Edom: a deputy was king.
48 Jehoshaphat made ships of Tharshish to go to Ophir for gold: but they went not, for the ships were broken at Ezion-geber.
49 Then said Ahaziah the son of Ahab unto Jehoshaphat, Let my servants go with thy servants in the ships. But Jehoshaphat would not.
50 ¶ And Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and Jehoram his son reigned in his stead.
51 ¶ Ahaziah the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned two years over Israel.
52 And he did evil in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the way of his father, and in the way of his mother, and in the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin:
53 For he served Baal, and worshipped him, and provoked to anger the Lord God of Israel, according to all that his father had done.

47-50. These verses are not found in the LXX MSS, except in Codex A. The reference there, however, is to one ship only. The statement in the M.T. that the deputy was king in Edom, following immediately after the statement that there was no king, is strange though intelligible. It can be taken to mean that there was no native Edomite king reigning, but that Jehoshaphat’s deputy reigned in his stead. Bernhard Stade (The Books of Kings, tr. R. E. Brünnnow and Paul Haupt [Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1914; “The Sacred Books of the Old Testament”], ad loc.) has proposed a reconstruction of vss. 47-48 as follows: “There was no king in Edom, and the deputy of King Jehoshaphat made a ship....”

51-53. The chapter concludes with the formal Deuteronomic introduction of the reign of Ahaziah of Israel. The story of Ahaziah is carried on in an excerpt from the prophetic tales of the north (see II Kings 1:17-18).

Then Moab rebelled against Israel after the death of Ahab.

2 And Ahaziah fell down through a lattice in his upper chamber that was in Samaria, and was sick: and he sent messengers, and said unto them, Go, inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron whether I shall recover of this disease.

2. Ahaziah of Israel. (II Kings 1:1-18)

1:1. A fuller account of Jehoram's abortive attempt to reconquer Moab is to be found in 3:4-27—a story taken from a source akin to that of I Kings 22:1-37. All these stories portray an interest in the north not shared by the 610 B.C. compiler. According to the Moabitic stone (King Mesha's own account of the revolt), Moab revolted from Israelite suzerainty during the time of Omri's son; but Ahaziah's reign was so short that the variation is of no great account.

2-17a. Ahaziah falls through a lattice in the upper chamber of his palace and receives severe injuries. He sends to the shrine at Ekron to inquire whether he will recover. The messengers are met by Elijah, who is full of wrath because the king has sent to this heathen shrine and not to the Lord. Elijah resists capture at the hands of bodies of troops sent to arrest him, and finally goes to the king and foretells his death. This doom is fulfilled, and the chapter concludes with a Deuteronomic obituary notice and a formal note of the name of the successor.

2. The 'ādiyyāh (upper chamber) was normally a roof chamber, built over the city gateway (II Sam. 18:33) or on the corner of the house roof (Neh. 3:31), usually with access by a stairway from the street. Josephus is thinking in terms of some such roof chamber (Antiquities IX. 2. 1) when he says that Ahaziah fell as he was coming down.

1:16. 16-18. How Ahaziah Failed.—Ahaziah was cursed with evil parents. He was reared in a house of cruelty and irreligion. Ahab and Jezebel! How could a son of such a pair do other than come to a bad end? Of course this does not always follow. As we shall see, the Southern Kingdom never had worse rulers than Manasseh and his son Amon. Yet also it never had a better one than good King Josiah, the son of Amon. So today we sometimes see the miracle of a pure and holy life defying all laws of heredity and environment, for the grace of God is not bound and fettered by natural laws. Yet it remains true that generally a child follows in the path of his parents, just as Ahaziah "walked in the way of his father, and in the way of his mother" (I Kings 22:52). Thus Ruskin has remarked that the history of a nation is written not by its wars, but by its homes. A good home is the surest guarantee of virtue. Houses of luxury, materialism, and indulgence are the breeding places of the evils that threaten civilization. The paramount question is whether we can maintain simplicity of life and high moral standards, or whether we shall be corrupted by the disease that may grow from wealth, by almost unlimited possibilities of pleasure and indulgence which are at our disposal. Thus is destroyed the foundation upon which the whole future organization of society must rest. What is going on in a million homes...

3 But the angel of the Lord said to Elijah the Tishbite, Arise, go up to meet the messengers of the king of Samaria, and say unto them, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that ye go to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekrón?

4 Now therefore thus saith the Lord, Thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die. And Elijah departed.

from the top of his house. Probably Ahaziah's chamber was more in terms of the "wide and spacious roof chambers" of which Jeremiah (22:14) speaks, with windows cut out. Furthermore, these eastern windows were for letting in the air (not light). Ahaziah fell through the protective latticework of one of these open window spaces in his spacious roof chamber.

He sentmessengers to "seek an oracle" or inquire of Baal-zebub, the god of Ekrón. This was no "obscure local deity," as some commentators have said, but a localized form of the great Baal of Syria, the weather-god, identified with Hadad, and also locally identified with Baal-Melkart, tutelary god of Tyre. He is the Baal of the Ras Shamra tablets. The name Baal-zebub means "Lord of flies." It was formerly the custom of commentators to compare him and even to identify him with the Greek god Zeus Aponius—i.e., Zeus the averter of flies—as a god who possessed the special power of destroying this Eastern pest. Hence the LXX here has μιστος θεος. It is now certain that the god's true name was Baal-zebul, so that Cheyne's suggestion has proved to be correct. The alteration of the last letter was deliberate on the part of earliest copyists because it was the name of an idol-god. They wished to turn the name into something offensive and ludicrous. The name Baal-zebul has been found in the Ras Shamra tablets in the form Zbl-b'l. In one text he is equated with "the rider of the clouds" (III AB, A; cf. Charles Virolleaud, "La révolte de Kôsé contre Baal," Syria, XVI [1935], 29-35), or again he is Aliyan-Baal, the god who controls the springs, wells, and watercourses, and comes to life again from his dwelling (zebul) in the earth (I AB, III-IV, 2-3; cf. Virolleaud, "Un poème phénicien de Ras-Shamra," Syria, XII [1931], 193-224; also René Dussaud, Les découvertes de Ras Shamra [Paris: Paul Geuthner, 1987], pp. 69, 79; W. F. Albright, "The North-Canaanite Epic of 'Al'eyân Ba'al and Môt," Journal of the Palestine Oriental Society, XII [1932], 191-92). He is thus the life-god of Syria, and Elijah is protesting against precisely the same syncretism on the part of Ahaziah as he had done in the case of Ahab his father on Mount Carmel. On the former occasion at Carmel it was a choice between Baal-Melkart and the Lord; on this latter occasion it was a choice between Baal-zebul and the Lord (cf. Hos. 2.8). It will be seen that the Greek N.T. is thus correct at Matt. 10:25 and elsewhere in reading Beelzeboul, and that some English versions are wrong in assimilating their spelling there to the deliberately erroneous spelling of this verse in II Kings 1.2.

Ekrón was one of the five cities of the Philistines (Josh. 13:3). It was about fifteen miles south of the modern Jaffa, and was therefore the most easily accessible of the five to any traveler from Israel.

3. The angel of the Lord is a temporary manifestation of God, and here, as in I Kings 19:5-8, is the medium by which the word of the Lord is given to the prophet.

today will determine the kind of world in which we will live tomorrow.

Ahaziah's brief reign was filled from beginning to end with nothing but catastrophe. Weak, faithless, miserable, he caused every-thing he touched to end in ruin and failure. Once the strong hand of Ahab was removed (vs. 1), there came the quick rebellion of Moab. Then came Ahaziah's own bodily accident (vs. 2). Yet had Ahaziah had faith in the God of

6 And they said unto him, There came a man up to meet us, and said unto us, Go, turn again unto the king that sent you, and say unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that thou sendest to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron? therefore thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.
7 And he said unto them, What manner of man was he which came up to meet you, and told you these words?
8 And they answered him, He was a hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. And he said, It is Elijah the Tishbite.
9 Then the king sent unto him a captain of fifty with his fifty. And he went up to him: and, behold, he sat on the top of a hill. And he spake unto him, Thou man of God, the king hath said, Come down.
10 And Elijah answered and said to the captain of fifty, If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And there came down fire from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.
11 Again also he sent unto him another captain of fifty with his fifty. And he answered and said unto him, O man of God, thus hath the king said, Come down quickly.

And he said, "It is Eli'jah the Tishbite."
9 Then the king sent to him a captain of fifty men with his fifty. He went up to Eli'jah, who was sitting on the top of a hill, and said to him, "O man of God, the king says, 'Come down.'" 10 But Eli'jah answered the captain of fifty, "If I am a man of God, let fire come down from heaven and consume you and your fifty." Israel he might have surmounted these difficulties. For there are few obstacles in life which faith and courage cannot conquer.

But what did Ahaziah do? He sent messengers to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron whether I shall recover of this disease (vs. 2). For help he looked to pagan gods, instead of to the God of his fathers. And many people today in similar misfortunes do as he did. They do not go to the rich resources of faith contained between the covers of their Bibles, to the unfailling power of real religion. Rather, they inquire of modern Baal-zebubs. They consult ouijas, astrologists, necromancers, fortunetellers; or they place reliance on a purely secular psychiatry, on theosophy, on various forms of menticulture. But they do not go to the God revealed to us in Scripture, to the strength supplied by Jesus Christ, to the simple faith in the prayer which "availeth much," to the undeniable powers of a true Christian faith to heal disease, to lift one above the levels of depression and despair, and enable one to overcome the evils which beset him.

13 ¶ And he sent again a captain of the third fifty with his fifty. And the third captain of fifty went up, and came and fell on his knees before Elijah, and besought him, and said unto him, O man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of these fifty thy servants, be precious in thy sight.

14 Behold, there came fire down from heaven, and burnt up the two captains of the former fifties with their fifties: therefore let my life now be precious in thy sight.

15 And the angel of the Lord said unto Elijah, Go down with him: be not afraid of him. And he arose, and went down with him unto the king.

16 And he said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Forasmuch as thou hast sent messengers to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron, is it not because there is no God in Israel to inquire of his word? therefore thou shalt not come down off that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

17 ¶ So he died according to the word of the Lord which Elijah had spoken. And Jehoram reigned in his stead, in the second year of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah; because he had no son.

17b-18. These Deuteronomic notices are strange. Vs. 17b normally would follow vs. 18; moreover, it does not agree with the statement of 3:1. There are actually three do the work of a prophet. He is to confront the messengers of Ahaziah with the ignignant question, “Is it because there is no God in Israel that you are going to inquire of Baal-zebub?” (vs. 3). And the same question may well be put by a modern minister of God to many an Ahaziah today. The poor, sick king at Samaria is to be told that he will die because he inquired of Baal-zebub instead of the God of Israel.

The story which follows reveals the undimin-ished moral energies of Elijah. As he called down the fire on the prophets of Baal, so he called down the fire on the messengers of Ahaziah. Two squads of fifty, we are told, were actually consumed. The third was spared only because its leader begged for mercy. The credibility of such happenings as this will be dis-cussed later (see pp. 215-16). Here we are con-cerned only with the cruelty of them. It was a barbaric age. There was little sense of the sanctity of personal life. Deeds of savagery did not offend the moral sense of even the noblest among God’s people. They were then, it must be remembered, at the beginnings of their moral education. God took his people in the rough and gradually educated them out of the barbarism of their neighbors. What we find in the Bible is the wonderful story of the slow evolution of moral ideals. The divine seed was sown in corruption, but it was raised in incorruption. Let one compare what he finds in this chapter with what he finds in Rom. 12:19-21 and in Eph. 4:32, and remember that Paul belonged to the same race as Elijah; he discovers then to what high levels of conduct this progres-sive development led under the tutelage of the Spirit of God as it was finally revealed in Jesus Christ.

The story as it stands, however, has its moral lesson which must not be overlooked. Elijah is 18 Now the rest of the acts of Ahaziah which he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

2 And it came to pass, when the Lord would take up Elijah into heaven by a whirlwind, that Elijah went with Elisha from Gilgal.

2 And Elijah said unto Elisha, Tarry here, I pray thee; for the Lord hath sent me to Beth-el. And Elisha said unto him, As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they went down to Beth-el.

3:1 The idea of whirlwind is by no means essential to the Hebrew word. The reference is to the stormwind often associated with the coming of God, either in wrath, or indeed at any time. Only in Ps. 107:25 is the word used of an ordinary tempest (but cf. Isa. 29:6; 40:24; Ezek. 13:11; Zech. 9:14). The translation whirlwind is due to the systems of synchronization for the reigns of the kings of Israel and Judah in the M.T., in Lucian, and in the LXX respectively. The system favored by Lucian differs from the LXX twice only, here and in 8:25. In each case Lucian’s figure appears in the M.T., in addition to the regular M.T. figure, viz., 8.25 and 9:29; here and 3:1. An editor apparently held that Lucian’s figure was right, though only in those instances where Lucian differed from the LXX. (The details are given in parallel columns in C. F. Burney, Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Kings [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1903], pp. xlii-xlili.)

3. ELISHA SUCCEEDS ELIJAH (2:1-18)

Elijah is aware that his work is finished. He therefore bids Elisha come with him as far as Gilgal. Three times, at Gilgal, at Bethel, and at Jericho, Elijah bids Elisha stay behind. Twice the local prophetic guilds ask Elisha if he does not know that the Lord is going that very day to remove his master, as if adding their entreaties to Elijah’s orders that Elisha should stay behind. Elisha steadily persists in clinging to his master till the end. They cross the Jordan, miraculously divided for that purpose, and suddenly Elijah is snatched away. Elisha prays for the heirdom of his master’s spirit and power, and this is granted him as if accompanying the prophet’s mantle. Elisha recrosses the Jordan, again miraculously divided. The local prophets acknowledge him as Elijah’s successor. They want to send and find Elijah and persist in their requests till Elisha, for shame, allows them to send. They return from their fruitless errand.

Only in Ps. 107:25 is the word used of an ordinary tempest (but cf. Isa. 29:6; 40:24; Ezek. 13:11; Zech. 9:14). The translation whirlwind is due to the the incarnation of a moral conscience which asserts itself irresistibly against the infidelity of Ahaziah. We are reminded that nothing in all this universe can withstand the truth as this is embodied in the will of God. A captain of fifty with his fifty! Such a force might seem sufficient to capture the person of the prophet. But it shrivels into nothingness before the consuming energies of God. The most powerful thing in the world, it has been said, is an idea. And when that idea has behind it and within it the word and will of God, then nothing can withstand it. Thus Catherine of Siena, by the sheer power of that truth of which she was the living incarnation, bent popes and emperors to her will. A word of Luther, “The just shall live by faith,” could undo an ecclesiastical system that had endured for a thousand years. Let anyone today—however much the odds may seem against him, however formidable the opposition which confronts him—speak the truth as God has given him to see and know the truth, and he too will see “the captains with their fifties” disappear before him, consumed by the very breath of God.

2:17. BIBLE FRIENDSHIPS.—The story of the assumption of Elijah is told in a style of the loftiest poetry, with an imagination at once
And the sons of the prophets that were at Beth-el came forth to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to-day? And he said, Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.

And Elijah said unto him, Elisha, tarry here, I pray thee; for the Lord hath sent me to Jericho. And he said, As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they came to Jericho.

And the sons of the prophets that were at Jericho came to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to-day? And he answered, Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.

And Elijah said unto him, Tarry, I pray thee, here; for the Lord hath sent me to Jordan. And he said, As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. And they two went on.

And fifty men of the sons of the prophets went, and stood to view afar off: and they two stood by Jordan.

And Elijah took his mantle, and wrapped it together; and smote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither, so that they two went over on dry ground.

Vulg. turbo. As the itinerary shows, Gilgal is not the well-known site between Jericho and the Jordan, but another locality on the high road from Shechem to Bethel, some seven miles north of Bethel.

After the fashion of primitive religion, Elijah’s hairy mantle is endowed with supernatural power. Elisha receives through it the wonder-working power which belonged to his master Elijah (vs. 13); he then smites with it the waters of the Jordan (vs. 14), as if to test whether the power of Elijah is still to be associated with the garment.

exalted and restrained. As literature alone it ranks high among the great chapters of the Bible. And it teaches spiritual lessons of great depth and meaning.

The time had come when the Lord was to remove Elijah from the scene of his tremendous labors. So he left Gilgal, where young prophets were in training, and set out for Bethel. But Elisha, whose name has not been mentioned in the record since his call to be the successor of Elijah (I Kings 19:16-19), refused to leave him. Here we find another illustration of devoted friendship of which the O.T. has already given us conspicuous and beautiful illustrations: of David to Saul, of Jonathan to David, of Ruth to Naomi. This type of devotion lies embedded deep in human character, beneath all outward distinctions of condition or of race, as elemental as religion itself. Is this kind of deathless loyalty rare today? Friendships are all too easily broken; loyalties, when tested, break down; self-interest and prudence win over selfless devotion. Dickens wrote of Dombey that he had not a real friend in the world. One measure of the real worth of a man is the number and the quality of his friendships.

8. Always a Way Through.—When Elijah and Elisha came to the Jordan, we read that Elijah smote the waters, and . . . they two went over on dry ground (cf. Josh. 3:14-16). Apparently insurmountable obstacles give way before the courage of a real faith. One can march right forward if one is in the path of the will of God. Always there is a thoroughfare into our promised land. Difficulties fairly met will not be too great; duties resolutely undertaken
9 ¶ And it came to pass, when they were gone over, that Elijah said unto Elisha, Ask what I shall do for thee, before I be taken away from thee. And Elisha said, I pray thee, let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me.

10 And he said, Thou hast asked a hard thing: nevertheless, if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so.

11 And it came to pass, as they still went on, and talked, that, behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven.

9. The double share is the portion of the heir, the first-born. Elisha desires to succeed to the leadership of the prophetic guilds ("the sons of the prophets"), and so to have the authority and power which belonged to his master. The meaning is not that he should be two thirds as great as Elijah (so Ewald), nor on the other hand that he should be twice as great as Elijah (so Ecclus. 48:13, Vulg.), but that he should be his successor.

The word ruāh (spirit) is not used here of prophetic inspiration so much as in the sense of more-than-human power.

10. "If you have eyes to see the chariots of the Lord, then your prayer will be answered." It was not every man who could see this heavenly chariotry (6:17). The youth needed to have his eyes opened in order that he might see them. Joash saw the chariots of the Lord when he visited Elisha on the latter's deathbed (15:14), and he used the same words as those which Elisha used here (vs. 12).

11. The translation of Elijah and his mysterious end have given rise to a whole world of legend. He is the Jewish ancestor of El-Hudr, the eternal wanderer of Islamic lore who drank the water of life and never grows old. According to popular beliefs, Elijah is liable at any time to appear suddenly in order to right the wrongs of man. He will return before the day of Messiah (Mal. 4:5). He is the "angel of the covenant," and his chair is a feature to this day at the rite of circumcision. The door is left ajar for his entrance at Passover. The joyous barking of dogs is said to be a sign of his presence (see Eduard König, "Elijah," The Jewish Encyclopedia [New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1903], V, 121-28).

will not prove too much for us; temptations boldly challenged will not overcome us. We can smite the Jordan with the mantle of faith and pass over on dry ground.

9. A Prayer that Is Always Answered.—When Elisha asked that the spirit of Elijah might rest on him, he was offering the kind of prayer that will always be answered (cf. I Kings 3:5). People who complain that their prayers are not answered are praying for the wrong thing. The best, i.e., the spiritual gifts, can always be ours if we earnestly desire and fervently pray for them (Matt. 7:7-11). Prayer would be given new meaning for us if, when we are told to ask what we will, we should pray that more of God's Holy Spirit may be ours.

10. Spiritual Eyesight.—If thou see me when I am taken from thee. Spiritual realities are not discerned by the outward eye, but are perceived only by those who are intent upon and sensitive to them. They are immediately luminous only to those who are tender of heart as well as keen of intellect, who are devout of soul as well as practical in their judgments. If we do not see these realities, it is not because they are not there to be seen, but rather because we have not the eyes with which to see them. The difficulty is not with the thing to be perceived, but with the perceiver.

11-18. The Fire of the Spirit.—A chariot of fire, and horses of fire. The truly reverent way is to leave this description of the assumption 12 ¶ And Elisha saw it, and he cried, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof! And he saw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces.

13 He took up also the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and went back, and stood by the bank of Jordan;

14 And he took the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and smote the waters, and said, Where is the Lord God of Elijah? And when he also had smitten the waters, they parted hither and thither: and Elisha went over.

15 And when the sons of the prophets which were to view at Jericho saw him, they said, The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Eli\'sha. And they came to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him.

16 ¶ And they said unto him, Behold now, there be with thy servants fifty strong men; let them go, we pray thee, and seek thy master: lest peradventure the Spirit of the Lord hath taken him up, and cast him upon some mountain, or into some valley. And he said, Ye shall not send.

17 And when they urged him till he was ashamed, he said, Send. They sent therefore heaven. 12 And Eli\'sha saw it and he cried, "My father, my father! the chariots of Israel and its horsemen!" And he saw him no more.

Then he took hold of his own clothes and rent them in two pieces. 13 And he took up the mantle of Eli\'jah that had fallen from him, and went back and stood on the bank of the Jordan. 14 Then he took the mantle of Eli\'jah that had fallen from him, and struck the water, saying, "Where is the Lord, the God of Eli\'jah?" And when he had struck the water, the water was parted to the one side and to the other; and Eli\'sha went over.

15 Now when the sons of the prophets who were at Jericho saw him over against them, they said, "The spirit of Eli\'jah rests on Eli\'sha." And they came to meet him, and bowed to the ground before him. 16 And they said to him, "Behold now, there are with your servants fifty strong men; pray, let them go, and seek your master; it may be that the Spirit of the Lord has caught him up and cast him upon some mountain or into some valley." And he said, "You shall not send." 17 But when they urged him till he was ashamed, he

12. The rendering of garments is the traditional sign of grief. Throwing ashes on the head, lacerating the face and breasts, and shaving the forehead all belong to the general custom of disfigurement, either as a matter of disguise against ghosts or, less likely, as an outward expression of intense sorrow.

14. The phrase and smote the waters is repeated verbatim in the M.T., though this is disguised in the translations. The Vulg., Lucian, and the LXX (Complutensian Polyglot 1513-17) have inserted "and they were not divided" after the first occurrence of the phrase. This may be a gloss to account for the repetition, but its effect is to make futile Elisha's first attempt to divide the waters of the Jordan. He has first to say, Where is the Lord, the God of Elijah? To this question the word "now" ought to be added, as in the LXX. The mantle of Elijah acts as the carrier of the spirit which Elijah possessed. When Elisha has evoked the deity, the miraculous parting of the waters of the Jordan becomes the first evidence of the transfer of this more-than-human power.

16. This was not the first time that Elijah had mysteriously disappeared (see I Kings 18:9-16).

What is it that we most miss in the lives of the conventionally good? Is it not that there is wholly lacking in their moral and religious experience anything which tallies with this word "fire"—what Lowell once called "old Judaea's gift of secret fire"?

fifty men; and they sought three days, but found him not.
18 And when they came again to him, (for he tarried at Jericho,) he said unto them, Did I not say unto you, Go not?
19 And the men of the city said unto Elisha, Behold, I pray thee, the situation of this city is pleasant, as my lord seeth: but the water is naught, and the ground barren.
20 And he said, Bring me a new cruse, and put salt therein. And they brought it to him.
21 And he went forth unto the spring of the waters, and cast the salt in there, and said, Thus saith the Lord, I have healed these waters; they shall not be from thence any more death or barren land.
22 So the waters were healed unto this day, according to the saying of Elisha which he spake.

4. Cleansing of the Spring at Jericho (2:19-22)

This is the first of a series of wonder tales which are associated with the story of Elisha. They are unique in the O.T. They all seek to emphasize the marvelous power of the man of God, or to inculcate respect and reverence for him.

Jericho had a pleasant situation, but the water was bad, and nothing would grow.
Elisha cast salt into the spring, and the waters have been sweet and wholesome ever since. It is best not to offer natural explanations for this and other stories of the same type, but rather to leave them alone as wonder stories, belonging to another age than ours.

19. The land is used for "the people" (cf. Lev. 19:29 and often elsewhere). The spring (modern 'Ain es-Sультаn) has the reputation of causing miscarriages in humans and animals.

The sixteenth-century English naught was commonly used for the idea of bad (cf.
Shakespeare, "The mustard was naught" [As You Like It, Act I, scene 2] and Jer. 24:2, "naughty figs").

Bible pattern, or can in the deepest sense be called Christian, which lacks this quality of fire.
No man counts for much who does not have passion. We need more Christians today who are "a burning and a shining light" (John 5:35).

19-22. Introducing Elisha.—The character of Elisha cannot measure up to that of his great predecessor. Truly great men appear but seldon on the pages of history. Their followers may carry on their work, but they cannot walk on their heights. Hence we find in the career of Elisha no stupendous scenes, no outstanding achievements, no exhibitions of grandeur of soul. Yet the career of Elisha reminds us that without great capacities, without being heroes, one can do much good in the world

19-22. The Healing of the Waters.—How simple and homely is the first beneficent deed of Elisha: making pure the water of the springs near Jericho! The sources of thought and action have become impure in many a modern community. And these have infected our youth.
Modern literature is tainted with cynicism. Old standards of rectitude and honor have given way to indulgence and license. The very springs of life have become corrupted so that the fruits of good living have withered and the morals of men have become diseased. Elisha made those waters pure by the infusion of salt. Jesus told the disciples that they were to be "the salt of the earth" (Matt. 5:13). Everywhere salt is nature's perpetual foe of decay. And Christian men or women today can perform the same prophetic mission of Elisha for the communities in which they live by opposing their own simple Christian ideas and ideals to each and every corrupting influence with which they come in contact.
23 ¶ And he went up from thence unto Beth-el: and as he was going up by the way, there came forth little children out of the city, and mocked him, and said unto him, Go up, thou bald head; go up, thou bald head.

24 And he turned back, and looked on them, and cursed them in the name of the Lord. And there came forth two she bears out of the wood, and tare forty and two children of them.

25 And he went from thence to mount Carmel, and from thence he returned to Samaria.

3 Now Jehoram the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria in the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned twelve years.

2 And he wrought evil in the sight of the Lord; but not like his father, and like his mother: for he put away the image of Baal that his father had made.

This story of the small boys who were rude to the prophet has been subjected to various explanations by commentators who have hoped to make it acceptable to proper standards of justice and fairness. It is merely an example of premoral exhortation to respect the prophets as the holy men of God. The story compares most unfavorably with N.T. teaching (Matt. 5:44; Luke 23:34), and indeed will not stand examination from any moral point of view.

23. Baldness was reckoned to be a disgrace in ancient times. The word baldhead was a term of reproach among both the Greeks and the Romans (A. Macalister, “Baldness,” in James Hastings, ed., A Dictionary of the Bible [New York: Charles Scribner’s Sons, 1898], I, 234-35).

6. JEHORAM’S MOABITE CAMPAIGN (3:1-27)

3:1-3. These verses contain the formal Deuteronomistic introduction to the reign of King Jehoram of Israel, and they come from the 610 B.C. compiler.

2. The M.T. reads, put away the pillar of Baal, but the ancient versions read “pillars.” It is commonly said that Jehoram’s reforms could not have been as thorough as this verse suggests, otherwise Jehu could not have done as he did in 10:18-27. Apparently there was still one pillar (so Lucian, but M.T. has “pillars”) in the Baal temple

23-25. The Penalty of Vicious Behavior.—Here is a story from which the Bible reader shrinks. A careful reading of the text, however, will show us that Elisha did not himself summon the bears. He was not that kind of man. Thus understood, the story, however dreadful, has its sharp significance. The irreverence, lawlessness, hoodlumism of youth are sure to result in moral disaster. The bears that came out of the woods are the symbol of that inevitable retribution which overtakes vicious behavior. The boys of this story are the prototype of thousands of youth today. If they can be taught at home, in school, at church, the lessons of reverence and self-control, they may escape the fate which otherwise will overtake them. Lawless youth may not be torn asunder by bears, but they are rent by passions, devoured by appetite, until their characters and careers and all their hopes for happy, useful living are destroyed.

3:1-3. Jehoram.—The brother of Ahaziah, Jehoram, presents us with the type of man who does neither what is all right nor what is all wrong. He was not as wicked as his parents, yet Nevertheless he clung to the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, which made Israel to sin; he did not depart from it.

4 Now Mesha king of Moab was a sheep breeder; and he had to deliver annually to the king of Israel a hundred thousand lambs, and the wool of a hundred thousand rams. But when Ahab died, the king of Moab rebelled against the king of Israel.

Tg Heb lacks annually which Jehu destroyed (10:26). Some hold, however, that this reference is an insertion, but there is no real justification for the suggestion. It is true that in vs. 13 Elisha rebuked Jehoram because of Ahab and Jezebel, but elsewhere the prophet is kindly disposed to the young king. It is therefore more than probable that the young king did actually take steps to reform the cultus, in spite of the fact that his mother Jezebel was still alive and presumably had still some considerable influence. The Deuteronomistic verdict is that he did not follow Baal as his parents did. In view of the later story of Jehu's activity, we must assume that the young king was partially successful in his reforming zeal, but that he was not able to extirpate Baal from the land.

4-27. Moab revolts from Israel at the death of Ahab. Ahaziah dies before he can take any action, so his brother Jehoram finds it incumbent upon him to restore the situation. Jehoram commands his vassal Jehoshaphat to join forces with him, and this involves also the king of Edom, vassal of Jehoshaphat. The three kings seek to attack Moab through the Edomite country, but after seven days they are faced with an utter lack of water. The three kings go to seek advice from Elisha, who at first spurns the Israelite king, bidding him go to the prophets of his parents, but he later suggests a stratagem by which Moab is deceived into making a disorderly advance. As a result, the Moabites are driven back in confusion, their country destroyed, their cities taken, until the king of Moab finds himself driven to make a desperate sally with seven hundred swordsmen. The despairing effort fails, so he sacrifices his eldest son, the heir to the throne, on the city wall. This sacrifice is so effective that Israel is driven back in confusion, and Moab retains her independence.

4. Mesha was a nōqēdḥ, i.e., an owner of that breed of sheep which the Arabs call naqad. They are small, unprepossessing in appearance ("viler than a naqad" is a term of reproach), but giving abundant wool of good quality. Amos was a keeper of such sheep (Amos 1:1).

The M.T. reads "he [Mesha] used to deliver," to which the Targ. inserts annually (so RSV). The numbers seem somewhat excessive for an annual tribute, even though Moab was famous as a pastoral country. The LXX therefore infers that it was a single payment paid as an indemnity in the rebellion.

he did not abjure calf worship, the sin of Jeroboam. He was like Bunyan's Mr. Facing-both-ways. And so are many men today. They do not descend to the worst sins in society or in business. They are free from the worst excesses of their day. Yet never can they make up their minds to break utterly with everything that is not rooted in conscience and be wholly void of offense toward God and man. They temporize and they compromise. They continue religious habits, but they do not allow their religion to penetrate too far into daily deportment, into the regulation of the practical affairs of life. It is a poor commentary on a man's life to say that he was not as bad as he might have been. Consider the tragedy of many a man's life that he was not as good as he might have been.

4-10. The Moabites.—This chapter is concerned with the conquest of Moab, which had revolted when Ahab was dead. What first impresses us is the coalition which undertook this campaign. The allies were Israel, Judah, Edom. What a combination of forces was that! Between Israel and Judah there had been nearly a cen-
6 And king Jehoram went out of Samaria the same time, and numbered all Israel.
7 And he went and sent to Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, saying, The king of Moab hath rebelled against me: wilt thou go with me against Moab to battle? And he said, I will go up: I am as thou art, my people as thy people, and my horses as thy horses.
8 And he said, Which way shall we go up? And he answered, The way through the wilderness of Edom.
9 So the king of Israel went, and the king of Judah, and the king of Edom: and they fetched a compass of seven days' journey: and there was no water for the host, and for the cattle that followed them.
10 And the king of Israel said, Alas! that the LORD hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab!
11 But Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the LORD, that we may inquire of the LORD by him? And one of the king of Israel's servants answered and said, Here is Elisha the son of Shaphat, which poured water on the hands of Elijah.

8. They decide to attack Moab from the south, marching around the south of the Dead Sea for seven days till they come to the Wadi el-Hesa on the southern border of Moab. It is not clear to whom the he refers in either sentence, but in view of Jehoram's reply to Elisha in vs. 13, it is more than likely that the march around the south end of the Dead Sea was dictated by an oracle of the Lord.

9. They expected to find water in this border wadi between Edom and Moab, and were astounded when they found none. But Elisha bade them dig pits (vs. 16), with the result that by the next morning the whole valley was flooded. It is still possible to obtain water in this way in this wadi by digging for it. Infiltrations from the mountains of Edom are retained by the underground rocks in the valley (W. Robertson Smith, The Old Testament in the Jewish Church [2nd ed.; New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1898], p. 147; cf. the Salinas River of California).

The references here to the king of Edom are difficult to reconcile with 8:20; I Kings 22:47. It seems clear that at that time the Edomite king was a vassal to the king of 6 So King Jeho'ram marched out of Sam'aria at that time and mustered all Israel.

7 And he went and sent word to Jehosh'a-phat king of Judah, "The king of Moab has rebelled against me; will you go with me to battle against Moab?" And he said, "I will go; I am as you are, my people as your people, my horses as your horses."
8 Then he said, "By which way shall we march?" Jeho'ram answered, "By the way of the wilderness of Edom."
9 So the king of Israel went with the king of Judah and the king of Edom. And when they had made a circuitous march of seven days, there was no water for the army or for the beasts which followed them.
10 Then the king of Israel said, "Alas! The LORD has called these three kings to give them into the hand of Moab." II And Je-hosh'a-phat said, "Is there no prophet of the LORD here, through whom we may inquire of the LORD?" Then one of the king of Israel's servants answered, "Eli'sha the son of Shaphat is here, who poured water on

110. Jehoram and Elisha.—How Elisha came to be in the camp of the allies we are not tury of war, and Edom had been the inveterate foe of both. But before the common threat of Moab they joined forces. That threat removed, however, they immediately fell apart again. Each nation was thinking only in terms of its own interests. None envisaged the possibility of a Hebrew nation reunited in terms of common welfare and destiny. As a consequence, all three of them ultimately went down in ruin.

There is a parable here for the world in which we live. Twice within the memory of living men has this sad story been repeated. For reasons like those in the ancient time, the freedom of the world from the curse of war is in jeopardy. At the root of all our difficulties are national conceit and ingrained selfishness: the refusal to put the welfare of all above the interests of each. Can we learn no better than those three kindred nations in that ancient world? If not, the same fate is in store for us.

11-20. Jehoram and Elisha.—How Elisha came to be in the camp of the allies we are not 12 And Jehoshaphat said, The word of the Lord is with him. So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom went down to him.

13 And Elisha said unto the king of Israel, What have I to do with thee? get thee to the prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother. And the king of Israel said unto him, Nay: for the Lord hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab.

14 And Elisha said, As the Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, surely, were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor see thee.

15 But now bring me a minstrel. And it came to pass, when the minstrel played, that the hand of the Lord came upon him.

16 And he said, Thus saith the Lord, Make this valley full of ditches.

17 For thus saith the Lord, Ye shall not see wind, neither shall ye see rain; yet that valley shall be filled with water, that ye may drink, both ye, and your cattle, and your beasts.

18 And this is but a light thing in the sight of the Lord: he will deliver the Moabites also into your hand.

Judah (cf. 8:22 and the present story), so it is necessary to suppose that the other passages mean that there was no independent king in Edom.

15. The M.T. indicates that this playing on a stringed instrument was customary when Elisha was concerned with the giving of oracles, since it was during the playing that the ecstatic prophetic condition was induced in him. The RSV assumes that the sense of the verb is changed, and that the playing took place only on that particular occasion. The alternative is to conjecture the accidental omission of a sentence which said that a minstrel came and played. Use of music as a means of inducing ecstasy was common not only in Israel but also in Arabia (T. H. Robinson, Prophecy and the Prophets in Ancient Israel [New York: Charles Scribner’s Sons, 1923], p. 32; W. Robertson Smith, The Prophets of Israel [2nd ed.; London: A. & C. Black, 1897], p. 392; see also I Sam. 10:5).

18-19. This oracle tells of the earlier success of the campaign, but not of the later disaster when Israel had to withdraw after the Moabite king had sacrificed his son and told. The significant thing is that the allies, in spite of their numbers, would have been helpless without the prophet. No water for men or cattle! Elisha would have nothing to do with Jehoram, recreant king that he was. Only for Jehoshaphat’s sake did he consent to lend his aid. Jehoram was by far the most powerful of the three kings. Yet he was helpless in the emergency that confronted him. Only divine help of which Elisha was the symbol could save the allies. Carnal weapons are not enough. Military might can never achieve the final victory for which we wait. The conquest of Moab was not achieved by the legions of Jehoram, but by the Spirit of the Lord. Only the same Spirit can win the victory for us of today. Over against the militarism of our modern world stands the august truth, “Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts” (Zech. 4:6).
19 And ye shall smite every fenced city, and every choice city, and shall fell every good tree, and stop all wells of water, and mar every good piece of land with stones.

20 And it came to pass in the morning, when the meat offering was offered, that, behold, there came water by the way of Edom, and the country was filled with water.

21 ¶ And when all the Moabites heard that the kings were come up to fight against them, they gathered all that were able to put on armor, and upward, and stood in the border.

22 And they rose up early in the morning, and the sun shone upon the water, and the Moabites saw the water on the other side as red as blood:

give the Moabites into your hand, 19 and you shall conquer every fortified city, and every choice city, and shall fell every good tree, and stop up all springs of water, and ruin every good piece of land with stones.”

20 The next morning, about the time of offering the sacrifice, behold, water came from the direction of Edom, till the country was filled with water.

21 When all the Moabites heard that the kings had come up to fight against them, all who were able to put on armor, from the youngest to the oldest, were called out, and were drawn up at the frontier. 22 And when they rose early in the morning, and the sun shone upon the water, the Moabites saw the water opposite them as red as blood.

heir. The oracle was true so far as it went. It was thus similar to those Delphic oracles which lured Croesus of Lydia and Pyrrhus of Epirus into a false confidence, though there is no evidence here that Elisha deliberately encouraged the three kings to disaster.

20. The event took place at the time of the offering of the morning sacrifice (see Exeg. on I Kings 18:29, where the reference is to the evening sacrifice). In the second temple the morning sacrifice was offered when the morning sun had lighted the sky as far as Hebron, but before it had actually appeared over the ridge of the Mount of Olives.

22. The redness of the water which deceived the Moabites, who would be stationed on the northern cliffs two thousand feet up, may have been due to seepage through red soil, or to strange reflections in the deep defile in the light of the early dawn. The former explanation is more likely to be correct, since the Hebrew word "Edom" means "red" (cf. Gen. 25:30).

How touching is the detail recorded in vs. 15, Bring me a minstrel. Just as the harp of David had calmed the turbulent soul of King Saul, so the playing of this unknown minstrel was to reveal to Elisha the will of God. We think of that nameless man. He had his gift and he used it. How little did he imagine that by its use he would help to win for his people a glorious victory. Yet when the minstrel played, the power of the Lord came upon [Elisha]. Every one of us, no matter how humble he may be, can make "undying music in the world." And moral victories are won by it more often than we think.

Music has charms to sooth a savage breast, To soften rocks, or bend a knotted oak. 2

To be a minstrel in the troubled world today is to perform a high mission. Thus some cloud may be lifted from another's soul, some light may enter there, some inspiration may be felt, and the power of the Lord may come to one who sorely needs it.

What follows in the biblical story reads like a miracle. It may, however, have been the sure strategy of one whose mind had been illumined and thus saw what course to take. Trenches were to be dug into which the gathering storm clouds would pour the water needed for man and beast. The gift of God to man comes often in no external or supernatural fashion; comes rather by the clarification of powers of insight and imagination whereby one is enabled to utilize resources that otherwise might remain hidden and unknown. Therein is revealed the function of prayer in the emergencies of life.

21-27. The Defeat of Moab.—The story is pictured in lurid colors. The canvas is splashed with red and crimson. No similar scene is spread before the eye in all O.T. history. The rays of the setting sun, the cobalt red of the soil, these turned the water in the trenches to apparent pools of blood to the eyes of the watching Moabites. This could mean only that the allies had 23 And they said, This is blood: the kings are surely slain, and they have smitten one another: now therefore, Moab, to the spoil.

24 And when they came to the camp of Israel, the Israelites rose up and smote the Moabites, so that they fled before them: but they went forward smiting the Moabites, even in their country.

25 And they beat down the cities, and on every good piece of land cast every man his stone, and filled it; and they stopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees: only in Kir-haraseth left they the stones thereof; howbeit the slingers went about it, and smote it.

26 ¶ And when the king of Moab saw that the battle was too sore for him, he took with him seven hundred men that drew swords, to break through even unto the king of Edom: but they could not.

27 Then he took his eldest son that should have reigned in his stead, and offered

23 And they said, "This is blood: the kings have surely fought together, and slain one another. Now then, Moab, to the spoil!"

24 But when they came to the camp of Israel, the Israelites rose and attacked the Moabites, till they fled before them; and they went forward, slaughtering the Moabites as they went.

25 And they overthrew the cities, and on every good piece of land every man threw a stone, until it was covered; they stopped every spring of water, and felled all the good trees; till only its stones were left in Kir-hareseth, and the slingers surrounded and conquered it.

26 When the king of Moab saw that the battle was going against him, he took with him seven hundred swordsmen to break through, opposite the king of Edom; but they could not. 27 Then he took his eldest son who was to reign in his stead, and

23. The Moabites abandoned their almost impregnable position on the mountain and rushed down in disorder to plunder the allied camp. They were met by the waiting armies and driven back with great loss, both in the actual battle itself and in the subsequent rout. The victory of William of Normandy over Harold the Saxon in 1066 was likewise accomplished: the Norman invader tricked the Saxons into thinking that the victory was won, and that all they had to do was to pursue the beaten foe and to drive him back into the sea.

25. This wholesale and deliberate destruction of enemy country is generally pointed out as an instance of the inhumanity of ancient warfare and its wanton damage, whereby men, women, and children are slain indiscriminately. Such comments can still be made, but not by way of contrast with modern warfare.

The RSV is wrong in saying that the slingers conquered Kir-hareseth, though this may well be the meaning of the M.T. It is better to keep smote it because, although this expression generally means in Hebrew "destroyed," it leaves room for what happened in vs. 26. They assaulted the city until everything was almost lost. Then the king of Moab sacrificed his eldest son on the city wall as a last desperate appeal to the Moabite god Chemosh (vs. 27). This was his final resort after the last attempt to break through the investing armies came to nothing (vs. 26).

27. The great wrath upon Israel is the fierce anger of the Moabite god, who was still thought to have effective power in his own territory. It is evident that the tide of battle suddenly and surprisingly turned, and Mesha of Moab was able to extricate himself and his people from an apparently utterly hopeless situation. The early Israelite historian, turned to fighting among themselves, and had stained the water with each other's blood. Thus were the Moabites lured to their ruin. Nowhere in all literature does nature play so large a role as a revelation of the being, the power, and the providence of God as in the Bible. Everything in nature spoke to the Hebrew of God. No wonder, then, if natural phenomena, occurring at the moment of their deepest necessity, appeared to them as divine and miraculous events designed for their rescue. Here is a pre-eminent illustration of nature working in behalf of God's people: its ghostly mirage, its awesome spectacle, water turned to blood by rays of sun and color of soil! Never in all Hebrew history was God seen to move in a way more mysterious and incalculable than in the story of the defeat of the Moabites. Who could have foreseen it, offered him for a burnt offering upon the wall. And there came great wrath upon Israel: and they withdrew from him and returned to their own land.

4 Now the wife of one of the sons of the prophets cried to Eli’sha, “Your servant my husband is dead; and you know that your servant feared the Lord, but the creditor has come to take unto him my two sons to be bondmen.

2 And Eli’sha said unto her, What shall I do for thee? tell me, what hast thou in the house? And she said, Thine handmaid hath not any thing in the house, save a pot of oil.

3 Then he said, Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbors, even empty vessels; borrow not a few.

from whose early work this narrative has been taken, still thought that while Israel’s god was all-powerful in Israel, Moab’s god had power in Moab, each god in his own territory (see Exeg. on 5:15). Presumably the sacrifice of Mesha was effective, an angry Chemosh was placated by his people, and he therefore turned and saved them from disaster. This line of reasoning is most likely, since the Moabite stone reads extraordinarily like an early Israelite account. If the names of the god and of the locality were changed, it would be well-nigh impossible to distinguish it from a contemporary Israelite document.

7. Stories of Eli’sha (4:1–6:23)

This section consists of a group of Eli’sha stories drawn from a collection of wonder tales concerning him. Each story gives an account of some miraculous deed and thereby demonstrates the extraordinary power and prestige of the prophet. There is nothing to be gained by trying to explain away the miraculous element in these stories. They belong to the same environment as that which often collects around some most unusual personage. The best example of this kind is The Little Flowers of Saint Francis.

a) The Vessels of Oil (4:1-7)

The widow of one of the members of the prophetic guilds is threatened with the seizure of her two sons by a creditor who intends to sell them as slaves. She appeals for help to Eli’sha. He tells her to borrow all the vessels she can and to fill them with the oil she has at hand. Miraculously the oil continues to pour until all the vessels she can borrow are filled. She sells this oil and is able to pay the creditor. The quantity of the oil was limited only by her faith in collecting empty vessels.

4:1. The Targ. identifies the woman as the wife of Obadiah, Ahab’s chief steward who saved the hundred prophets (I Kings 18:4), probably on account of the statements or imagined that it could have happened? Thus are we taught that the resources of God for our salvation are beyond all human understanding. Thus do we learn that in moments of danger we too can rely upon his saving power.

4:1-7. Eli’sha and the Needy Woman.—The contrast between Elijah and Eli’sha is complete. Elijah was a prophet of the wilds, appearing at moments of religious crisis, and then disappearing in the solitudes of the desert. Eli’sha walked daily among men, interested not only in great events but in the vicissitudes of the personal life, in the needs and sorrows of men in everyday experience. In this respect the ministry of Eli’sha resembles that of our Lord, who went about doing good. Indeed, ch. 4 reads much like a chapter out of the Gospels (cf. vss. 1-7 with John 2:1-10; vss. 8-36 with Luke 8:49-56;
And when thou art come in, thou shalt shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full.

So she went from him, and shut the door upon her and upon her sons, who brought the vessels to her; and she poured out.

And it came to pass, when the vessels were full, that she said unto her son, Bring me yet a vessel. And he said unto her, There is not a vessel more. And the oil stayed.

Then she came and told the man of God. And he said, Go, sell the oil, and pay thy debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest.

And it fell on a day, that Elisha passed to Shunem, where was a great woman; and she constrained him to eat in each context that he feared the Lord. So also Josephus, who adds (Antiquities IX. 4. 2) that the money in question was borrowed by Obadiah in order to feed the prophets.

The existence of slavery in Israel is evidenced elsewhere by Exod. 21:7; Lev. 25:39; Neh. 5:5; Isa. 50:1; Jer. 34:8-11. The creditor was not acting contrary to the law in purposing to seize the sons and sell them as slaves in order to recover the debt.

The Son of the Woman of Shunem (4:8-37)

him to eat some food. So whenever he passed that way, he would turn in there to eat food. 9 And she said to her husband, "Behold now, I perceive that this is a holy man of God, who is continually passing our way. 10 Let us make a small roof chamber with walls, and put there for him a bed, a table, a chair, and a lamp, so that whenever he comes to us, he can go in there."

11 One day he came there, and he turned into the chamber 12 and rested there. And he said to Geha'zi his servant, "Call this Shunammite." When he had called her, she stood before him. 13 And he said to him, "Say now to her, See, you have taken all this trouble for us; what is to be done for you? Would you have a word spoken on your behalf to the king or to the commander of the army?" She answered, "I dwell among my own people." 14 And he said, "What then is to be done for her?" Geha'zi answered, "Well, she has no son, and her husband is old." 15 He said, "Call her." And when he had called her, she stood in the doorway. 16 And he said, "At this season, when the time comes round, you shall embrace a son." And she said, "No, my lord, O man of God; do not lie to your maidservant." 17 But the woman conceived, and she bore a son about that time the following spring, as Eli'sha had said to her.

a son, he calls her and announces the fulfillment of her wish. In process of time a boy is born, but one day the growing lad dies of a sunstroke. The widow hurries to the prophet's home on Mount Carmel and Eli'sha brings the child to life again.

10. The small roof chamber with walls is an upper chamber built on the roof with access by an outer stairway, so that the entrance or exit is independent of the house itself.

16. The reading of the KJV is preferable, About this season, according to the time of life. The meaning is, "At this season of the year, according to the period of gestation" (cf. Gen. 18:10, 14, where the meaning is that after the usual nine-month period Sarah full of grace and charm. We note that the initial kindness of the woman and her husband was in no expectation of any reward but was the spontaneous expression of hospitable hearts. It was not she who asked anything in return from Eli'sha. It was he who inquired of his servant Gehazi what he could do for her. There followed the gift of a child and the child's restoration to life after he had died. Poignant is the story of the woman's grief. We are told that she was a wealthy woman. But grief spares none, high or low. The community of suffering makes the whole world kin. She insisted on going in person to Eli'sha. She had learned to believe in and trust this man whose power she had begun to know. Perhaps one of the greatest rewards of any "man of God" today is to win the faith and confidence of souls in need.

18 ¶ And when the child was grown, it fell on a day, that he went out to his father to the reapers.
19 And he said unto his father, My head, my head! And he said to a lad, Carry him to his mother.
20 And when he had taken him, and brought him to his mother, he sat on her knees till noon, and then died.
21 And she went up, and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and shut the door upon him, and went out.
22 And she called unto her husband, and said, Send me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the asses, that I may run to the man of God, and come again.
23 And he said, Wherefore wilt thou go to him to-day? it is neither new moon, nor sabbath. And she said, It shall be well.
24 Then she saddled an ass, and said to her servant, Drive, and go forward; slack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee.
25 So she went and came unto the man of God to mount Carmel. And it came to pass, when the man of God saw her afar off, that he said to Gehazi his servant, Behold, yonder is that Shunammite:
26 Run now, I pray thee, to meet her, and say unto her, Is it well with thee? is it well with thy husband? is it well with the child? And she answered, It is well.

18 When the child had grown, he went out one day to his father among the reapers. 19 And he said to his father, "Oh, my head, my head!" The father said to his servant, "Carry him to his mother." 20 And when he had lifted him, and brought him to his mother, the child sat on her lap till noon, and then he died. 21 And she went up and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and shut the door upon him, and went out. 22 Then she called to her husband, and said, "Send me one of the servants and one of the asses, that I may quickly go to the man of God, and come back again." 23 And he said, "Why will you go to him today? It is neither new moon nor sabbath." She said, "It will be well." 24 Then she saddled the ass, and she said to her servant, "Urge the beast on; do not slacken the pace for me unless I tell you." 25 So she set out, and came to the man of God at Mount Carmel.

When the man of God saw her coming, he said to Gehazi his servant, "Look, yonder is the Shunammite; 26 run at once to meet her, and say to her, Is it well with you? Is it well with your husband? Is it well with the child?" And she answered, "It is well."

will bear a son). When the time comes round: The Hebrew actually reads "according to the living [quickening] time."

23. The distance from Shunem to Carmel is about twenty-five miles. Evidently at that period the sabbath was not observed as in postexilic times. It was probably not known in Israel until the time of the Assyrian domination of the country, with its introduction of many Assyrian customs and ideas such as the observance of the new moon days and of the "seven" days (N. H. Snaith, The Jewish New Year Festival [London: Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1947], pp. 117-21).

24. The woman's command to the young man was to follow the beast closely and to keep on beating the ass so that it maintained a good pace all the way to Mount Carmel. The prophet's headquarters were probably at the place where his predecessor Elijah had striven for the Lord against Baal in the time of Jezebel.

Thus is described to us the reciprocal relation of two noble souls. The woman's native sympathy and kindness had caused her to entertain an angel unawares. So, often in human experience a casual gesture of kindness, the simple expression of good will and sympathy, brings in its train rich rewards, unexpected blessings. Elisha, too, might have accepted what was offered him as only what was due to a prophet of God. Not so. What could he do to requite this kindness? At once is revealed the heart of any true "man of God." Inquiry disclosed the woman's secret wants. How often under the external appearance of prosperity and well-being there lies the hidden disappointment! To detect this and to seek to satisfy the hungry soul is one of the finest ministries of any "man of God."
27 And when she came to the man of God to the hill, she caught him by the feet: but Gehazi came near to thrust her away. And the man of God said, Let her alone; for her soul is vexed within her: and the Lord hath hid it from me, and hath not told me.

28 Then she said, Did I desire a son of my lord? did I not say, Do not deceive me?

29 Then he said to Gehazi, Gird up thy loins, and take my staff in thine hand, and go thy way: if thou meet any man, salute him not; and if any salute thee, answer him not again: and lay my staff upon the face of the child.

30 And the mother of the child said, As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. And he arose, and followed her.

31 And Gehazi passed on before them, and laid the staff upon the face of the child; but there was neither voice, nor hearing. Wherefore he went again to meet him, and told him, saying, The child is not awaked.

32 And when Elisha was come into the house, behold, the child was dead, and laid upon his bed.

33 He went in therefore, and shut the door upon them twain, and prayed unto the Lord.

34 And he went up, and lay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands: and he stretched himself upon the child; and the flesh of the child waxed warm.

29. The command to silence was not in the interests of that power with which the prophet was sending him. Many examples of this necessity of silence are given in books on primitive religion and customs. In Morocco “baraka is affected by speaking, especially speaking aloud, whereas there is magic power in silence” (E. A. Westermarck, Ritual and Belief in Morocco [London: Macmillan & Co., 1926], I, 253). Baraka (the equivalent Hebrew word means “blessing”) is the Moroccan equivalent of mana. There are also numerous allusions to the magic power of silence in the various volumes written by Baldwin Spencer and F. J. Gillen on the habits and customs of Australian aborigines. In this particular case the mana carried by the wonder-working staff is not effective, whether it was intended to restore

27 And when she came to the mountain to the man of God, she caught hold of his feet. And Geha'zi came to thrust her away. But the man of God said, “Let her alone, for she is in bitter distress; and the Lord has hidden it from me, and has not told me.”

28 Then she said, “Did I ask my lord for a son? Did I not say, Do not deceive me?”

29 He said to Geha'zi, “Gird up your loins, and take my staff in your hand, and go. If you meet any one, do not salute him; and if any one salutes you, do not reply; and lay my staff upon the face of the child.”

30 Then the mother of the child said, “As the Lord lives, and as you yourself live, I will not leave you.” So he arose and followed her. 31 Geha'zi went on ahead and laid the staff upon the face of the child, but there was no sound or sign of life. Therefore he returned to meet him, and told him, “The child has not awaked.”

32 When Eli'sha came into the house, he saw the child lying dead on his bed. 33 So he went in and shut the door upon the two of them, and prayed to the Lord. 34 Then he went up and lay upon the child, putting his mouth upon his mouth, his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands; and as he stretched himself upon him, the flesh we are given a graphic description of what it costs to bring the dead to life. Only life can restore life. Only the uttermost giving of self can breathe the breath of life into the otherwise dead. Only the stretching of one's soul upon the soul of one out of which all semblance of life
Then he returned, and walked in the house to and fro; and went up, and stretched himself upon him: and the child sneezed seven times, and the child opened his eyes.

And he called Gehazi, and said, Call this Shunammite. So he called her. And when she was come in unto him, he said, Take up thy son.

Then she went in, and fell at his feet, and bowed herself to the ground, and took up her son, and went out.

And Elisha came again to Gilgal: and there was a dearth in the land; and the sons of the prophets were sitting before him: and he said unto his servant, Set on the great pot, and seethe pottage for the sons of the prophets.

And one went out into the field to gather herbs, and found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap full, and came and shred them into the pot of pottage: for they knew them not.

So they poured out for the men to eat. And it came to pass, as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out, and said, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot. And they could not eat thereof.

But he said, Then bring meal. And he cast it into the pot; and he said, Pour out life or to prevent such further loss of life power as would cause the boy to die. The boy was already dead, and Elisha himself had to restore him by personal contact.

The reference to sneezing is not found in the LXX, and is probably an error due to a dittograph. According to the LXX, the prophet stretched himself seven times over the child. This is much more in line with the regular procedure in these matters, especially since the magic number seven is involved in Elisha’s own actions.

c) Death in the Pot (4:38-41)

Elisha came to Gilgal in a time of famine. The people gathered together to eat a common meal, but one man unknowingly shredded poisonous gourds into the pot. When this was discovered, presumably because of the taste, they cried out warning, and Elisha, casting some meal into the pot, made the pottage wholesome.

There was a seven-year famine predicted in 8:1; this may well be that same famine.

The plant is called a wild vine because of its trailing shoots, and its fruit could easily be mistaken for a gourd cucumber. The plant is usually identified as the colocynth, has vanished can quicken it again. It was by Christ’s stretching of himself upon the cross of his infinite sacrifice that he brought to life again men that were dead in their trespasses and sins.

Two Other Miracles.—The last two stories in the chapter are obscure. The first records the method of the prophet in making the food of the poor, poisoned by weeds, fit to eat. The second records the feeding of the hungry. Of these and other miracles in the O.T. it may be said in general that they do not stand on the same level as those recorded in the Gospels by so much as those who are reported for the people, that they may eat. And there was no harm in the pot.

42 And there came a man from Baal-shalishah, and brought the man of God bread of the firstfruits, twenty loaves of barley, and full ears of corn in the husk thereof. And he said, Give unto the people, that they may eat.

43 And his servitor said, What, should I set this before a hundred men? He said again, Give the people, that they may eat: for thus saith the Lord, They shall eat, and shall leave thereof.

44 So he set it before them, and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the Lord.

5 Now Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was a great man with his master, and honorable, because by him and its fruit is like an orange in shape and size, the pulp of which is a powerful cathartic, and in large quantities is definitely poisonous.

d) The Twenty Loaves (4:42-44)

A man brings twenty loaves and some fresh ears of barley as his first fruits. With this comparatively small quantity of food Elisha feeds a hundred men.

42. The bringing of first fruits to the man of God has been thought to be a departure from normal practice. This is not the case, since in old Israel there were prophets at the shrines as well as priests; e.g., Elisha had his main home at the shrine on Mount Carmel (A. R. Johnson, The Cultic Prophet in Ancient Israel [Cardiff: University of Wales Press, 1944], p. 26). It was only in postexilic times that the priests had sole rights in the first fruits. The theory involved in the offering of first fruits is that all the produce belongs to the deity, and that he must first receive a token of the harvest, after which the produce is regarded as "common" (hoî) and permissible for human use.

The word יָפֶר occurs only here, and its meaning is unknown. The rendering in his sack is based upon the Vulg., but the Syriac and Targ. have "garment." Possibly the original word, this or another, meant "in his wallet."

e) The Healing of Naaman (5:1-19)

Naaman, the Syrian commander in chief, has received every honor that military skill and good fortune can bring, but he is a leper. A little Israelite maid has been captured in a raid and finds herself in the service of Naaman's wife. She tells her mistress of the prophet in Israel. The king of Syria commands the king of Israel to heal Naaman. The peremptory command causes the king of Israel great concern, until he is reminded of Elisha the prophet and his miraculous powers. Elisha bids Naaman bathe seven times in the Jordan. Naaman refuses, but is persuaded by his attendants. The Syrian is healed and returns home with all the gifts which Elisha refuses to take.

5:1. It is remarkable that the victories of Naaman are ascribed to the good favor of the Lord, the God of Israel. The story comes from the Elisha cycle. Since Elisha died

"Pour out for the men, that they may eat." And there was no harm in the pot.

42 A man came from Ba'al-shal'ishah, bringing the man of God bread of the first fruits, twenty loaves of barley, and fresh ears of grain in his sack. And Eli'ша said, "Give to the men, that they may eat." 43 But his servant said, "How am I to set this before a hundred men?" So he repeated, "Give them to the men, that they may eat, for thus says the Lord, 'They shall eat and have some left.'" 44 So he set it before them. And they ate, and had some left, according to the word of the Lord.

5 Na'aman, commander of the army of the king of Syria, was a great man with the world's well.

the LORD had given deliverance unto Syria: he was also a mighty man of valor, but he was a leper.

2 And the Syrians had gone out by companies, and had brought away capture out of the land of Israel a little maid; and she waited on Naaman's wife.

3 And she said unto her mistress, Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy.

4 And one went in, and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel.

5 And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. He departed, and took with him ten talents of silver, and six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment.

6 And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, saying, Now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith sent Naaman my servant to thee, that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy.

ca. 800 B.C. (cf. 13:14), the date of this story cannot be much earlier than the time of Amos, who could say that the God of Israel brought the Philistines from Crete and the Syrians from Kir (Amos 9:7). We see here, therefore, advancing ideas concerning the power of God side by side with primitive survivals. This need occasion no great surprise since there are many traces of primitive religion still observable in our own times.

5. The present which Naaman brought was large. Apart from the value of the clothing, which may have been considerable, the actual cash amounted to more than $80,000.

6. The tone of the letter, and indeed the whole setting of the story, create the impression that at this time Israel was subject to Syria. This impression is confirmed by the later story, according to which the king of Syria was able to send his armies to surround the prophet on the hill at Dothan (6:14). Dothan was scarcely more than ten miles from Samaria, almost due north.

leprosy, what names they might have written on the scrolls of time! Or today there may be found proud and forceful men who ride high, achieve wealth and position, and yet are lepers. Some hidden moral defect cancels their real abilities, prevents them from attaining lives of positive influence, from commanding the confidence and respect of their fellow men. Mighty men, but lepers!

And the Syrians ... had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid. Once more a major role is played by a minor biblical character. How little did she realize, this humble Hebrew girl, what her native piety —her only distinction—was to achieve. She did not hide her faith in God; she used it. And let anyone today, however humble he may be, have faith in God and declare it to one in physical or moral need and he too may bring like miracles to pass.

So Naaman departed and took much treasure with him. Yet the price which Naaman had to pay to be healed of his leprosy was even greater than that. Money can do much, yet it never yet purchased for a man the healing of his soul nor the peace of his mind. And Naaman had to travel all the way from Syria to Elisha, the man of God, to gain his cure. The gods of Syria were not equal to the task. We have here the touchstone by which we may test the supremacy of Bible religion. It alone is able to purge the soul of man from the leprosy of sin: And only the religion that can do that can claim the final allegiance of the human heart. Other religions 7 And it came to pass, when the king of Israel had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and said, Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? Wherefore consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me.

8 And it was so, when Elisha the man of God had heard that the king of Israel had rent his clothes, that he sent to the king, saying, Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel.

9 So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha.

10 And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean.

11 But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and said, Behold, I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the LORD his God, and strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper.

11. Naaman was aggrieved on two counts: first, that the prophet himself did not come out to heal him in some publicly spectacular way, and second, that he was told to bathe in the river Jordan. “Mostly silent and black in spite of its speed, but now and then breaking into praise and whitening into foam, Jordan scours along, muddy between banks of mud, careless of beauty, careless of life” (George Adam Smith, Historical Geography of the Holy Land [25th ed.; London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1931], p. 486)—a sharp contrast to the beauty of the rivers of Damascus. The prophet, however, follows his normal custom of speaking through an intermediary, and insists that Naaman shall contain high and beautiful truths. But from the point of view of freeing the soul from sin there is no such thing as comparative religion. Only the Bible deals finally with that.

Jehoram the king did not know what to do when the message and the gift came from Syria. With all his kingly power, he was powerless. Secular force cannot deal with moral emergency. Only the man of God can assume control. And he tells the Syrian to go and wash in the Jordan seven times. Naaman is indignant. His pride is hurt, and he would turn away in disappointed anger. Plenty of people are in the same mood today. Modern prophets are telling them that secular sources of inspiration and illumination will never heal them of their leprosy; that they must wash in the old river Jordan; that they must find their healing in church and sabbath, Bible and prayer. And the modern mind rebels.

There is something too narrow and provincial in this reiterated assertion that a man cannot find health and healing except as he dips into this old Jordan. Are there not splendid waters in our modern world that lie entirely outside this little Judea of religion? The answer is the same today as in the day of Naaman. It is not a question of whether the secular sources of inspiration are not more beautiful than the Jordan. It is a question only of which can heal men of their leprosy.

For the longing to be healed is still the longing of many a man and woman in our modern world. In spite of all that they possess they are really sick at heart, and they know that they are. The friction and the pressure of life always bring with them many impurities which mere appeal to reason cannot remedy, because reason condemns while it cannot cure. The sense of
Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage.

And his servants came near, and spake unto him, and said, My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldst thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, Wash, and be clean?

Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God: and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean.

And he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came, and stood before him: and he said, Behold, now wash in an Israelite river, since the whole cure is a demonstration that there is a prophet in Israel (vs. 8).

These two rivers of Damascus are commonly identified with the Nahr Baradā (Abana) and the Nahr el-A'waj (Pharpar). The name Pharpar is to be recognized in Wadi Barbar, a smaller stream which may at one time have been much larger, and whose waters may have joined those of the Nahr el-A'waj. The effect of Damascus on the desert nomad can scarcely be appreciated by other people. The Arab calls the Oasis of Damascus Jinnat ed-dinneea ("the garden of the world"). There is an ancient story that in his youth the prophet Mohammed went to Damascus in a caravan, but when he came to the summit of the southern hills and saw the unexpected view of the oasis with its orchards and its blossoms, he turned away, wrapping his face in his mantle, saying that man may enter but one jannat ("garden," "paradise"), and his was above. Mohammed never would enter Damascus.

Here again we get an apparently monotheistic statement, side by side with a belief (vs. 17) that this God cannot be worshiped except on Israelite soil. With this latter verse cf. 1 Sam. 26:19, where David says that being driven off Israelite soil is equivalent to being told to go and worship other gods.

The Hebrew הֵרֶבַּה, usually translated blessing, occasionally (Gen. 33:11 and six times in all) means present (cf. Prov. 11:25, where "the liberal soul" is a good rendering of what in Hebrew is, lit., "the person of berakhāh").

unworthiness remains. And when it comes to this washing of the soul, this cure of life at its center, there is no substitute for the old river Jordan. Culture can do much, but it cannot do this. As simple, contrite-hearted men and women, we must go and wash in this Jordan if we would be clean.

But this demands much of the modern man, just as it did of Naaman. Yet Naaman conquered his pride, stilled his vanity, and, proud soldier that he was, went down and dipped seven times—one dip was not enough—and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child. Pride, and only pride, keeps many a modern Naaman from receiving the blessing which came to the ancient Syrian. If we can but forget our pride, put off our intellectual harness and critical apparatus, and go right down into the stream of the life-giving life of God, then our flesh too will come to us as the flesh of a little child. If each week we bathe our souls in a real sabbath and in worship in the sanctuary, if each day we dip into the Bible and know real moments of consecrating prayer, then the miracle will be wrought for us as truly as it was for Naaman.

15-19. The House of Rimmon.—Naaman exhibited after his cure the noble spirit of a noble man. He did not set off at once to Syria but came in reverence to Elisha, confessed his faith
I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel: now therefore, I pray thee, take a blessing of thy servant.

16 But he said, As the LORD liveth, before whom I stand, I will receive none. And he urged him to take it; but he refused.

17 And Naaman said, Shall there not then, I pray thee, be given to thy servant two mules' burden of earth? for thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt offering nor sacrifice unto other gods, but unto the LORD.

18 In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant, that when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myself in the house of Rimmon: when I bow down myself in the house of Rimmon, the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing.

19 And he said unto him, Go in peace. So he departed from him a little way.

18. Naaman is referring to the formal state worship of Ramman (Rimmon). This name is an epithet of Hadad, the thunder and weather god of Assyria, and actually means "thunderer" (Réné Dussaud, Les religions des Hittites et des Hourrites, des Phéniciens et des Syriens [Paris: Presses Universitaires de France, 1945; "Mana: Introduction à l'histoire des religions"], p. 390).

in the God of Israel, and offered rich payment. The refusal of Elisha to take it is illustrative of the attitude of a true ministry always and everywhere. What a man of God does is done for no other reward than the knowledge that he has been able to save a soul in need. At least this should be said of the ministry: that it shall be above any taint of mercenary motive. Many a man of God cures souls today without receiving or expecting the reward that would be paid to the physician or psychiatrist.

When we read these verses, we instinctively feel a certain sympathy for Naaman. It was a fine, frank thing to tell Elisha of the difficult situation that he foresaw, and to ask the prophet's counsel. We are glad that Elisha trusted him and told him to go in peace. How would a purely formal deference to pagan gods involve his new-found loyalty to the God of Israel? Yet the phrase to bow...in the house of Rimmon (vs. 18) has become a proverbial expression to denote a dangerous and dishonest compromise. The danger was always there that, by bowing in the house of Rimmon, Naaman's new-found faith would be weakened and destroyed. The general principle remains: any deviation from truth and honor, even if circumstance may seem to warrant it, is always dangerous and may even prove fatal. It is often the beginning of moral disaster. "It is astonishing how soon the whole conscience begins to unravel, if a single stitch drops." 3 True allegiance to God allows of no exceptions. One must serve him with the whole heart or one cannot serve him at all.

In vs. 17 we find a curious request of Naaman before he leaves for Syria. May he not take with him two mules' burden of earth, since he is resolved henceforth to offer sacrifice only to the God of Israel? This points to the religious idea of that day that each land had its own god who could be worshiped only there. To leave one land for another was to leave one god for another. Hence, if Naaman was to worship the God of Israel in Syria, he must take some of the soil of Israel with him. To us this appears to be a naïve idea. To those of that day it had definite meaning. The request thus witnesses to the thorough religious sincerity of Naaman, to a conversion whose roots went deep.

The incident has its spiritual meaning and interpretation. Often we leave our native land and go into regions where the God of our fathers is neither worshiped nor honored. We may not have to travel very far. Paganism exists 20 ¶ But Gehazi, the servant of Elisha the man of God, said, Behold, my master hath spared Naaman this Syrian, in not receiving at his hands that which he brought: but, as the Lord liveth, I will run after him, and take somewhat of him.

21 So Gehazi followed after Naaman. And when Naaman saw him running after him, he lighted down from the chariot to meet him, and said, Is all well?

22 And he said, All is well. My master hath sent me, saying, Behold, even now there be come to me from mount Ephraim two young men of the sons of the prophets: give them, I pray thee, a talent of silver, and two changes of garments.

23 And Naaman said, Be content, take two talents. And he urged him, and bound two talents of silver in two bags, with two changes of garments, and laid them upon two of his servants; and they bare them before him.

24 And when he came to the tower, he took them from their hand, and bestowed them in the house: and he let the men go, and they departed.

f) Gehazi the Leper (5:20-27)

Elisha has refused any gift from Naaman, but the sight of all the wealth stirs up his servant's greed. Gehazi follows Naaman, tells him that the prophet has changed his mind. Naaman willingly gives him all he asks, and more. When Gehazi returns, he finds the prophet is already aware of what has happened, and is told that the leprosy of Naaman will clings to him and to his family forever.

21. The M.T. reads, lit., "He fell from his chariot," but the Hebrew root הָעָה is used here of a sudden descent; cf. Amos 3:5, the sudden descent of the bird which sees a lure on the ground (N. H. Snaith, The Book of Amos [London: Epworth Press, 1946], II, 58); cf. also Gen. 24:64, Rebekah's sudden descent from her camel when first she saw Isaac. It is best therefore in this present verse to insert "hurriedly."

24. The word 'ophel is difficult. It apparently signifies some sort of swelling since it is used in I Sam. 5:6 of a boil or tumor, and there is a similar use in Arabic. But it is also used of a fortification at Jerusalem (southeast spur of the temple mount) and also somewhere in Moab, for the word is found on the Moabite stone (11. 21-22). The Jerusalem Ophel is comparable to "the great projecting tower" of Neh. 3:27, and the "tower of the flock" of Mic. 4:8. The hill is the place where Elisha was living; cf. the near us as well as in distant lands. We must take with us some of the rich, spiritual Palestinian soil, at least two mules' burden, if henceforth, no matter where we are, with whomsoever we may be associated, whatever our environment may be, we are to offer sacrifices not unto other gods but only unto the Lord.

20-27. Gehazi.—It is sad that so noble a chapter should have to record, before it ends, the avarice and deception of this trusted servant of Elisha. He had never seen such wealth before as Naaman had offered to Elisha. It blinded his eyes and stifled his conscience. Here was easy money for the asking. So he fabricated his story, received from the grateful Naaman twice as much as he asked, returned, and hid his loot. Discovery and penalty swiftly followed. What a chapter is this! It tells of redemption and of retribution. A pagan by an act of faith is cured of his leprosy. An Israelite by an act of dis-
25 But he went in, and stood before his master. And Elisha said unto him, Whence comeest thou, Gehazi? And he said, Thy servant went no whither.

26 And he said unto him, Went not mine heart with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee? Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and oliveyards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and menservants, and maidservants?

27 The leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed for ever. And he went out from his presence a leper as white as snow.

6 And the sons of the prophets said unto Elisha, Behold now, the place where we dwell with thee is too strait for us. 2 Let us go, we pray thee, unto Jordan, and take thence every man a beam, and let us make us a place there, where we may dwell. And he answered, Go ye. 3 And one said, Be content, I pray thee, and go with thy servants. And he answered, I will go. 4 So he went with them. And when they came to Jordan, they cut down wood. 5 But as one was felling a beam, the axe head fell into the water: and he cried, and said, Alas, master! for it was borrowed. 6 And the man of God said, Where fell it? And he showed him the place. And he cut down a stick, and cast it in thither; and the iron did swim.

Now the sons of the prophets said to Eli' sha, "See, the place where we dwell under your charge is too small for us. 2 Let us go to the Jordan and each of us get there a log, and let us make a place for us to dwell there." And he answered, "Go." 3 Then one of them said, "Be pleased to go with your servants." And he answered, "I will go." 4 So he went with them. And when they came to the Jordan, they cut down trees. 5 But as one was felling a log, his axe head fell into the water; and he cried out, "Alas, my master! It was borrowed." 6 Then the man of God said, "Where did it fall?" When he showed him the place, he cut off a stick, and threw it in there, and made hill where Elijah was when the captains with their fifties came to arrest him (1:9) and the hill where Elisha was when the Syrian chariots came after him (6:17). The LXX and Vulg. think of the evening darkness, evidently translating 'opher with an 'deph instead of an 'dyin.

6:1-7. The local prophetic guild needs more commodious dwellings, so they go down to the Jordan to fell trees for the building. One of the men loses his axe head in the water and is distressed all the more because it is a borrowed one. Elisha throws a stick on the water, brings the axe head to the surface, and all is well. The story has no particular merit or significance apart from the fact that it emphasizes the supernatural power which the man of God possesses.

honor is cursed by it. Thus Gehazi takes his place in Scripture with Aachan, Judas, and Ananias, who sold their souls for gold. And how many successors they have had in all ages since!

6:1-7. The Axhead.—This story well illustrates two aspects of O.T. miracles. The first is the triviality and incredibility of some of them, as away, and they departed. 25 He went in, and stood before his master, and Eli' sha said to him, "Where have you been, Ge- ha'zi?" And he said, "Your servant went nowhere." 26 But he said to him, "Did I not go with you in spirit when the man turned from his chariot to meet you? Was it a time to accept money and garments, olive orchards and vineyards, sheep and oxen, menservants and maidservants? 27 Therefore the leprosy of Na'am ashall cleave to you, and to your descendants for ever." So he went out from his presence a leper, as white as snow.

in this case. Here the Bible reader may do one of three things. He may accept them literally as they are recorded because they are found in Holy Writ, because with God nothing is impossible, and because they cannot be disproved. Or again, he may explain these miracles as the result of some extraordinary natural phenom-

The king of Israel again and again avoids falling into ambushes carefully prepared for him by the Syrian king, so much so that the Syrian king suspects a spy in his own court who regularly sends information to the king of Israel concerning the Syrian's military plans. His courtiers deny this and tell the king of the prophet Elisha who, by his miraculous powers, learns the king's innermost secrets. The king sends an army to capture the prophet, who is protected by the heavenly chariotry. "The horses and chariots of Israel" are mentioned again and again in the prophetic stories of the north. The prophet's attendant cannot see these fiery hosts until his eyes are opened. The Syrians are smitten with blindness and are led captive by the prophet into the very center of Samaria. The king of Israel wants to slay them all, but Elisha will have none of this. On the contrary, the army is fed and sent away in peace to its own country. There is no more war between the two countries.

Similarly, at the end of vs. 9, read "have concealed themselves" for are come down, the Hebrew word being unintelligible.

11 Therefore the heart of the king of Syria was sore troubled for this thing; and he called his servants, and said unto them, Will ye not show me which of us is for the king of Israel?

12 And one of his servants said, None, my lord, O king: but Elisha, the prophet that is in Israel, telmeth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bedchamber.

13 ¶ And he said, Go and spy where he is, that I may send and fetch him. And it was told him, saying, Behold, he is in Dothan.

14 Therefore sent he thither horses, and chariots, and a great host: and they came by night, and compassed the city about.

15 And when the servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, a host compassed the city both with horses and chariots. And his servant said unto him, Alas, my master! how shall we do?

16 And he answered, Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them.

most to learn: that in every hour of peril and of apparent defeat the soul that trusts in God is surrounded—if he has but eyes to see it—with divine spiritual agencies equal to any emergency. The trouble with us is not that God's help is not always there, but that we cannot see the horses and chariots of fire. "Open our eyes that we may see." must be our deepest prayer. If only we had eyes to see, we should feel ourselves enclosed under the protecting care of God. Martin Luther at a time of difficulty and danger could not sleep. He arose, went to the window, and looked out. Then he saw a marvel. He saw the sky overhead with no visible pillar to hold it up, yet resting serene and still, upheld by the hands of God. So would he too be upheld by him who can thus sustain the skies. A woman who was once in great trouble and mental anxiety lay out of doors and watched the sky. As she saw cloud go by, one by one, propelled by an unseen hand, she suddenly realized that her own life was controlled and sustained by the same power, and all fear and foreboding left her. Horses and chariots of fire are about us all, if only our eyes are opened to see them. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them" (Ps. 34:7): "And I will encamp about my house because of the army, . . . for now have I seen with mine eyes" (Zech. 9:8).

The hosts of God encamp around
The dwellings of the just;
Deliverance he affords to all
Who on his promise trust.

Everywhere and always it is true, they that be with us are more than they be with them.

22 And he answered, Thou shalt not smite them: wouldest thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with thy sword and with thy bow? set bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their master.

23 And he prepared great provision for them: and when they had eaten and drunk, he sent them away, and they went to their master. So the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel.

22. Lucian is correct in inserting "not" immediately before have taken captive. It was customary to kill all prisoners, since they came under the ban (hêrem) as belonging to a foreign deity; cf. I Kings 20:42, and especially Samuel's ruthless action in hewing Agag in pieces before the Lord (I Sam. 15:33). The command to slaughter every male is to be found in Deut. 20:13. The so-called humanitarianism of Deuteronomy does not extend to non-Hebrews unless they are "sojourners" or household slaves.

j) Siege of Samaria (6:24-7:20)

It is uncertain which king of Israel is to be identified with the king mentioned in this section. Further, the relationship of this story to the remainder of the Elisha narratives

18-33. Mercy and Judgment.—The Syrians, smitten with blindness, are decoyed into Samaria and are at the mercy of the Israelites. Elisha, who usually appears as a man of benevolent kindness, decrees that their lives shall be spared. This act in direct opposition to all customs of that age stands out, if authentic, like an isolated mountain peak, high above the moral level of those days. Thus by centuries was anticipated the precept in Rom. 12:19-21. The hearts of the Syrians were softened only temporarily by this deed of generosity. Evil is not overcome by isolated acts of kindness. Only the continuous warmth of the sun will melt the
And there was a great famine in Samaria: and, behold, they besieged it, until an ass’s head was sold for fourscore pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a cab of dove’s dung for five pieces of silver.

And as the king of Israel was passing by upon the wall, there cried a woman unto him, saying, Help, my lord, O king.

And he said, If the Lord do not help thee, whence shall I help thee? out of the barnfloor, or out of the winepress?

And the king said unto her, What aileth thee? And she answered, This woman said unto me, Give thy son, that we may eat him to-day, and we will eat my son to-morrow.

So we boiled my son, and did eat him: and I said unto her on the next day, Give thy son, that we may eat him: and she hath hid her son.

And it came to pass, when the king heard the words of the woman, that he rent his clothes; and he passed by upon the wall, and the people heard thereof.

The City Reduced to Starvation (6:24-31)

Samaria has been besieged by the Syrians so long that the city is practically reduced to starvation. As the king passes by on the wall, a woman complains to him that she and another woman agreed to eat their two sons, her own son one day and the other’s son the next day. When, however, one son has been eaten, the other woman, she who had proposed the arrangement, has hidden her son. Upon hearing this tale of the plight to which the inhabitants have been reduced, the king rends his clothes in sorrow. The people see that beneath his royal robes he is wearing sackcloth. The king blames Elisha for the famine, and swears that he will execute the prophet forthwith.

25. The LXX says “fifty shekels” instead of eighty. Even fifty shekels amounts to twenty-eight dollars, a high price to pay for a practically worthless part of an unpalatable animal. There is a reference in Plutarch (Artaxerxes XXIV) to sixty drachmas (fifteen shekels) being paid in time of famine for an ass’s head. More desperate still is five silver shekels for a pint of dove’s dung, i.e., rather more than three dollars. Attempts have been made to see here a reference to sour wine or to carob pods, but men eat strange things toward the end of a protracted siege. There is a statement extant to the effect that during a famine in England in 1316 “men ate their own children, dogs, mice, and pigeons’ dung” (G. E. Post, “Dove’s Dung,” in Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, I, 620).

30. The king has been wearing sackcloth underneath his robes. The writer rightly shows his admiration both at the action of the king in expressing his sorrow and anxiety and the people looked, and, behold, he had sackcloth within upon his flesh.

31 Then he said, God do so and more also to me, if the head of Elisha the son of Shaphat shall stand on him this day.

32 But Elisha sat in his house, and the elders sat with him; and the king sent a man from before him: but ere the messenger came to him, he said to the elders, See ye how this son of a murderer hath sent to take away mine head? look, when the messenger cometh, shut the door, and hold him fast at the door: is not the sound of his master's feet behind him?

33 And while he yet talked with them, behold, the messenger came down unto him: and he said, Behold, this evil is of the LORD; what should I wait for the LORD any longer?

7 Then Elisha said, Hear ye the word of the LORD; Thus saith the LORD, To-morrow shall the king stand upon the wall — and the people looked, and, behold, he had sackcloth beneath upon his body — 31 and he said, "May God do so to me, and more also, if the head of Elisha the son of Shaphat remains on his shoulders today."

32 Eli'sha was sitting in his house, and the elders were sitting with him. Now the king had despatched a man from his presence; but before the messenger arrived Eli'sha said to the elders, "Do you see how this murderer has sent to take off my head? Look, when the messenger comes, shut the door, and hold the door fast against him. Is not the sound of his master's feet behind him?"

33 And while he was still speaking with them, the kingf came down to him and said, "This trouble is from the LORD! Why should I wait for the LORD any longer?" 1 But Eli'sha said, "Hear the word of the LORD: thus says the LORD, f See 7. 2. Heb messenger and also at his unostentatious way of performing this act of contrition and humble supplication to God. 31. The king regards Elisha as being responsible for the horrors of the siege. This may be for one of two reasons, and there is no apparent way of deciding between the two. Either Elisha had persuaded the king to hold out, on the expectation of some divine intervention which would remove the Syrian menace perhaps forever even when all seemed lost, or the famine was not due primarily to the siege but to the seven years' drought (8:1), for which Elisha may be regarded as being responsible because he had prophesied it. Vs. 25 favors one alternative; vs. 27, the other.

(2) Elisha Is Not Executed (6:32–7:2)

The king sends a messenger, and he himself follows, but Elisha receives supernatural warning of the messenger's approach and of the king's footsteps. Elisha prophesies plenty of food for the morrow and the death of a courtier who is skeptical.

32. There is no need to translate literally this son of a murderer since we are dealing with a Hebrew idiom whereby "son of" means that the man belongs to a particular class, e.g., "son of Belial" means "son of worthlessness," i.e., "worthless fellow." Similarly, "son of exhortation" (Acts 4:36) refers to a man peculiarly gifted in encouraging men. Thus the RSV is right with the translation this murderer.

33. It is best to read the king (RSV) instead of the messenger (KJV). This makes the account less confused, the messenger being already there. The change in the text involves the omission of the soundless consonant 'ālēph. The king comes into the prophet's house himself and declares that he can wait no longer for deliverance from the Lord. Elisha replies with an oracle which declares the famine at an end. The courtier who accompanies the king, i.e., the favorite courtier on whom the king rested his arm for support, skeptically mocks at the oracle, and is told that he will see the fulfillment of the oracle but will not himself eat of the plenty.

7:1. The price of the wheat will be $1.50 a bushel; that of the barley, 75¢ a bushel.

7:1-2, 67. The Raising of the Siege.—How calm and confident was Elisha in the face of the anger of King Jehoram for whom he had pro- found contempt (6:32). In defiance of all probability he made the extraordinary prediction that by the next day the city would be amply row about this time shall a measure of fine flour be sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, in the gate of Samaria.

2 Then a lord on whose hand the king leaned answered the man of God, and said, Behold, if the Lord would make windows in heaven, might this thing be? And he said, Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.

3 ¶ And there were four leprous men at the entering in of the gate: and they said one to another, Why sit we here until we die?

4 If we say, We will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there: and if we sit still here, we die also. Now therefore come, and let us fall unto the host of the Syrians: if they save us alive, we shall live; and if they kill us, we shall but die.

5 And they rose up in the twilight, to go unto the camp of the Syrians: and when they were come to the uttermost part of the camp of Syria, behold, there was no man there.

(3) End of the Siege (7:3-20)

Four starving lepers that same evening decide to surrender to the enemy, since the worst that the enemy can do is to kill them, and they believe that death is inevitable otherwise. They find the Syrian camp deserted. The explanation offered by the narrator is that the Lord miraculously had caused the Syrians to hear the noise of a great army of chariots. The Syrians thought that new enemies were upon them and they fled, leaving everything behind them. The lepers eat their full and gather spoil from the empty tents until they remember their fellows within the city. They hurry back with the good news and tell the porter at the gate, who reports it to the king. But the king is wary, thinking that the whole affair is a strategem to entice the Israelites out of the city. He sends out a small scouting party of chariots, realizing that even if these are lost, the situation is very little worsened. The scouts come back with the story that the Syrians are already beyond the Jordan and the road is everywhere littered with the equipment of an army in flight. This means food enough for all, and in the rush of the starving people the courtier who had mocked Elisha the day before, being this day on guard at the gate, is trampled to death.

supplied with food, but that the king's envoy would not live to eat it. There is direct correspondence between the raising of the siege of Samaria by the Syrians under Ben-hadad and the raising of the siege of Jerusalem by the Assyrians under Sennacherib (19:32-36) a century later. In both cases the hosts were mysteriously dispersed. What happened? Sennacherib's army may have been smitten with sudden pestilence. In this case (vs. 6) the Syrians were overtaken by panic (cf. Judg. 7:19-23). In both cases this miraculous deliverance was foreseen and foretold by the prophets Elisha and Isaiah. How are we to explain this extraordinary pre-science? Did some inkling of what was about to happen reach the prophets and form a rational basis for their predictions? Or does all of this lie in the undefinable and unanalyzable region of subconsciousness in which intuitions are born which have such solid assurance in the mind that they are announced with confident conviction? Such psychological phenomena are not rare today. Instances are known when someone, at a time of peril when probability points
6. For the Lord had made the host of the Syrians to hear a noise of chariots, and a noise of horses, even the noise of a great host: and they said one to another, Lo, the king of Israel hath hired against us the kings of the Hittites, and the kings of the Egyptians, to come upon us.

7. Wherefore they arose and fled in the twilight, and left their tents, and their horses, and their asses, even the camp as it was, and fled for their life.

8. And when these lepers came to the uttermost part of the camp, they went into one tent, and did eat and drink, and carried thence silver, and gold, and raiment, and went and hid it: and came again, and entered into another tent, and carried thence also, and went and hid it.

9. Then they said one to another, We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: if we tarry till the morning light, some mischief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king's household.

6. A miraculous noise as of countless chariots deceives the Syrians into thinking that they are about to be attacked by their northern neighbors. It is better to read Muṣrim for Miṣrayim (in either case the same consonants, מְשַׁרְיָם), i.e., "the kings of Muṣri" for the kings of Egypt. In the first place, it is not proper or usual to speak of the kings of Egypt in the plural. In the second place, an alliance between the Hittites to the north and the Egyptians to the south is wholly unlikely. If we assume the alliance to be between the Hittites and their neighbors in Asia Minor, the Muṣri, then the whole story becomes more intelligible (for the name "Muṣri" see Exeg. on I Kings 10:28).

9. The Hebrew word ṣawōn is a comprehensive word which includes not only the "iniquity" itself, but also its consequences. Hence the word sometimes refers not to the actual wrong action, but to the consequences of it: cf. Gen. 4.18, where the English rendering is rightly punishment, and so also here. The prophets were always insistent that sin could not be separated from its consequences, so much so that the same word can be used for both.

straight to disaster, boldly and confidently predicts a deliverance which actually comes to pass. If asked how he knew that, he would answer that he did not know how he knew it. All that he knew was that he knew it. And he did. So these prophets received a divine intuition of which they were so sure that they announced it as positive fact.

3-5, 8-20. The Story of Lepers and Its Sequel. —The main interest in this narrative lies in the manner of the discovery of the Syrian debacle, and the account of this is one of the most dramatic stories to be found in the O.T. We think of those poor, starving lepers thrust outside the city gates, their plan of desperation to cast themselves on the mercy of the Syrians, their stupefaction on finding that the enemy had fled, leaving rich food and bounty behind them, and how they voraciously satisfied their hunger. And then comes the great awakening. The starving city must be told of its salvation. So they hurry back with their incredible message. The people rush out, and in fulfilment of Elisha's prophecy the king's envoy loses his life in the crush of the crowds that erupt in wild disorder through the gates.

We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: if we tarry, ... some mischief will come upon us. In these words we find a profound truth. In no department of life can one receive a great gift and refuse to share it without mischief coming upon 10 So they came and called unto the porter of the city: and they told him, saying, We came to the camp of the Syrians, and, behold, there was no man there, neither voice of man, but horses tied, and asses tied, and the tents as they were.

11 And he called the porters; and they told it to the king's house within.

12 And the king arose in the night, and said unto his servants, I will now show you what the Syrians have done to us. They know that we be hungry; therefore are they gone out of the camp to hide themselves in the field, saying, When they come out of the city, we shall catch them alive, and get into the city.

13 And one of his servants answered and said, Let some take, I pray thee, five of the horses that remain, which are left in the city, (behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel that are left in it: behold, I say, they are even as all the multitude of the Israelites that are consumed:) and let us send and see.

14 They took therefore two chariot horses; and the king sent after the host of the Syrians, saying, Go and see.

15 And they went after them unto Jordan: and, lo, all the way was full of garments and vessels, which the Syrians had cast away in their haste. And the messengers returned, and told the king.

13. This verse is difficult, but it can just be translated if the Hebrew himnām ("behold them") is taken to mean "either they . . ." for its first occurrence, and "or they . . ." for its second occurrence. The meaning then is: If we lose the five horses, then they will be lost like all the rest, like those that are already gone, and the rest of us will tell the king's household." 10 So they came and called to the gatekeepers of the city, and told them, "We came to the camp of the Syrians, and behold, there was no one to be seen or heard there, nothing but the horses tied, and the asses tied, and the tents as they were." 11 Then the gatekeepers called out, and it was told within the king's household. 12 And the king rose in the night, and said to his servants, "I will tell you what the Syrians have prepared against us. They know that we are hungry; therefore they have gone out of the camp to hide themselves in the open country, thinking, 'When they come out of the city, we shall take them alive and get into the city.'"

14 So they took two mounted men, and the king sent them after the army of the Syrians, saying, "Go and see." So they went after them as far as the Jordan; and, lo, all the way was littered with garments and equipment which the Syrians had thrown away in their haste. And the messengers returned, and told the king.

This is a day of good tidings, the glad tidings of great joy announced by the Christmas angels, which are not for us only but for all people. What would life mean to us if we had no knowledge of Christ or hope for the forgiveness of sin, no knowledge of any life beyond the limits of our present existence? We are living on these riches every day of our lives. And do we hold our peace? Do we forget

... how many thousands still are lying Bound in the darksome prison house of sin,
With none to tell them of the Savior's dying,
Or of the life he died for them to win?

Are we failing to publish glad tidings? Then mischief will come upon us. If we have received this unspeakable gift, the unsearchable riches

16 And the people went out, and spoiled the tents of the Syrians. So a measure of fine flour was sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, according to the word of the Lord.
17 ¶ And the king appointed the lord on whose hand he leaned to have the charge of the gate: and the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died, as the man of God had said, who spake when the king came down to him.
18 And it came to pass as the man of God had spoken to the king, saying, Two measures of barley for a shekel, and a measure of fine flour for a shekel, shall be to-morrow about this time in the gate of Samaria:
19 And that lord answered the man of God, and said, Now, behold, if the Lord should make windows in heaven, might such a thing be? And he said, Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.
20 And so it fell out unto him: for the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died.

8 Then spake Elisha unto the woman, whose son he had restored to life, saying, Arise, and go thou and thine household, and sojourn wheresoever thou canst so-soon go too; but if all is well, then we will all alike live, both the five and we in the city. There is therefore little to lose and everything to gain by sending out this small scouting party.

h) The Woman of Shunem Comes Home (8:1-6)

Elisha knows that a seven-year famine is coming, so he tells his hostess at Shunem, the kindly woman who had given him an upper room in which to lodge and whose son of Christ, into our own lives, then it must be upon pain of moral deterioration if we do not have the passion to make this truth prevail. It is thus that world missions prevent what was meant to be our salvation from becoming our condemnation. This is the innermost meaning of the familiar word of Paul, “Woe to me if I do not preach the gospel!” (I Cor. 9:16.)

The same truth holds good in the sphere of our material possessions. We have homes in which to live; millions are homeless. We have food in abundance to eat; millions are hungry, if not starving. We have clothing, warmth, and comfort; millions lack these elementary necessities of life. It is the story of Dives and Lazarus all over again. Can we enjoy our luxuries when we know the misery of others? Do we hold our peace? Then mischief must come upon us. So Ruskin has written: “Consider whether, even supposing it guiltless, luxury would be desired by any of us, if we saw clearly at our sides the suffering which accompanies it in the world... The cruelest man living could not sit at his feast, unless he eat blindfold.” 7 The response of the normal human heart is surely that of the lepers, in gratitude for God’s deliverance. It will mean not only the salvation of other lives but the salvation of our own.

8:1-6. Re-enter the Shunammite Woman.—The story contains two lessons of importance to us. In the first place we are reminded of the frequency of famines in the Holy Land. From the early days of Jacob, whose sons came to Egypt (Gen. 41:56-42:1-2), this was the most

And the woman arose, and did after the saying of the man of God: and she went with her household, and sojourned in the land of the Philistines seven years. 2 And it came to pass at the seven years' end, that the woman returned out of the land of the Philistines: and she went forth to cry unto the king for her house and for her land. 4 And the king talked with Gehazi the servant of the man of God, saying, Tell me, I pray thee, all the great things that Elisha hath done. 5 And it came to pass, as he was telling the king how he had restored a dead body to life, that, behold, the woman, whose son he had restored to life, cried to the king for her house and for her land. And Gehazi said, My lord, O king, this is the woman, and this is her son, whom Elisha restored to life.

he had restored to life, to migrate for the time being to the Philistine country. This she does. When the seven years are past she comes back and appeals to the king for the return of her house and her property. It so happens that Gehazi is at court, telling the king of Elisha's miraculous deeds, particularly how he has raised the dead to life. So Gehazi turns and points out the woman to the king, who forthwith sends a court official with her to see to it that she gets back her property.

8:2. Isaac had migrated to the land of the Philistines in a time of famine (Gen. 26:1). This trek toward Egypt was evidently the regular movement at such times (Gen. 12:10; 43:2; 46:6).

feared of the scourges that befell the people of God. Palestine was indeed "a dry and thirsty land." If rain was withheld, then famine followed swiftly. It may have been part of the divine education of God's people that lack of material riches would rouse within them the hunger and thirst for the living God. Unable to satisfy the needs of the body, they were driven to find their satisfaction in the plenitude of the mercies of God. One has only to contrast the history of ancient peoples who lived in freedom from want with the history of God's people, who were never free from it, to understand the connection between adversity and character. Today the people who live in hot climates where they do not have to struggle with the elements or with the soil are not those who have produced the world's leaders in any department of life. Those come from lands exposed to the rigors of nature. A visitor to New England, remarking its hard and sandy soil, is reported to have asked, "What can you raise here?" To which the proud reply came, "Here we raise men." Social workers have often observed that the moral diseases which afflict and degrade our social order stem largely from the homes of the idle rich. Famine and faith are closely joined in the Bible. It was a famine which caused the prodigal son to come to himself and resolve to return to his father. We who have never known what famine means, have never known an hour when we did not have enough to eat or when the next meal was not ready, are reminded of the forgotten mercies of God. Here is the justification of the now so often neglected practice of grace before meat. No more powerful means exists for the religious education of children, or for the deepening of the sense of reverence in all who participate in it, than this simple habit of recognizing that every day of our lives the prayer has been answered for us, "Give us this day our daily bread." We are reminded, too, of and depart with your household, and sojourn wherever you can; for the Lord has called for a famine, and it will come upon the land for seven years." 2 So the woman arose, and did according to the word of the man of God: she went with her household and sojourned in the land of the Philistines seven years. 3 And at the end of the seven years, when the woman returned from the land of the Philistines, she went forth to appeal to the king for her house and her land. 4 Now the king was talking with Gehazi the servant of the man of God, saying, "Tell me all the great things that Eli'sha has done." 5 And while he was telling the king how Eli'sha had restored the dead to life, behold, the woman whose son he had restored to life appealed to the king for her house and her land. And Gehazi said, "My lord, O king, here is the woman, and here is her son whom Eli'sha restored

6 And when the king asked the woman, she told him. So the king appointed unto her a certain officer, saying, Restore all that was hers, and all the fruits of the field since the day that she left the land, even until now.

7 And Elisha came to Damascus; and Ben-hadad the king of Syria was sick; and it was told him, The man of God is come hither.

8 And the king said unto Hazael, Take a present in thine hand, and go, meet the man of God, and inquire of the Lord by him, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?

I) Elisha and Hazael (8:7-15)

Elisha visits Damascus. Ben-hadad king of Syria is ill and sends Hazael with rich gifts to inquire of the man of God whether he will recover from his sickness. Elisha says that he will, but adds that he will nevertheless die from another cause. The prophet then falls into a half-conscious trance and there comes on his face a look of great horror as he gazes fixedly on Hazael. The prophet weeps and Hazael asks him why. The prophet replies that he weeps because he sees all the sorrow and ruin which Hazael will bring upon Israel when he has become king of Syria. When Hazael returns to Damascus he acts upon the word of the prophet, tells the king he will recover from his sickness, but the next day smoothers him with his own pillow. And Hazael became king in his stead. The prophet Elisha thus takes the second step toward the fulfillment of the word spoken to his master Elijah on Horeb (cf. 1 Kings 19:15-16). Elijah had fulfilled one item when he called Elisha from following the plow; here we have the fulfillment of the second item and Hazael is raised up to be an enemy of the house of Ahab from outside the kingdom. Later Jehu is raised up, definitely encouraged by the prophet as was Hazael, to be an enemy from within the kingdom (9:4-10).

8. This rich gift follows the normal practice of taking a present to the seer when he is to be consulted on any matter (cf. I Sam. 9:7; I Kings 14:3). The custom is connected with the principle that no man must appear before God without a gift (Exod. 23:15).

those for whom it has not been answered. The simple ritual of passing a mite box after grace and before eating has beauty and significance. Here is the perfect combination of gratitude to God and sympathy for our fellow men.

The other lesson deriving from this incident is taught us by the act of Elisha in remembering this Shunammite woman. We note that this time it was not the woman who appealed to Elisha for help, but Elisha who thought of her. There is here given to us for our inspiration a beautiful illustration of the individualizing of sympathy. Elisha was not so preoccupied with great affairs of public importance that he overlooked the personal welfare of one individual and household. Here lies the weakness of much humanitarianism today. Too often it is abstract, vague, a generalized sentiment of benevolence. It is not focused on a particular individual. But genuine affection can always point to "a certain man," and thus always holds us to concrete and definite forms of service to individuals. Modern preachers and prophets who find themselves so immersed in practical affairs that they overlook the needs of individuals may well lay to heart the words with which this chapter begins: Then spake Elisha unto the woman, whose son he had restored to life.

The conclusion of this story also merits brief mention. The appeal of the woman that her property be restored to her was granted by the king because of Elisha's interest in her. It is a good thing for one to have personal relations with prophets, ancient or modern. Ministers of God have an influence with men in authority. Their word can be depended upon. The people whose cause they espouse can be presumed to be worthy and deserving. Many a time since the days of Elisha the name of a prophet of God has secured justice for those in need.

7-15. Elisha and Ben-hadad.—This passage contains a confused account (see Exeg. for the 9 So Hazael went to meet him, and took a present with him, even of every good thing of Damascus, forty camels' burden, and came and stood before him, and said, Thy son Ben-hadad king of Syria hath sent me to thee, saying, Shall I recover of this disease? 10 And Elisha said unto him, Go, say unto him, Thou mayest certainly recover: howbeit the Lord hath showed me that he shall surely die. 11 And he settled his countenance steadfastly, until he was ashamed: and the man of God wept. 12 And Hazael said, Why weepeth my lord? And he answered, Because I know the evil that thou wilt do unto the children of Israel: their strongholds wilt thou set on fire, and their young men wilt thou slay with the sword, and wilt dash their children, and rip up their women with child.

10. Elisha gives the oracle You shall certainly recover; he then adds for the hearing of Hazael, but not for him to tell to his master, that Ben-hadad will certainly die. Here we get an instance of an oracle which tells the truth but not the whole truth. (A similar case is to be found in 3:18.) The incident is a survival of that natural religion of man whereby he fears the supernatural and regards it as being at least semi-alien to him. Man must always be careful in his dealings with the other world lest the gods maliciously lure him to his destruction. In this present incident the oracle, true enough in itself, is designed to lure Ben-hadad into a false confidence. Further, the prophet immediately takes steps to ensure that Ben-hadad does die. The famous examples of classical tradition are the "true" oracle which lured Croesus to his doom, and the equally "true" oracle which encouraged Pyrrhus of Epirus to defeat at the hands of Rome. The Delphic Oracle told Croesus that if he crossed the river Halys, his eastern boundary, he would destroy a mighty empire, but it did not tell him that it was his own empire he would destroy. Similarly, the oracle told Pyrrhus that he would conquer the Romans, but when he returned later and complained that the Romans had conquered him, he was told that the oracle should have been read as, "I say that the Romans will conquer you," a translation which can be made of the original Latin, though it is not the obvious one.

11. All the ancient versions found this verse difficult, mostly because of the unique use of the verb which is translated he fixed his gaze. The meaning, however, is quite plain. Elisha was suddenly seized with a semitrance. He saw a vision of the horrors of the coming war. This fixed unseeing look of horror lasted so long and was followed by such bitter tears that Hazael inquired the reason. It is better to read, following the Vulg., "His face became fixed with a look of indescribable horror"; then follows the reference to the prophet weeping.

12-15. This is war with its horrors, though now there are alternatives no less terrible. Hazael is far from being horror-stricken at the recital of these terrible doings. On the explanation of the apparent contradiction in vs. 10) of the illness and death of Ben-hadad king of Syria. The chief point of interest relates to the munificent presents sent by the king to Elisha (vss. 8-9). The narrator does not even pause to record that Elisha refused to accept them. Prophets could not be bought in those days. Neither can they be bought in our day. The dictum "Every man has his price" stops short when we come to men of God. Again we are reminded that there is this inherent dignity and nobility about the profession of the minis-
13 And Hazael said, But what, is thy servant a dog, that he should do this great thing? And Elisha answered, The Lord hath showed me that thou shalt be king over Syria.

14 So he departed from Elisha, and came to his master; who said to him, What said Elisha to thee? And he answered, He told me that thou shouldst surely recover.

15 And it came to pass on the morrow, that he took a thick cloth, and dipped it in water, and spread it on his face, so that he died: and Hazael reigned in his stead.

16 ¶ In the fifth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel, Jehoshaphat being then king of Judah, Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah began to reign.

17 Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

18 And he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, as did the house of Ahab; for the daughter of Ahab was his wife: and he did evil in the sight of the Lord.

19 Yet the Lord would not destroy Judah contrary, he modestly regards himself as being of too low a station in life for the accomplishment of such mighty deeds.

8. Jehoram of Judah (8:16-24)

Jehoram becomes king of Judah at the death of his father Jehoshaphat. Special mention is made of his wife Athaliah, Ahab's daughter, because of Athaliah's later action in seizing the throne. During this reign Edom and Libnah revolt from the domination of Judah.

16-19. These verses form the Deuteronomist's introduction for the reign of the new king of Judah. The RSV rightly omits the phrase Jehoshaphat being then king of Judah, thus following the LXX and Syriac. It is a copyist's error, being an accidental repetition of the last three words of the verse.

18. The new king's wife was Athaliah, a woman of determination and resource, like her Tyrian mother Jezebel and her second cousin, the Carthaginian Dido. It is understandable that there would be no room for the queen mother while Athaliah's husband was king.

19. This verse contains another copyist's error, by which to his children (יוֹנָכֵי) was written instead of "before him" (יהבשֵׁנ), i.e., before God (cf. I Kings 11:36).

try: those who enter it may not be influenced by material rewards. Forty camels loaded with presents could not induce a true minister of God to speak what he did not believe to be true, or to serve a cause in which he did not believe. He may not be brilliant or conspicuous. But he must be incorruptible.

16-29. The Southern Kingdom: Jehoram and Athaliah.—Jehoram's reign was an evil one, for the daughter of Ahab was his wife (vs. 18). And Athaliah did what was evil . . . , for he was son-in-law to the house of Ahab (vs. 27), and his mother's name was Athaliah; she was a granddaughter of Omri (vs. 26). Ahab's wickedness did not end with his life. Wickedness never ends with the life of a wicked man. The infection is transmitted unto coming generations. A great truth could be drawn from the for David his servant's sake, as he promised him to give him always a light, and to his children.

20 ¶ In his days Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah, and made a king over themselves.

21 So Joram went over to Zair, and all the chariots with him: and he rose by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him about, and the captains of the chariots: and the people fled into their tents.

22 Yet Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. Then Libnah revolted at the same time.

23 And the rest of the acts of Joram, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

24 And Joram slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David: and Ahaziah his son reigned in his stead.

25 ¶ In the twelfth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel did Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah begin to reign.

26 Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign; and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Athaliah, the daughter of Omri king of Israel.

20-22. This is an extract from the annals of the kings of Judah, but it has been so altered by the compiler as to obscure the fact that in his attempt to subjugate Edom the king of Judah suffered a military disaster which stopped just short of being complete. He evidently was surrounded by the Edomites and cut his way out with a few chariots only with the utmost difficulty. His punitive expedition was unsuccessful, and Edom secured its independence, to be followed by Libnah, a city to the southwest of Judah, probably in the Philistine country, though the site has not been definitely identified.

23-24. The formal Deuteronomistic obituary for a king of Judah, as usual including the name of his successor.

9. Ahaziah of Judah (8:25-29)

25-29. The Deuteronomistic compiler introduces the reign of the new king of Judah. He mentions the fact that Athaliah was the granddaughter of Omri (RSV), not the daughter of Omri as the M.T. says. Lucian corrects the text to "daughter of Ahab," but this continued reference to Omri is a further tribute to the greatness of Ahab's father, the founder of the dynasty (cf. Exeg. on I Kings 16:23-28). The compiler tells how 27 And he walked in the way of the house of Ahab, and did evil in the sight of the Lord, as did the house of Ahab: for he was the son-in-law of the house of Ahab.

28 And he went with Joram the son of Ahab to the war against Hazael king of Syria in Ramoth-gilead; and the Syrians wounded Joram.

29 And king Joram went back to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds which the Syrians had given him at Ramah, when he fought against Hazael king of Syria. And Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah went down to see Joram the son of Ahab in Jezreel, because he was sick.

And Elisha the prophet called one of the children of the prophets, and said unto him, Gird up thy loins, and take this box of oil in thine hand, and go to Ramoth-gilead:

Joram and Ahaziah of Judah went to fight against the Syrians, continuing the campaign in which Ahab died, how Joram was wounded, and how Ahaziah went to visit him as he lay sick in his palace at Jezreel. The compiler then has to break off his story because he must tell the story of Jehu’s revolt, since this ended in the slaughter of two kings in one day.

E. The Revolution of Jehu (9:1–10:28)

These two chapters are taken from the same source as the narratives of I Kings 20; 22. They are thoroughly lively in style and are northern in sympathy and interest. Apart from the Deuteronomic insertions of 9:7-10a and 10:28-31, there is nothing to emphasize the general standpoint of the books of Kings.

1. Jehu Is Anointed King (9:1-13)

Elisha sends one of his disciples to anoint Jehu king of Israel. Jehu is in camp at Ramoth-gilead, fighting against the Syrians. He is anointed secretly within doors, and the young man hurries away, his mission completed. When Jehu’s fellow officers hear what has happened they forthwith set up an improvised throne, hail him as king, and the revolution is under way.

9:1. Elisha, leader of the sons of the prophets (i.e., of the prophetic guilds), kindles the first spark of the revolution by sending one of his disciples to anoint Jehu secretly, just as Samuel had secretly anointed both Saul and David (1 Sam. 10:1; 16:13). These prophets were determined to destroy the dynasty of Omri and they were prepared to go to any length to bring this to pass. Elisha encouraged Hazael to murder his master Ben-hadad in Damascus (8:18), and now he raises up Jehu to be an enemy within Israel itself. These actions apparently saved the Northern Kingdom for some sort of worship

9:1-10. The Fearless Messenger.—This chapter, which records the downfall of the house of Ahab, makes plain the moral retribution that overtakes the workers of iniquity. The dynasty of Omri, Ahab’s father, was one of the most powerful in the history of Israel. Ahab himself was a strong monarch who, abetted by Jezebel, a woman of immense strength of will, had enormously increased the prestige of his people. Yet both were tyrants who flouted the will of God and had no sense of justice, honor, or humanity. Hence Elijah (I Kings 19:15-17) had foretold their doom and had bequeathed to Elisha the fulfillment of this prediction. Elisha
2 And when thou comest thither, look out there Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat the son of Nimshi, and go in, and make him arise up from among his brethren, and carry him to an inner chamber;

3 Then take the box of oil, and pour it on his head, and say, Thus saith the Lord, I have anointed thee king over Israel. Then open the door, and flieth, and tarry not.

4 So the young man, even the young man the prophet, went to Ramoth-gilead.

5 And when he came, behold, the captains of the host were sitting; and he said, I have an errand to thee, O captain. And Jehu said, Unto which of all us? And he said, To thee, O captain.

6 And he arose, and went into the house: and he poured the oil on his head, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, I have anointed thee king over the people of the Lord, even over Israel.

of the Lord, but politically they brought the country to its very nadir. It is true that the dynasty of Jehu lasted for a hundred years, but for forty years the kingdom was in continual difficulties with neighboring Damascus-Syria. It was not until Damascus was destroyed by the Assyrian usurper Adadnirari III in 805 B.C. that Israel, under king Jehoash, was able to recover what she had lost. At one time Israel was reduced to fifty horsemen, ten chariots, and ten thousand footmen (13:7). Judah was vassal to Syria (12:18) and Hazael even captured Gath in the Philistine country (12:17). The judgment of a prophet of later date on Jehu’s bath of blood is to be found in Hos. 1:4.

2. Jehu is twice called “son of Nimshi” (vs. 20; 1 Kings 19:16), this being his grandfather’s name. In Assyrian inscriptions he is called “son of Omri,” a tribute to the power and reputation of the founder of the previous dynasty. The reading of the name of Jehu on the superscription of one of the bas-reliefs on the Black Obelisk of Shalmaneser III (859-824 B.C.) was one of the first achievements in the reading of the Assyrian cuneiform script. This was read by Edward Hincks in 1851. It is the Assyrian record of Jehu paying tribute to the Assyrian king in 841 B.C., and this date is therefore one of the fixed points of Hebrew chronology.

4. The phrase even the young man the prophet (KJV) looks like an early gloss, though it may be that the word for the young man has been accidentally repeated.

6. The statement that Israel (i.e., the Northern Kingdom) is the people of the Lord is definitely a northern statement. The original compiler could scarcely have allowed this to stand, and evidently this story has been taken over without any partisan alterations.

centuries. The O.T. annals are filled with a record of heroism unmatched by any which pagan or secular history can muster. The most irresistible personalities in the world are those filled with a passion for God and the will of God. The absence of such selfless devotion to God and the will of God is the most glaring defect in conventional and contemporary Christian character. What we need to remember is that it is possible to live in simple appreciation of Godlike ideas, to be accounted “interested”
7 And thou shalt smite the house of Ahab thy master, that I may avenge the blood of my servants the prophets, and the blood of all the servants of the Lord, at the hand of Jezebel.

8 For the whole house of Ahab shall perish: and I will cut off from Ahab him that pisseth against the wall, and him that is shut up and left in Israel:

9 And I will make the house of Ahab like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and like the house of Baasha the son of Ahijah:

10 And the dogs shall eat Jezebel in the portion of Jezreel, and there shall be none to bury her. And he opened the door, and fled.

11 ¶ Then Jehu came forth to the servants of his lord: and one said unto him, Is all well? wherefore came this mad fellow to thee? And he said unto them, Ye know the man, and his communication.

12 And they said, It is false; tell us now. And he said, Thus and thus spake he to me, saying, Thus saith the Lord, I have anointed thee king over Israel.

13 Then they hasted, and took every man his garment, and put it under him on the top of the stairs, and blew with trumpets, saying, Jehu is king.

7-10a. These verses are an insertion by the Deuteronomic compiler and are based on I Kings 17–19; 21:23. The original story told simply how the young man opened the door, and fled (vs. 10b) as soon as he had anointed Jehu. This involves the same reticence and silence with which we are familiar in other stories of the delivery of the prophetic message.

8. The phrase bond or free is taken from I Kings 21:21 (see Exeg. on I Kings 14:10).

10. The word הָרָע, portion, is from a root meaning “to divide” and refers primarily to the strip of land which each man cultivated in the area of tilled land outside the settlement, whether village or town. This system of strips of land outside the village settlement was extant in England in the Middle Ages.

11. The officers call the young prophet this mad fellow. It was partly out of contempt, but with some justification because of the ecstatic, uncontrolled behavior which was common among these earlier prophets (Johnson, Cultic Prophet in Ancient Israel, p. 19).

13. The officers make an improvised throne on the bare steps, sound the coronation fanfare, and raise the customary cry, Jehu is king. The word רֹע is difficult, but the Jewish commentator Qimhi’s translation (bare) is probably correct.

in social ideals, without rising to the conception of the glorious cause of our common humanity which will make us lose sight of ourselves in devotion to it. The real call of the Cross is the highest venture of living in a world which waits to be saved. We need more men in the ranks with the spirit of this young prophet who hazarded his life in the performance of his mission. The demand today is for the fighting saint. For every sinner as bold as Satan there should be a saint as audacious as the Son of God.

11-37. The Wages of Sin.—The narrative of the swift and terrible retribution which overtook
14 So Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat the son of Nimshi conspired against Joram. (Now Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead, he and all Israel, because of Hazael king of Syria.)

15 But king Joram was returned to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds which the Syrians had given him, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria.) And Jehu said, If it be your minds, then let none go forth nor escape out of the city to go to tell it in Jezreel.

16 So Jehu rode in a chariot, and went to Jezreel; for Joram lay there. And Ahaziah king of Judah was come down to see Joram.

17 And there stood a watchman on the tower in Jezreel, and he spied the company of Jehu as he came, and said, I see a company.

2. ASSASSINATION OF THE TWO KINGS (9:14-29)

Jehu takes immediate action. He prevents any possibility of the news preceding him and sets out in his chariot across the country to Jezreel. It so happened that Ahaziah of Judah was there at the time, visiting his cousin Joram of Israel. With great literary art the narrator now changes the scene and tells of the watcher at the gate seeing the small party racing toward Jezreel. The king sends a messenger to meet them, but Jehu detains the man. The same thing happens to another messenger, and by this time the watchman has recognized Jehu by the furious rate of his driving. Joram and Ahaziah both go out to meet him, each man in his own chariot, apprehensive lest Jehu is bringing bad news from the battlefront. Both are unsuspecting of any hostile intentions, but Jehu’s reply to Joram’s inquiry leaves no room for doubt. Joram turns to flee, crying out to Ahaziah that treachery is abroad. Jehu shoots Joram dead, has his body cast into the vineyard which once was Naboth’s, pursues the fleeing Ahaziah, overtakes him at Ibleam, and shoots him down also. Ahaziah’s chariot continues to flee, but by the time the charioteer has reached Megiddo, Ahaziah is dead. His body is taken to Jerusalem and buried there.

14. The reference to Joram’s having been on guard at Ramoth-gilead is strange, though so far as the actual Hebrew syntax and the sense of the passage are concerned the statement can well stand. It is better, however, to follow the suggestion of Graetz and substitute Jehu for Joram. We now get the statement that Jehu was in charge of the garrison at Ramoth-gilead, holding the place against the Syrians while Joram (Jehoram) was recovering from his wounds in Jezreel. All of this is correct, and the realization of such a situation is essential to the proper understanding of the story.

17. The LXX says that the watchman saw a dust cloud. There is something to be said for such an interpretation since it would account for the long time before the group of chariots was near enough for him to recognize Jehu’s style of driving.

Joram, his nephew Ahaziah, the queen mother Jezebel, is told in vivid detail. Jezebel met her awful fate undaunted, an awesome figure to the very last. Commensurate with the wickedness of the house of Ahab was the sordidness of its collapse. There runs—this is the inmost lesson of the whole tragic story—a moral law through the affairs of men. Behind the shifting scene of outward events, the rise and fall of dynasties and of nations, there operates the unvarying principle of righteousness, the righteousness of God. No matter how spectacular the achievements of men may be, however great their ability or genius, let their work be tainted with evil, devoid of justice and humanity, and it will come to the ground at last and so will they. Modern history has furnished us with prodigious examples of the downfall of tyrants.
pany. And Joram said, Take a horseman, and send to meet them, and let him say, Is it peace?

18 So there went one on horseback to meet him, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu said, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me. And the watchman told, saying, The messenger came to them, but he cometh not again.

19 Then he sent out a second on horseback, which came to them, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu answered, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me.

20 And the watchman told, saying, He came even unto them, and cometh not again: and the driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously.

21 And Joram said, Make ready. And his chariot was made ready. And Joram king of Israel and Ahaziah king of Judah went out, each in his chariot, and they went out against Jehu, and met him in the portion of Naboth the Jezreelite.

22 And it came to pass, when Joram saw Jehu, that he said, Is it peace, Jehu? And he answered, What peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many?

20. The furious driving of Jehu had already become a matter for remark. In our time it is proverbial. The Targ. says that his custom was to drive quietly, while Josephus (Antiquities IX. 6. 3) says that he marched slowly and in good order. Possibly these interpretations are due to the fact that it is indeed necessary to allow a fairly long period between the time when the watchman first saw the group coming from the direction of Ramoth-gilead and the time when the two kings went out to meet Jehu. As has been seen, the LXX obtains this necessary period of time by saying that the watchman first saw a dust cloud. The Hebrew, however, clearly says that Jehu was driving "like a madman" (the same root as that used in vs. 11 to describe the young prophet).

22. What peace . . .? The Hebrew strictly will not allow this rendering which is obtained by the omission of the letter ה. The alternative is to alter the vowels as the Targ. has done (מָחַ חַשָּלָּם for מָחַ-בָּשָּלָּם) and read, "What 'Is it well?' can there be while . . .?" i.e., what is the use of asking such a question when Jezebel is still alive corrupting the country?

Harlotries . . . sorceries: The former is a description of the idolatries of Canaan; its use begins with the J tradition (Num. 14:33) and is common in Hosea, Jeremiah, and 23 And Joram turned his hands, and fled, and said to Ahaziah, There is treachery, O Ahaziah.

24 And Jehu drew a bow with his full strength, and smote Jehoram between his arms, and the arrow went out at his heart, and he sank down in his chariot.

25 Then said Jehu to Bidkar his captain, Take up, and cast him in the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite: for remember how that, when I and thou rode together after Ahab his father, the Lord laid this burden upon him;

26 Surely I have seen yesterday the blood of Naboth, and the blood of his sons, saith the Lord; and I will requite thee in this plat, saith the Lord. Now therefore take and cast him into the plat of ground, according to the word of the Lord.

27 ¶ But when Ahaziah the king of Judah saw this, he fled by the way of the garden house. And Jehu followed after him, and said, Smite him also in the chariot. And they did so at the going up to Gurl, which is by Ibleam. And he fled to Megiddo, and died there.

Ezekiel. Its origin lies partly in the fact that the nature worship of Canaan, with its Baals and Astartes, involved sacred prostitution at the various hill shrines, but mostly on account of the husband-wife simile which had been boldly adopted by Hosea and continued by Ezekiel. This involves the further idea that apostasy on the part of Israel was adultery away from her true husband. The word sorceries does not refer to Israel’s apostasy so much as to Jezebel’s seductive skill in enticing Israel to follow Baal.

27. It is best to leave Beth-haggan (lit., the garden house) untranslated, taking it to be a place name, and identifying it with En-gannim (“spring of gardens,” Josh. 19:21), some seven miles south of Jezreel at the foot of the ridge of Carmel. Jehu and his men thus came within shooting distance of the fleeing Ahaziah just beyond the entrance to right over wrong, truth over falsehood, life over death. Never did they despair, since they knew that nothing could defeat the divine will and purpose. That must be the final foundation of a true optimism today. So only can we have “optimism without frivolity and seriousness without despair.” As James Russell Lowell has written:

Though the cause of Evil prosper, yet 'tis Truth alone is strong; Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne—Yet that scaffold sways the future, and, behind the dim unknown, Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.*

* “The Present Crisis.”

Jehu’s dynasty was the last in the Northern Kingdom. Under his successors Samaria went down in ruins. The career of Jehu reveals him as a bloodthirsty tyrant, a man without conscience or pity. How comes it that Elisha could choose, and that God could use, such a man to accomplish his ends? It is a real problem. Yet it is not a problem which involves the integrity of God or any compromise with the principle of righteousness. Wicked men may perform tasks necessary for the ultimate achievement of righteousness. This does not condone their wickedness or absolve them from its penalties. Blindly and unwittingly they accomplish moral ends. Perhaps no one else could do it. Yet they themselves do not escape final condemnation. So it proved with Jehu.

The problem involved in the career of Jehu
28 And his servants carried him in a chariot to Jerusalem, and buried him in his sepulchre with his fathers in the city of David.

29 And in the eleventh year of Joram the son of Ahab began Ahaziah to reign over Judah.

30 And when Jehu was come to Jezreel, Jezebel heard of it; and she painted her eyes, and tired her head, and looked out at a window.

31 And as Jehu entered in at the gate, she said, Had Zimri peace, who slew his master?

The pass of the Plain of Dothan. There Jehu shot him, but Ahaziah's charioteer evidently turned northwest and fled along the road which skirts the northern flank of the Carmel Ridge. He had reached Megiddo, about twelve miles away, when the wounded king died. The charioteer probably continued through the pass of Megiddo and on to Jerusalem. According to the parallel narrative in II Chr. 22:9, Ahaziah managed to reach Samaria and hid there until he was searched out and brought to Jehu, who executed him.

29. This notice is both out of place and contradictory to the notice in 8:25, for there is a discrepancy of one year. Lucian has in the eleventh year in both places. The notice belongs to the short account of Ahaziah's reign which is found in Lucian at the end of ch. 10. It is probable, therefore, that 9:30-10:36 is an insertion into an original summary of Ahaziah's reign, still found in Lucian's version, but omitted in the M.T. and the LXX because some of it is now found in ch. 9.

3. End of Jezebel (9:30-37)

Jezebel hears what has happened. Knowing that her death is certain, she takes great pains with her toilette and looks out of her window to greet Jehu mockingly as a second Zimri who murdered his master. At Jehu's word two or three eunuchs throw her out of the window and Jehu tramples her to death with his horses and chariots. Having entered the place to eat and drink, he suddenly remembers that after all Jezebel was a king's daughter and no ordinary wife or concubine to a king. He commands that she receive decent burial, but the dogs of Jezebel have devoured her body. Nothing is left but the skull, the feet, and the palms of her hands. The terrible curse of Elijah has been fulfilled.

Jezebel “set her eyes in antimony” as the Hebrew puts it. She blackened the edges of her eyelids above and below with antimony. This still is a fashion in the East. It makes the eyes appear larger and more brilliant. Her object may have been, as some say, to die bravely, but it is more than likely that she wanted to die in all her beauty; cf. Leonidas and his Spartans at Thermopylae, who followed the custom of combing their hair and beautifying their bodies before battle. They were not effeminate in this, as the Persians thought. Their idea was that a man began the next life, however shadowy that life might be, with a body similar in all respects to his physical body at the time of death, with its blemishes and its amputations, but also with any beauty it possessed (Lucien Lévy-Bruhl, The “Soul” of the Primitive, tr. Lilian A. Clare [London: George Allen & Unwin, 1928], pp. 314-15).

31. The translation of the KJV is untenable. The RSV rightly makes the question 32 And he lifted up his face to the window, and said, Who is on my side? who? And there looked out to him two or three eunuchs.
33 And he said, Throw her down. So they threw her down: and some of her blood was sprinkled on the wall, and on the horses: and he trode her under foot.
34 And when he was come in, he did eat and drink, and said, Go, see now this cursed woman, and bury her: for she is a king's daughter.
35 And they went to bury her: but they found no more of her than the skull, and the feet, and the palms of her hands.
36 Wherefore they came again, and told him. And he said, This is the word of the LORD, which he spake by his servant Elijah the Tishbite, saying, In the portion of Jezreel shall dogs eat the flesh of Jezebel:
37 And the carcass of Jezebel shall be as dung upon the face of the field in the portion of Jezreel; so that they shall not say, This is Jezebel.

And Ahab had seventy sons in Samaria. And Jehu wrote letters, and sent to Samaria, unto the rulers of Jezreel, of your master?’

10:1 Now Ahab had seventy sons in Samaria. So Jehu wrote letters, and

Is it peace? to be a general salutation. Jezebel calls him “Zimri the regicide” and neither gives nor expects mercy.

4. JEHU KING OF ISRAEL (10:1-36)
   a) MASSACRE OF THE HOUSE OF AHA'B (10:1-14)

   Jehu follows the custom of the time and sets out to destroy every male of the royal line which he has supplanted. This is partly to secure the succession to his own family and partly to prevent a blood feud, ensuring that there should be no one to take revenge for the murdered king. Ahab has seventy sons living in Samaria, so Jehu sends a message to their guardians, challenging them to pick their man as king and fight for him. They say to themselves that they can never stand against a man who is so mighty as to kill two kings, so they submit to Jehu and ask for instructions. He commands them to execute all their charges and bring their heads to Jezreel. Jehu bids them leave these heads by the gate overnight, and in the morning says that neither he nor the citizens are responsible, suggesting that this is an act of God who fulfills his word. Jehu then sets out for Samaria and meets Ahaziah of Judah’s kinsmen who have gone to greet their northern relatives and are presumably on their way home. Jehu arrests them all and executes them. They too are related to the house of Ahab, since Athaliah, the mother of Ahaziah, was Ahab’s daughter.

10:1. SEVENTY is a frequent number for the sum total of the relatives of a king (Judg. 8:30; 12:14; cf. Bar-Çûr of Ya’di, who also had seventy relatives massacred man, that may understand this? and who is he to whom the mouth of the Lord hath spoken, that he may declare it?” (Jer. 9.12a.) Such ultimate mysteries we may well leave to a knowledge that is above and beyond our own.

10:1-14, 16-32. MORE ON JEHU.—One reads this chapter with horror and loathing. It is full of unimaginable atrocity and merciless butchery, and it reeks with blood. The whole story is a dreadful nightmare. It is a lurid picture, unto the elders, and to them that brought up Ahab's children, saying,

2 Now as soon as this letter cometh to you, seeing your master's sons are with you, and there are with you chariots and horses, a fenced city also, and armor;

3 Look even out the best and meetest of your master's sons, and set him on his father's throne, and fight for your master's house.

4 But they were exceedingly afraid, and said, Behold, two kings stood not before him: how then shall we stand?

5 And he that was over the house, and he that was over the city, the elders also, and the bringers up of the children, sent to Jehu, saying, We are thy servants, and will do all that thou shalt bid us; we will not make any king: do thou that which is good in thine eyes.

6 Then he wrote a letter the second time to them, saying, If ye be mine, and if ye will hearken unto my voice, take ye the heads of the men your master's sons, and come to me to Jezreel by to-morrow this time. Now the king's sons, being seventy persons, were with the great men of the city, which brought them up.

7 And it came to pass, when the letter came to them, that they took the king's sons, and slew seventy persons, and put their heads in baskets, and sent him them to Jezreel.

(Burney, Notes on Hebrew Text of Kings, p. 302). There are traces of this number partaking to some extent of the magic nature of the number seven (Westermarck, Ritual and Belief in Morocco, I, 143, II, 265).

The Jezreel of the M.T. is difficult. It is better to follow Lucian and the Vulg. and read the city. If we read "of the city and to the elders," the error in the Hebrew is much easier than the English translation would suggest.

2-4. Jehu challenges the men to resist him if they dare. Let them pick the best man and fight it out. But the officials submit because Jehu has already killed two kings. Behind this reason for their submission is more than the modern reader readily appreciates. The classical example in the O.T. of this ancient attitude is the case of Gideon's son who is afraid to kill Zebah and Zalmunna, the two kings of Midian (Judg. 8:20-21).

equaled in Scripture, of brutality and horror. There is nothing in the whole narrative to indicate that the author of it had the slightest detestation of the horrors that he describes. On the contrary, the inference is that he not only condoned but approved of them (vs. 30). Neither is there anything to show that Elisha recoiled from the terrible sequence of events he had set in motion when he had given Jehu his mandate to destroy the house of Ahab. Thus we are presented with a dark picture of the state of religion in those ancient days. Yet only a little knowledge of history is needed to show us that even in an era called Christian abominable cruelties have been perpetrated in the name of religion and with the sanction of the church. The religious conscience has freed itself only slowly from its dreadful alliance with cruelty.
8 And there came a messenger, and told him, saying, They have brought the heads of the king's sons. And he said, Lay ye them in two heaps at the entering in of the gate until the morning.

9 And it came to pass in the morning, that he went out, and stood, and said to all the people, Ye be righteous: behold, I conspired against my master, and slew him: but who slew all these?

10 Know now that there shall fall unto the earth nothing of the word of the Lord, which the Lord spake concerning the house of Ahab: for the Lord hath done that which he spake by his servant Elijah.

11 So Jehu slew all that remained of the house of Ahab in Jezreel, and all his great men, and his kinsfolk, and his priests, until he left him none remaining.

12 ¶ And he arose and departed, and came to Samaria. And as he was at the shearing house in the way, 13 Jehu met with the brethren of Ahaziah king of Judah, and said, Who are ye? And they answered, We are the brethren of Ahaziah; and we go down to salute the king's son.

The king was regarded as being a sacred person and therefore as being possessed of special more-than-human power. A man who can slay two kings in one day is thus possessed of a most extraordinary power, and only a fool would lightly take action against him.

9. The people are apprehensive when they see the seventy severed heads at the gates of the city. The city gates marked the site where judgment was dispensed, and the placing of the heads there was naturally interpreted to mean that the city was charged with the murders and involved in the blood guilt for which atonement had to be made. Jehu reassures the people: You are innocent. He then proceeds to make out that he had nothing to do with this new massacre either, that it constitutes a divine fulfillment of Elijah's oracle concerning the fate of the house of Ahab. Jehu was not distinguished for his scrupulousness, either here or elsewhere, zealous though he was for the Lord.

11. It is better, instead of reading all his great men, to follow Lucian's translation and to read "all his kinsfolk." Jehu was not murdering men indiscriminately. He was eliminating every male related to Ahab and Jezebel, Joram and Ahaziah, who could be "the avenger of blood."

13. The differences in the RSV are important and sound. The Judahite princes were on their way home when Jehu intercepted them. Furthermore, it is correct to read queen mother, since the reference is to the men of the king's own generation.

We still witness in time of war the resurgence of unbelievable depravity and cold-blooded inhumanity. Yet the religious conscience today condemns it, loathes it, is arrayed against it, is resolved to overcome it. Thus we can trace slow but sure progress under God in the evolution of morals and religion.

How can we say that God could use such a bloodthirsty tyrant as Jehu for the accomplish-children of the king and the children of the queen.

14 And he said, Take them alive. And they took them alive, and slew them at the pit of the shearing house, even two and forty men; neither left he any of them.

15 ¶ And when he was departed thence, he lighted on Jehonadab the son of Rechab coming to meet him: and he saluted him, and said to him, Is thine heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? And Jehonadab answered, It is. If it be, give me thine hand. And he gave him his hand; and he took him up to him into the chariot.

16 And he said, Come with me, and see my zeal for the Lord. So they made him ride in his chariot.

17 And when he came to Samaria, he slew all that remained unto Ahab in Samaria, till he had destroyed him, according to the saying of the Lord, which he spake to Elijah.

b) Jehonadab the Rechabite (10:15-17)

Jehu sets out for Samaria and on his way meets Jehonadab, the leader of the Rechabites. He bids him come to see how zealous he is for the Lord, and takes him up into his chariot. Jehu arrives in Samaria and massacres all the residue of the house of Ahab.

15. According to Josephus (Antiquitates IX. 6. 6), Jehu and Jehonadab were friends of long standing. The Rechabites were of Kenite descent (I Chr. 2:55) and stood firm for the old desert ways. They remained firm and vigorous in this faith in the days of Jeremiah, when they still refused to drink wine, or to possess vineyard, field, or seed (Jer. 35:9). They insisted upon living the old nomad life of their fathers, dwelling in tents and having as little as possible to do with the ways of Canaan. It will be readily seen that they were in wholehearted agreement with all that Jehu did, even to the fierce massacres for which he was responsible. In their vows of abstinence they have a modern parallel in the Wahabis of Saudi Arabia.

missioned to a divine end. The way he executed it was devilish. Actually Jehu did not destroy Baal by these methods. He destroyed Baal worshipers wholesale, but by such means he did not end the cult. Brute force never achieves moral ends. War in our modern world illustrates this truth. No matter how complete the overthrow of the enemy may be, war of itself settles nothing. It raises more problems than it solves. It begets more evils than it destroys. Baal can never be destroyed thus. Only by moral means can a kingdom of righteousness be established on earth. Jehu’s kingdom was not established, as the sorry and sordid record shows (vv. 31-33). There was no peace, no prosperity during all this wretched reign. And a century later the dynasty reared on the rotten foundation of bloodshed and cruelty went down in ruins.

15. The Rechabites—They were a clan among the Israelites, traced back to Caleb in I Chr. 2:42, 55. Jehonadab was not their founder, but he had acquired such prominence and authority that the Rechabites later regarded him much as the people of Israel regarded Moses. They were devout worshipers of Yahweh, and their clan laws demanded abstinence from wine and made their ancient nomadic habits a matter of religious obligation (Jer. 35:6-7). The purpose of this seems to have been to preserve them from contamination by too close association with the Canaanites, and also to enable them to live a freer and more independent life 18 Then Jehu assembled all the people, and said to them, “Ahab served Ba’al a little; but Jehu shall serve him much.
19 Now therefore call unto me all the prophets of Baal, all his servants, and all his priests; let none be wanting: for I have a great sacrifice to do to Baal; whosoever shall be wanting, he shall not live. But Jehu did it in subtilty, to the intent that he might destroy the worshippers of Baal.
20 And Jehu said, Proclaim a solemn assembly for Baal. And they proclaimed it.
21 And Jehu sent through all Israel: and all the worshippers of Baal came, so that there was not a man left that came not. And they came into the house of Baal; and the house of Baal was full from one end to another.
22 And he said unto him that was over the vestry, Bring forth vestments for all the worshippers of Baal. And he brought them forth vestments.

c) Massacre of the Baal Worshipers (10:18-28)

Jehu pretends great zeal for Baal, and bids every worshiper gather in the temple for a great sacrifice. He makes sure that every Baal worshiper is there, dressed in proper attire. He takes precautions that no true worshiper of the Lord is inside the temple. Then he stations eighty men outside to see that no one escapes and sends in his bodyguard to kill everyone inside the temple. He then demolishes the temple and everything in it.

19-20. It is best to omit all his worshipers. The phrase occurs in Lucian's translation after the reference to the priests, so it has every appearance of being a gloss which has crept into the text. Further, the worshipers in general are not called until vs. 21, when the prophets and the priests of Baal have made everything ready for them. These prophets and priests are the cult officials of the sanctuary (Johnson, Cultic Prophets in Ancient Israel, p. 53).

Jehu uses for sacrifice the word מָכַן which strictly means "slaughter for sacrifice," so it may be that he is continuing his grim humor of vs. 18 and is thinking more of the slaughter than of the sacrifice. Similarly, in vs. 20 the word מְאֹד, usually translated "common assembly," probably signifies "closing festival" (Deut. 16:8; Lev. 23:36), so that Jehu is actually calling a closing festival for Baal in a double sense.

22. The custom of washing one's clothes (Exod. 19:10) or of putting on a change of clothes (Gen. 35:2) is ancient and widespread, not only in connection with sacred festivals among the Hebrews, whether true worshipers or Baal worshipers, but among than the settled villager or townsman. This naive philosophy of life contains a profound truth. There are two elements in human existence which must somehow be reconciled: the instinct for stability and security, and the instinct for freedom, for movement, for escape from limitation and confinement. The solution of this problem lies in two directions. There must be some permanent basis of life, some accepted home of the soul. Without it, freedom becomes aimless wandering, pure eccentricity. Life lacks coherence, unity. Even the Rechabites stuck to Palestine. This was their spiritual home and they never moved out of it. There is nothing in the Rechabite ideal to justify the reckless experimentation of much modern living. Stability, however, is one thing and immobility is another. Security there must be, but not stagnation. Within some Palestine, some area of settled principles of faith and conduct, every true life must be lived. Yet that life must have within it the spirit of the Rechabite, must live

23 And Jehu went, and Jehonadab the son of Rechab, into the house of Baal, and said unto the worshippers of Baal, Search, and look that there be here with you none of the servants of the Lord, but the worshippers of Baal only.

24 And when they went in to offer sacrifices and burnt offerings, Jehu appointed fourscore men without, and said, If any of the men whom I have brought into your hands escape, he that letteth him go, his life shall be for the life of him.

25 And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt offering, that Jehu said to the guard and to the captains, Go in, and slay them; let none come forth. And they smote them with the edge of the sword; and the guard and the captains cast them out, and went to the city of the house of Baal.

26 And they brought forth the images out of the house of Baal, and burned them.

27 And they brake down the image of Baal, and brake down the house of Baal, and made it a draught house unto this day.

28 Thus Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel.

23 Then Jehu went into the house of Ba‘al with Jehon‘adab the son of Rechab; and he said to the worshippers of Ba‘al, “Search, and see that there is no servant of the Lord here among you, but only the worshippers of Ba‘al.” 24 Then he went in to offer sacrifices and burnt offerings.

Now Jehu had stationed eighty men outside, and said, “The man who allows any of those whom I give into your hands to escape shall forfeit his life.” 25 So as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt offering, Jehu said to the guard and to the officers, “Go in and slay them; let not a man escape.” So when they put them to the sword, the guard and the officers cast them out and went into the inner room of the house of Ba‘al 26 and they brought out the pillar that was in the house of Ba‘al, and burned it. 27 And they demolished the pillar of Ba‘al, and demolished the house of Ba‘al, and made it a latrine to this day.

the Arabs and elsewhere (W. Robertson Smith, Lectures on the Religion of the Semites [3rd ed.; New York: The Macmillan Co., 1927], p. 451). C. M. Doughty describes how the pilgrims to Mecca bathe themselves and put off their ordinary clothes before they enter the sacred city. They put on the ihram, the proper regulation clothing for the pilgrim, “and in this guise must every soul enter the sacred precincts” (Travels in Arabia Deserta [New York: Random House, 1946], pp. 511 ff., 572). Presumably this ancient custom is the remote origin of the modern “Sunday best.”

25. The M.T. reads that the guard and the officers went to the city of the house of Ba‘al. This does not make sense, and so it has become the custom to read הִסְדָנָן (inner room, “shrine”) for רִשּׁ. It is now known that the Hebrew text is correct, and that there is a second word of the same form meaning “altar.” This undoubtedly is the meaning here.

26. The M.T. has “pillars” (so ASV, ERV), but the singular certainly is intended, for the verse closes with and burned it. Since the sacred altar was burned it is generally agreed that the text did not have the pillar, which would be of stone, but “the sacred pole” (ַסָּבְלָה) though this is without any support in the ancient versions.

27. The M.T. has pillar, which some read image, under the impression that the pillar was actually a stone image of the god. Others read מִזְבָּחָה (“altar”), on the plea that there ought to be a reference to the destruction of the altar.

in tents, be able to move forward to new ideas, new duties, new outlooks on life. The test of true living is to take counsel not of our timidity but of our courage. The capacity for mental and moral movement is the prerequisite of any strong and achieving character. And it is only so that real stability and ultimate security can be won. For apparent stability without freedom in thinking and action turns out not to be stable at all. Thus in the political sphere there are these two contending influences at work at the heart of every people. The one holds to the past, entrenching itself in tradition, calling it heresy to depart from the political philosophy of our 29 *Howbeit, from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, Jehu departed not from after them, to wit, the golden calves that were in Beth-el, and that were in Dan. 30 And the Lord said unto Jehu, Because thou hast done well in executing that which is right in mine eyes, and hast done unto the house of Ahab according to all that was in mine heart, thy children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel. 31 But Jehu took no heed to walk in the law of the Lord God of Israel with all his heart: for he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam, which made Israel to sin. 32 In those days the Lord began to cut Israel short: and Hazael smote them in all the coasts of Israel; 33 From Jordan eastward, all the land of Gilead, the Gadites, and the Reubenites, and the Manassites, from Aroer, which is by the river Arnon, even Gilead and Bashan.

II Kings 10:33

Howbeit, from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, which made Israel to sin, Jehu did not turn aside from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, which he made Israel to sin, the golden calves that were in Bethel, and in Dan. And the Lord said to Jehu, “Because you have done well in carrying out what is right in my eyes, and have done to the house of Ahab according to all that was in my heart, your sons of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel.” But Jehu was not careful to walk in the law of the Lord the God of Israel with all his heart; he did not turn from the sins of Jeroboam, which he made Israel to sin.

d) Summary of Jehu’s Reign (10:29-31)

29-31. This is in the normal Deuteronomic style. For all Jehu’s zeal for the Lord, the compiler’s praise is qualified since the calf worship at Bethel and Dan still continued. Nevertheless, the compiler sees some reward for Jehu’s zeal in the fact that four generations of Jehu’s line occupied the throne of Israel for an over-all total of a hundred years.

e) Israel’s Losses to Syria (10:32-33)

fathers, invoking the words but not the spirit of our leaders of a century ago, insisting that we abide within a set of ideas that have become crystallized and unyielding. The other, the Rechabite ideal, holds that new conditions call for new ideas, that an expanding world calls for expanding ideals, that no political philosophy is or can be unalterable, that there are no traditions which may not be changed, and that we must move on and out into a new world at the call of humanity which is the call of God. It is the Rechabite ideal that needs a fresh interpretation in the national mind. Only so can civilization be made secure. And it is just so in personal living. A faith that takes refuge in the past, that refuses to move beyond the fixed traditions and formulas of religion, does not really rest on firm foundations. Besides attachment to the inward essence of all true religion, fidelity to God, fellowship with Jesus Christ, there must be the Rechabite spirit which always welcomes new ideas and is willing to follow new paths into ever-enlarging conceptions of truth. Only so does faith itself become secure. And in the sphere of material existence the same spirit of independence and freedom is needed. Social security must be established. Yet this ideal is not enough of itself. Because it is the sole ambition of many, there follows inevitably a certain degradation of the higher life of man. If comfort and security are our only ideal, we fall short of our possible moral and spiritual destiny. Such is the lesson taught us by the Rechabites. Only as we learn it shall we dwell secure. Long after Samaria had fallen, the Rechabites went on living in the land.
34 Now the rest of the acts of Jehu, and all that he did, and all his might, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

And Jeho'ahaz his son reigned in his stead. 36 The time that Jehu reigned over Israel in Samaria was twenty-eight years.

f) Conclusion (10:34-36)

Here is the formal Deuteronomic obituary notice for Jehu, together with the name of his successor.

F. From Jehu's Revolution to the Fall of the Northern Kingdom (11:1-17:40)

1. Revolution and Counterrevolution in Judah (11:1-20)

At the death of Ahaziah his mother Athaliah seized the throne of Judah and held it for six years. She massacred all the males of the royal line of Judah except Joash, the infant son of Ahaziah. He was saved by his aunt, the wife of the high priest who was loyal to the Lord. She hid the baby prince in the temple precincts until the seventh year, when Jehoiada, her husband, staged a coup d'etat on a sabbath at the time when the temple guard was being changed. Athaliah was killed, and the boy king was crowned. The Baal temple was destroyed and the high priest of Baal died a martyr for his faith.

11:1-21. An Unholy Alliance.—The narratives concerning the kings of Israel and of Judah shift from one kingdom to the other (see Exeg). The historian proceeds in this chapter to describe the consequences of the revolution in the Northern Kingdom on the fortunes of Judah. To make the story complete the reader should consult II Chr. 21. Note also that the Jehoram of vs. 2 (son of Ahab, king of Israel) is not to be confused with the Jehoram of II Chr. 21:1, son of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah (cf. 8:16).

Athaliah was a daughter of Ahab and Jezebel (8:18). Doubtless to Jehoshaphat the marriage of his son Jehoram to a daughter of Ahab seemed a master stroke of political wisdom. Thus he could count on Ahab's help in attack upon their common enemies. As the results proved, the marriage brought only disaster upon the Southern Kingdom. Had Jehoshaphat married his son to a true woman who shared his own faith and loyalty to Yahweh the terrible story which this chapter contains would never have been written. One contrasts the folly of Jehoshaphat in marrying his son to a half-Phoenician idolatress with the foresighted wisdom of his progenitor Abraham, who bade his son (Gen. 24:3-4) seek a wife not among the Canaanites with whom he might have advanced his worldly fortunes but from his own people and kindred. The ruin of Samson was compassed by his marriage with a Philistine woman. The counterpart of the marriage of Jehoram and Athaliah is found over and over again in history and in our modern world. Marriages which have for their purpose only material advantage invariably end in disillusion and disaster. Young men and women in our day can be given no better counsel than to marry one who lives as they live, believes as they believe, shares the same ideals, has the same religious background, is rooted in the same soil. The apostolic injunction, "Do not be mismated with unbelievers" (II Cor. 6:14), has fundamental significance and meaning.

1. Athaliah.—Here was a true daughter of Jezebel. She saw to it that all of her husband's brothers should be murdered so that his authority might go unchallenged (II Chr. 21:4). The worship of Baal was soon made the national religion; the high priest Jehoiada was degraded; all the cruelties, immoralities, and irreligion of the house of Ahab were re-enacted in the Southern Kingdom, which now fell to the lowest level in its history. There followed the miserable
2 But Jehoshabea, the daughter of king Joram, sister of Ahaziah, took Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons which were slain; and they hid him, even him and his nurse, in the bed-chamber from Athaliah, so that he was not slain.

3 And he was with her hid in the house of the LORD six years. And Athaliah did reign over the land.

a) Athaliah Seizes the Throne of Judah (11:1-3)

The queen mother managed to maintain the ways of the house of Ahab for another six years in the kingdom of Judah, but she missed one person in the general massacre of Ahaziah's male kin, and this small boy proved to be the instrument of her final undoing.

11:2. According to II Chr. 22:11, Jehosheba was the wife of Jehoiada, the loyal high priest of the Lord. This fact explains how the boy and his nurse could remain hidden in the temple for six long years. On the night of the slaughter she hid the baby and his nurse in a bedchamber, i.e., not in a sleeping apartment but, as is quite clear from Josephus (Antiquities IX. 7. 1), in the chamber where the beds (mattresses) and couches were stored.

death of Jehoram (II Chr. 21:15, 18-19), and of his son Ahaziah (already narrated in 9:27). These events had no other effect on Athaliah, the wife of the one and the mother of the other, than to beget in her wild dreams whereby she could realize her unbridled ambition to become sole ruler of a kingdom. Hence the events as narrated in this chapter.

Athaliah thus stands out in history as the incarnation of cruelty, a masterful, conscienceless nature, capable of swift resolution, relentless purpose, devoid of any instincts either of natural affection or of common humanity. A sermon might be preached, with her as the supreme example, on the perversion of grand human qualities to ignoble ends. Here was a superb woman who commands admiration for her fearlessness, undaunted courage, immense ability, farseeing intelligence, and contempt of immobility, timidity, weakness and cowardice. These are among the noblest qualities in human nature. Personalities endowed with them rise like mountain peaks above the ruck of our common humanity. What a power for good such qualities could achieve if directed by conscience to moral ends. We are here reminded that a high degree of intelligence and of native ability uncontrolled by morality is far more dangerous to the social order than ignorance and incapacity. If our processes of education result in sharpening the wits of men who use these wits for selfish and unscrupulous ends, it was far better that their wits had not been sharpened at all. Our most dangerous enemies today are highly trained and capable men who use their intelligence and abilities to circumvent laws enacted for the common welfare. Without moral character at the base, mental discipline becomes a menace, not a blessing. Has one ever asked oneself what place Napoleon might occupy in history had he possessed the moral qualities of George Washington?

Small wonder that the macabre and gripping drama narrated in this chapter appealed to Handel as the theme of one of his oratorios in which the double chorus is used for the first time, and to Racine whose Athalie is one of the noblest of his tragedies. He uses the material freely, describes Athaliah as forewarned in a dream, and weakened in advance by nervous apprehension. He even pictures a scene between her and this unknown child whom she interrogates concerning his origin and parentage. This, however, lessens the dramatic effect of the narrative which confronts the queen with a spectacle of which she had no previous intimation.

2-16. Sic Semper Tyrannis.—Few more dramatic narratives are to be found in the O.T. than that contained in this chapter: the hiding of the child Joash, reminiscent of that of Moses; the forged plot; the precautions taken by the posting of the guards; the preparation of a festival service announced by the blare of trumpets; the undaunted courage of the queen, who entered the temple and saw young Joash
4 ¶ And the seventh year Jehoi'ada sent and fetched the rulers over hundreds, with the captains and the guard, and brought them to him into the house of the Lord, and made a covenant with them, and took an oath of them in the house of the Lord, and showed them the king's son.

5 And he commanded them, saying, This is the thing that ye shall do: A third part of you that enter in on the sabbath shall even be keepers of the watch of the king's house;

6 And a third part shall be at the gate of Sur; and a third part at the gate behind the guard: so shall ye keep the watch of the house, that it be not broken down.

7 And two parts of all you that go forth on the sabbath, even they shall keep the watch of the house of the Lord about the king.

8 And ye shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand: and he that cometh within the ranges,

The story is from two sources, the main part being an account of a carefully designed plot on the part of the high priest, supported by the whole of the royal bodyguard. An insertion (vss. 13-18a) ascribes to the movement a popular origin with a distinctly religious object. The common people go in a body after the death of Athaliah (vs. 16) and destroy the Baal temple. The second account of the death of Athaliah (vs. 20) belongs to the main story.

4. The Carites were the foreign mercenaries who formed the royal bodyguard (see II Sam. 20:23, where they are identified with the Cherethites [Cretans]). In the parallel account (II Chr. 23:1-21) the Levites take the place of the Carites. This is in accordance with later ideas, for in the postexilic period it was thought to be highly improper that foreigners should be officially employed in the temple service, especially since there is evidence that the foreign guards were also the slaughterers of the sacrificial animals in pre-exilic times (W. Robertson Smith, O.T. in Jewish Church, p. 262, n.). The protest first appears in Ezek. 44:7.

5-7. These instructions remain confused even though in the RSV the major part of vs. 6 is regarded as a gloss. The plan seems to have been as follows: One third of the guard was to go off temple duty on the sabbath and watch over the security of the king's palace. But on this occasion they were to stay on duty within the temple itself while the other two thirds were to surround the young King Joash. This procedure enabled Jehoiada to have the whole of the temple guard together at one time, with all of them protecting the king, while at the same time the guard was suddenly withdrawn from the palace itself. This left Athaliah without any military support and provided the maximum safety for the young king. Further, the whole maneuver was performed in such a way that no one would have any idea of any special happening until it was accomplished. The normal procedure was for two thirds of the guard to be on duty at the palace and one third in the temple, except on the sabbath when the positions were reversed. The gloss in vs. 6 may be assumed as describing the positions taken by the sabbath guards on a normal sabbath.

8. The word ranges is an old form of the modern word ranks (cf. French rang).
10. The statement that the priest delivered weapons to the temple guard is extraordinary. Why should they of all people ever be without weapons? John Skinner's explanation is most attractive; he suggests that the verse is a gloss from II Chr. 23:9, where Jehoiada is said to have distributed weapons to the Levites (Kings [New York: Oxford University Press, 1904; "The New-Century Bible"], p. 339). If the Chronicler replaced the well-armed mercenaries with unarmed Levites, then he obviously had to arrange for them to be given arms on this special occasion.

11. The king had not yet been brought forward, so the guards can scarcely have been arranged round about the king. It is better, therefore, to omit the reference to the king, as in the RSV. On the other hand, it is necessary to make it clear that when the king was indeed brought out the guards were already in such a position as to surround him completely and thus to guard him effectively.

12. The sign of royalty, the crown, is placed on the king. The word testimony is difficult. It is best to assume the omission of one letter in the Hebrew, and so to read "bracelets" (cf. II Sam. 1:10).

13. Here the interpolated fragment begins, according to which the people, not the bodyguard, are the agents in carrying out the inauguration of the new regime. In the M.T. there has been an attempt to dovetail the two accounts into one and to reconcile them by the insertion of an unusual form of the word which elsewhere means "runners," translated the guard.

14. The pillar by which the king stood can scarcely have been one of the entrance pillars. It was apparently the place where the king regularly during worship, crowned and mitered in royal regalia. She shouted, Treason, treason, but her hour had come and her doom was sealed. So in the Southern Kingdom as in the Northern, we gaze upon the end of the house of Ahab, where it reaches its term in the death of his daughter who incarnated in her nature alike the superb abilities and the utter moral depravity of her parents.

stood by a pillar, as the manner was, and the princes and the trumpeters by the king, and all the people of the land rejoiced, and blew with trumpets: and Athaliah rent her clothes, and cried, Treason, treason.

15 But Jehoiada the priest commanded the captains of the hundreds, the officers of the host, and said unto them, Have her forth without the ranges: and him that followeth her kill with the sword. For the priest had said, Let her not be slain in the house of the LORD.

16 And they laid hands on her; and she went by the way by which the horses came into the king's house: and there was she slain.

17 ¶ And Jehoiada made a covenant between the LORD and the king and the people, that they should be the LORD's people; between the king also and the people.

18 And all the people of the land went into the house of Ba'al, and brake it down; his altars and his images brake they in pieces thoroughly, and slew Mattan the priest of Ba'al before the altars. And the priest appointed officers over the house of the LORD.

19 And he took the rulers over hundreds, and the captains, and the guard, and all the people of the land; and they brought down the king from the house of the LORD, and came by the way of the gate of the guard to the king's house. And he sat on the throne of the kings.

20 And all the people of the land rejoiced, and the city was in quiet: and they slew Athaliah with the sword beside the king's house.

corresponding to the seats of ecclesiastical dignitaries or to the stalls of the knights of the orders of chivalry in their private chapel. The word used here is דירש, lit., "station," not נזר (which refers to idolatrous pillars), and designates the two pillars which stood before the porch.

16. The translation they laid hands on her is correct; the translation of the ASV, "they made way for her," has no justification.

18. The full name of the priest was doubtless Mattan-baal ("gift of Baal"), a name frequently found in Phoenician inscriptions, and parallel to the Hebrew Mattaniah ("gift of Yah"), which was the name of the last king of Judah before his name was changed to Zedekiah (24:17). Bad causes have their martyrs equally with good causes.

Was ever more dramatic illustration given of the eternal law, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezek. 18:4)? The House of Ahab! It stands like a monolith of warning above the wrecks of time. The figures in the tragedy are grandiose. And commensurate with the malignity of their conscienceless splendor was the sordidness of their doom.
21 Seven years old was Jehoash when he began to reign.

12 In the seventh year of Jehu, Jehoash began to reign; and forty years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Zibiah of Beer-sheba.

2 And Jehoash did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all his days wherein Jehoiada the priest instructed him.

3 But the high places were not taken away: the people still sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places.

II KINGS 12:3

21a Jeho'ash was seven years old when he began to reign.

12 In the seventh year of Jehu Jeho’ash began to reign, and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Zîb'îah of Beer-sheba. 2 And Jeho’ash did what was right in the eyes of the Lord all his days, because Jehoi'ada the priest instructed him. 3 Nevertheless the high places were not taken away; the people continued to sacrifice and burn incense on the high places.

2. JEHOASH OF JUDAH (11:21–12:21)

And so Jehoash becomes king. He is faithful to the Lord, but the local southern shrines remain. The new king had ordered that the priests’ perquisites should go to the repair of the temple, but twenty-three years passed and nothing was done. So Jehoash relieved the priests of these perquisites and also of the responsibility of repairing the temple. All this money had to go into a box which stood by the entrance, and this box was handed over at intervals to the builders who bought with it such materials as they needed in their work of renovation. But unfortunately Jehoash, in order to buy off Hazael of Syria, had to empty the temple treasuries and to take all the votive gifts which he and his three predecessors had dedicated to the temple. His reign closed with a conspiracy and his death at the hand of assassins.

a) THE REIGN OF JEHOASH (11:21–12:3)

12:2. The Hebrew says that King Jehoash was faithful to the Lord all his days, because of the influence of Jehoiada the priest. This is the interpretation of the RSV, but the KJV follows the ancient versions which say that he was true to the Lord all his days wherein he was instructed by Jehoiada. The inference is that the king’s conduct deteriorated after the death of Jehoiada, and this is what II Chr. 24:2 says (see details of his conduct in II Chr. 24:17–22).

3. As elsewhere regularly in pre-exilic passages, the Hebrew verb יָשַׁב should be translated “sacrifice,” not burn incense. Read, therefore, “continued to slaughter and to sacrifice,” the first word referring to the animals slaughtered for sacred meals, the second to those which were offered up and burned on the altar.

—Two divergent accounts are given of the long reign of Joash (or Jehoash), who was crowned when he was seven years old and held the throne for forty years. This chapter records only the effort of the king to rebuild and restore the temple which Athaliah had pillaged, the menacing invasion of Hazael of Syria, who had to be bought off from attacking Jerusalem, and the tragic death of the king at the hands of his servants. In II Chr. 24 we find a different story, which tells of his moral lapse—from which stemmed his downfall—and records the capture of Jerusalem, the wounding of the king in combat, and his subsequent murder. The interpretation of the character and career of Joash depends on which of these two accounts gives us the true picture of the king. Since the account of the history of Israel and Judah which the Chronicler gives is much later than that found in the books of the Kings, and is written from the priestly point of view; since it seems unlikely that Joash, carefully reared as he was, could have been sufficiently corrupted by the princes of Judah to have turned to idolatry, and be guilty of the murder of Zechariah; and since the story of the capture and sack of Jerusalem by Hazael is suspect on historical grounds, we may assume that II Kings gives us the truer description of the life and reign of Joash. He is reckoned among the good kings, together with Amaziah (14:1, 3) and Uzziah (15:1, 3) and Jotham (15:32–34). At the same time, it is possible that in Chronicles there are preserved for us fragments of history not found in the earlier books.

4 ¶ And Jehoash said to the priests, All the money of the dedicated things that is brought into the house of the LORD, even the money of every one that passeth the account, the money that every man is set at, and all the money that cometh into any man's heart to bring into the house of the LORD,

5 Let the priests take it to them, every man of his acquaintance: and let them repair the breaches of the house, wheresoever any breach shall be found.

6 But it was so, that in the three and twentieth year of king Jehoash the priests had not repaired the breaches of the house.

7 Then king Jehoash called for Jehoiada the priest, and the other priests, and said unto them, Why repair ye not the breaches of the house? now therefore receive no more money of your acquaintance, but deliver it for the breaches of the house.

b) THE REPAIR OF THE TEMPLE (12:4-16)

The king's first move was to instruct the priests that while they could still accept all the money that was offered in the temple, either by the regular assessment (cf. Lev. 27:2-7, which doubtless is maintaining ancient custom) or by freewill gifts over and above this, yet they were responsible for keeping the temple in repair and they must pay for it out of the money received. The "current money" of the ERV and ASV is an attempt to translate the Hebrew, but it is better to follow the LXX with the money for which each man is assessed.

5. The word יָדָע is not found other than here and again in vs. 7. Its interpretation is doubtful. It means acquaintance, and probably refers to the man with whom each priest dealt personally. It is natural to suppose that each priest would have some sort of claim upon the money which he himself received from the worshiper with whom he actually dealt.

7. When at last Jehoash found that the priests were taking the money and not fulfilling their duty in repairing the temple, he directed them to stop taking money themselves. He ordered that all such money should go into a special box in the porch, and he saw to it himself that the repairs were done, his own secretary acting in conjunction with the chief priest (cf. vs. 10).

4-5. Love of the Sanctuary.—The rehabilitation of the temple, in whose precincts Joash had spent the years of his infancy and boyhood, was the new king's first concern. Personal feeling for the temple must have undergirded the religious motive. Consider then the importance of inculcating in the lives of children feelings of affection for the church. No moral influence in the lives of young men or women is more beautiful than the sentiment they often possess for the church in which their childhood has been spent. Let a boy or girl from his earliest years be brought up within the church, have sacred memories that center there, and in later years these impressions will have their immense effect on character and conduct. Parents who deprive their children of this sacred association, this love of the sanctuary, are failing to endow them with rich spiritual resources. Well may they ponder the relevance of these words, "And he was ... hid in the house of the LORD six years" (11:3) and "Jehoash ... said [to the priests], Why repair ye not the breaches of the house?" (12.7).

6-16. Repairing the Temple.—This passage contains suggestive material for church anniversary and dedication occasions. It reminds us that the care and beautifying of the house of 8 And the priests consented to receive no more money of the people, neither to repair the breaches of the house.

9 But Jehoiada the priest took a chest, and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of the Lord: and the priests that kept the door put therein all the money that was brought into the house of the Lord.

10 And it was so, when they saw that there was much money in the chest, that the king's scribe and the high priest came up, and they put up in bags, and told the money that was found in the house of the Lord.

11 And they gave the money, being told, into the hands of them that did the work, that had the oversight of the house of the Lord: and they laid it out to the carpenters and builders, that wrought upon the house of the Lord,

12 And to masons, and hewers of stone, and to buy timber and hewed stone to repair the breaches of the house of the Lord, and for all that was laid out for the house to repair it.

9. The money chest can scarcely have been beside the altar since the priests who guarded the threshold were responsible for it. It is therefore better to follow the lead of Codex Alexandrinus (LXXA), which has transliterated the Hebrew word for "pillar," presumably meaning one of the pillars by the porch.

10. There is some doubt whether Jehoiada had anything to do with the counting of the money. In the first place, there is no record of the high priest existing in pre-exilic times, though there would certainly be a chief priest. In the second place, the order of the two officials is different in the Syriac. This fact lends color to the suggestion that the mention of the high priest is a postexilic insertion. This is all the more likely since Jehoash had every reason to distrust the whole of the priesthood in the matter of money. Jehoiada must have been a party to the evasion of the king's command whereby at least some of the money which the priests received should be used on repair work. The king probably took the whole matter out of the priests' hands and put in his own nominee to see to it that his intentions and commands were carried out. The suggestion in II Chr. 24:6-14 that there was a break between the king and the priest Jehoiada may well have some foundation, though apparently the fault, to say the least, was not all on the king's side.

God is one of the duties of God's people. Note the following points: The people gave willingly. They often do for such a cause. But the priests did not administer efficiently the money which the people put into their hands. So Joash ordered that the money should no longer be given to the priests, but be put directly into a chest at the temple door and laymen be allowed to administer the funds themselves. Here we have suggested the function of laymen in church affairs. Priests and pastors are often not skilled in finance. It is a mistake to put the burden of raising and administering the funds required for church support on the shoulders of the clergy who have other tasks and duties to perform. Church walls would go up far more rapidly today if it were understood that the church's finances would be cared for by laymen. It is evident from the story in this chapter that one reason why contributions were not sufficient 13 Howbeit there were not made for the house of the Lord bowls of silver, snuffers, basins, trumpets, any vessels of gold, or vessels of silver, of the money that was brought into the house of the Lord:

14 But they gave that to the workmen, and repaired therewith the house of the Lord.

15 Moreover they reckoned not with the men, into whose hand they delivered the money to be bestowed on workmen: for they dealt faithfully.

16 The trespass money and sin money was not brought into the house of the Lord: it was the priests'.

17 ¶ Then Hazael king of Syria went up, and fought against Gath, and took it: and Hazael set his face to go up to Jerusalem.

13-15. Apparently the gold and silver vessels of the temple had disappeared in the midst of the general neglect. There was not enough money to replace these, for everything had to go to the workmen, of whose honesty special note is made. Perhaps the reason for this emphasis is not unconnected with the lapses of the priesthood.

16. Here the KJV is correct in mentioning trespass money and sin money. The renderings guilt offerings and sin offerings (RSV) are unfortunate, since these offerings proper were a postexilic development. Both words refer to cash payments made by way of compensation for wrong done. In postexilic development the sin offering included an animal (e.g., Lev. 4:3-12) of which the blood and certain sacred parts were brought to the altar, but the rest was definitely and deliberately taken "without the camp," the ritual thus being symbolic of the fact that man's sins no longer remained between him and God. The ritual of the slaying of the animal, etc., was a postexilic addition to the payment of the cash fine (Lev. 5:15), but the cash fine was in force in pre-exilic times. Being the price of sin, it could never be "brought into the house of the Lord," nor could it be used in any way in connection with the repair of the holy buildings. These payments therefore remained the perquisite of the priests.

c) Jehoash's Reverses (12:17-18)

17-18. Hazael of Syria evidently overran the whole of the country as far as the Philistine territory, costing Jehoash all the treasures that had been accumulated since the time of Asa, who had been in similar trouble at the hands of Baasha of Israel a hundred years or so before (1 Kings 15:18).
18 And Jehoash king of Judah took all the hallowed things that Jehoshaphat, and Jehoram, and Ahaziah, his fathers, kings of Judah, had dedicated, and his own hallowed things, and all the gold that was found in the treasures of the house of the Lord, and in the king's house, and sent it to Hazael king of Syria: and he went away from Jerusalem.

19 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Joash, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

20 And his servants arose, and made a conspiracy, and slew Joash in the house of Millo, which goeth down to Silla.

21 For Jozachar the son of Shim'eath, and Jehozabad the son of Shomer, his servants, smote him, and he died; and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David: and Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.

13 In the three and twentieth year of Joash the son of Ahaziah king of Judah, Jehoahaz the son of Jehu began to reign in Jerusalem.

13 In the twenty-third year of Jo'ash the son of Ahazi'ah, king of Judah,

d) Assassination of Jehoash (12:19-21)

19-21. The normal Deuteronomic obituary is interrupted by the necessity of saying how the king met his death. According to II Chr. 24:25-26 the assassination was in revenge for his part in the stoning to death of Jehoiada's son Zechariah, who was murdered in the very temple courts themselves. This may well be the cause of Jehoash's death, especially since the king's action in overriding the priests in the matter of repairs to the temple may easily have led to trouble between the king and Jehoiada. This priest has not been the only man to create a king and then to find he could not control the monarch as he had hoped to do.

3. Jehoahaz of Israel (13:1-9)

The story of this reign is one of unrelieved gloom. During the whole of it Israel was under the domination of Syria and was reduced to a state of complete helplessness.

However this turned out, it was a deep humiliation for the kingdom and the king, and it was seized upon by his opponents as proof of his incapacity. Thus we are able to account for his tragic death without assuming that he had sunk into idolatry and personal turpitude. Joash seems to have done well as long as Jehoiada was at his side. He was not strong enough to stand alone. Perhaps he had been kept under the tutelage of Jehoiada too long and had not been taught early enough to stand on his own feet. Children are often mistakenly reared in this way by oversolicitude of parents and teachers. They must learn to stand independently, so that when they move out into life they can maintain themselves against both circumstance and temptation. That is the test of character; that is the sign as to whether real religion controls their lives. The career of Joash arouses within us the feeling of compassion. His task was too great for him. A man of good intentions, he was carried beyond his depth by the current of events. We think back on the fair-haired youth crowned with Davidic honors, invested with the royal insignia, and then view with pity the inglorious end. If Athaliah had had the virtue of Joash, if Joash had had the strength of Athaliah, how different this history would have been. Neither virtue nor strength is sufficient of itself. Their union alone spells victory.

13:1-9. Corruption of Israel's Religion.—We return to the Northern Kingdom which under reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned seventeen years.

2 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, and followed the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, which made Israel to sin; he departed not therefrom.

3 And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he delivered them into the hand of Hazael king of Syria, and into the hand of Ben-hadad the son of Hazael, all their days.

4 And Jehoahaz besought the Lord, and the Lord hearkened unto him: for he saw the oppression of Israel, because the king of Syria oppressed them.

5 (And the Lord gave Israel a saviour, so that they went out from under the hand of the Syrians: and the children of Israel dwelt in their tents, as beforetime.

13:1-2. These verses contain the formal Deuteronomic notice introducing the reign of a new king of Israel.

3-7. Israel is reduced to a complete and defenseless vassalage by the vigorous Hazael, suffering equally with the neighboring kingdom of Judah.

3-5. The rendering all their days, i.e., all the days of Hazael and his son Ben-hadad, is not strictly accurate. The Hebrew is a little more indefinite. Actually the tide of disaster began to turn in the days of Ben-hadad (vs. 25). This verse bears a striking resemblance to the comments which form the editorial scheme of Judges (cf. Judg. 3:8-9). To the same stratum belong vss. 4-5. They are due to a later editor who was much better disposed toward the Northern Kingdom than either of the two Deuteronomic editors, and it is probable that he had something to do with the final form of vs. 3. The deliverer was Jehoahaz' grandson, Jeroboam II son of Joash.

Jehoahaz, son of Jehu, sank to the lowest levels thus far in its history. The account of his long reign contained in this chapter is evidently fragmentary. It tells us, however, that under his rule religion in Israel was corrupted by the most immoral rites. Not only was the symbolic calf worship of his predecessors continued, but to this Jehoahaz had added the iniquity of reinstating the Asherah (vs. 6) in Samaria. This was the pillar of a Phoenician nature goddess which Jezebel had first set up with the apparent approval of Ahab (I Kings 16:33). It stood as a symbol of decadence in the capital city of Israel. We are also told here of Israel's humiliation at the hands of Hazael of Syria. The nation was reduced to the dust (vs. 7). All of this is given in briefest form.

4. The Prayer of the Unrighteous.—Thus, we are told at this extremity of his misfortunes, Jehoahaz besought the Lord, and the Lord hearkened to him. This is reminiscent of Ps. 107:27-28, "They . . . are at their wits' end. Then they cry unto the Lord . . ." Here is an unrighteous man in desperate need which he had brought upon himself. He had forgotten God, forsaken him, betrayed him. But now that he is at his wits' end, he turns to him. This is the only kind of religion many people know. So long as all goes well with them they can manage without religion. But let calamity lay them low, then they turn to God and to prayer. Under the pressure of dire need the soul breaks through the crust of indifference, selfishness, worldliness, and escapes to God for succor. It shows us that there is rarely such a thing as stark atheism. An imagined atheism goes to pieces when a man comes to the depths. When the strong wind arises which lifts up the waves thereof, when the soul melts because of trouble, when it reels to and fro like a drunken man, then the deep instincts within man assert themselves and cry unto the Lord. This is the inevitable prayer of the unrighteous. There is religion in it, but a poor kind of religion. True religion consists in walking with God all the time, not running to him only in an emergency.
6 Nevertheless they departed not from the sins of the house of Jeroboam, who made Israel sin, but walked therein: and there remained the grove also in Samaria.

7 Neither did he leave of the people to Jehoahaz but fifty horsemen, and ten chariots, and ten thousand footmen; for the king of Syria had destroyed them, and had made them like the dust by threshing.

8 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jehoahaz, and all that he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

9 And Jehoahaz slept with his fathers; and they buried him in Samaria: and Joash his son reigned in his stead.

10 ¶ In the thirty and seventh year of Joash king of Judah began Jehoash the son of Jehoahaz king of Israel his改革创新.

Nevertheless they did not depart from the sins of the house of Jeroboam, which he made Israel to sin, but walked therein; and the Asherah also remained in Samaria.

Next, an obituary. In this man's lifetime, he had conquered Syria. He struck the ground three times with his arrows. The story concerns the prophet's tomb. A dead man is being buried when there is the warning of a party of raiders. They cast the dead man's body into a handy tomb, which happens to be that of Elisha, and hurry to repel the enemy. When the corpse touches the bones of the prophet, it comes to life again. Next, there is found an extract from the Book of the Kings of Israel, telling of the Syrian wars, how Hazael conquered Israel and how Joash (Jehoash) recovered territory from Hazael's successor.

And the LORD hearkened to him. This surprises us. For seventeen long years Jehoahaz had betrayed God. Yet when the faithless king turned to him, he was ready to hear. Were we ever more vividly reminded of the unwavering love of God? So, if now a man has forgotten God for years and has lived in a fashion that has landed him in disaster, let him not despair. Neither false shame nor a sense of meanness must keep him at such an hour from turning at last to God, from the discovery that God is indeed merciful and gracious, a very present help in time of trouble. How did God deliver Jehoahaz? Is it possible that the miraculous deliverance of Samaria described in 7:5-7 took place at this time? Or was it the death of Hazael? Or was deliverance to come not in his lifetime, but in that of his son and grandson? We do not know. All that we know is that Israel was given its second chance, misused it, and sank finally into ruin.

10-13. When Deliverance Does Not Deliver.—Here we have a brief chronicle of the reign of Jehoash (his name is contracted to Joash in vss. 12 and 13). It seems incredible that after the Lord's deliverance of Samaria at the petition of Jehoahaz to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned sixteen years.

11 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord; he departed not from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel sin: but he walked therein.

12 And the rest of the acts of Joash, and all that he did, and his might wherewith he fought against Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

13 And Joash slept with his fathers; and Jeroboam sat upon his throne: and Joash was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel.

14 ¶ Now Elisha was fallen sick of his sickness whereof he died. And Joash the king of Israel came down unto him, and wept over his face, and said, O my father, king of Judah Jeho'ash the son of Jeho'ahaz began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and he reigned sixteen years. 11 He also did what was evil in the sight of the Lord; he did not depart from all the sins of Jerobo'am the son of Nebat, which he made Israel to sin, but he walked in them. 12 Now the rest of the acts of Jo'ash, and all that he did, and the might with which he fought against Amaz'iah king of Judah, are they not written in the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel? 13 So Jo'ash slept with his fathers, and Jerobo'am sat upon his throne; and Jo'ash was buried in Sam'aria with the kings of Israel.

14 Now when El'i'sha had fallen sick with the illness of which he was to die, Jo'ash king of Israel went down to him, and wept.

a) Deuteronomic Summary (13:10-18)

10. The thirty-seventh year: This date does not agree with the chronology of vs. 1 and 14:1. It ought to be “the thirty-ninth.”

13. The phraseology varies considerably from the usual formula, such as that found in 14:15-16, in the middle of the story of the reign of Amaziah of Judah. In addition, Lucian places vs. 12-18 at the end of ch. 13. This is where we would expect the obituary notice to come. The most satisfactory solution of the puzzle is that originally 14:8-14 followed 13:25, but that it was placed subsequently in the history of Amaziah. The story is northern in its sympathies rather than southern, but it does actually fit in much better with the story of Amaziah of Judah. The obituary notice would thus come at the end of what is now 14:8-14, which is where it ought to be. With Lucian the notice was left behind when the transference was made, but a later Hebrew scribe, finding that the notice of the death of King Joash was not where it ought to be (i.e., at the end of ch. 13), wrote an obituary notice roughly in the Deuteronomic style and inserted it here before the Elisha stories (Skinner, Kings, p. 349).

b) The Arrow of Victory (13:14-19)

The scene is Elisha's deathbed, and the king of Israel has come to visit him. The dying prophet seeks to leave a legacy of victory for Israel, but is in part frustrated by the timid action of the king.

14. Jehoash repeats the exact words which Elisha himself spoke when he proclaimed Elijah's departure from this life. The Hebrew means "chariots," so that chariots is preferable to the singular chariot.

14-21. Exit Elisha.—At this point emerges once more and for the last time the figure of Elisha, who had vanished from the pages of Israel's history since the coronation of Jehu. He is now an old man, at least eighty years of age. One more demonstration of his power and the life of the prophet ends. Joash had succeeded Jehoahaz, and was no better than his father. Yet he must have been an able ruler since he thrice defeated the Syrians and recovered much of Israel's lost territory (vs. 25). Elisha was sick my father! the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof.

15 And Elisha said unto him, Take bow and arrows. And he took unto him bow and arrows.

16 And he said to the king of Israel, Put thine hand upon the bow. And he put his hand upon it: and Elisha put his hands upon the king's hands.

17 And he said, Open the window eastward. And he opened it. Then Elisha said, Shoot. And he shot. And he said, The arrow of the Lord's deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria: for thou shalt smite the Syrians in Aphek, till thou have consumed them.

18 And he said, Take the arrows. And he took them. And he said unto the king of Israel, Smite upon the ground. And he smote thrice, and stayed.

19 And the man of God was wroth with him, and said, Thou shouldest have smitten five or six times; then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it: whereas now thou shalt smite Syria but thrice.

16. The drawing of the bow and the shooting of the arrow eastward is in line with those ideas of effective symbolism which are common in popular narratives. This particular incident is similar to Joshua's stretching out his spear toward and against the city of Ai (Josh. 8:18). The drawing of the bow is regarded as actually setting in motion the chariots of the Lord on its task of delivering Israel from the domination of Syria. Perhaps this is why Elisha tells the king to “make his hand ride” the bow (draw the bow and put thine hand upon) are both paraphrases, the same Hebrew root being used as that which is used for “chariots,” and meaning primarily “mount and ride a chariot.”

17. The pointing of the arrow eastward need occasion no difficulty even if the true direction is supposed to be toward Damascus, which is strictly northeast. The direction is eastward because that is precisely where the victory was needed, viz., in that Israelite territory east of Jordan, where Syria had conquered Israelite territory and shorn it away from direct Israelite control. This actually is the direction in which the first Israelite successes against Damascus-Syria did take place (vs. 25).

18-19. The idea of effective symbolism is very plain here. By striking the arrows into the ground three times, the king ensured three victories against Syria. If he had struck more times, he would have ensured more victories. It is customary to see in the king's action the evidence of a vacillating character.

unto death and the king came and wept over him. The prophet was a revered figure. A holy life is always revered. It makes its own impression, and commands universal respect and veneration. Holiness vindicates itself. It is felt to be the highest form of human excellence. One says, “To live like that—whatever else is wrong or right, true or false—this must be right and true.” Let anyone, even in the humblest sphere of life, give this evidence, create this impression of holiness of life, and men in all stations in life, high and low, will pay him homage and weep at his tomb.

And the king said, O my father, . . . the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof, the very words which Elisha himself had used at the assumption of Elijah (2:12). Had the words become a tradition in Israel? Did the 20 And Elisha died, and they buried him. And the bands of the Moabites invaded the land at the coming in of the year.

21 And it came to pass, as they were burying a man, that, behold, they spied a band of men; and they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha: and when the man was let down, and touched the bones of Elisha, he revived, and stood up on his feet.

22 But Hazael king of Syria oppressed Israel all the days of Jehoahaz.

c) The Last Miracle of Elisha (13:20-21)

The prophet is dead and buried, but his bones still have miraculous power and contain enough mana to bring a dead man to life.

20. The M.T. says that the Moabite raiding parties used to invade the settled lands at the coming in of the year. This means in the autumn, at the end of the year, when the harvests were fully gathered. It is an erroneous notion to interpret this Hebrew phrase as meaning in the spring of the year. These raids regularly took place after the harvest.

21. Western mentality is misleading here, as in the preceding verse. The Eastern grave is not dug in the ground and filled in with earth, but is hollowed out of a hill and closed with a large stone. The body is wrapped in gravedresses and placed in the grave without coffin. When the Israelites saw the raiders coming they hurriedly rolled back the stone which covered the entrance to the nearest tomb and placed the body inside. It chanced to be Elisha's tomb, and the story is that when the body touched the bones of the prophet, which were lying there on the floor, the dead man was restored to life. The idea that the bones of the dead retain, for a while at least, the supernatural power which the deceased had in his lifetime is common among primitive people. It survives in the veneration which is paid to the bones of the saints, kept by some religious organizations as holy relics.

d) Turning of the Tide (13:22-25)

This extract from the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel tells how the shooting of the arrows brought its exact fulfillment. King Jehoash defeated the Syrians under Ben-hadad thrice, and no more than thrice.

king mean that, like Elijah, Elisha would mount triumphant over death? The chariots of fire and the horsemen thereof bear every saintly soul into the presence of God. The final deathbed act of Elisha is involved in some obscurity. The clue to it seems to be found in vs. 19. Had the king struck the ground with his arrow many times more, victory would have been complete. So it often is in life. One shoots but three arrows. But why stop shooting? The hosts of evil are never overcome by momentary, partial, fragmentary effort. That wins the triumph of a day, but not the final conquest of sin. Perseverance, unremitting effort, constant shooting, this is the key to final victory.

The story recounted in vs. 21 is without parallel in Scripture. Nowhere else do we find even a hint of magic power in the bones of the dead. It is a relic of superstitious belief which somehow crept into the tradition concerning Elisha. But it is at least token of our awareness that in death we have dealings with eternity. To be quickened by contact with the living soul of a holy man, though he were dead, is one thing. For a man to come to life because his dead body touched the bones of a saint is something which finds no warrant elsewhere in what we are taught in the Bible of the ways of God.

22-25. The Patience of God.—The passage tells us how the temporary rescue of Israel was achieved. Hazael the Syrian who had oppressed Israel since the reign of Jehoahaz died opportunely and Jehoash recaptured the territory which Hazael had won. One would have looked for only anger and retribution after the repeated apostasy of Jehoash. Instead we read that the Lord had compassion. The patience of God with his recreant children! The O.T. often 23 And the Lord was gracious unto them, and had compassion on them, and had respect unto them, because of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and would not destroy them, neither cast he them from his presence as yet.

24 So Hazael king of Syria died; and Ben-hadad his son reigned in his stead.

25 And Jehoash the son of Jehoahaz took again out of the hand of Ben-hadad the son of Hazael the cities, which he had taken out of the hand of Jehoahaz his father by war. Three times did Joash beat him, and recovered the cities of Israel.

14 In the second year of Joash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel reigned Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah.

23. This verse seems to be a later interpolation. It is from the same hand as vss. 4-6, and like them it shows a much more favorable attitude to Israel than that shown by either of the two Deuteronomic editors. It dates from after the time when the northern captivity had taken place, since otherwise there would be no mention of their being cast away.

25. The successes of Jehoash in regaining territory lost to the Syrians did indeed follow the death of Hazael, and so took place in the reign of his son Ben-hadad. The main reason for the Israelite success, however, was not the natural weakness of Ben-hadad, though he may easily have been a less formidable antagonist than his father, who had himself carved out a kingdom and an empire. The main reason was the subjection of Damascus by the new Assyrian King Adadnirari III in 805 B.C. This was the year before Jehoash's succession. He made three successful campaigns, and thus the prophecy of Elisha was fulfilled. But the real time of Israelite conquests at the expense of the Syrian kingdom of Damascus took place in the next reign, that of Jeroboam II.

5. AMAZIAH OF JUDAH (14:1-22)

The new King Amaziah was true to the Lord but did not remove the local shrines. He exercised an unwonted clemency and pardoned the children of his father's murderers. Perhaps that is why he also was murdered. He won a victory over the Edomites and was thereby emboldened to challenge Jehoahaz of Israel. Amaziah would not listen to Jehoahaz' warning that he was asking for trouble, so he was defeated and captured. The Israelite king destroyed a large section of the wall of Jerusalem, took all the treasure he could find, with hostages, and returned home.

a) DEUTERONOMIC INTRODUCTION (14:1-4)

These verses constitute the usual introduction for a king of Judah. From the religious point of view Amaziah was as good as any pre-Deuteronomic king could be. The local shrines were still in existence, and there was worship at them all, but there were no serious departures from proper practice.

speaks of the mother love of God. A mother never ceases to believe in her child, no matter how wayward he has been or how greatly he may have sinned. In this passage we seem to feel the tender yearning mother love of God. What hope lies here for sinning souls today!

14:1-5. Amaziah's Revenge.—While Joash of Israel was thus restoring the prosperity of the Northern Kingdom by his wise and vigorous rule, Amaziah, who had succeeded his father Jehoash in Judah, was also displaying qualities of real leadership. Evidently the murderers of 2 He was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.

3 And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, yet not like David his father: he did according to all things as Joash his father did.

4 Howbeit the high places were not taken away: as yet the people did sacrifice and burnt incense on the high places.

5 And it came to pass, as soon as the kingdom was confirmed in his hand, that he slew his servants which had slain the king his father.

6 But the children of the murderers he slew not: according unto that which is written in the book of the law of Moses, wherein the Lord commanded, saying, The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children be put to death for the fathers: but every man shall be put to death for his own sin.

14:2. The statement that Amaziah reigned twenty-nine years does not agree with the statement that his son Azariah (15:1) became king in the twenty-seventh year of Jeroboam II. If the first statement is right, the second statement ought to say that it was the fifteenth year. The problem of the synchronization of the reigns of the kings of the two kingdoms is most difficult, since there is a discrepancy of at least twenty-one years (possibly as much as twenty-three) between the total number of the years of the kings of Judah and of those of the kings of Israel during the period from the accession of Jehu (841 B.C.) to the fall of Samaria (721 B.C.), the Judah total being the larger. The matter is further complicated by the fact that, according to Assyrian inscriptions, the total number of years of the kings of Israel is already twenty-five years too long. The most satisfactory solution is that given by Oesterley and Robinson, which reduces Jehu from twenty-eight to twenty, and Pekah from twenty to two. For the kings of Judah, Amaziah is reduced from twenty-nine to nine, Uzziah-Azariah from fifty-two to forty-two, with thirteen years of Jotham's sixteen counted in his father's reign as the length of his regency (W. O. E. Oesterley and T. H. Robinson, History of Israel [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1932], I, 454-64).

b) Amaziah's Clemency (14:5-6)

5-6. Amaziah did not execute the children of his father's murderers. These verses are from the annals of the kings of Judah, but the Deuteronomic compiler has supplemented them with a reference to and a quotation from the book of the law of Moses.

his father were not strong enough to set aside Amaziah's right to the throne, and as soon as the royal power was firmly in his hands he avenged the death of his father.

6. An Act of Mercy.—But the children of the murderers he slew not. Why not? Law and custom did not forbid. The historian quotes a law which only later came into existence (Deut. 24:16) when barbarous practices were somewhat softened. Had Amaziah caused the sons of his father's murderers to be put to death he would but have followed the usual practices of his age. Discretion and policy dictated such a course. We seem here to have illustrated the possibility of the soul of a man suddenly rising above the conventional morality of his time in response to springs of action concealed within him. Often in history and contemporary life this has hap-
He has made a substantially accurate quotation from Deut. 21:16, except that he has improved the syntax. The 610 B.C. compiler found in this action of the new king an admirable example of conduct which fitted in with some of the details of that scroll of the law which had been found in the temple in the days when his hero-king Josiah was renovating it. Such an action of clemency is a notable departure from the customs of the old ruthless days when the whole family was wiped out for the sins of the father, e.g., Achan (Josh. 7:24-27) and Naboth (II Kings 9:26). On the other hand, since Amaziah himself was assassinated, perhaps not more than nine years later, it is more than likely that he paid the penalty for his clemency with his life. Probably the men who murdered him were the kinsmen of his father's murderers, whom Amaziah had executed.

c) Amaziah's Victory over Edom (14:7)

This extract from the annals of the kings of Judah is necessary because of the story following (vss. 8-14), which tells of the humbling of Amaziah's pride and is probably from the royal annals of Israel. It is generally agreed that the Valley of Salt is the marshy plain to the south of the Red Sea. Sela (lit., "crag") is usually identified with the rock city of Petra (see Judg. 1:36; Isa. 16:1). There is no reference to this city in the parallel account in II Chr. 25:11-12, where the prisoners are thrown from the top of the crag.

d) Amaziah Challenges Jehoash (14:8-14)

Amaziah is so encouraged by his success over Edom that he seeks to measure his strength against Israel, to whom Judah has been tributary ever since before the days of Ahab. The result is disastrous in the extreme. Amaziah did not manage even to invade Israelite territory. The armies met at Beth-shemesh, some fifteen miles west of Jerusalem, and Amaziah lost everything. The king of Israel even tore down the wall of Jerusalem for some two hundred yards.

pened, and whenever it does it witnesses to the godlike in man and points to higher possibilities of life and conduct. Thus the summons comes to us all to act more nobly, more generously, than common ethics demands of us. It is not to the credit of any man that he lives according to the conventions of his day. True nobility is seen only when he rises above them. Only those whose moral life consists not in conformity to existing standards but in obedience to higher ideals not yet commonly accepted and practiced have helped the world forward to better things.

7. The Edomites.—Always it was Edom (see also II Chr. 25:11-12). Other foes might be vanquished, but Edom never. From Genesis (25:30) to Malachi (1:1-5) there is a continuous record of almost unbroken hostility between Israel and Edom. Yet they were blood brothers. When Jacob defrauded his brother of his birthright, he set in motion an antagonism which endured right down to the threshold of the Christian Era. The story of Jacob and Esau points a solemn warning to all who are tempted by irritation, by anger, by a sense of injustice, to open a rift in family relationships which may never be healed. To begin with the words "And Esau hated Jacob" (Gen. 27:41), and then to trace the whole story of that enmity through the pages of the O.T., is to have material for a powerful presentation of the danger of family quarrels, from the hour of their inception to their often tragic conclusions.

8-14, 17-20. Pride Goeth Before Destruction.—Amaziah was so flushed with his victory over the Edomites—which, however, was by no means final (II Chr. 28:17)—that he looked about for new worlds to conquer. And his envious eyes fell upon Israel. In the presumption of his pride he challenged Joash to combat, Come, let us look one another in the face. Joash received the first message in unperturbed good humor and,
9 And Jehoash the king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, The thistle that was in Lebanon sent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, saying, Give thy daughter to my son to wife: and there passed by a wild beast that was in Lebanon, and trode down the thistle.

10 Thou hast indeed smitten Edom, and thine heart hath lifted thee up: glory of this, and tarry at home: for why shouldst thou meddle to thy hurt, that thou shouldst fall, even thou, and Judah with thee?

11 But Amaziah would not hear. Therefore Jehoash king of Israel went up; and he and Amaziah king of Judah looked one another in the face at Beth-shemesh, which belongeth to Judah.

12 And Judah was put to the worse before Israel; and they fled every man to their tents.

13 And Jehoash king of Israel took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Jehoash the son of Ahaziah, at Beth-shemesh, and came to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem from the gate of Ephraim unto the corner gate, four hundred cubits.

14 And he took all the gold and silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of the Lord, and in the treasures of the king’s house, and hostages, and returned to Samaria.

15 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jehoash which he did, and his might, and how he fought with Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

9. When Amaziah challenged Jehoash the Israelite king told him a parable about a thistle, a cedar, and a wild beast. This is what happens to little thistles which set themselves up as being equal to cedars. Since the story is a parable and not an allegory there is no need to seek to identify the wild beast.

e) Death of Jehoash (14:15-16)

This is the formal Deuteronomic notice of the death of a king of Israel. It is out of place here (see Exeg. on 13:10-13).

in a little parable reminiscent of Judg. 9:8-15, ironically advised Amaziah to be content with his glory. Yet in his overweening vanity Amaziah persisted in kindling an unprovoked war against the Northern Kingdom, which ended in national and personal disaster. He dragged out several more years of impotent rule until, like his father, he was murdered by conspirators.

How often in the world’s history has this tragic story of unprovoked warfare been repeated, when every dictate of policy and statesmanship would call for co-operation, mutual helpfulness, and brotherhood. The expositor will see in this foolish act of Amaziah as in miniature the picture presented in our modern world of nations, whose welfare and even continued existence depend upon mutual understanding and co-operation, still suspicious of 16 And Jehoash slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel: and Jeroboam his son reigned in his stead. 17 And Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah lived after the death of Jehoash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel fifteen years. 18 And the rest of the acts of Amaziah, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah? 19 Now they made a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem: and he fled to Lachish; but they sent after him to Lachish, and slew him there. 20 And they brought him on horses: and he was buried at Jerusalem with his fathers in the city of David. 21 And all the people of Judah took Azariah, which was sixteen years old, and made him king instead of his father Amaziah. 22 He built Elath, and restored it to Judah, after that the king slept with his fathers.

f) Death of Amaziah (14:17-22)

The statement of vs. 17 is a later insertion, possibly made in order to separate the two death notices. It is based on the statements of 15:10 and 14:2. Amaziah probably survived Jehoash by seven years (see Exeg. on vs. 2). The usual obituary notice for a king of Judah has had to be modified in the case of Amaziah because of the unusual circumstances of the king's death. We have therefore (vs. 18) the customary mention of the source in which further details can be found, but to this is added an extract from the source which tells the story of Amaziah's assassination and gives a short summary of the way in which his son was installed as his successor. It appears that when the king heard of the plot he fled toward Egypt but was overtaken at Lachish and there killed. Lachish was the second largest city of Judah, about thirty-five miles southwest of Jerusalem (see Exeg. on 18:13-16).

21. The name of the new king is here given as Azariah, but in the parallel account in II Chr. 26:1 the name is Uzziah, and so in the Syriac of Kings. This fact may be accounted for by the accidental omission of one letter, e.g., in Hebrew Azariah is אָזוּרַיָּה, Uzziah is espaço. The different vowels could arise naturally in an attempt of later scribes to vocalize the Hebrew consonants which they found.

22. The position of this verse has occasioned considerable comment. It would naturally appear during the account of the king's reign, not as an isolated piece of one another, unable to reconcile their differences, compose their quarrels, arrive at broad policies by which the interests of each would be conserved and the welfare of all be achieved. The very same motives which impelled Amaziah to embark so rashly on his ill-fated adventure against Joash are at the heart of the world's disorder today. A selfish and ambitious nationalism is always the foe of world peace. And unless we have learned better ways by the catastrophes which have overtaken our modern world, only the ruin which overtook those two little Jewish kingdoms is in store for us.

21-22. The Accomplishments of Courage.—What must have been in the heart of this young boy Azariah when after the murder of his father he was made king? But these verses show us that he was no timid soul, that he did not shrink from danger, that he had in him a resolute heart. He built Elath and restored it to Judah, 23 In the fifteenth year of Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah, Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel began to reign in Samaria, and reigned forty and one years. 24 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord: he departed not from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin. 25 He restored the coast of Israel from the entering of Hamath unto the sea of the plain, according to the word of the Lord God of Israel, which he spake by the hand of his servant Jonah, the son of Amittai, the prophet, which was of Gath-hepher.

information attached to the formal notice of his accession to the throne. The most probable explanation is that the verse is an addition here from the parallel account in II Chr. 26:2.

Elath is the modern Aqabah, at the head of the northeast arm of the Red Sea. Azariah's capture of the town opened up once more the possibility of overseas trade with the East generally and with Ophir in particular.

6. Jeroboam II of Israel (14:23-29)

Jeroboam II was by far the most successful of all the kings of Israel. Profiting by the weakness of his rival, Syria-Damascus, after its subjugation by Adadnirari III in 805 B.C., he extended his kingdom to the farthest northern traditional border of Israel, viz., to the entrance of Hamath, the most northerly limit of Solomon's kingdom (I Kings 8:65). The Sea of the Arabah is the Dead Sea, the Arabah being that depression which extends from the Jordan Valley to the Red Sea, part of the great rift which appears in East Africa in Lake Tanganyika and the Rift Valley.

25. Jonah the son of Amittai is presumably the prophet under whose name the book of Jonah was later written. Nothing is known of this prophet apart from what is in this verse, Gath-hepher being a town in Zebulun (Josh. 19:13). His tomb is shown near Nazareth of Galilee and also as the "mound of repentance" to the east of the site of Nineveh.

Elath was a strategic seaport (I Kings 9.26) in the extreme south of Edom to which it then belonged. To retake it, to rebuild it, demanded foresight and courage. The young ruler thus gave promise of his long and prosperous reign. One can often tell by initial acts what the spirit of a man is. When courage rises with danger, one has an index of the soul. It is true that Elath was finally lost to the Syrians (16:6) but then an irresolute Ahaz was on the throne.

23-29. Prosperity and Righteousness.—Vss. 15-16 of this chapter conclude the record of Joash of Israel, related in the last verses of ch. 13. The solid achievements of his reign were the foundation on which his successor, Jeroboam II, raised Israel to a pitch of material prosperity beyond anything she had hitherto enjoyed. It seems extraordinary that only a few verses in this chapter are devoted to the long and successful career of this exceptionally able ruler. Israel's territory was enlarged until Jeroboam was lord of a kingdom of Davidic dimensions. He even pushed his conquests two hundred miles north of Samaria. And the result of all this was a long and unwonted peace. Wealth increased. Agriculture and commerce flourished. But religion and morals declined. Luxury, social injustice, immorality, were the order of the day. For a true picture of Israel under Jeroboam one must turn to Amos, the first of the great reformatory prophets. His eye pierced behind the outward splendor and saw in it only the hectic blush on the face of a nation that was morally diseased and bound to perish.

Thus the lesson is held stark and simple before the conscience of men today. Nothing will save from ruin a nation whose policies do not rest on righteousness as between God and man, and man and his fellow men. Outward prosperity and wealth are no sign of the stability 26 For the Lord saw the affliction of Israel, that it was very bitter: for there was not any shut up, nor any left, nor any helper for Israel.
27 And the Lord said not that he would blot out the name of Israel from under heaven: but he saved them by the hand of Jeroboam the son of Joash.
28 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jeroboam, and all that he did, and his might, how he warred, and how he recovered Damascus, and Hamath, which belonged to Judah, for Israel, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?
29 And Jeroboam slept with his fathers, even with the kings of Israel; and Zachariah his son reigned in his stead.

15 In the twenty and seventh year of Jeroboam king of Israel began Azariah son of Amaziah king of Judah to reign.
2 Sixteen years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned two and fifty years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jecholiah of Jerusalem.
3 And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his father Amaziah had done;

26-27. This section is an addition by the later editor who was favorable to Israel and was responsible for similar insertions (i.e., 13:23).
28-29. The formal Deuteronomic obituary notice for a king of Israel. The Hebrew has "and Hamath to Judah in Israel," which is unintelligible. The Syriac has "to Israel" for the whole phrase. This makes sense, though some reference to the earlier control of Damascus (if not of Hamath itself) by Judah may well be original. It would scarcely be possible for any writer to speak of the northern boundary of Jeroboam's Israel without thinking of the situation in Solomon's most prosperous days. This may account for the introduction of a reference to Judah. The picture of a sudden and very great prosperity during this reign can be seen in the books of Amos and Hosea, supplemented by such a chapter as Isa. 28.

7. Azariah of Judah (15:1-7)
15:1-4. The formal Deuteronomic notice of the accession of a king of Judah. He was a good king, except that he did not conform to the centralizing policy of the compiler.

Such is the moral lesson drawn from the reign of Jeroboam II of Israel.
15:1-4. Azariah's Reign.—This chapter is chiefly concerned with the growing decay of the Northern Kingdom. The first part of it, however (vss. 1-7), and the concluding section (vss. 32-38) deal with the long period of sixty years during which the Southern Kingdom had but two rulers, Azariah and his son Jotham. Azariah appears to have had two names. The Chron-
4 Save that the high places were not removed: the people sacrificed and burnt incense still on the high places.

5 And the Lord smote the king, so that he was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a several house. And Jotham the king's son was over the house, judging the people of the land.

6 And the rest of the acts of Azariah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

7 So Azariah slept with his fathers; and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David: and Jotham his son reigned in his stead.

5. Azariah became a leper, and from that time took no part in public affairs. According to II Chr. 26:16-21, the leprosy of the king appeared suddenly while he was burning incense in the temple—an unwarranted intrusion upon the sacred duties of the priests. Whether it was such a great sin in Azariah's time as the later priestly writers would have us believe is open to question. This verse is an extract from the royal annals of Judah. It states that King Azariah was not cast out of the city as would have been the case if he had been a common leper, but that he dwelt in a several house, the word several being good Elizabethan English for separate. The verse also states that the king's son and heir, Jotham, acted as regent for the rest of his father's life, probably for thirteen years (see Exeg. on 14:2).

6-7. This customary obituary notice for a king of Judah gives no indication of the new prosperity of the period in which Azariah-Uziah shared (cf. II Chr. 26:1-15). The year of the king's death was the year of Isaiah's call to be a prophet (Isa. 6:1-6).
8:8-9 In the thirty and eighth year of Azari'ah king of Judah did Zachariah the son of Jeroboam reign over Israel in Samaria six months.

9 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, as his fathers had done: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

10 And Shallum the son of Jabesh conspired against him, and smote him before the people, and slew him, and reigned in his stead.

11 And the rest of the acts of Zachariah, behold, they are written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel.

12 This was the word of the LORD which he spake unto Jehu, saying, Thy sons shall sit on the throne of Israel unto the fourth generation. And so it came to pass.

13 Shallum the son of Jabesh began to reign in the nine and thirtieth year of Uzzia'h king of Judah; and he reigned a full month in Samaria.

14 For Menahem the son of Gadi went up from Tirzah, and came to Samaria, and

8 In the thirty-eighth year of Azar'i'ah king of Judah Zechari'ah the son of Jerobo'am reigned over Israel in Samaria six months. 9 And he did what was evil in the sight of the LORD, as his fathers had done. He did not depart from the sins of Jerobo'am the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin. 10 Shallum the son of Jabesh conspired against him, and struck him down at Ibleam, and killed him, and reigned in his stead. 11 Now the rest of the deeds of Zechari'ah, behold, they are written in the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel. 12 (This was the promise of the LORD which he gave to Jehu, "Your sons shall sit upon the throne of Israel to the fourth generation." And so it came to pass.)

13 Shallum the son of Jabesh began to reign in the thirty-ninth year of Uzzi'ah king of Judah, and he reigned one month in Samaria. 14 Then Men'a'hem the son of Gadi came up from Tirzah and came to

8. Zechariah of Israel (15:8-12)

8-12. These verses summarize the brief reign of Zechariah. He was the son of Jeroboam and reigned for six months only. There was little indeed which the Deuteronomic compiler could add to his formal notices of accession (vs. 8-9) and of death (vs. 11), except an extract from the royal annals to the effect that the king was murdered by Shallum, as well as a comment (vs. 12) that this murder marked the end of Juh's dynasty of five kings (as a fulfillment of the prophecy of 10:30). In this year (747 B.C.) there were two kings murdered in Israel, and four kings sat on the throne. This period of anarchy is comparable to that of 69 A.D., when Galba was put to death in the Forum at Rome, and both Otto and Vitellius died, making room for Vespasian. After the death of Jeroboam II the kingdom of Israel lasted for twenty-three years. There were six kings, of whom five seized the throne by murder and violence. The sole exception was Pekahiah, who succeeded his father Menahem in comparatively peaceful circumstances, but he was murdered after two years. As Amos said, the country was like a basket of summer fruit (qāyē'ē) which needed to be eaten quickly because it was ripe and doomed to speedy decay: the end (qē'ē) was near (Amos 8:2).

13-15. This king maintained his position for one month only, and was in his turn assassinated by Menahem. The paragraph consists of the usual Deuteronomic notices of time have been not the martyrs to fate, but the masterful and successful who have used their power not for self-glory, but for the welfare of the world in which they live. "Perceiving then that they were about to ... make him king, Jesus withdrew again" (John 6:15).

8-31. The Decline and Fall of the Northern Kingdom.—The story of its final collapse is reserved for another chapter. But here we are told how rapidly the Northern Kingdom began to disintegrate. Six kings follow in rapid succession. Only two of them died a natural death, and each seems to have been worse than his predecessor. The kingdom was reduced by the Assyrians to a miserable vassalage. Later Tiglath-Pileser III, having disposed of the Syrians, smote Shallum the son of Jabesh in Samaria, and slew him, and reigned in his stead. 15 And the rest of the acts of Shallum, and his conspiracy which he made, behold, they are written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel.

16 ¶ Then Menahem smote Tiphsah, and all that were therein, and the coasts thereof from Tirzah: because they opened not to him, therefore he smote it: and all the women therein that were with child he ripped up.

17 In the nine and thirtieth year of Azariah king of Judah began Menahem the son of Gadi to reign over Israel, and reigned ten years in Samaria.

of the king's accession and death, the first followed by a short extract from the royal annals which tells of the murder, the second shorter than usual because of the circumstances (there was no regular succession of the king by his son).

10. Menahem of Israel (15:16-22)

Menahem, having assassinated Shallum in Samaria, proceeded to Tiphsah to eliminate the supporters of Shallum who were holding out there. He conquered it and all in the neighborhood as far as Tirzah who did not surrender to him, treating the cities with the regular brutality of the warfare of the period. Menahem's reign was blighted by the new activity of Assyria under the usurper Tiglath-pileser III, who exacted such heavy tribute that Menahem had to resort to a capital levy.

16. It is possible that the name Tiphsah is an erroneous transcription of the little-known place name Tappuah (so Lucian), a town on the borders of Ephraim and Manasseh. There is no need, however, to insist upon this alteration; while it is true that the well-known Tiphsah is on the Euphrates, and therefore obviously not the city intended here, there was also another place with the same name about six miles southwest of Shechem.

17-18. These verses form the usual Deuteronomic notice of the king's accession. In this case it had to be preceded by a reference to those events through which Menahem secured the throne. They are followed by an extract from the annals (vss. 19-20) and by the normal editorial obituary.

Tiglath-pileser III seized the Assyrian throne in 745 B.C. and brought to an end a period of weakness. In the first year of his reign he defeated the Armenians who had made great inroads into Assyrian territory during the period which had followed the death of Adadnirari III in 782 B.C. The Armenian King Argistis (780-760 B.C.) had made the most of the opportunities with which weak Assyrian kings had presented him. For seven years Tiglath-pileser sent expeditions south and east and north until he had consolidated his empire. Then in 738 B.C. he began the fourth great Assyrian thrust to the west to reach the Mediterranean. The first had been the successful venture of Tiglath-pileser I, who actually sailed on that western sea toward the end of the twelfth century B.C. The second was that of Shalmaneser III, brought to a halt by Ahab and his allies at Qarqar in 854 B.C. The third was that of Adadnirari III, who had destroyed descended upon it (vs. 29), overran it, and carried off many captives without, however, attempting to take its capital, Samaria. Under Hoshea, puppet ruler, the Northern Kingdom came to its inglorious end.

One has only to turn to the book of Hosea to get an inside view of what was going on in its internal affairs during this period. For Hosea lived and prophesied during the whole of it down to the very brink of final disaster. He 18 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord: he departed not all his days from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

19 And Pul the king of Assyria came against the land: and Menahem gave Pul a thousand talents of silver, that his hand might be with him to confirm the kingdom in his hand.

20 And Menahem exacted the money of Israel, even of all the mighty men of wealth, of each man fifty shekels of silver, to give to the king of Assyria. So the king of Assyria turned back, and stayed not there in the land.

21 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Menahem, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

22 And Menahem slept with his fathers; and Pekahiah his son reigned in his stead.

23 ¶ In the fiftieth year of Azariah king of Judah, Pekahiah the son of Menahem began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned two years.

Damascus but apparently had made no further headway. But this disaster to Damascus had made the way easier for the new conqueror, and it had actually sealed the doom of Israel, because now there was no buffer state of any substance to take the shock of the blow. Tiglath-pileser reached the Mediterranean and received homage and tribute from the local kings, among whom were Rezon of Damascus and "Minihummu of Samariai," who is generally identified as Menahem of Israel, Samaria being his capital city, and Samaria the name by which the Assyrians called that area when they formed it into an Assyrian province some sixteen years later. Menahem paid a tribute of two million gold dollars and was established as a puppet king under the Assyrian overlord. This marks the end of Israel as an independent state. The Hebrew gives the name of the Assyrian king as Pul. He is known by this name in Babylonian inscriptions. It has been suggested that Pul was his own name, and that he took the other as a throne name because of his distinguished predecessor. On the other hand, it was a frequent custom for a king to be known by one name in Assyria and by another in Babylonia. It may well be that this king was actually known in the West by the name which was used in Babylonia.

20. Menahem raised the tribute which he had to pay to the Assyrian king by a capital levy of about thirty-five dollars levied on all the wealthy men.

11. Pekahiah of Israel (15:23-26)

The paragraph contains the usual notices, together with an extract from the royal annals of Israel (vs. 25) concerning the king's death.

paints for us a terrible picture of social and political corruption and anarchy. "I gave thee a king in mine anger, and took him away in my wrath" (Hos. 13:11); "Ephraim . . . is like a silly dove" (Hos. 7:11); "Ephraim is joined to idols" (Hos. 4:17); "There is no fidelity, no kindness, and no knowledge of God in the land. Cursing, lying, murder, theft and adultery—they break out, and one crime follows hard upon another" (Hos. 4:1, 2 Amer. Trans). Worst of all, the very capacity of the people for repentance has been atrophied; only doom awaits

24 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.
25 But Pekah the son of Remaliah, a captain of his, conspired against him, and smote him in Samaria, in the palace of the king's house, with Argob and Arieh, and with him fifty men of the Gileadites: and he killed him, and reigned in his room.
26 And the rest of the acts of Pekahiah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel.
27 In the two and fiftieth year of Azariah king of Judah, Pekah the son of Remaliah began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned twenty years.
28 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.
29 In the days of Pekah king of Israel came Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, and took Ijon, and Abel-beth-maacah, and Janoah, and Kedesh, and Hazor, and Gilead, and Galilee, all the land of Naphtali, and carried them captive to Assyria.

25. The citadel of the king's house was evidently a part of the royal palace which was more than ordinarily secure (cf. I Kings 16:18). The phrase with Argob and Arieh is obscure. As the M.T. stands, the reference is to two men who died with Pekahiah at the hands of Pekah and his fifty Gileadite conspirators. But Jerome understood them to be place names, and it has therefore been suggested by Stade that they have come in here by mistake from the list of districts in vs. 29. In this case the names may have been originally Argob, which is a district in Bashan (I Kings 4:13), and Havvoth-jair, an area which is connected with Argob (Deut. 3:14).

12. PEKAH OF ISRAEL (15:27-31)

This paragraph contains the usual editorial notices, together with an extract from the royal annals telling of the great disaster of Pekah's reign, whereby a large part of the kingdom was shorn away and many Israelites carried into captivity by the Assyrian king. The extract also tells of the plot which brought about Pekah's death.

27. The length of Pekah's reign is given as twenty years (see Exeg. on 14:2). According to the most satisfactory reconstruction, Pekah's reign is reduced in length to two years.
29. This attack on Israel by Tiglath-pileser followed the Syro-Ephraimite invasion of Judah (16:5-9). It is evident that Pekah was the head of an anti-Assyrian party in Israel who murdered the puppet Pekahiah and forthwith set about revolting against Assyria. Pekah formed an alliance with Rezon of Damascus, who had paid tribute to the Assyrian king three years earlier (738 B.C.) when Menahem also had paid tribute.
And Hoshea the son of Elah made a conspiracy against Pekah the son of Remaliah, and smote him, and slew him, and reigned in his stead, in the twentieth year of Jotham the son of Uzziyah.

And the rest of the acts of Pekah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the Book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel.

In the second year of Pekah the son of Remaliah king of Israel began Jotham the son of Uzziyah king of Judah to reign.

Five and twenty years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jerusha, the daughter of Zadok.

And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD: he did according to all that his father Uzziyah had done.

Howbeit the high places were not removed: the people sacrificed and burned incense still in the high places. He built the higher gate of the house of the LORD.

These two “firebrands” (Isa. 7:4) sought to coerce Ahaz of Judah into a revolt against Assyria, but Ahaz would have none of it and appealed to Assyria for help. This attack was the consequence of Ahaz’ appeal, and it reduced Israel to an area of approximately thirty miles by forty miles (734 B.C.). In the following year Pekah himself was murdered by Hoshea. Tiglath-pileser states that he executed Pekah and placed Hoshea on the throne as his nominee. This may or may not be true, but Hoshea certainly started his reign as a pro-Assyrian.

The usual Deuteronomic notices of succession and death create some difficulties. The statement that Jotham reigned sixteen years (vs. 33) does not agree with that in vs. 30, which says that Hoshea murdered Pekah in Jotham’s twentieth year. Also, if Hoshea became king during the time of Jotham, he could not have become king of Judah in Ahaz’ twelfth year (17:1). The reconstruction suggested in vs. 27 agrees with a reign of sixteen years, but the statement of vs. 37 cannot be right, since Pekah can scarcely have become king before the sixth year of Ahaz. The history of the last years of the kingdom of Israel was so confused that the Deuteronomic compiler, a hundred years later, was unable to secure any sort of consistency.

35. The upper gate of the house of the LORD which Jotham built is probably “the upper gate of Benjamin” mentioned by Jeremiah (20:2).

32-38. Jotham’s Mistake.—We return to Judah. Jotham’s brief reign appears to have been uneventful. For details we must again turn to the Chronicler (II Chr. 27). Jotham was a builder (vs. 35; II Chr. 27:3-4). But while outer walls and fortresses were going up, the morals of the people were going as steadily down (Isa. 1:4-6). If Jotham had devoted himself not to externals—walls, gates, fortresses—but to the inner reform of his people, he would have more surely laid the foundations of their prosperity. What a parable for modern times is here! Military bases, defenses, armed forces, will avail us nothing so long as our domestic life is out of order. True security rests on moral and religious foundations. Our main task lies in a thorough reformation of our national life. And evils abound: economic strife, racial antagonisms, decay of family life, the mania for pleasure, luxurious living, secular ideals, ma-

36 Now the rest of the acts of Jotham, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

37 In those days the Lord began to send against Judah Rezin the king of Syria, and Pekah the son of Remaliah.

38 And Jotham slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and Ahaz his son reigned in his stead.

16 In the seventeenth year of Pekah the son of Remaliah, Ahaz the son of Jotham king of Judah began to reign.

2 Twenty years old was Ahaz when he began to reign, and reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem, and did not that which was right in the sight of the Lord his God, like David his father.

This king was a great syncretist, and in his time many idolatrous objects and rites were introduced into the Jerusalem temple. He restored the Baal-Astarte cults of Canaan and introduced an altar after a pattern which he had seen at Damascus. He lost control of the Edomite territory and saved himself from Pekah of Israel and Rezin of Damascus only by appealing to Assyria. He stripped all the treasuries bare in order to purchase Tiglath-pileser’s help, and made various alterations in the temple edifice and furniture.

a) Reign of Ahaz (16:1-4)

Here is the stereotyped Deuteronomic notice of accession, with the compiler’s judgment on the religious aspects of the reign. In the opinion of the compiler, Ahaz was thoroughly bad.

16:1. In Tiglath-pileser’s inscription the name of this king is given as Yahu-hazi, i.e., “Jehoahaz,” which was without doubt his full name.

2. If Ahaz was twenty years old when he became king, and if his son Hezekiah was twenty-five at Ahaz’ death, then Ahaz was eleven when his first son was born. This is (II Chr. 28:18), Israel and the Syrians on the north (vs. 5). The times called for a resolute ruler. Instead, Judah had for her king a timid, irreligious monarch, a tool of politicians and worldly princes, without faith or trust in moral principles or in national honor. The story of this hapless reign, which involved Judah in difficulties from which the nation never again escaped, is told us not only here and in Chronicles but in the early chapters of the book of Isaiah. For at this hour of crisis there appeared on the scene the greatest statesman-prophet of the Hebrew people. One has only to read Isa. 1; 8; 5 to get a vivid picture of the state of affairs within and without the little kingdom.

Ahaz was at his wits’ end. He resolved upon a desperate expedient. He would appeal to the
But he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, yea, and made his son to pass through the fire, according to the abominations of the heathen, whom the Lord cast out from before the children of Israel.

And he sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places, and on the hills, and under every green tree.

Then Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah son of Remaliah king of Israel, came up to Jerusalem to war: and they besieged Ahaz, but could not overcome him.

It has been commonly said that Ahaz introduced this custom of the sacrifice of the first-born into the religion of Judah. It is more likely that it was a reversion to ancient Semitic practice, and that it was due to the desperate situation in which the king found himself (cf. 3:27; Jer. 7:18, 31; 44:15-19).

The phrase and under every green tree is truly Deuteronomic (Deut. 12:2), used in the book of Kings only of Rehoboam (I Kings 14:23), Ahaz (here), and of the northern tribes generally (17:10).

b) SYRO-EPHRAIMITE WAR (16:5-9)

Rezin of Syria-Damascus and Pekah of Israel try to bully Ahaz into joining them in a revolt against their common Assyrian overlord. Ahaz sends for help to Assyria, buying that help with great treasure, and is saved from his two immediate troublemakers. Damascus is captured, its people exiled, and the king executed. Further details of the war are to be found in Isa. 7 and II Chr. 26. The two kings besieged Jerusalem, but "could not engage
At that time Rezin king of Syria recovered Elath to Syria, and drove the Jews from Elath: and the Syrians came to Elath, and dwelt there unto this day.

So Ahaz sent messengers to Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, saying, I am thy servant and thy son: come up, and save me out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the king of Israel, which rise up against me.

And Ahaz took the silver and gold that was found in the house of the Lord, and in the treasures of the king's house, and sent it for a present to the king of Assyria.

And the king of Assyria hearkened unto him: for the king of Assyria went up against Damascus, and took it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Rezin.

6 At that time a the king of Edom b recovered Elath for Edom, and drove the men of Judah from Elath; and the Edomites came to Elath, where they dwell to this day. 7 So Ahaz sent messengers to Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, saying, "I am your servant and your son. Come up, and rescue me from the hand of the king of Syria and from the hand of the king of Israel, who are attacking me." 8 Ahaz also took the silver and gold that was found in the house of the Lord and in the treasures of the king's house, and sent a present to the king of Assyria. 9 And the king of Assyria hearkened to him; the king of Assyria marched up against Damascus, and took it, carrying its people captive to Kir, and he killed Rezin.

6. The RSV is correct in omitting the reference to Rezin, and in reading Edom (םֶזֶן) for Syria (םְנֶה). On the other hand, the M.T. does actually read Edomites at the end of the verse, and the KJV is wrong in changing it to Syrians. Elath never belonged to Syria, but it did naturally belong to Edom from whom Azariah-Uzziah had taken it not many years before (14:22). Further, it is in the highest degree unlikely that Rezin of Syria would be able to busy himself at this period with faraway Elath when he was concerned mostly with throwing off his allegiance to the Assyrian king.

9. Tiglath-pileser executes Rezin for his general turbulence and virtual rebellion, and deports the inhabitants of Damascus. This did not necessarily involve the whole of the population any more than did the deportation of Israel. It was in accordance with the policy of Assyria, and later of Babylonia. Both empires sought at first to rule through native princes, and when that failed they deported those elements of the population which were most likely to cause trouble and turned the country into a province. The site of Kir is unknown; according to Amos 9:7, it was the original home of the Syrians of Damascus.

wholly secular, whereas the statecraft of Isaiah was based on faith and religion (Isa. 8:10, 13). Ahaz had no use for anything except power politics. And political expediency, devoid of all moral and religious motives, led his nation down to ruin. The application of all this to our modern world is clear. The interpreter can make good use of it. We have witnessed the appalling results of a purely pagan statecraft. International relations have been determined wholly upon principles of national self-interest. The laws of a personal morality, it has been affirmed, cannot be applied to the relation of one state to another. It has been denied with vemence that the state is subject to any ethical principle. There has been no room for God, for the ideals of honor, justice, brotherhood, fair dealing in international relations, for over two centuries of modern history. Ahaz, not Isaiah, has ruled. As a result, the whole world has been convulsed and involved in unimaginable ruin. We are beginning to understand that nothing will avail to save mankind and to restore a semblance of order and sanity in our world order except a repudiation of the Ahaz philosophy and a reintroduction in international relations of the basic ideas of morality and religion as advocated by Isaiah.

And king Ahaz went to Damascus to meet Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, and saw an altar that was at Damascus: and king Ahaz sent to Urijah the priest the fashion of the altar, and the pattern of it, according to all the workmanship thereof.

And Urijah the priest built an altar according to all that king Ahaz had sent from Damascus: so Urijah the priest made it against king Ahaz came from Damascus. And when the king was come from Damascus, the king saw the altar: and the king approached to the altar, and offered thereon.

And he burnt his burnt offering and his meat offering, and poured his drink offering, and sprinkled the blood of his peace offerings, upon the altar.

Ahaz goes to Damascus, where Tiglath-pileser is completing his subjugation of the Syrian kingdom, there presumably to do homage to his overlord. While he is in Damascus he sees an altar which takes his fancy. It has been alleged that in copying this altar he was turning away to worship the Syrian gods because they were more successful than his own god of Israel had been. This is indeed the interpretation of II Chr. 28:23: but it rests upon a misunderstanding of Ahaz’ action. The gods of Syria had been wholly unsuccessful in preserving their people from disaster. Indeed, they had not been even as successful as the Lord, the God of Israel. Ahaz’ action therefore cannot have had such a motive. Two alternatives are open. Either it was an Assyrian altar imported there by Tiglath-pileser at that time, or it was the design of the altar which appealed to Ahaz, and he took plans of it for aesthetic reasons, intending to enrich the ritual of the Jerusalem temple. Urijah the priest was active in the matter. Possibly he was fulfilling the commands of the king and had no real alternative, but it is scarcely likely that Ahaz’ motive was wholly wrong, for in that case this priest would never have been one of the two “faithful witnesses” for Isaiah the prophet (Isa. 8:2).

There was nothing in pre-exilic belief or practice to prohibit the king from performing personally these sacrificial functions. It was only the postexilic regulations which made Ahaz’ action illegal and improper, and the same is true of Uzziah (II Chr. 26:16-20).

The first phrase of this verse is genuinely pre-exilic, since the word translated burned is יָשַׁב, the root which was used in postexilic literature for burning incense. It meant originally “to cause to smoke” and so “to sacrifice” in pre-exilic writings, as here and generally in the book of Kings. On the other hand, the association in this verse of the 14 And he brought also the brazen altar, which was before the Lord, from the forefront of the house, from between the altar and the house of the Lord, and put it on the north side of the altar.

15 And king Ahaz commanded Urijah the priest, saying, Upon the great altar burn the morning burnt offering, and the evening meat offering, and the king’s burnt sacrifice, and his meat offering, with the burnt offering of all the people of the land, and their meat offering, and their drink offerings: and sprinkle upon it all the blood of the burnt offering, and all the blood of the sacrifice: and the brazen altar shall be for me to inquire by.

The effect of the alteration is to make it appear that Ahaz moved the bronze altar to the north of its original position and put his new altar in its place. If, however, we reconstruct the text in the light of the Syriac, Targ., and LXX, the natural interpretation of the passage is that Ahaz sacrificed his whole burnt offering on the old original altar, as before, and poured out the blood of the slain beasts, which were eaten by the worshipers in the sacred meal, upon this same altar, which was before the Lord. He then brought his own altar, the bronze altar which was after the pattern of the altar he had seen in Damascus, and put it at the north side of the original altar. He then issued commands that all the regular sacrifices were to be offered, as before, on the main and original altar, which he left where it was, but that the new bronze altar was for his own use to inquire by (vs. 15). The confusion arises because of the assumption that Solomon made a bronze altar when he built the temple. There is no mention of such an altar in I Kings 7, but there is mention of one in I Kings 8:64—a passage which shows many signs of later editing. Scholars generally have found great difficulty in accounting for the omission of any mention of a bronze altar in I Kings 7. The easiest explanation is that there never was one.

The list of sacrifices has been worked over more than once. The major part of the verse is probably due to the later compiler, since it shows evident similarities with the proposed ritual of Ezek. 46:1-15. Here we find reference to a regular morning burnt offering, and also (Ezek. 46:4) to a burnt offering of the prince as distinct from the other regular burnt offering. Further the meal (cereal) offering and the drink offering are mentioned in Ezek. 46:14 as accompaniments of the whole burnt offering. The difficulty of the list of offerings which Ahaz commanded lies in the distinction between the morning burnt offering and the evening cereal offering (הָעֵדֶה). Such a distinction is made in Jer. 14:12, and may reveal, before the Exile, the existence of the postexilic which alone it can safely rest and ultimately prosper. Ah, no! The ancient altars must be left in their place. Neither must they be changed or modernized to conform to neopagan ideas. There are no substitutes for the faith that is rooted in God, enshrined for us in Bible and church. Let us set aside the Assyrian altars and see that religion is reborn in the hearts of the people. So shall Judah be secure and rest safely.

Ahaz did not go his pagan way without protest. Urijah may have done what Ahaz told him to do. But Isaiah confronted Akaz with a message straight from God. Urijah typifies the idea that the church must always take orders from the state; Isaiah, the idea that the church speaks always with a voice of her own. In Isaiah religion asserts itself as an authority above states and kings and secular politics. If we survey 16 Thus did Urijah the priest, according to all that King Ahaz commanded.
17 And King Ahaz cut off the borders of the bases, and removed the laver from off them; and took down the sea from off the brazen oxen that were under it, and put it upon a pavement of stones.
18 And the covert for the sabbath that they had built in the house, and the king's entry without, turned he from the house of the Lord for the king of Assyria.

shall be for me to inquire by.” 16 Uri'jah the priest did all this, as King Ahaz commanded.

17 And King Ahaz cut off the frames of the stands, and removed the laver from them, and he took down the sea from off the bronze oxen that were under it, and put it upon a pediment of stone. 18 And the covered way for the sabbath which had been built inside the palace, and the outer entrance for the king he removed from the house of the Lord, because of the king of custom of an evening cereal offering as against a whole burnt offering. The general custom of the editors of the book of Kings is to use the term מָשָׁה for both the morning (3:20) and the evening sacrifice (I Kings 18:29, 36). The best solution of the problem of Ahaz’ commands is to assume that his original instructions concerned the regular morning and evening sacrifices, but that the whole verse has been edited in order to make it conform to the official ideas of the middle of the sixth century.

Commentators have found difficulty in the interpretation of the phrase to inquire by, but the natural explanation is the most likely. Ahaz intended to use his new altar in order to inquire of the Lord, i.e., to seek an oracle. This was by the age-old rite of examining the entrails of the victim which had been slain. In rabbinical Hebrew the root בֶּר means “to examine closely the sacrificial animals for blemishes,” but this is not the original meaning. The corresponding Arabic root means “to cleave,” “to slit,” from which it may be inferred that there was an early use of the root in the sense of slitting an animal or a bird in order to examine its entrails as a method of inquiring for an oracle from the deity. That this rite was known in old Canaan is instanced by the model of a liver, made of hard-baked red clay covered with vertical and horizontal lines. Found at Gezer, it is an illustration of the ancient method of divination known and practiced in Mesopotamia and also by the Etruscans of ancient central Italy (R. A. S. Macalister, The Excavation of Gezer [London: J. Murray, 1912], II, 453-54; also S. A. Cook, The Religion of Ancient Palestine in the Light of Archaeology [London: British Academy, 1980], p. 108, and Pl. XXIII, Fig. 2).

17-18. Ahaz robs the temple because of the king of Assyria. He had to break up the furniture of the temple in order to pay his tribute to the Assyrian king. Commentators formerly assumed that he hid these treasures so that his Assyrian overlord should not demand them, but it is now generally agreed that they followed Ahaz’ other treasures to Assyria.

Vs. 18 is most difficult, chiefly because the word מָשָׁה is unknown. It apparently has something to do with a covering, hence the translation the covered way for the sabbath. On the other hand, the LXX has “the foundation [θῆσις] of the seat” (reading σκέπθηθη for shabbath). The best solution seems to be to combine the two readings, and to read מָשָׁה הבש wom pesh hab ṣeḇḥaṯ, “the covering of the seat,” understanding it to be a reference to a modern political history we discover that the Urijah idea has grown to be a popular dogma. The state is above the church in all secular and political issues, and for the church to resist the state is tantamount to treason. Thus a modern statesman has said, “I resent the interference of the church in affairs of state.” In the face of this tendency to absolutize nation and state, it is today the duty of the church to teach fearlessly that state and nation belong to the sphere of relative and earthly values, whereas the church belongs to the higher sphere of spiritual values and hence cannot be governed in its judgment and attitudes by secular authority. A vigorous challenge to the modern worship of the state is long overdue. We need a few more Isaiahs in our modern world. Thus and thus only will the church assume its rightful dignity.

19 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Ahaz which he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?
20 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David: and Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead.

17 In the twelfth year of Ahaz king of Judah began Hoshea the son of Elah to reign in Samaria over Israel nine years.
2 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, but not as the kings of Israel that were before him.
3 ¶ Against him came up Shalmaneser king of Assyria; and Hoshea became his servant, and gave presents.

17 In the twelfth year of Ahaz king of Judah Hoshea’s the son of Elah began to reign in Samaria over Israel, and he reigned nine years. 2 And he did what was evil in the sight of the Lord, yet not as the kings of Israel who were before him. 3 Against him came up Shalman’eser king of Assyria; and Hoshea became his vassal, canopied seat, similar to a choir stall in a cathedral. In this case the LXX is right in assuming that the house (KJV) is not the palace (RSV), but the house of the Lord, which indeed is the usual meaning of the word. Whatever the reading and the interpretation of the rest of the verse, it seems necessary to read ἔφυγε (removed) instead of κατακλύσθη (‘surrounded,’ turned), and to read from instead of ‘to’ (L.T.).

19-20. The Deuteronomic editor concludes with the formal obituary notice.

15. THE END OF ISRAEL (17:1-40)
a) Hoshea of Israel (17:1-6)

This was the last king of the Northern Kingdom. He had to submit to the Assyrian king, but later he rebelled, being enticed by the promises of Egypt. The Assyrian king then imprisoned Hoshea, besieged Samaria, and when the city fell after a three-year siege, deported a large portion of the population.

17:1-2. Here is the usual formal introduction of an Israelite king. The dating is strange, and in accordance with the chronology accepted elsewhere it should be the eighth year of Ahaz. No reason is given for the comparatively favorable judgment which the Deuteronomist passes on this last king of Israel. Perhaps his anti-Assyrian policy is counted to him for righteousness.

3-6. This section is an extract from the royal annals of Israel and is necessarily the last extract. Some have held that vss. 5-4 represent a different stratum from vss. 5-6, and that the first compiler was not aware that Hoshea had been tributary to Assyria from his accession (15:30). He therefore assumed that Shalmaneser made two campaigns against Hoshea, one early in Hoshea’s reign (727 B.C.), the other in 724 B.C. The Assyrian records state definitely that there was no campaign in 726 B.C. It is possible to retain the unity of the section by assuming that Hoshea went to pay his tribute and to do homage to the king of Assyria, who had marched west because he had heard rumors that all was not well. He found evidence that Hoshea had been in communication with the Egyptian authorities, imprisoned him, overran the whole country, and laid siege and exert its true influence on human affairs. This does not mean that the modern prophet ceases to be a patriot. At first it may look like a divided loyalty, as if one must choose between loyalty to country and loyalty to God. As a matter of fact, the loyalty is not twain but one. In being loyal to God, Isaiah was far more loyal to his country than was Urijah. So today the modern prophet who opposes policies of state that contravene the laws of God is far more truly a patriot than he who blindly follows the policies of a state, however flagrantly these may violate the word and will of God.

17:1-23. Fall of the Northern Kingdom.— This chapter consists of a long obituary of the Northern Kingdom. Unlike some obituaries,
And the king of Assyria found conspiracy in Hoshea: for he had sent messengers to So king of Egypt, and brought no present to the king of Assyria, as he had done year by year: therefore the king of Assyria shut him up, and bound him in prison.

Then the king of Assyria came up throughout all the land, and went up to Samaria, and besieged it three years.

In the ninth year of Hoshea the king of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes.

to Samaria. This solution, proposed by Skinner, is quite satisfactory. In any case, Shalmaneser died before Samaria surrendered, and it was his successor, Sargon, who was responsible for the formation of the country into the province of Samaria, and for the deportation of 27,290 of the inhabitants (according to his own inscription).

The word בכס is used here in its original sense of "tribute." As a sacrificial term it means "tribute offering," and so "sacrifice" in pre-exilic times, and "cereal offering" in the postexilic ritual.

The title So king of Egypt raises difficulties. Formerly it was the custom to identify this man with one of the first two kings of the Twenty-fifth (Ethiopian) Dynasty, with either Shabaka or Shabataka, but Sargon mentions a certain Sib'u, a general of Egypt whom he defeated at Raphia (on the road to Egypt, seventeen miles west of Gaza) in 720 B.C. He mentions also Pr'u (Pharaoh) king of Egypt. It is best, therefore, to read Ṣēwē for Ṣō (same consonants—ץע—with different vowels). Winckler holds that the reference is not to Egypt (Miṣrāyim) at all, but to the north Arabian kingdom of Muṣrī.

The Assyrian king, now Sargon, deports the population to northern Mesopotamia and Media. The year is 721 B.C. In the "Vision of the Man from the Sea," a first-century A.D. writing found in II Esdras 13:39-47, there is a visionary account of the ten tribes taking "this counsel among themselves, that they would leave the multitude of the heathen, and go forth into a further country, where never mankind dwelt, that they might there keep their statutes, which they never kept in their own land." That country is through "the narrow passages of the river Euphrates." The seer says that the Most High will once more dry up these springs when they return, and there is a reminiscence of this in Rev. 16:12. Here are the first stages of those strange beliefs by which many men have identified their own nation with the ten lost tribes.

The site of Halah in uncertain. Possibly it is Ḥalaḥ, east of Haran in northern Mesopotamia, though the LXX took it to be a river, and in that case it may be the river Balikh, a tributary of the Euphrates, the next river west of the Khâbûr. Both these streams run due south, the former joining the Euphrates in the latitude of Aleppo, a hundred miles east of it, and the other, another hundred miles east, but in the latitude of Hamath.

However, it makes no effort to gloss over the failures or to exaggerate the virtues of the departed. Here is no eulogy but a dirge. First we have a very brief account of historical events (vss. 1-6). What the three years’ siege of Samaria must have meant to its inhabitants we can learn by referring to 6:24-29, when the city was besieged by the Syrians. Taken at last by Sargon, it was not destroyed, but the better class of its people were carried away captives to a region somewhere north of the Euphrates. Such was the end of the Northern Kingdom. The ten tribes that composed it are never heard of again. Only Judah remained, to maintain a separate existence for another 160 years. Israel fell, unpitied by Judah, smarting under the memories.
7 For so it was, that the children of Israel had sinned against the Lord their God, which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt, from under the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and had feared other gods,
8 And walked in the statutes of the heathen, whom the Lord cast out from before the children of Israel, and of the kings of Israel, which they had made.
9 And the children of Israel did secretly those things that were not right against the Lord their God, and they built them high places in all their cities, from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.
10 And they set them up images and groves in every high hill, and under every green tree:
11 And there they burnt incense in all the high places, as did the heathen whom

b) A Deuteronomic Homily (17:7-23)

The Deuteronomic compiler makes full use of this golden opportunity to point out the moral of the history and fate of the Northern Kingdom of Israel. The disruption of the kingdom was due to her general waywardness, her neglect of the commands of God, but most of all her breaking away from loyalty to the throne of David and worshiping the golden calf and at a temple other than that of Jerusalem. Some commentators hold that this section is the work of the later editor (ca. 550 B.C.) chiefly on account of the references to star worship (vs. 16) and Molech worship (vs. 17), but a writer of the years following Manasseh of Judah would have such things in the very forefront of his mind and would easily add them to his catalogue of northern wickednesses.

7. Strictly speaking the M.T. reads, “And it came to pass, because . . . ;” with a long causal clause lasting until the end of vs. 17, a very unlikely Hebrew construction. Lucian reads, “And the anger of the Lord was against Israel, because . . . ;” which is much more likely and makes good syntax.

The use of the word “fear” in the sense of worship with awe belongs to the category of the numinous, with its characteristics of awefulness, overpoweringness, and fascination. It arises out of that creature-feeling in the presence of deity which is fundamental to true religion (cf. Rudolf Otto, The Idea of the Holy, tr. J. W. Harvey [London: Oxford University Press, 1923], pp. 8-41). When Jacob awoke at Bethel after having seen visions of God, he said, “How dreadful [lit., “to be feared’”] is this place!” (Gen. 28:17); see also Job 4:12-15, and the Aramaic Targ. of Jonah 1:5, which reads, “They prayed each to his fear [dahâ’].”

8. The concluding phrase makes no sense in the M.T. and is better omitted. The RSV uses considerable freedom with the text.

9. The translation did secretly cannot be right since there was nothing at all secret about what they did. The authors of the ancient versions were far from happy about the word, and for the most part have been guessing. It is best to follow Klostermann, and to read יָשָׁבוּ ("and they devised") for יָשָׁבָה ("and they did secretly"). Possibly the alteration, either deliberate or unconscious, was due to reminiscences of Ezek. 8:7-12.

The modern equivalent to from watch tower to fortified city is “from hamlet to city,” or “from cottage to palace,” or again “from shack to mansion.” That the watchtower was typical of the most sparsely populated district can be seen from II Chr. 26:10.

11. Once more the verb רָשָׁפִים means “sacrificed,” not burned incense, and so in all pre-exilic writings.
the LORD carried away before them; and wrought wicked things to provoke the LORD to anger:
12 For they served idols, whereof the LORD had said unto them, Ye shall not do this thing.
13 Yet the LORD testified against Israel, and against Judah, by all the prophets, and by all the seers, saying, Turn ye from your evil ways, and keep my commandments and my statutes, according to all the law which I commanded your fathers, and which I sent to you by my servants the prophets.
14 Notwithstanding, they would not hear, but hardened their necks, like to the neck of their fathers, that did not believe in the LORD their God.
15 And they rejected his statutes, and his covenant that he made with their fathers, and his testimonies which he testified against them; and they followed vanity, and became vain, and went after the heathen that were round about them, concerning whom the LORD had charged them, that they should not do like them.
16 And they left all the commandments of the LORD their God, and made them molten images, even two calves, and made a grove, and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served Baal.
17 And they caused their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire, and used divination and enchantments, and sold themselves to do evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.
18 Therefore the LORD was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight; there was none left but the tribe of Judah only.
19 Also Judah kept not the commandments of the LORD their God, but walked in the statutes of Israel which they made.

places, as the nations did whom the LORD carried away before them. And they did wicked things, provoking the LORD to anger, 12 and they served idols, of which the LORD had said to them, “You shall not do this.”
13 Yet the LORD warned Israel and Judah by every prophet and every seer, saying, “Turn from your evil ways and keep my commandments and my statutes, in accordance with all the law which I commanded your fathers, and which I sent to you by my servants the prophets.”
14 But they would not listen, but were stubborn, as their fathers had been, who did not believe in the LORD their God. They despised his statutes, and his covenant that he made with their fathers, and the warnings which he gave them. They went after false idols, and became false, and they followed the nations that were round about them, concerning whom the LORD had commanded them that they should not do like them.
15 And they forsook all the commandments of the LORD their God, and made for themselves molten images of two calves; and they made an Ashe‘rah, and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served Ba‘al. And they burned their sons and their daughters as offerings, and used divination and sorcery, and sold themselves to do evil in the sight of the LORD, provoking him to anger.
16 Therefore the LORD was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight; none was left but the tribe of Judah only.
17 Judah also did not keep the commandments of the LORD their God, but walked in the customs which Israel had

* Or made their sons and their daughters pass through the fire

16. It is sometimes doubted whether this Mesopotamian astral worship was known in the Northern Kingdom, because it does not seem to have been introduced into Judah until the time of Manasseh (21:3). But there is evidence for such worship in Israel in Amos 5:26, where “Sakkut” is the Assyrian god Ninurta, whose star was Kewan (Saturn).

The two words Sakkut and Kewan have been given the vowels of the Hebrew word shiqqāq (“detested thing”) because of the idolatrous associations of the words; cf. Exeg. on 1 Kings 11:5.

18, 21-23. These verses mark the end of the homily which began with vs. 7, but it is renewed, probably by the same author in vs. 21, which actually reads in the Hebrew For he rent . . . , and not as in the RSV. The ultimate and crowning wickedness of the Northern Kingdom, according to the Deuteronomic compiler, was the breakaway

20 And the Lord rejected all the seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and delivered them into the hand of spoilers, until he had cast them out of his sight.

21 For he rent Israel from the house of David: and they made Jeroboam the son of Nebat king: and Jeroboam drave Israel from following the Lord, and made them sin a great sin.

22 For the children of Israel walked in all the sins of Jeroboam which he did; they departed not from them;

23 Until the Lord removed Israel out of his sight, as he had said by all his servants the prophets. So was Israel carried away out of their own land to Assyria unto this day.

24 And the king of Assyria brought men from Babylon, and from Cuthah, and from Ava, and from Hamath, and from from the Southern Kingdom, involving worship elsewhere than at Jerusalem. And so, having reiterated this charge time and time again, the author concludes his story of the Northern Kingdom with the epilogue of vss. 21-23, making the moral of the whole story plain without any slightest possibility of misunderstanding.

19-20. These two verses form a later comment on vs. 18. They refer to the apostasy of Judah during the last years of the Southern Kingdom, and go on to emphasize the fact that all Israel was rejected by the Lord, and that this included the inhabitants of the northern territory of postexilic times. This passage is a polemic against the descendants of the thenceforth mixed population of the north, later called the Samaritans.

c) Origin of the Samaritans (17:24-41)

The Assyrian king, having depopulated the northern territory of Palestine, resettled it with populations that had been torn away from their homes in the eastern parts of of injuries inflicted on it by Jehoash (14:9-14) and later under Pekah (16:5). Israel had made wanton war against its blood brothers, close kinship with whom was dictated both by sacred tradition and political wisdom. Isaiah exults at the downfall of Samaria (Isa. 28:1-4).

20-21. The Sin of Schism.—The moral of all this is the subject of the funeral sermon preached by the historian in vss. 7-23. The same sermon may be preached today as a commentary on the catastrophes that have overtaken our modern world. One item in this arraignment of Israel calls for special mention. In addition to its other violations of the word and will of God, Israel had been guilty of the sin of schism. For he rent Israel from the house of David. This sin had been Israel's alone. It had broken the bond which united it with the ancient faith which centered in Jerusalem. Therefore to Judah, not to Israel, was to be given the mission of transmitting that faith to the world. Here is a truth which needs fresh emphasis in our day. Many modern men and women have by this same act of schism cut themselves off from the ancient faith of their fathers, from the sanctuary in which that faith is enshrined. Religion has always incorporated itself in institutional forms, in a church with its order and solidarity, and must always do so if it is to be more than personal sentiment and become a positive force in the world. Only those, therefore, who organically belong to a church do actually become those through whom the religion which is therein enshrined is conserved and perpetuated and brought to bear upon the life of the world. Thus schism from the church means more than mere spiritual loss to the individual. It is essentially an act of disloyalty to that spiritual body, incorporation in which alone enables the individual to transmit to posterity, as did the people of Judah with all their faults, the faith of which Jerusalem for the Jews, and the church for us, is the center and the symbol.

24-28. Lions and Bears.—The subsequent history of the ruined land in the north is sketched
II KINGS 17:24

Sepharvaim, and placed them in the cities of Samaria instead of the children of Israel: and they possessed Samaria, and dwelt in the cities thereof.

The empire. But difficulties soon arose, popularly supposed to be due to the ignorance of the new settlers of the way to propitiate the local deity, but actually caused by warfare desolation, which in turn allowed the wild beasts to get the upper hand. The settlers appealed to the Assyrian king, who allowed one of the exiled northern priests to return to Israel in order to instruct the settlers in the proper technique of local worship. The editor says that henceforth the religion of the settlers was syncretistic; they worshiped their own native gods and they worshiped the god of the land. The “cutting edge” of the section is to be seen in vss. 34 and 41. These people in the north, says the writer, still are not true and faithful worshipers of the Lord, and in our days the same attitude must be maintained to them, which our fathers adopted to them in the old days. They are in truth “no better than their fathers.”

There are three different strata in this section, vss. 24-28, 29-34a, and 34b-40, with vs. 41 as an editorial conclusion. The first set of verses is drawn from a source which was in general favorable to the northern worship with its calf cult of Bethel (vs. 28). Winckler argued that the colonists mentioned were deported and settled in Israel by Ashurbanipal (668-626 B.C.), and he is supported in this by Ezra 4:10. In Ezra 4:2 the name of Ashurbanipal’s predecessor, Esarhaddon (680-669 B.C.), is mentioned. It is evident that there were successive waves of settler-deportees, as one Assyrian king after another followed the traditional Assyrian policy of destroying national patriotism among their defeated subjects by uprooting them from their homes and mixing them thoroughly with other groups also torn away from their roots. Possibly this northern source is the royal annalistic history which has been used for information concerning the northern kings, though it is more likely that this chronicle ceased with the end of the kingdom. In any case, a Deuteronomic editor, perhaps the 610 B.C. compiler, added to this northern account a list of the heathen cults which these foreigners brought with them, and ended by saying that these new inhabitants were no better than their predecessors, but on the whole rather worse. The concluding passage, vss. 34b-40, is of later origin, and denies that the northerners of the interpolator’s time were worshipers of the Lord in any proper sense of the term. The section belongs to the period when the differences between the returned exiles of the south and “the inhabitants of the land” (i.e., those who had remained in Palestine) were growing into open antagonism. This division was widening toward the end of the sixth century B.C. (Ezra 4:1-6).

24. Cuthah (in Akkadian, “Kutu”) is now a mound and village called Tell Ibrāhīm. It is fifteen miles northeast of Babylon, and before the rise of Babylon it was the leading city of northern Babylonia. The next city mentioned in the Hebrew text is ‘Awwā’, which some identify with the Ivvah of 18:34 and 19:13, in which case it is a Syrian city, similar to Hamath, on the Orontes, which is also mentioned in these other two chapters. The same applies to Sepharvaim, which possibly is the Syrian city of Shabarain, captured by Shalmaneser IV. The reference, however, may be to the two Sippars, the Sippar of the sun-god Shamash and the Sippar of the goddess Anunitum, a double city situated on the Euphrates above Babylon. It is not likely that any Assyrian king settled Syrian exiles in a territory so close to their home as Palestine.

In vss. 24-41. Its population, consisting of the dregs of the ten tribes, was augmented by the importation of mongrel peoples from Babylonia. Socially and religiously all was confusion. Helpless, they were set upon by wild beasts, lions, hyenas, bears, jackals, that infested the region. Convinced that the cause of this misfortune was the lack of any one ruling god in the land, they appealed to the king of Assyria to send them a priest of the old Jewish faith to teach the people about the God of the land, the God of Israel, by the fear of whom these beasts could be restrained. So a priest came and taught them how they should fear the LORD.
25 And so it was at the beginning of their dwelling there, that they feared not the LORD: therefore the LORD sent lions among them, which slew some of them.

26 Wherefore they spake to the king of Assyria, saying, The nations which thou hast removed, and placed in the cities of Samaria, know not the manner of the God of the land: therefore he hath sent lions among them, and, behold, they slay them, because they know not the manner of the God of the land.

27 Then the king of Assyria commanded, saying, Carry thither one of the priests whom ye brought from thence; and let them go and dwell there, and let him teach them the manner of the God of the land.

28 Then one of the priests whom they had carried away from Samaria came and dwelt in Beth-el, and taught them how they should fear the LORD.

29 Howbeit every nation made gods of their own, and put them in the houses of the high places which the Samaritans had made, every nation in their cities wherein they dwelt.

30 And the men of Babylon made Succoth-benoth, and the men of Cuth made

For this reason many authorities think that the two Syrian cities, Avva and Hamath, have been added here from the lists in chs. 18–19.

25. When the emigrants arrived in the country they found it infested with lions, and according to the prevalent ideas of the time they concluded that it was because they did not know the proper way in which the local deity should be conciliated. In Isa. 35:9 the absence of lions and ravenous beasts generally is a sign of the active good will of a god who is favorably disposed to his people.

26. Each land was regarded as having its own deity, and each deity had his own peculiar rites. One of the Bethel priests was brought back and presumably all was well. Evidence for the idea that a deity can be worshiped only on his own territory may be found in 5:17.

29. Here is found for the first time the name Samaritans, by which the population of the center and the north was known to the postexilic Jews of Palestine.

30-31. The name Succoth-benoth has never been satisfactorily explained. Since the introduction of the cult was due to Mesopotamian settlers, we would expect the names Lions and bears because of the lack of religion in the land! How often has this situation been repeated alike in the life of the individual and the life of society: life attacked by all kinds of alien forces that threaten to tear it to pieces. What is needed in this predicament is the priest who shall teach the fear of the Lord. Many a man who has lived an irreligious life with no thought of God, of sanctuary, of faith, when set upon by lions and bears turns to some man of God to furnish spiritual means of meeting his emergency. Lions and bears! Are they not let loose today upon a society whose whole security lies in what the priest has to offer? What we most need is that the people shall be taught the manner of the God of the land by true spokesmen of God.

29-32. When Religion Disintegrates.—Here is described religious anarchy at its worst. Every nation made gods of their own. The Baby-Nergal, and the men of Hamath made Ashima, 31 And the Avites made Nibhaz and Tartak, and the Sepharvites burnt their children in fire to Adrammelech and Anammelech, the gods of Sepharvaim.
32 So they feared the Lord, and made unto themselves of the lowest of them priests of the high places, which sacrificed for them in the houses of the high places.

Marduk-Zarbanit or Marduk-Zapanitum. The -benoth (lit., “daughters of”) in the M.T. is probably a corruption of the name of the spouse of Marduk, chief god of Babylon, since its consonants are identical with the last three consonants of Zarbanit. The consonants of the first part of the god’s name write the word “Sakkut” (the planet Saturn), which is called “the star of justice and right.”

Nergal was the god of Kutu. He was the deity of the underworld and in the Mesopotamian astral system was identified with the planet Mars. His special day was the twenty-eighth of the month, the “day of the ravishment of the moon-god,” because on this day there was no moon, and Sin, the moon-god, was regarded as having entered the land of the dead. It is on record that when Tiglath-pileser was in Babylonia in 729 B.C. he offered sacrifice to the great gods of Babylonia, of whom Nergal at Kutu was one.

The name Ashima has been found in a compound name, ‘s-m-bethel, in the Elephantine papyri. She was apparently worshiped there as the secondary wife of Yahu (Cook, Religion of Ancient Palestine in Light of Archaeology, pp. 149-52). It is probable that the name Ashima should be read in Amos 8:14 for ’ashmath, and then translated “swear by Ashima of Samaria.”

The two names Nibhaz and Tartak are wholly unknown, and the words themselves are actually uncertain. Jewish tradition says that one deity was worshiped under the guise of a dog’s head, the other under the guise of an ass, but such statements are untrustworthy since the Jews were notoriously abusive when they referred to heathen deities.

The two names Adrammelech and Anammelech should probably be “Adad-melekh” and “Anu-melekh.” These two names requiring only the minimum of alteration in the Hebrew consonants, the letter ū for the letter ū. Melekh means “king,” and Adad was one of the ancient gods of Babylonia; he was the god of storm and rain and already by Hammurabi had been hailed as “prince of the heavens and the earth.” He was known later in Syria as Hadad, and is so mentioned in the Ras Shamra texts. His ancient home was the unidentified Bit-Karkara. He was identified not with any particular star but with the thunder. The name Adad-melekh means that Adad was worshiped with the rites of the god Melekh. These rites involved the sacrifice of the first-born by burning (Lev. 18:21; Jer. 32:35). Anu was the great sky-god of Babylonia. He too is mentioned by Hammurabi. There were four great nature-gods, Anu of the sky, Enlil of the earth, Ea of the waters, and Nergal of the underworld. The name Anu-melekh means that Anu also was worshiped with a mixed cultus which included the rites proper to Melekh.

32. According to later ideas, it was an offense to appoint any other priests than Levites who claimed descent from Aaron.

Ionians set up their patron god; the men of Cuth (near Babylon) put up their god Nergal; the men of Hamath (on the river Orontes) chose Ashima, and the Avvites their two gods, while the Sepharvites made human sacrifice to their deities. The very conglomeration of names produces the impression of the wildest moral and religious disorder. To this degradation had sunk the proud people of the Northern Kingdom, the life of the ten tribes of Israel who had been delivered from Egypt and given possession of the Promised Land. Could we have a more graphic illustration of the truth that “the wages of sin is death”?

33 They feared the Lord, and served their own gods, after the manner of the nations whom they carried away from thence.

34 Unto this day, they do after the former manners: they fear not the Lord, neither do they after their statutes, or after their ordinances, or after the law and commandment which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob, whom he named Israel:

35 With whom the Lord had made a covenant, and charged them, saying, Ye shall not fear other gods, nor bow yourselves to them, nor serve them, nor sacrifice to them:

36 But the Lord, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt with great power and a stretched out arm, him shall ye fear, and him shall ye worship, and to him shall ye do sacrifice.

34b-40. This section is a collection of Deuteronomic phrases all dovetailed together, claiming that the northerners never obeyed the will of the Lord, either before the fall of the Northern Kingdom or afterward.

33. Counterfeit Religion.—Only a mongrel religion existed in the land. Namely the people worshiped Yahweh, yet each nation made gods of its own. They feared the Lord, and served their own gods. How descriptive this is of the kind of religion many people know. They fear the Lord. They count themselves religious people. They observe the outward forms and decencies of religion. But also they serve their own gods: the gods of money, success, pleasure, profit. And this mongrel religion is worth no more today than it was among this degraded people of old. Here lay the root of the contempt felt by the Jews of a later day for the despised Samaritans. Not only was their blood corrupted by intermarriage with these pagan peoples, but their religion was infected with heathenism. Here too lies the root of the contempt which honest people feel for counterfeit religion. One can have greater regard for a man who confesses to no religion at all than for a man who says that he fears the Lord, while in his daily life he serves other gods.

It is a comfort to remember that this is not the final word which the Bible has to utter about these twelve tribes, this family of God whose history began away back in the book of Genesis, whose fortunes we follow down to this terrible and apparently final ruin. One of the most eloquent passages in the Bible is Rev. 7:1-8. There we read the roll call of this family of God. The first time those names were called was in high places. So they feared the Lord but also served their own gods, after the manner of the nations from among whom they had been carried away. 34 To this day they do according to the former manner.

They do not fear the Lord, and they do not follow the statutes or the ordinances or the law or the commandment which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob, whom he named Israel. The Lord made a covenant with them, and commanded them, “You shall not fear other gods or bow yourselves to them or serve them or sacrifice to them; but you shall fear the Lord, who brought you out of the land of Egypt with great power and with an outstretched arm; you shall bow yourselves to

Gen. 49, when one by one Jacob named his sons and foretold their futures. Thereafter every misfortune which could befall any human family overtook them, including hatred of each other. Finally ten of them disappeared into oblivion. But before the Bible ends, we find them all reunited “when the roll is called up yonder.” How unspeakably moving becomes this calling of each separate name: Judah, Reuben, Gad, Asher, and the rest, all present and accounted for. Trial and tribulation, sin and retribution, division and schism all passed, the reunited family are forever together in the home of God. And so, we may believe, is it with our families today, whatever their fortunes may have been:

For the love of God is broader Than the measure of man’s mind,
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind.

34-41. Idolatry and Immorality.—The moral is here solemnly drawn from this picture of false religion, of counterfeit religion, of no religion at all. There has been no real “fear of the Lord,” no obedience to moral law, no observance of divine commandment. Thus there can be no salvation, no national health and strength. These can come only by keeping the covenant between God and man. Deliverance from foes

1 Frederick W. Faber, “There’s a wideness in God’s mercy.”
37 And the statutes, and the ordinances, and the law, and the commandment, which he wrote for you, ye shall observe to do for evermore: and ye shall not fear other gods.

38 And the covenant that I have made with you ye shall not forget; neither shall ye fear other gods.

39 But the Lord your God ye shall fear; and he shall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies.

40 Howbeit they did not hearken, but they did after their former manner.

41 So these nations feared the Lord, and served their graven images, both their children, and their children's children: as did their fathers, so do they unto this day.

18 Now it came to pass in the third year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel, that Hezekiah the son of Ahaz king of Judah began to reign.

IV. THE SURVIVING KINGDOM OF JUDAH (18:1–25:30)

A. THE ASSYRIAN PERIOD (18:1–21:26)

1. HEZEKIAH OF JUDAH (18:1–20:21)

This king was a great reformer. He sought to abolish all idolatrous images and objects generally, and he attempted to abolish the local shrines. He joined in a general revolt of the west against Assyria, lost everything except Jerusalem, but was miraculously and unexpectedly saved. He was encouraged and supported by the prophet Isaiah, through whom God announced to him the grant of a further lease of life, but he incurred Isaiah's displeasure and criticism for his favorable reception of an embassy from the Babylonian firebrand, Merodach-baladan.

a) INTRODUCTION (18:1-3)

These verses form the usual stereotyped Deuteronomic notice of succession to the throne. In this case the verdict of the compiler is wholly favorable to the king. Such unqualified praise is found only of Hezekiah and Josiah. Here as elsewhere the synchronization presents difficulties. It is best to assume that Hezekiah became king in...
2 Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Abi, the daughter of Zachariah.

3 And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, according to all that David his father did.

4 ¶ He removed the high places, and brake the images, and cut down the groves, and brake in pieces the brazen serpent that Moses had made: for unto those days the children of Israel did burn incense to it: and he called it Nehushtan.

725 B.C., which was Hoshea's eighth year (Oesterley and Robinson, History of Israel, I, 459).

18:2. The name Abi is a shortened form of Abijah (see II Chr. 29:1).

b) HEZEKIAH'S REFORMS AND SUCCESS IN WAR (18:4-8)

The Deuteronomic compiler summarizes Hezekiah's reforms of the cultus and says that he was the best of all the kings of Judah, whether before his time or after. In vss. 7-8 we find the true Deuteronomic reward of success and prosperity. Hezekiah revolted against his Assyrian overlord, and we are led to assume (vs. 7) that he was successful. We read further that he was successful in wars against the Philistines. The substance of vss. 7-8 is true of the first part of the revolt, but ultimately the revolt was unsuccessful, and Hezekiah was actually in a worse position at the end than he had been at the beginning.

4. According to this verse the reforms of Hezekiah covered exactly the same ground as the reforms of his great-grandson, Josiah, including the centralization of the worship at Jerusalem. Vss. 4-8 are the work of the Deuteronomic compiler of ca. 610 B.C., except that vs. 4 shows signs of later authorship. Either the whole of the verse is a later insertion, or it has been remodeled by a later editor, perhaps of postexilic times. The most likely solution is that Hezekiah's reforms involved the destruction of all emblems used in the worship of the Lord which had any pagan association, especially those which were of Assyrian origin. This would involve the destruction of sacred pillars and sacred poles generally, and the suppression of heathen or semiheathen cults wherever they happened to be. In the fullness of his reforming zeal he destroyed even the bronze serpent, which was traditionally held to have been made by Moses in the wilderness. There is no information as to the period of his reign during which Hezekiah instituted all these reforms. The most likely date is 705 B.C., which was the year of the general insurrection of the western tributary states against Sennacherib, the new Assyrian king who had come to the throne at the death of Sargon. This rebellion was a bid for national liberty, and the revival of the national religion, with a parallel elimination of extranational her son but for her people in giving such a son to be their king at such a critical hour in their history. What kind of woman was Hezekiah's wife, Hephzibah (21:1), that she should have a son like Manasseh? Thus mothers determine the destinies not only of individuals but of nations. A consecrated motherhood is our deepest social necessity today. Mothers are forgetful of their true mission in life when they imagine that any task or duty is more important than the careful training of their children in self-control, in high ideals of life and conduct, in knowledge of God, rearing them in homes in which simplicity, honesty, and generosity are practiced, and offering them examples of such living in their own lives.

4-6. Religion and Prosperity.—Ahaz had bequeathed to Hezekiah a kingdom in disorder and peril. But here was a king so righteous in intention and motive that the historian eul-
5 He trusted in the LORD God of Israel; so that after him was none like him among all the kings of Judah, nor any that were before him.

6 For he clave to the LORD, and departed not from following him, but kept his commandments, which the LORD commanded Moses.

rites and customs, invariably coincided with a period of national revival. Similarly, the reforms of King Josiah (621 B.C.) were consequent upon his bid for freedom, for which the death of Ashurbanipal and the breakup of the Assyrian Empire gave opportunity. In cases of such apostate kings as Ahaz and Manasseh, it may well be that their inclination concided with their duty to the overlords of Assyria, but it is nevertheless true that they were compelled to be completely subservient and that this obedience involved religion as well as other aspects of life. Religious reform and national revival went hand in hand. If the reform of Hezekiah was primarily a reaction against Assyrian cults, the reference to the abolition of the local shrines may be due to an editor who read into Hezekiah’s time policies which belonged to a later generation.

The bronze serpent which Hezekiah destroyed had been an object of worship, since until those days the people of Israel had sacrificed (the verb לָאָסֵן means “to sacrifice” in pre-exilic Hebrew) to it. According to tradition this was actually the serpent which Moses had lifted up in the wilderness (Num. 21:9). It is most probable, however, that the bronze serpent originally had nothing to do with the worship of the Lord God of Israel, but that “it was housed in the shrine kept by Zadok, and that it was the principal sacred object of that shrine until the Ark was brought in to be beside it” (H. H. Rowley, “Zadok and Nehushtan,” Journal of Biblical Literature, LVIII [1939], 137). Zadok was the original Jebusite priest of Jerusalem, and the bronze serpent was from time immemorial under the special care of that priesthood. The M.T. says that Hezekiah called it Nehushtan, “a bronze thing,” and the implication is that Hezekiah called it this punning name by way of ridicule, since the Hebrew words for “bronze” (נֶהוֹשֵׁת) and “serpent” (נָחִשׁ) are quite similar. According to some of the ancient versions (Lucian, Syriac, and Targ.), the text read, “And they [i.e., the people] called it . . . .” In this case the name is not to be regarded as an opprobrious word, and possibly it means “bronze god,” or “serpent-dragon,” or “ancient serpent.”

5. This verse seems to have been involved in the revision occasioned by the introduction of vs. 4. The original reading probably was “And there was none like him among all the kings of Judah who were before him.” The Deuteronomistic editor of Josiah’s time would certainly never have agreed that Hezekiah, pious and devout though he was in his reforming zeal, was the equal of Josiah himself.
7 And the Lord was with him: and he prospered whithersoever he went forth: and he rebelled against the king of Assyria, and served him not.

8 He smote the Philistines, even unto Gaza, and the borders thereof, from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.

9 And it came to pass in the fourth year of king Hezekiah, which was the seventh year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel, that Shalmaneser king of Assyria came up against Samaria, and besieged it.

10 And at the end of three years they took it: even in the sixth year of Hezekiah, that is the ninth year of Hoshea king of Israel, Samaria was taken.

11 And the king of Assyria did carry away Israel unto Assyria, and put them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes:

12 Because they obeyed not the voice of the Lord their God, but transgressed his covenant, and all that Moses the servant of the Lord commanded, and would not hear them, nor do them.

7. This rebellion of Hezekiah against Assyria was part of the general revolt in which Merodach-baladan of Babylon was involved and all the Syrian and Palestinian kings except Padi king of Ekron. It is more than likely that Merodach-baladan was the chief instigator of the revolt. Padi's subjects revolted against him, wanting to be free from Assyria with the rest, and Hezekiah kept Padi in prison. It was during this period at the beginning of the revolt that Hezekiah undertook his expedition against the Philistines, sweeping everything before him right up to the very walls of Gaza. He thus brought into subjection those few Philistine princelings like Padi of Ekron who had held out against the general revolt. Thus the victories recorded by the Deuteronomic compiler in vs. 8 belong to the period before 701 B.C., the year in which the Assyrian king crushed the revolt. In that year Sennacherib allocated certain territory of Judah to those Philistines who had been faithful to him during the troubled previous four years. The compiler could say that wherever he went forth [i.e., to battle], he prospered only of the beginnings of the revolt.

c) FALL OF SAMARIA (18:9-12)

9-12. These verses constitute an account of the end of the Northern Kingdom, parallel to that given in 17:5-6. They are from the royal annals of the Southern Kingdom, and conclude (vs. 12) with a comment from the Deuteronomic compiler. Once more there are difficulties over the chronology. In accordance with the solution favored earlier, we should read in vs. 9, "the ninth year of Hoshea," and "the second year of Hezekiah," and in vs. 10, "the twelfth year of Hoshea," and "the fifth year of Hezekiah."
13 € Now in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah did Sennacherib king of Assyria come up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them.

d) Sennacherib’s Campaign (18:13–19:37)

This narrative, with occasional omissions and insertions, is found also in Isa. 36:1–39:8. It was taken from here and added to the first half of Isaiah in order to provide there the account of additional incidents in the life and work of the prophet. The present text is composed of three separate and independent accounts. These are 18:13-16: 18:17-19:8 (or 9a); 19:9 (or 9b)-35, while vs. 36-37 form the conclusion of the second section, into which the third section has been interpolated.

The first section is an annalistic account of the invasion of Sennacherib which ended in Hezekiah’s submission. The second section tells of an attempt of the Assyrians to secure the surrender of Jerusalem by a mixture of threats, promises, and a parade of force. Isaiah strengthens the king’s will to resistance, promises that the city will be safe because the Assyrian king will suddenly raise the siege at the receipt of bad news, return home, and there meet with a violent death. The sequel to this is detailed in vs. 36-37. The third section follows the course of the second in general outline, but with marked differences. This time Sennacherib communicates with Hezekiah by letter and there is no parade of force. The substance of the letter is the utter hopelessness of Hezekiah’s resistance, on the ground that none of the gods of the rebel states which Sennacherib has been subduing for the four years since his accession have been able to save their people. Neither, says he, can the God of the people of Judah save his people. Hezekiah prays in the temple, and Isaiah intervenes. The Assyrian’s letter is an insult to the Lord, the God of Judah. Then follows a taunt song against Assyria (19:21-31) which is from an independent source. The conclusion of the account is that the Lord himself takes action on behalf of Jerusalem and slays the Assyrians that night in their camp to the number of 185,000.

(1) The Annalist’s Account (18:13-16)

Hezekiah surrenders to the Assyrian king while the latter has his headquarters at Lachish. The Assyrian king imposes a heavy indemnity, which Hezekiah pays at the cost of clearing both the temple and the royal treasuries and stripping the gold from the door and doorposts of the temple. This account is very close in detail to Sennacherib’s own account on the Taylor Cylinder (Burney, Notes on Hebrew Text of Kings, pp. 377-79, where a translation of the relevant portion is given). He captured 46 cities of Judah, and took over 200,000 captives, in addition to a huge number of cattle and beasts of every kind. Hezekiah had to pay an indemnity of 800 talents of silver (M.T. says 800) and 30 talents of gold, a total of $2,500,000.

13. The chronology is again at fault. The year was 701 B.C., the twenty-fourth year of Hezekiah’s reign. The fourteenth year of his reign was probably the year of his almost fatal sickness (20:1-19).

trust in the Lord. This policy was urged by Isaiah (28:16-21) and the few who stood with him. It was natural that Hezekiah should vacillate, beset as he was by such terrific dangers. At first he yielded (vss. 13-14), hoping that Sennacherib could be bought off by giving him treasure. The Assyrian, however, was not appeased and demanded the unconditional surrender of Jerusalem. The story of the parleys between the two occupies the rest of this chapter. The Assyrian envoy made out a strong case for surrender: resistance was impossible; trust in the Lord their God would not save them. It was an apparently unanswerable argument. And the Judean messengers answered him not a word: for the king’s commandment was, . . . Answer him not (vs. 36).

So the issue was joined. Once more it was David confronting Goliath. According to any human calculation, the overwhelming odds were with the Assyrians. What hope indeed had this little community that it could withstand the 14 And Hezekiah king of Judah sent to the king of Assyria to Lachish, saying, I have offended; return from me: that which thou puttest on me will I bear. And the king of Assyria appointed unto Hezekiah king of Judah three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold.

15 And Hezekiah gave him all the silver that was found in the house of the Lord, and in the treasures of the king’s house.

16 At that time did Hezekiah cut off the gold from the doors of the temple of the Lord, and from the pillars which Hezekiah king of Judah had overlaid, and gave it to the king of Assyria.

15 And Hezekiah gave him all the silver that was found in the house of the Lord, and in the treasures of the king’s house.

16 At that time Hezekiah stripped the gold from the doors of the temple of the Lord, and from the doorposts which Hezekiah king of Judah had overlaid and gave it to the king of Assyria. 17 And the king of Assyria sent the Tartan, the Rab’saris, and the

16. The statement that Hezekiah had overlaid the doors and the doorposts with gold can scarcely be accurate. The name is an error, possibly for Solomon, but more probably for Azariah-Uzziah, since the gold which Solomon had used in the glorification of the temple had gone long since in tribute and indemnities to foreign conquerors.

(2) The First Story of Hezekiah’s Deliverance (18:17–19:9a)

The Assyrian king sends his chief officials from Lachish to secure Hezekiah’s surrender. They ask for the king, who dispatches his chief officials to meet them. The Assyrian chief minister seeks to show Hezekiah’s officials how futile their opposition is. If they are relying upon Pharaoh’s promises, they ought to know by this time the worth of such promises. If they are relying upon the Lord, can they reasonably expect assistance from him when Hezekiah has destroyed his shrines and altars? He proposes terms for surrender and ends by saying that the Lord himself has bid him destroy Judah. When the officials ask him to speak in Aramaic so that the people of Jerusalem will not be able to understand, the Assyrian becomes abusive and vulgar, and makes a direct appeal to the common people, promising them peace and quietness in a pleasant land like their own. But they follow the request of their own leaders and make no response. When Hezekiah hears all this, he dresses in sackcloth and sends for Isaiah, who reassures him, tells him that the Lord will stand no impertinence from the Assyrian king. This king will hear bad news from home, will suddenly raise the siege, and when he gets home will die a violent death.

17. In the M.T. Tartan and Rabsaris and Rab-shakeh are treated as proper names. Actually they are the titles of Assyrian officials, and the words are rightly so translated in the RSV.

This conduit of the upper pool, which is on the highway to the Fuller’s Field, is mentioned also in Isa. 7:3 as the place where Isaiah the prophet warned Ahaz of the Jerusalem: and they went up and came to Jerusalem. And when they were come up, they came and stood by the conduit of the upper pool, which is in the highway of the fuller’s field.

18 And when they had called to the king, there came out to them Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph the recorder.

19 And Rab-shakeh said unto them, Speak ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

20 Thou sayest, (but they are but vain words,) I have counsel and strength for the war. Now on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me?

21 Now, behold, thou trustest upon the staff of this bruised reed, even upon Egypt, on which if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt unto all that trust on him.

22 But if ye say unto me, We trust in the Lord our God: is not that he, whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath folly of seeking help from Assyria. The site has not been certainly located, but it was probably a conduit which brought the water supply from the Virgin’s Pool, the modern ‘Ain Sitti Maryam, to the Pool of Siloam within the city. The water supply was always a problem in the defense of the city, and the Virgin’s Pool is the only continuous water supply within easy reach of the city. Hezekiah built an underground conduit in order to make the supply more secure (cf. 20:20).

20-21. The difficulty of vs. 20 may be judged from the differences in the renderings of the KJV and the RSV. The better interpretation is that of the RSV, emphasizing the folly in trusting the words of Egypt as support against Assyria. The willingness to rely upon the promises of Egypt was the fatal error of the statesmen of Judah for generation after generation. The Pharaohs and their successors of the Greek period, the Ptolemies, were always ready to stir up trouble in Palestine for Assyrian, Babylonian, Persian, Greek, whoever happened to be the dominant power in western Asia. They usually promised help but rarely fulfilled their promises, and each time Judah suffered. In this particular instance there is evidence that Pharaoh actually did send an army, which the Assyrians defeated at Eltekeh. It was this defeat, involving the end of his hopes of relief, that forced Hezekiah to surrender to the Assyrians (vs. 14).

22. There is no reason to suppose that Sennacherib and his advisers were unaware of Hezekiah’s abolition and destruction of images and shrines during the years of one born in Judea, with simple faith in God, in moral standards of conduct in which he has been reared. He is confronted by modern Assyrians who mock at all that, bring arguments to bear from secular sources upon these simple and naïve ideals. And they make out a strong case. Jerusalem is apparently at the mercy of Assyria. What now is the man of Judea to do? Let him keep silent. Argument against the Assyrian rarely carries the day. The real answer to the Assyrian is not in words, but in life. Faith, ideals, standards of righteous conduct, these when incorporated in human character are their own argument and defense. The life taken away, and hath said to Judah and Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar in Jerusalem?

23 Now therefore, I pray thee, give pledges to my lord the king of Assyria, and I will deliver thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

24 How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

25 Am I now come up without the Lord against this place to destroy it? The Lord said to me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

26 Then said Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rab-shakeh, Speak, I pray thee, to thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and talk not with us in the Jews' language in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

27 But Rab-shakeh said unto them, Hath my master sent me to thy master, and to thee, to speak these words? hath he not sent altars Hezekiah has removed, saying to Judah and to Jerusalem, "You shall worship before this altar in Jerusalem?"

23 Come now, make a wager with my master the king of Assyria: I will give you two thousand horses, if you are able on your part to set riders upon them. 24 How then can you repulse a single captain among the least of my master's servants, when you rely on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

25 Moreover, is it without the Lord that I have come up against this place to destroy it? The Lord said to me, Go up against this land, and destroy it."

26 Then Eli'akim the son of Hilkiah, and Shebna, and Jo'ah, said to the Rab'shakeh, "Pray, speak to your servants in the Aramaic language, for we understand it; do not speak to us in the language of Judah within the hearing of the people who are on the wall." 27 But the Rab'shakeh said to them, "Has my master sent me to speak these words to your master and to you, and independence which followed the revolt of 705 B.C. The suggestion that Hezekiah had gone so far as actually to seek to centralize the worship at Jerusalem is due to the narrator of this prophetic narrative rather than to the Assyrian envoys themselves, but the general argument against his destructive reforms may well have been a contemporary one, and it might easily have been effective.

23. The chief minister tells Hezekiah's officials that they stand no chance whatever against the Assyrian armies. Even if Judah had two thousand horses, she could not supply the riders.

24. Most authorities omit the word captain for reasons of syntax. The Hebrew is certainly made more normal by the omission, but the idea is far from easy to express in Hebrew. The second part of the verse is uncertain. Probably read, "How then can you repulse a single captain among the least of my master's servants? And so you have relied [no wonder you have relied] on Egypt for chariots and horsemen."

25. Cyrus is stated to have said this when he attacked Babylon. Both he and Sennacherib may have honestly believed what they said. That a conqueror or ambitious leader of any kind should believe devoutly that he has a special mission from the Almighty is not a phenomenon exclusive to Assyria and Persia.

26. Aramaic was the language in general use in western Asia in diplomatic and commercial circles. It was not at this period understood by the common people of Judah, though after the Exile it became the common speech of Palestine. The Judahite court officials ask the Assyrian vizier to speak in Aramaic, not in Hebrew, whereupon the of sophistication and experimentalism ends inevitably in disillusionment and often in disaster. But the life that is true to fixed standards of morals and conduct grows year by year in the realization of the solid and permanent satisfactions of life. If when all seems dark, when teachers perplex and friends mock him, one will still cling obstinately to moral good, his night will become day, and he will know those blessings which come only as the reward of fidelity.

me to the men which sit on the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?
28 Then Rab-shakeh stood and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and spake, saying, Hear the word of the great king, the king of Assyria:
29 Thus saith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you out of his hand:
30 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the Lord, saying, The Lord will surely deliver us, and this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.
31 Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me, and then eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his cistern:
32 Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards, a land of oil olive and of honey, that ye may live, and not die: and hearken not unto Hezekiah, when he persuadeth you, saying, The Lord will deliver us.
33 Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered at all his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?
34 Where are the gods of Hamath, and of Arpad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah? have they delivered Samaria out of mine hand?
35 Who are they among all the gods of the countries, that have delivered their country out of mine hand, that the Lord should deliver Jerusalem out of mine hand?
36 But the people held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.
37 Then came Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rab-shakeh.

not to the men sitting on the wall, who are doomed with you to eat their own dung and to drink their own urine?"
28 Then the Rabshakeh stood and called out in a loud voice in the language of Judah: "Hear the word of the great king, the king of Assyria! 29 Thus says the king: 'Do not let Hezekiah deceive you, for he will not be able to deliver you out of my hand. 30 Do not let Hezekiah make you rely on the Lord by saying, The Lord will surely deliver us, and this city will not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.' 31 Do not listen to Hezekiah; for thus says the king of Assyria: 'Make your peace with me and come out to me; then every one of you will eat of his own vine, and every one of his own fig tree, and every one of you will drink the water of his own cistern; 32 until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of grain and wine, a land of bread and vineyards, a land of olive trees and honey, that you may live, and not die. And do not listen to Hezekiah when he misleads you by saying, The Lord will deliver us. 33 Has any of the gods of the nations ever delivered his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria? 34 Where are the gods of Hamath and Arpad? Where are the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah? Have they delivered Samaria out of my hand? 35 Who among all the gods of the countries have delivered their countries out of my hand, that the Lord should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?" 36 But the people were silent and answered him not a word, for the king's command was, "Do not answer him." 37 Then Eli'akim the son of Hilkiah, who was over the household, and Shebna the secretary, and Jo'ah the son of Asaph, the recorder, came to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rab'shakeh.

Assyrian becomes thoroughly offensive, and makes a direct appeal to the common people who are standing on the city wall.
34. These are all Syrian cities which had been reconquered by Sennacherib during his third campaign. Sepharvaim here is the Syrian city of Shabarain, originally captured by Shalmaneser IV (cf. Ezek. 47:16). It is best to follow Lucian and the O.L. and to insert "Where are the gods of Samaria?"
19 And it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the Lord. 2 And he sent Eliakim, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests, covered with sackcloth, to Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz. 3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and blasphemy: for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.

19:1-7. At last the king and his counselors listen to Isaiah, who has all along been against the alliance with Egypt and all that it implied in rebellion against the Assyrian king (Isa. 30:1-7, 15; 31:1-9). Further, it is Shebna, of all people, who is one of the group which comes to Isaiah (cf. Isa. 22:15-19). Isaiah was fearful lest a rebellion against Assyria should involve the end of the Davidic dynasty and the establishment of a province of Judea. So long as there was a king in Judah, however weak, there was always the chance of a revival, both national and religious, when the power of the conqueror

19 When King Hezeki'ah heard it, he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the Lord. 2 And he sent Eli'akim, who was over the household, and Shebna the secretary, and the senior priests, covered with sackcloth, to the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz. 3 They said to him, Thus says Heze-k'i'ah, This day is a day of distress, of rebuke, and of disgrace; children have come to the birth, and there is no strength to 4 It may be the Lord thy God will hear all the words of Rab-shakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God: and will reprove the words which the Lord thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that are left.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say to your master, Thus saith the Lord, Be not afraid of the words which thou hast heard, with which the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumor, and shall return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 So Rab-shakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And when he heard say of Tirhakah should come to an end. Fortunately Judah was saved on this occasion, though only at the last extremity, and Sennacherib's difficulties elsewhere did not allow him the time to besiege Jerusalem until he actually conquered the city. He was therefore willing to accept Hezekiah's submission and to leave him once more as a subject king. Judah learned her lesson at this time, and she steadfastly refused to join in any other move of the western kinglets against the Assyrian overlord.

7. The rendering I will send a blast upon him is not good. It is due to the influence of vs. 35. The meaning is that God will cause the Assyrian king to be driven by a ṭūḵā (spirit) which he cannot control, so that he will leave Jerusalem inviolate and return to Assyria. It will be a spirit of fear and concern, due to a rumor which he has heard. The word ṭūḵā is here used in its psychological sense of a dominating impulse which decides a man's actions almost in spite of himself (cf. Exeg. on 1 Kings 10:5).

9a. The rumor is interpreted to be news of the advance of Tirhakah king of great role in the human drama. In many a beleaguered Jerusalem today there stands an Isaiah to whom men and women know they can turn in time of need.

4-7. The Power of Prayer.—Hezekiah, then, through his emissaries told Isaiah how affairs stood. Was it possible that the God of Isaiah, the Lord thy God, would hear the taunts of the Assyrians and answer them? Human wisdom did not know how to answer; but would the Lord know what to say? Wherefore lift up thy prayer. Here is expressed faith in the intercessory prayer of one whose heart was right toward God. However skeptical one may be about the efficacy of one's own prayers, there remains nethermost in the hearts of most men an inarticulate, unreasoned, but inextinguishable faith in the prayers of a man of God. So Tennyson has written in his "Morte d'Arthur":

Pray for my soul. More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice Rise like a fountain for me night and day.

. . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . .
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

Then came to Hezekiah from Isaiah the astounding announcement, Be not afraid. The Lord had heard the blasphemies of the Assyrians. He would answer and confound them. Hezekiah had only to stand firm. (For the nature of this prophetic inspiration see Expos. on 7:1-2, 6-7.)

Tirha'kah king of Ethiopia, "Behold, he has set out to fight against you," he sent messengers again to Hezeki'ah, saying.

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, Let not thy God in whom thou trustest deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assy-ria.

11 Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands, by destroying them utterly: and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers destroyed: as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of Eden which were in Thelasar?

13 Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arpad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, of Hena, and Ivah?

Ethiopia. This man was first a general of Pharaoh Shabaka, the second pharaoh of the Twenty-fifth (Ethiopian) Dynasty, whom he succeeded in 691 B.C. It is not easy to explain why the rumor of his approach should send Sennacherib posthaste back to Assyria. Further, it is on record that the Assyrian king defeated Pharaoh and his allies at the Battle of Eltekeh in 701 B.C. It is much more likely that the rumor which he heard was that Babylon, whom he had subdued before he marched west in 703 B.C., had once more broken out in rebellion. This did indeed actually take place, and while the revolt was suppressed easily enough, Sennacherib was kept busy fighting in the east for many years (see Oesterley and Robinson, History of Israel, I, 397-400, where a full discussion of the historical problems of these narratives is to be found). He undertook an expedition against the Edomites and the Arabs in 691 B.C., but there was no need for him to advance into Palestine again.

(3) Deliverance of Jerusalem (19:9b-35)

This is the third of the three accounts. The narrative is best regarded as being wholly independent of what precedes it. The Assyrian king sends a letter to Hezekiah, pointing out how foolish it is for him to expect his God to deliver him since none of the other gods of the nations had been able to save their cities and peoples. Hezekiah takes the letter into the temple and spreads it out for the Lord to read. The message comes to the king through Isaiah, who promises divine aid and speedy relief. That night there is a huge slaughter in the Assyrian camp, and the siege is raised.

12. The name Gozan appears as the name of a river in 17:6. Haran is the Harran of the Assyrian inscriptions, the Charrae of the Romans, and it was the chief trading city of northwest Mesopotamia. It was situated on the river Balikh, a tributary of the Euphrates, the next tributary west of the Khābūr (cf. Exeg. on 17:6), and it was in the same latitude as the Gulf of Issus, the modern Alexandretta. There are many sites named Rezeph (Ra-sa-ap-pa), but this place was on the road from Harran to Palmyra, one day's journey south of the Euphrates. The expression children of Eden refers to the Aramaean state known as Bit-'Adinni, north of the Euphrates and in the neighborhood of Harran. The site of Telassar is unknown, but it was probably the chief city of this Aramaean state.

13. These names are found also in 18:34, but the Sepharvaim of this verse is the Syrian city, not the twin Mesopotamian cities of 17:24. The site of Hena is unknown.
14 And Hezekiah received the letter of the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up into the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah prayed before the LORD, and said, O LORD God of Israel, which dwellest between the cherubim, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; thou hast made heaven and earth.

16 LORD, bow down thine ear, and hear: open, LORD, thine eyes, and see: and hear the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent him to reproach the living God.

17 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have destroyed the nations and their lands, 18 And have cast their gods into the fire: for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore they have destroyed them.

19 Now therefore, O LORD our God, I beseech thee, save thou us out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD God, even thou only.

14 Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it; and Hezekiah went up to the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD. 15 And Hezekiah prayed before the LORD, and said: “O LORD the God of Israel, who art enthroned above the cherubim, thou art the God, thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; thou hast made heaven and earth. 16 Incline thy ear, O LORD, and hear; open thy eyes, O LORD, and see; and hear the words of Sennacherib, which he has sent to mock the living God. 17 Of a truth, O LORD, the kings of Assyria have laid waste the nations and their lands, and have cast their gods into the fire; for they were no gods, but the work of men’s hands, wood and stone; therefore they were destroyed. 18 So now, O LORD our God, save us, I beseech thee, from his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou, O LORD, art God alone.”

14. Hezekiah would actually spread the letter out before the LORD, unrolling the little scroll so that it could be read. The action would have, according to the ideas of the time, a more than symbolic meaning. He would actually be expecting the Lord to read it.

15. The place between the outstretched wings of the cherubim who were above the oracle was regarded as being the particular place where the presence of the invisible God was localized (cf. I Kings 6:23).

16. The phrase the living God is Deuteronomic (Deut. 5:26). It does not emphasize the fact that God is alive—that would be assumed by the Hebrew without any argument—but that he is alive to vindicate his holy Name and to save his people Israel (cf. Josh. 3:10; I Sam. 17:26, 36).

18. The contrast between the Lord and the gods of wood and stone, who are not gods at all, is frequent in Deuteronomy and in Second Isaiah. It belongs to the last days of the Judahite kingdom, and it received great emphasis among the exiles in Babylon because of their idolatrous environment. The faithful were driven for very faith’s sake into a firm and rigorous monotheism.

Thus out of this experience religion had become a real thing to Hezekiah. And many other people have made the same discovery. Religion has been to them a matter of tradition, of custom, but it has not been a personal, vital, inward experience. Then has come danger. They find themselves facing some crisis in life. They pray for deliverance. They make test of God’s power and love. However that prayer may be answered, God has become to them a reality. And thereafter religion is for them deeper, more vital and real than ever it had been. Thus they know a closer walk with God. Religion such as 20: Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent to Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, That which thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria I have heard.

21: This is the word that the Lord hath spoken concerning him: The virgin the daughter of Zion hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.

22: Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the Holy One of Israel.

23: By thy messengers thou hast reproached the Lord, and hast said, With the multitude of my chariots I am come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon, and will cut down the tall cedar trees thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof: and I will enter into the lodgings of his borders, and into the forest of his Carmel.

24: I have digged and drunk strange waters, and with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of besieged places.

20: Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent to Hezekiah, saying, "Thus says the Lord, the God of Israel: Your prayer to me about Sennacherib king of Assyria I have heard.

21: This is the word that the Lord has spoken concerning him:

"She despises you, she scorns you — the virgin daughter of Zion;
she wags her head behind you — the daughter of Jerusalem.

22: "Whom have you mocked and reviled?
Against whom have you raised your voice and haughtily lifted your eyes?
Against the Holy One of Israel!

23: By your messengers you have mocked the Lord, and you have said, 'With my many chariots
I have gone up the heights of the mountains, to the far recesses of Lebanon;
I felled its tallest cedars,
its choicest cypresses;
I entered its farthest retreat, its densest forest.

24: I dug wells and drank foreign waters, and I dried up with the sole of my foot
all the streams of Egypt.'

21-28. This taunt song against Assyria is in the qināh measure (3+2 meter) which, with its peculiar halting rhythm, is especially suitable for lamentation or satire.

21. The phrase the virgin daughter of Zion is common in writings of the period between Hezekiah and Jeremiah, when the continuance of Jerusalem as a city into which a foreign conqueror had never entered was more than once in danger. Zion is still the inviolate, unconquered city (cf. Lam. 1:15).

22. The phrase the Holy One of Israel is common in the writings of both First and Second Isaiah. It describes the uniqueness, the separateness, the awesomeness of the God of Israel, especially in respect of his righteous saving power.

23. It is better not to treat the word Carmel as a proper name, but actually to translate it (see RSV). The word is composed of the word לֵינָה ("vineyard") with an affirmative=lâmedh, and it means a district of gardenlike fertility. The tract of country which answered most to this description was the Carmel, i.e., the ridge of Carmel, but here the reference seems to be to the most fertile district of Lebanon.

24. The M.T. has "and I will dry up," but it is much better to follow the LXX and the Vulg., which read different vowels, and to translate as a past, making the tense "a 25 Hast thou not heard long ago how I have done it, and of ancient times that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps.

26 Therefore their inhabitants were of small power, they were dismayed and confounded: they were as the grass of the field, and as the green herb, as the grass on the housetops, and as corn blasted before it be grown up.

27 But I know thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

28 Because thy rage against me and thy tumult is come up into mine ears, therefore I will put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way which thou camest.

29 And this shall be a sign unto thee, Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves, and in the second year that which springeth of the same; and in the third year sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruits thereof.

25 “Have you not heard that I determined it long ago? I planned from days of old what now I bring to pass, that you should turn fortified cities into heaps of ruins, 26 while their inhabitants, shorn of strength are dismayed and confounded, and have become like plants of the field, and like tender grass, like grass on the housetops; blighted before it is grown?

27 “But I know your sitting down and your going out and coming in, and your raging against me.

28 Because you have raged against me and your arrogance has come into my ears, I will put my hook in your nose and my bit in your mouth, and I will turn you back on the way by which you came.

29 “And this shall be the sign for you: this year you shall eat what grows of itself, and in the second year what springs of the same; then in the third year sow, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat their fruit.

perfect of certainty.” Actually Sennacherib never invaded Egypt (see Exeg. on vss. 35-36). This adventure was left to his son and successor Esarhaddon (680-669 B.C.), who invaded Egypt in 671 B.C. and seized Memphis. The last word of the verse in the M.T. is besieged places (KJV), but the previous word, יָדֶה, is used only of the Nile and its delta streams, so that there is no doubt that we should read מָצוּרָה (Egypt) for מָצוּר (besieged places, “defense”), i.e., all the streams of Egypt (RSV).

25. The idea that the heathen conqueror can be the rod of the Lord’s anger receives its classical expression in Isa. 10:5-11, where also the punishment of Assyria is prophesied on account of his arrogance and overweening pride (vss. 12-19).

26. The metaphor refers to the grass of the uncultivated land outside the city, here today and gone tomorrow (cf. Isa. 40:7; Matt. 6:30). The tender grass or green herb is the deshe’i, the fresh young sweet grass which springs up after the latter rain (i.e., in March). For the grass on the housetops, which quickly dies in the summer heat, see Ps. 129:6. The rendering of the RSV involves an adjustment at the end of the verse, and the assumption of some confusion at the end of this verse and the beginning of the next, but it most probably represents the original. The reference to corn is due to the rendering of the Vulg.

28. The figure of the hook in the nose and the bridle in the lips (i.e., the bit in the mouth) refers to captured wild beasts. There is no evidence that this kind of thing was actually done to prisoners, though no one can say, either then or now, that this or that brutality is impossible.

29-31. The taunt song with its elegiac (qānāh) meter is followed by a prophecy wholly in prose. The substance of the passage is that there will be no true harvest until the third year. In the first year what harvest there is will be self-sown, and in the next
30. And the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall yet again take root downward, and bear fruit upward.

31. For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and they that escape out of mount Zion: the zeal of the Lord of hosts shall do this.

32. Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shield, nor cast a bank against it.

33. By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the Lord.

34. For I will defend this city, to save it, for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

35. ¶ And it came to pass that night, that the angel of the Lord went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred fourscore and five thousand: and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

year the harvest will be what springs of the same, i.e., what is self-sown from the previous year, the second year of self-sown crops. The Hebrew word so translated is otherwise unknown; according to the medieval scholar Abulwalid, it refers to what grows up from the roots of the previous crop.

30. Here we get that doctrine of the remnant which is set forth by Isaiah of Jerusalem (Isa. 10:20-22), though the word used here is “that which is escaped,” not the term she'ar, which is used by Isaiah.

31. The phrase the zeal of the Lord is valuable and noteworthy in that it emphasizes and insists upon God's active interest and deliberate effectiveness in salvation. The deliverance and the renewed life of the people will not be due to any automatic working out of history, or to any natural or economic causes. It will be quite definitely the effective work of an active God.

32-34. This detailed statement bears every appearance of being a contemporary oracle drawn from the biography of Isaiah the prophet. Isaiah was confident that there would be no attack on Jerusalem. This deliverance, miraculous in its unexpectedness, was a vivid demonstration of the soundness of Isaiah’s message that Israel’s hope and salvation are to be found in the Lord alone (Isa. 30:15; 31:1-5; cf. Ps. 46). It bore good fruit in Isaiah’s own day, but bad and bitter fruit a century later when it issued in a false confidence in themselves as the Lord’s people and in the city itself as the site of the Lord's temple.

35-37. This wholesale slaughter of the Assyrian army is without any extrabiblical confirmation. It is scarcely to be expected that the Assyrian records would refer to it. There is, however, an Egyptian legend of an overwhelming defeat which Sennacherib suffered at the hands of the Egyptians. According to Herodotus (History II. 141), the Assyrian army was routed at Pelusium because their bowstrings and the thongs of their shields had been devoured overnight by an army of field mice. The details of this tradition have little in common with the biblical story except in the matter of the tremendous Assyrian losses, but it is difficult to account for such traditions, although they may have a common basis of fact. It may well be that Sennacherib did suffer a disastrous defeat.
36 So Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

37 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword: and they escaped into the land of Armenia. And Esar-haddon his son reigned in his stead.

20 In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz came to him, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live.

In an attempted invasion of Egypt, if not in 701 B.C., at least in 691 B.C., when he made a successful campaign against Judah's southern neighbors. For the idea of the angel of the Lord as God's active agent in a destructive pestilence see II Sam. 24:16. The migration of rodents at a time of plague is a well-known fact.

Vss. 36-37 form the conclusion of the earlier prophetic narrative which ended at vs. 9a. The assassination of Sennacherib by his son is confirmed from Assyrian sources. There is also a statement quoted by Eusebius to the effect that this king was murdered by his son Adramelus (i.e., the Adrammelech of vs. 37), and was succeeded by Nergilus (i.e., Nergal-sharur, the Sharezer of vs. 37; cf. Jer. 39:3, 18), who was executed by Axerdis (i.e., Esarhaddon).

36. The site of ancient Nineveh is across the river Tigris, on the east bank, opposite the modern Mosul. It had been an important city in the twelfth century B.C., but its rise to greatness as the capital of Assyria was due to Sennacherib. It continued to be the capital of the Assyrian Empire until the collapse of that empire at the death of Ashurbanipal in 626 B.C. It was finally destroyed in 612 B.C. This city came to stand in Hebrew lore as the type of heathendom, the enemy of God, and the last of all the heathen cities on which God could be expected to have mercy (cf. the book of Jonah).

37. The name Nisroch is not known, but there was a god named Nusku, a personification of fire. He it was who consumed the burnt offerings and transformed their smoke into an agreeable odor for the gods to smell. He was therefore the messenger of the gods, an intermediary between man and god. At Nippur he was worshiped in company with Ninurta and his spouse. At Ur, he and his wife Sadarnunna were the children of Sin the moon-god and Ningal, and all four were worshiped in Haran, where Ashurbanipal, conqueror and archaeologist, restored the temple of Nusku (Édouard Dhorme, Les religions de Babylone et d'Assyrie [Paris: Presses universitaires de France, 1945; “Mana: Introduction à l’histoire des religions, I”], pp. 59-60, 111-12, etc.).

Ararat is the Assyrian Urartu, i.e., Armenia.

e) Hezekiah's Illness (20:1-11)

The king is seized with a fatal illness and is told by the prophet that his death is certain. Hezekiah prays to the Lord for a further lease of life on the grounds of his never withstand the power of moral ideals. In this truth lies the inspiration of this chapter. The reader is reminded of Byron's immortal poem, "The Destruction of Sennacherib."

20:1. Must One Always Tell the Truth?—The dating of the two episodes recorded in this chapter must be left to the scholars (see Exeg.). Neither need the nature of Hezekiah's illness detain us. All that we know is that he was sick unto death. When Isaiah heard of his illness, he came to him at once, for they were friends. Hezekiah was a young man, still in his thirties, and had everything to live for. Probably Hezekiah asked if he would get well. Isaiah answered truthfully that the king must die. This abrupt announcement seems unfeeling and unwise.
2 Then he turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto the Lord, saying,
3 I beseech thee, O Lord, remember now how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept sore.
4 And it came to pass, afore Isaiah was gone out into the middle court, that the word of the Lord came to him, saying, you shall not recover.’” 2 Then Hezekiah turned his face to the wall, and prayed to the Lord, saying, 3 “Remember now, O Lord, I beseech thee, how I have walked before thee in faithfulness and with a whole heart, and have done what is good in thy sight.” And Hezekiah wept bitterly. 4 And before Isaiah had gone out of the middle court, the word of the Lord came faithfulness and loyalty to the Lord. The prayer is answered favorably, and Hezekiah is given another fifteen years. Hezekiah asks for a sign that the oracle is true and the shadow goes back ten steps on the sundial of Ahaz.

The date of this incident has given rise to some considerable discussion, since it is closely connected with the date of Merodach-baladan’s embassy. If vs. 12 is correct in saying that the apparent and declared reason for the embassy is Hezekiah’s remarkable recovery, then it is probable that the date of the illness is 711 B.C. Merodach-baladan established himself as king of Babylonia in 721 B.C. and maintained his position till 710 B.C. He established himself for a few months once more in 702 B.C., but it is not generally thought that he was in a position to send embassies to the west at that time. This argument is precarious, but if we are to count back fifteen years from Hezekiah’s death, then the date of his sickness must have been not later than 710 B.C., a time when Merodach-baladan would be seeking allies to help him withstand that onset of Sargon which swept him out of Babylon.

20:1. Set your house in order (lit., “command thy house”): This is the regular phrase for settling one’s affairs in the face of death (cf. II Sam. 17:23).

3. The sentiment expressed in this verse is set forth more fully in the opening couplet of Hezekiah’s prayer which has been inserted at this point in the parallel narrative in Isa. 38:10. An early death is the reward of the wicked. Added years and a long life are the reward of the righteous. As yet the Hebrew had no hope of any life beyond the grave. When this hope did arise, it was a development of the belief that justice must prevail for the individual in spite of the obvious disparity between good fortune and good deeds in this life. The fact that Hezekiah’s prayer was granted became later a signal proof of the efficacy of the prayer of the righteous (cf. II Bar. 63:5).

4. The consonantal Hebrew text says that Isaiah had gone out as far as the middle city (i.e., between the upper and lower city). We know that there were two sections of the city (22:14), but there is no evidence of more than two sections. The Masoretes have corrected the written text with the instruction to read court, so that we must understand that Isaiah had gone no farther than the middle court (i.e., the courtyard of the palace).

Here we come upon the vexing question if under such circumstances the obligation of telling the truth is still binding. On this point the opinion of an outstanding American physician, Richard C. Cabot, is worth pondering. In an address delivered in 1902 before the Academy of Medicine in New York, he took the position that a lie by a doctor to his patient is never justifiable; that patients exhibit an astonishing power to withstand the full truth and an amazing immunity against its depressing effects; that a lie detected destroys a patient’s confidence in the doctor, and that a lie by its poisonous effect on the medium of human intercourse does more harm than speaking the truth would do. Probably Isaiah did Hezekiah more real good by telling him the truth than by deceiving him with false promises. For this threw the king right back upon God.

2:11. Prayer and the Sick.—Hezekiah turned his face to the wall, and prayed. Doubtless Isaiah prayed also. And prayer prevailed. The human diagnosis was correct. But this omitted the possibility of a spiritual cure: the immediate contact of the soul with God, the immediate impact of the life of God on soul and body. That prayer is a powerful agency in the healing of the sick is now generally admitted by medical
5. The phrase the prince of my people is not found in the parallel Isa. 38:5. It belongs to that later prophetic type of narrative which was far from being enamored of the kings and hesitated to admit that there could ever be any "king" over Israel apart from the Lord himself (cf. I Sam. 9:16; Ezek. 44:3).

6. The fifteen added years in addition to the fourteen make a total of twenty-nine years, which agrees with 18:2. The reference to the deliverance from the Assyrian is due to the Deuteronomic compiler rather than to the author of the biography from which the narrative was taken in the first place. The verse contains phrases which are not in the parallel text in Isa. 38, so we must assume that the passage has been worked over by a later writer.

7. A poultice of figs was well known in the ancient world as a means of softening and opening hard boils and ulcers.

8-10. There are evidences here of a dislocation of the story, since there is no point in the giving of the sign when Hezekiah had already been cured. In Isa. 38:4-22, the sign comes first (vss. 7-8) and the healing afterward (vs. 21), though even there a request for a sign appears in vs. 22. Apart from this, the order in Isaiah is much to be preferred. Further, in the Isaiah form of the story the sign is given and no alternative is offered. This is also the situation in 20:9, where the Hebrew reads, "The shadow has gone ten steps." Evidently vs. 10, which assumes an alternative, is later and is due to a misunder-

*(Footnotes: 5 “Turn back, and say to Hezeki’ah the prince of my people, Thus says the Lord, the God of David your father: I have heard your prayer, I have seen your tears; behold, I will heal you: on the third day thou shalt go up unto the house of the Lord.

6 And I will add unto thy days fifteen years: and I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria: and I will defend this city for mine own sake, and for my servant David’s sake.

7 And Isaiah said, Take a lump of figs. And they took and laid it on the boil, and he recovered.

8 And Hezekiah said unto Isaiah, What shall be the sign that the Lord will heal me, and that I shall go up into the house of the Lord the third day?

9 And Isaiah said, This sign shalt thou have of the Lord, that the Lord will do the thing that he hath spoken: shall the shadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees?*" science. Thus Alexus Carrel wrote: "I have seen men, after all other therapy had failed, lifted out of disease... by the serene effort of prayer. It is the only power in the world that seems to overcome the so-called 'laws of nature.'" But note that Isaiah did not neglect materia medica. He applied first aid and laid figs on the diseased spot. A sick man needs two things which should always go together: prayer and the doctor. Neither should exclude the other. They combine and co-operate in the healing of the sick. Yet Isaiah was careful to remind the king that it was not the figs but the Lord who healed him in answer to his prayer (vs. 5). Two answered prayers in Hezekiah's life. Could he ever forget that? When Hezekiah wanted proof that he was to recover, Isaiah suggested a miraculous setting back of the shadow on the sundial of Ahaz.

10 And Hezekiah answered, It is a light thing for the shadow to go down ten degrees: nav, but let the shadow return backward ten degrees.

11 And Isaiah the prophet cried unto the Lord: and he brought the shadow ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down in the dial of Ahaz.

12 ¶ At that time Berodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present unto Hezekiah: for he had heard that Hezekiah had been sick.

standing of the previous verse, which has indeed in the Hebrew been partly turned into an alternative, since it reads, "Or shall the shadow return?" Apparently the "or" (תנ") was inserted in vs. 9 when vs. 10 was added.

11. The use of the word dial in the English versions raises the question as to whether there was indeed a properly constructed sundial. The Hebrew has "steps" at the end of the verse, just as there is a reference to steps in all three verses. It is by no means essential that there should have been any dial at all, but only some steps which Ahaz built which served as a rough-and-ready method of measuring the passing of the hours. On the other hand, rough and ready though the reckoning may have been, Ahaz may have built these steps for the very purpose of determining the time of the day, since such determination may have been needed for the proper observance of the cults which he introduced.

f) The Embassy of Berodach-baladan (20:12-21)

Hezekiah receives this embassy with every mark of delight and shows them all his wealth and resources. Isaiah hears all this, rebukes the king, and prophesies the Babylonian exile. Hezekiah comforts himself with the thought that it will not happen in his lifetime.

The name Berodach-baladan is due to an error of transcription in the M.T. since everywhere else the name is spelled correctly. The accidental writing of בֵּית for מֶם and vice versa is comparatively common, and in the older script was an easy error to make (S. R. Driver, Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Samuel [2nd ed.; Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1913], p. lxvii). Marduk-abal-idinna was king of a little principality in lower Mesopotamia, but always had great ambitions. During the troubles which attended the accession of Sargon in 721 B.C. this princeling seized Babylon and held it till 710 B.C. In that year Sargon, having restored the situation elsewhere, was free to turn to Babylon. Josephus says that the aim of the embassy was to secure Hezekiah as an ally (Antiquities X. 2. 2). That is probably correct. It accounts for the fact that Hezekiah declared his resources, financial and military, to his visitors. The date of the embassy is generally held to be ca. 711 B.C., but there are difficulties still not resolved.

Thus by outward sign was confirmed the turning back of the disease of the king. Whatever we think of this extraordinary incident, it points to a profound and often forgotten truth that God is not bound by what we call the laws of nature. He is a free moral agent at the heart of the universe, a self-governing and self-determining personality possessing freedom and initiative, not controlled by the universe but in a real sense controlling and operating it; not limited by its laws except in so far as he chooses to be limited by them; not allowing perpetual variation on the suggestion of occasional moral contingencies, yet always governing according to the principles of his being.

12:21. Hezekiah's Transgression.—It is disquieting to find that Hezekiah, miraculously healed, so soon fell into such error as to merit
13 And Hezekiah hearkened unto them, and showed them all the house of his precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spiceries, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his armor, and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah showed them not.

14 Then came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from a far country, even from Babylon.

15 And he said, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, All the things that are in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shown them.

16 And Isaiah said unto Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD.

17 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store unto this day, shall be carried unto Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

and from many points of view there is something to be said for the date 702 B.C., following which Hezekiah actually did revolt (see, however, Exeg. on 20:1-11).

13. There is an error in the M.T., which has And Hezekiah hearkened וַיַּשְׁמָע הֶזְקָיָה unto them. The text should read, “And Hezekiah was glad וַיַּשְׁמָע וּמָר הֶזְקָיָה thereof” (so LXX, Vulg., Syriac, and the parallel Isa. 39:2, but cf. RSV). Hezekiah showed the messengers all his treasure house. This is a better rendering than all the house of his precious things (KJV), for the Assyrian phrase bit nakanti, which means “treasure house,” is a near equivalent of the Hebrew phrase here used.

14. Isaiah, all his prophetic life the friend and counselor of kings, intervenes. He was always against any plots and policies which involved open hostilities with the sovereign power.

17. This prophecy of the captivity in Babylon is generally held to be due to the Deuteronomic editor rather than to the original biographer. Some scholars have thought that it is a reference to the captivity of Manasseh in Babylon (II Chr. 33:11-13). It may well be that Manasseh did find himself in difficulties if he took part in the revolt of ca. 647 B.C. of Shamashshumukin against the latter’s brother, Ashurbanipal, who the rebuke of Isaiah. If the incident here recorded occurred after Hezekiah’s recovery, it reveals the sad fact often illustrated in human experience that deliverance from danger is in itself rarely the occasion of final resistance to fresh allurements as life unfolds itself. So it appears to have been in the case of Hezekiah. Two prayers answered, and yet forgetting God! Flattered by Babylon’s suggestion of an alliance against Assyria, Hezekiah welcomed its ambassadors and proudly exhibited his treasures, concealing nothing. Isaiah’s eye pierced beneath the shallow pretense of such an alliance, warned Hezekiah that he was merely exchanging one potential enemy for another, and foretold that the Babylon which the king was courting would be the very power which would ultimately crush Jerusalem. Hezekiah, humbled, comforted himself with the inglorious thought that at least all of this would not happen during his lifetime.

18 And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away: and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

19 Then said Hezekiah unto Isaiah, Good is the word of the Lord which thou hast spoken. And he said, Is it not good, if peace and truth be in my days?

20 And the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and all his might, and how he made a pool, and a conduit, and brought water into the city, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

21 And Hezekiah slept with his fathers: and Manasseh his son reigned in his stead.

had already been king of Assyria for twenty years. There is no evidence, however, that he took any part in this revolt. The whole tradition of Manasseh's imprisonment in Babylon may have arisen from the visit which he paid to Esarhaddon in 667 B.C. to render his tribute and allegiance. Manasseh's name is found in two lists of tributary kings, one in the time of Esarhaddon, the other in the time of Ashurbanipal.

20-21. The Deuteronomic compiler concludes his account of the reign of Hezekiah with his customary obituary notice, here expanded to include a short summary of Hezekiah's good deeds. The expansion has to do partly with his successes in the earlier part of the revolt, and partly with the tunnel which he made, whereby he brought the waters of the Virgin's Spring through the temple mount to the Pool of Siloam (cf. II Chr. 32:30; Ecclus. 48:17). This tunnel has been found, and with it an inscription in the old Hebrew script on the right-hand wall some nineteen feet from the outlet into the Pool of Siloam. The inscription, partly scoured away by running water, tells how the two parties, working from opposite ends, managed to meet in the middle. The length of the tunnel is over 1,700 feet, but the direct line between the two mouths of the tunnel is only 1,090 feet (George Adam Smith, Jerusalem [New York: A. C. Armstrong & Son, 1907], I, 92-96; for facsimile, etc., see Driver, op. cit., Pl. II).

Sometimes the life of a good man ends in moral anticlimax. No man's life can be finally assessed until the very last day of it has been lived.

Note vs. 15, What have they seen in thine house? The king had shown the pagans all his material wealth. But they had not been shown the altar, the sanctuary, the house and abode of God. They had seen nothing with which they were not perfectly familiar. They were not made aware that the house of Hezekiah differed in any way from their own. He might have shown them something that would have impressed them, awed them, made them feel that the God of Israel possessed a holiness and a strength with which the gods of Babylon were not endowed.

What have they seen in thine house? The question may be asked of many a modern man or woman who believes in Israel's God. Pagans come into the house, strangers to religious ideals. And what do they see? What are they shown? Only silver and gold, material possessions, the outward show of comfort and prosperity? Or do they see something else? Are they made to feel that there is something else, something deeper, sweeter, holier, truer, an atmosphere with which they are not familiar, a suggestion of a spiritual strength and stability wanting in their own homes? A young man once went frequently to a Christian home. He himself made no pretense of possessing religious motives or ideals. But he afterward confessed that what he had seen there had made a better man of him. He had seen something to which he was a stranger. What have they seen in thine house? Hezekiah had his chance. And the opportunity he had lost would never come again.

Manasseh was twelve years old when he began to reign, and reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hephzi-bah.

And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, according to the abominable practices of the nations whom the Lord drove out before the people of Israel.

For he built up again the high places which Hezekiah his father had destroyed, and he reared up altars for Baal, and made a grove, as did Ahab king of Israel; and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served them.

This king reigned longer than any other king of Judah. His reign coincided with the peak of Assyrian prosperity in the west and he was therefore wholly under Assyrian influence from first to last. Hezekiah's reign had ended under this cloud, though the fact is disguised in the Deuteronomist's account of his reign, but for Manasseh there was no sunshine at all. Manasseh reigned from 696 to 641 B.C., and from 671 B.C. onward, when Esarhaddon invaded Egypt, Assyrian armies were continually marching to and fro along the coastal plain. Egypt did not recover her independence till 652 B.C., during the reign of Ashurbanipal. For all this period the little kingdom of Judah remained at peace, secure while the big warring world passed by, but the peace and security involved complete subservience to the demands of the Assyrian overlord, regular payment of tribute, and the wholesale introduction of foreign religious cults. This last was inevitable to some extent, but Manasseh does not seem to have been averse to these tendencies and probably encouraged them. Only he knows whether he encouraged them because he liked them or because he thought it was the best way to preserve anything at all of his kingdom.

The section contains details of Manasseh's introduction of foreign cults, with two oracles interwoven. The first oracle (vss. 7b-8) is a reiteration of the Deuteronomic commands laid upon David; the second (vss. 11-15) is a Deuteronomic oracle against Manasseh, laying upon him the blame and responsibility for the destruction of temple and kingdom.

21:3. Manasseh reintroduced all the old idolatries and all the cults which his father Hezekiah had abolished with the exception of the serpent worship, which Hezekiah had effectively destroyed by getting rid of the bronze serpent itself. He is the only king of Judah whom the Deuteronomist likens to Ahab of Israel, under whose government the hated Baal-Melkart worship was introduced into the Northern Kingdom. But Manasseh did more than revive the old Canaanite cults. He introduced, doubtless under Assyrian influence and probably under Assyrian pressure, the Assyrian astral cults, and he even built altars for these astral deities of Mesopotamia in the temple itself (vs. 5).

This is the period during which the nucleus of the book of Deuteronomy was written, and it is Manasseh's idolatries which are expressly condemned there (Deut. 4:19; 17:3; 18:10-11).

21:1-26. Manasseh the Wicked.—The story of the whole long reign of Manasseh is compressed in this narrative within eighteen verses. As for the brief reign of Amon which followed (vss. 19-26), it was only a miserable and unimportant footnote to Manasseh's career. Amon may be dismissed as a wretched cipher in the annals of Jewish history. Manasseh, however, bulks large. One of the worst of all Judah's kings, he reigned the longest. The boy was only twelve years old when he came to the throne. He was born after Hezekiah's recovery from illness.
4 And he built altars in the house of the Lord, of which the Lord said, In Jerusalem will I put my name.
5 And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the house of the Lord.
6 And he made his son pass through the fire, and observed times, and used enchantments, and dealt with familiar spirits and wizards: he wrought much wickedness in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger.

5. The whole of this section (vss. 1-6) is the work of the earlier Deuteronomistic compiler of 610 B.C. His reference to the two courts of the house of the Lord has, however, created some difficulty, since there was but one court in the pre-exilic temple.
Either this verse has been adapted by a postexilic writer who knew the second temple or, less likely, the second court is that outer court which included the various royal edifices which Solomon had built.

6. In addition to child sacrifice, Manasseh also revived the ancient practices of soothsaying and necromancy. Probably these had never died out, for both are prevalent today in so-called civilized countries, though under more respectable names. It was formerly thought that the reference was to the practice of soothsaying by the observance of the movement of clouds, but this derivation of the root ‘ānan has been abandoned.
It is now held that the word refers to the "crooning" of the soothsayer, who made a noise not unlike the cooing of a dove. Augury includes every kind of divination, on the basis of any sign (event) on earth or in the heavens which is not caused by human action. The theory is that since it must have been caused by the action of some person, it must have been caused by some supernatural person. The sign-events included the watching of the play of light on a cup of liquid (Gen. 44:5, 15) or the watching of the flight of birds (see Deut. 18:10).

The Hebrew 'ōbh originally signified "ghost," but it came in practice to mean "medium." Similarly, the word yidde'ōni originally meant "knowing one," i.e., the spirit which knew, but in course of time it came to mean "wizard." The intense opposition of the prophets to these practices rested on the fact that they presupposed a belief in a supernatural power other than Yahweh's. They did not doubt that they received signs and instructions from the Lord, but they were quite sure that the other people did not.

One wonders if Hezekiah's moral decline at the end of his life had for its saddest consequence the character of his son. And there was no one strong enough to oppose and restrain him. For Isaiah was dead. The people had doubtless chafed under the heavy hand of reform. Banished were the pleasures associated with heathen rites. Yahweh alone must be worshiped, and he only at Jerusalem. And the religion which he exacted was not the mere offering of sacrifices but rectitude in personal living, justice to one's neighbor, righteousness and morality, precisely the kind of religion which was least easy to render. Princes and politicians were in the saddle, and the nation plunged right back into the old days of idolatry and licentiousness. The priests, too, were eager for it. With the destruction of the high places they had lost standing of heaven, and served them. 4 And he built altars in the house of the Lord, of which the Lord had said, "In Jerusalem will I put my name." 5 And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the house of the Lord. 6 And he burned his son as an offering, and practiced soothsaying and augury, and dealt with mediums and with wizards. He did much evil in the sight and revenues. They welcomed the restoration of the old shrines. Altars to Baal were reared in the land. The worship of the stars was an innovation (Jer. 7:18; 19:18; Zeph. 1:5), and human sacrifice and the dark practices of wizardry and enchantments threw an eerie shadow over the whole wild scene. Murders filled the streets with blood. We are told (vss.
10-15) that prophets raised their voices in opposition. Who they were we do not know.
But conscience was not dead. God had his servants then as always. Even such days could not destroy that inner sense of righteousness and truth which condemned evil and both foresaw and foretold its dreadful consequences.
The first truth which comes out of this tragic 311

7 And he set a graven image of the grove that he had made in the house, of which the Lord said to David, and to Solomon his son, In this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever:

8 Neither will I make the feet of Israel move any more out of the land which I gave their fathers: only if they will observe to do according to all that I have commanded them, and according to all the law that my servant Moses commanded them.

9 But they hearkened not: and Manasseh seduced them to do more evil than did the nations whom the Lord destroyed before the children of Israel.

10 And the Lord spake by his servants the prophets, saying,

11 Because Manasseh king of Judah hath done these abominations, and hath done wickedly above all that the Amorites did, which were before him, and hath made Judah also to sin with his idols:

12 Therefore thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Behold, I am bringing such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah, that whosoever heareth of it, both his ears shall tingle.

7-15. These verses are the work of the later Deuteronomic editor of ca. 550 B.C. He lays the blame for the final disaster to Jerusalem and Judah wholly on Manasseh's shoulders. This writer had to account for the fact that Jerusalem was destroyed and the kingdom brought to an end in spite of the good works of King Josiah. According to the Deuteronomic theory, he had to account for the amazing disaster which overtook the best of the Deuteronomic kings, Josiah himself. He does this by laying the blame on Manasseh. It was his opinion that the fifty-five years of idolatry under Manasseh, and the two further years under his son Amon, had created such a dead weight of apostasy and wickedness that not even the zeal of the good King Josiah could avert the doom. All that Josiah could do, that model of what a Deuteronomic king could be, was to avert the final ruin for a time. If Manasseh had observed the Deuteronomic law, the editor held, both in respect of exclusive worship at Jerusalem and in respect of the laws against idolatry and evil-doing generally, then all would have been well.

The story is that real religion makes its inexorable demands upon men and exacts the inevitable sacrifice of much that the natural man holds dear. The basic reason why Manasseh and princes and people rebelled against the stern religion of the reformation was that it took from them the self-indulgence which the popular religion had so freely gratified, demanded obedience to moral law, abstinence from sins of the flesh, the practice of social justice. Such a conception of worship was too narrow, too restrictive, too prohibitory for them. And it is much the same today. Men have no fault to find with religion so long as it confers benefits and demands only outward forms of worship. But when they discover that it cuts right into their personal habits, demands an austere morality, affects their ways of doing business, and thus alters the whole aspect of their lives, then they are not enthusiastic about it. The alternative must be pressed home. Either it is a religion like that or no religion at all. Holiness is indeed a formidable word, but we cannot escape it. It means consecration to the highest we know, whatever self-control and self-denial it may involve. It holds us rigidly to certain definite 13 And I will stretch over Jerusalem the line of Samaria, and the plummet of the house of Ahab: and I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish, wiping it, and turning it upside down.

14 And I will forsake the remnant of mine inheritance, and deliver them into the hand of their enemies; and they shall become a prey and a spoil to all their enemies:

15 Because they have done that which was evil in my sight, and have provoked me to anger, since the day their fathers came forth out of Egypt, even unto this day.

16 Moreover Manasseh shed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jerusalem from one end to another; besides his sin wherewith he made Judah to sin, in doing that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

17 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and all that he did, and his sin that he

13. The line and the plummet obviously stand for judgment (cf. Amos 7:8). Judah and Jerusalem will be judged with exactly the same judgment as Samaria and all the house of Ahab. This meant the end of Jerusalem, just as it had meant the end of Samaria. The figure of the upturned dish is vivid and complete.

16-18. The 610 B.C. Deuteronomic editor completes his tale of woe. There is a tradition that Manasseh slew the prophets. Josephus reports (Antiquities X. 3. 1) that he slew some every day. A legend also said that he slew the prophet Isaiah by sawing him asunder with a wooden saw. This may well be the case, for Jezebel slew the prophets of the Lord (I Kings 18:13), though generally, however wicked a ruler was, he would stop short of this since prophets, like priests, were reckoned to be sacred persons and therefore enjoyed physical immunity.

17. The normal obituary notice for a king of Judah, with a change in the place of interment. The last kings of Judah, those of them who died in their own land, were buried in private sepulchers of their own (vs. 26; 23:30; 24:6). This was situated close by the temple wall in the royal garden (Ezek. 43:7).

ides of life and conduct. It is a narrow way, but it leads us straight into the only kind of life that is really worth living.

A second truth in this chapter is revealed in the attitude of Manasseh toward Yahweh. It appeared to the king that Yahweh's love of his people, his power and providence, had been discredited by the misfortunes which had befallen them. Faith in God had been shaken by circumstance. And so it is among modern men. So long as all goes well with them, so long as the fabric of their lives remains secure, they have faith in God. But let life break down, hopes fall in ruins all about them, then they "lose their religion," feel that faith in a good and loving God is no longer possible. As a matter of fact, all the material disasters which befell the Jewish people made possible a far greater destiny than otherwise could have been theirs. They were proof not of the impotence or indifference of God but of his love. So in personal experience the suffering which one endures is never an occasion for loss of faith in God. Rather it is an opportunity for a deeper faith in him who is preparing some better thing than prosperity had given. How often has this truth been illustrated in biography. "Why should I start at the plough of my Lord, that maketh deep furrows on my soul? I know He is no idle husbandman, He purposeth a crop." 4 17-18. Character and Desert.—A final lesson is presented by the glaring contrast between the character of Manasseh and his earthly fortunes.

4 Samuel Rutherford, quoted in Tileston, Daily Strength for Daily Needs, p. 49.
sinned, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?
18 And Manasseh slept with his fathers, and was buried in the garden of his own house, in the garden of Uzza: and Amon his son reigned in his stead.

19 Amon was twenty and two years old when he began to reign, and he reigned two years in Jerusalem. And his mother’s name was Meshullemeth, the daughter of Haruz of Jotbah.

20 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, as his father Manasseh did.

21 And he walked in all the way that his father walked in, and served the idols that his father served, and worshipped them:

22 And he forsook the LORD God of his fathers, and walked not in the way of the LORD.

23 ¶ And the servants of Amon conspired against him, and slew the king in his own house.

24 And the people of the land slew all them that had conspired against king Amon; and the people of the land made Josiah his son king in his stead.

25 Now the rest of the acts of Amon which he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

26 And he was buried in his sepulchre in the garden of Uzza: and Josiah his son reigned in his stead.

3. Amon of Judah (21:19-26)

19-26. This king reigned but two years, and was assassinated at the age of twenty-four. The account of his reign says little more than that he followed in his father’s footsteps. The Deuteronomist has added an extract from the royal annals of Judah which gives a few details of his death. It was the courtiers who murdered him, but the people in general avenged his death and made his son Josiah king in his stead.

He was one of the most wicked of Judah’s kings. Yet his reign was the longest and one of the least troubled in the annals of either kingdom. Ahab, Jeroboam, Ahaz, these paid with their lives for the evils they had done. But Manasseh, after his long and abominable reign during all of which his kingdom had been at peace, slept with his fathers, and was buried in the garden of his own house. This inversion of ethics appeared so unaccountable and irrational to the Chronicler (II Chr. 33:11-16) that he felt that history must be altered in the interest of justice. But there is nothing to corroborate and every thing to disprove such an epilogue to the story of Manasseh. It makes sense but it is not history. Here we confront a vivid illustration of the contradiction so often found in human experience. It is one of the most staggering problems presented to faith. The O.T. never solved it. Its dogma that righteousness is rewarded by outward prosperity and wickedness by misfortune is negated by fact. The N.T. gives us the only solution possible to human understanding. We find it stated in Heb. 12:5-11. And, after all, who died the happier man, Manasseh or Jeremiah, Nero or Paul?
Josiah was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned thirty and one years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jedidah, the daughter of Adaiah of Boscath.

Josiah's Reign Begins.—Great events were impending outside and inside the little kingdom of Judah when young Josiah came to the throne in 638 B.C. From 630-624 occurred the savage invasion of the Scythians (Jer. 4:5-81; 5:15-19; 6:22-30; Zeph. 2:4-5). And during these and the following years came the ominous rise to power of Babylonia. Within the kingdom came once more the voice of articulate prophecy. Jeremiah began his long career in 627 B.C.; Zephaniah's prophecy dates from 628-626; and Nahum wrote in 614-612. None of these events without or within is mentioned by our historian who confines himself to the record of Josiah's reign. He was one of Judah's noblest kings. How a creature like Amon could have had a son like Josiah presents again the insoluble problem of heredity. Of his mother and her father we know only their names. For eighteen years, or until the king was twenty-six years old, the story of his reign is a blank. For ten years at least the affairs of state must have been in the hands of regents. But then things began to happen.

37. Rebuilding the Temple.—The temple had fallen into dilapidation during the long and evil reign of Manasseh. Its rebuilding became the new king's first task. He had good
4 Go up to Hilkiah the high priest, that he may sum the silver which is brought into the house of the Lord, which the keepers of the door have gathered of the people:
5 And let them deliver it into the hand of the doers of the work, that have the oversight of the house of the Lord; and let them give it to the doers of the work, which is in the house of the Lord, to repair the breaches of the house,
6 Unto carpenters, and builders, and masons, and to buy timber and hewn stone to repair the house.
7 Howbeit, there was no reckoning made with them of the money that was delivered into their hand, because they dealt faithfully.

date Josiah was a vassal to the Assyrian king. Further delay was caused by the incursions of hordes of Scythians (Jer. 1:13-15).

4. The title high priest is found here, again in vs. 8, and in 23:4. This is properly a postexilic term, the pre-exilic term being “chief priest” and that of the next in precedence “the second priest” (25:18).

The procedure followed in the provision of money to pay for the renovations was that followed by King Jehoash (12:9, 15), even to the practice of not counting the money. Whether the custom of having the box in the porch had fallen into disuse since the time of Jehoash or not, it is impossible to say definitely. It looks as if the boxes had been there all the time but that the money had not gone for repairs. In any case, the box for gifts became a feature in the second temple. In the first century A.D. there were thirteen chests for the reception of charitable gifts. These were then situated around the Court of the Women, where the worshipers congregated. The chests were narrow at the top and wide at the bottom, and were called “trumpets” because of their shape. Nine of the trumpets were for the reception of the various contributions legally due from the worshipers, while the other four were for gifts which were wholly voluntary (Alfred Edersheim, The Temple, Its Ministry and Services [New York: Fleming H. Revell Co., 1910], pp. 26-27).

helpers: Shaphan the scribe and Hilkiah the high priest. The people were asked for subscriptions, and the money was so faithfully employed that no accounts were kept (vs. 7; cf. 12:15). The temple was for the Jewish people the symbol, the very incarnation, of religion. Thus in restoring the temple Josiah was seeking to restore the religion that was enshrined within it. We would do well to apply ourselves to a similar task, to the rebuilding of religion into the structure of our society. We have been building everything else, bridges, dams, and highways; we have built temples of finance and industry. But we have neglected the house of God, which has fallen into disrepair. Our civilization from top to bottom has been largely secular. The root trouble with modern society is that religion has been left out of it. We have left religion out of our business, out of our education, out of our politics. We have not been building religion into the lives of our people or into the life of the nation. The time has come to rebuild the house of God. And this involves fresh loyalty to the church in which religion is always incorporated. For at no time and nowhere has religion existed without incorporating itself in institutional forms. Without a visible church, religion would doubtless remain as a source of private inspiration, but it would not be a continuing and constructive force. Without the church, the Christian religion can achieve nothing as a social dynamic. The church needs to be rebuilt in the loyalties and affections of men if religion is to prosper in the land.
8 And Hilki'ah the high priest said unto Shaphan the scribe, I have found the book of the law in the house of the Lord. And Hilki'ah gave the book to Shaphan, and he read it.

9 And Shaphan the scribe came to the king, and brought the king word again, and said, Thy servants have gathered the money that was found in the house, and have delivered it into the hand of them that do the work, that have the oversight of the house of the Lord.

10 And Shaphan the scribe showed the king, saying, Hilki'ah the priest hath delivered me a book. And Shaphan read it before the king.

11 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, that he rent his clothes.

12 And the king commanded Hilki'ah the priest, and Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and Achbor the son of Micaiah, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asahiah a servant of the king's, saying,

13 Go ye, inquire of the Lord for me, and for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found: for great is the wrath of the Lord that is kindled against us, because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according unto all that which is written concerning us.

8. The book of the law: It will never be decided whether Hilki'ah really found the scroll or whether he knew very well where to look. The general agreement is that the scroll contained the nucleus of the present book of Deuteronomy, probably chs. 12-26 (see Intro. to Deuteronomy, Vol. II, pp. 312-13, 320-23).

12. The king's servant was evidently an official of some considerable standing. This is confirmed by the Tell en-Nasbeh seal, which bears the inscription “To Ya'azanyahu, servant of the king”; it has been suggested that this is actually the army general mentioned in 11 Kings 25:23; Jer. 40:8 (see facsimile of the impression of this seal in G. Ernest Wright, “Tell en-Nasbeh,” The Biblical Archaeologist, X [1947], 73, reproduced from the report on the excavations by C. C. McCown).

8-20. The Rediscovery of the Bible.—Here is an interesting story. The substance of the book that was found is contained for us in the book of Deuteronomy (see Exeg.). Whether it was purposely hidden there by members of the prophetic party, so that its discovery was in the nature of a pious fraud, or whether Hezekiah’s reformers had reduced their principles to writing and concealed this document in the temple for safekeeping, we do not know. But its discovery became the signal of the most thorough reformation of worship that Judah had ever known. The great reformation of Josiah was built solidly upon it.

The rediscovery of the Bible has often marked an epoch in the life of nations and of individuals. For centuries it was a lost book. It existed only in MSS, or, after the advent of printing, only in scarce volumes out of the reach of the common people. Its rediscovery in the days 14 So Hilkiah the priest, and Ahikam, and Achbor, and Shaphan, and Asahiah, went unto Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of Tikvah, the son of Harhas, keeper of the wardrobe: (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the college;) and they communed with her.

15 And she said unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Tell the man that sent you to me,

16 Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the words of the book which the king of Judah hath read:

17 Because they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be kindled against this place, and shall not be quenched.

18 But to the king of Judah which sent you to inquire of the Lord, thus shall ye say to him, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, As touching the words which thou hast heard;

19 Because thine heart was tender, and thou hast humbled thyself before the Lord, when thou heardest what I spake against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, that they should become a desolation and a curse, and hast rent thy clothes, and wept before me; I also have heard thee, saith the Lord.

14 So Hilkiah the priest, and Ahikam, and Achbor, and Shaphan, and Asai'ah went to Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of Tikvah, son of Harhas, keeper of the wardrobe (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the Second Quarter): and they talked with her. 15 And she said to them, “Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel: ‘Tell the man who sent you to me, 16 Thus says the Lord, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place and upon its inhabitants, all the words of the book which the king of Judah has read. 17 Because they have forsaken me and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the work of their hands, therefore my wrath will be kindled against this place, and it will not be quenched. 18 But as to the king of Judah, who sent you to inquire of the Lord, thus shall you say to him, Thus says the Lord, the God of Israel: Regarding the words which you have heard, 19 because your heart was penitent, and you humbled yourself before the Lord, when you heard how I spoke against this place, and against its inhabitants, that they should become a desolation and a curse, and you have rent your clothes and wept before me, I also have heard you, says the

14. The king sends to the temple to inquire what should be done, and the word is given by the prophetess Huldah. It has been thought strange that Jeremiah did not give this oracle, but there is no evidence that he was ever attached to the Jerusalem shrine, and it was the cult prophet there who would give the oracle.

15. The tendency of the prophets is to insist that the king is but a man before God, and is therefore no different from any other man. Such a passage as this needs to be remembered in the face of all attempts to show that among the Hebrews the king was regarded as divine.

16-20. The first part of Huldah's speech presupposes a knowledge of the destruction of the temple and of the transportation of the inhabitants of the city into exile. On 20 Therefore, behold, I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered into thy grave in peace; and thine eyes shall not see all the evil which I will bring upon this place. And they brought the king word again.

23 And the king sent, and they gathered unto him all the elders of Judah and of Jerusalem.

2 And the king went up into the house of the Lord, and all the men of Judah and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem with him, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, both small and great: and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant which was found in the house of the Lord.

3 ¶ And the king stood by a pillar, and made a covenant before the Lord, to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments and his testimonies and his statutes with all their heart and all their soul, to perform the words of this covenant that were written in this book. And all the people stood to the covenant.

the other hand, vs. 20 was apparently written before Josiah's death. The easiest solution is to suppose that an original oracle of Huldah's has been rewritten by the editor of ca. 550 B.C., who took the view that even Josiah's full repentance and adherence to the tenets of the Deuteronomists could only delay and not stave off the inevitable end.

c) Making of the Covenant (23:1-3)

King Josiah gathers all the people together in the temple courts and reads to them the scroll which Hilkiah has found in the temple. The king took up his stand by the pillar and bound himself to the Lord by covenant to observe the demands of the scroll of the law with full consecration of his whole life, and all the people joined themselves with him in this promise. During the ceremony the king stood by the pillar, just as the boy-king Jehoash had done when Jehoiada the chief priest seized the throne for him and proclaimed him king (11:14). It was evidently the regular and proper place for the king to stand when he worshiped in the temple.

23:3. According to the M.T. the people "stood in the covenant." This is the literal translation of the Hebrew, and there is every reason to suppose that here the M.T. is more accurate than the English versions, e.g., KJV, stood to, and the RSV, which paraphrases joined in. The Hebrew is doubtless descriptive of the actual ceremony discovery of the Bible has meant a turning point in many a man's history.

23:1-28. The Reforms of Josiah.—The first part of this long chapter (vss. 1-28) is given up to a detailed description of the drastic reforms of Josiah. He began with the temple (vss. 4-7). Then he went through the whole land from north to south, destroying all idolatrous shrines and abolishing root and branch pagan worship and all of its trappings (vss. 8-18). The
And the king commanded Hilki'ah, the high priest, and the priests of the second order, and the keepers of the door, to bring forth out of the temple of the Lord all the vessels that were made for Ba'al, and for the grove, and for all the host of heaven: and he burned them without Jerusalem in the fields of Kidron, and carried the ashes of them unto Beth-el.

by which the king and the people bound themselves in the covenant. It is stated by Dictys Cretensis (De Bello Trojano I 15) that before the Greeks set out for Troy, the soothsayer Calchas brought a boar into the market place, cut it in two pieces, and placed one piece at the west side of an open space and the other piece at the east side. He then caused every man, with his drawn sword in his hand, to pass between the pieces of the boar and swear enmity against Priam king of Troy. Each man entered into the covenant by passing between the pieces of the animal, thus identifying himself with the life of the animal, and so binding themselves each with the other, into a common brotherhood. It could be said of these Greeks that they “stood in the covenant” in so far as they stood between the pieces of the boar. Pausanias (Description of Greece III. 20. 9) says that the suitors of Helen bound themselves to defend her, whoever was her choice of husband, and that they did it by standing on the pieces of a horse which Tyndareus her father had cut up. That some such idea was extant in ancient times among the Hebrews is to be seen in the story of Abraham’s covenant (Gen. 15:9-21) where God passed between the pieces of the sacrifices (vs. 17) in the likeness of a flaming torch. The making of a covenant by passing between the pieces of a calf is mentioned in Jer. 34:18, a passage which is contemporary with the making of the covenant in the temple in Josiah’s time. We judge therefore that there was some such ceremony at Josiah’s dedication of himself and his people to the tasks of reform.

d) Reform of the Cultus (23:4-15)

Josiah proceeded to sweep away all idolatrous cult objects out of the temple. He burned them in Kidron and disposed of the ashes at Bethel, presumably to ensure the complete desecration of the most offensive of all shrines to a true worshiper of the Lord. He got rid of all idolatrous priests, and brought the genuine priests to Jerusalem, though they were not admitted there as regular sacrificing priests. In general, he began in the temple, continued in Jerusalem, passed over to the Mount of Olives, and thence throughout the country, making a clean sweep everywhere.

4. It is best to read “the second priest” (cf. 25:18, where “the chief priest” and the keepers of the threshold are also mentioned).

For the fields of the Kidron Lucian has “limekilns of Kidron,” which many commentators prefer. The word used in the Hebrew is not used elsewhere in Hebrew prose, and it is very similar to the word for “kilns” (lit., “place of burning”). As a perfect Deuteronomist, he had the refuse carried to Bethel, there to scatter it on the basest altar of all.
5 And he put down the idolatrous priests, whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn incense in the high places in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jerusalem: them also that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, and to the planets, and to all the host of heaven.

6 And he brought out the grove from the house of the LORD, without Jerusalem, unto the brook Kidron, and burned it at the brook Kidron, and stamped it small to powder, and cast the powder thereof upon the graves of the children of the people.

5. The word used for the idolatrous priests whom Josiah “caused to cease” (so M.T.) is kemärîm. It is the regular word in Aramaic and Syriac for all priests, whether legitimate or not. The word is also found in Nabataean (North Arabia) and in Punic (Carthage in North Africa), and yet again in an ordinary association in the Elephantine papyri. In the O.T. the word is used rarely, and always for idolatrous priests (Hos. 10:5; Zeph. 1:1: and possibly the correct reading in Hos. 4:4). It was formerly thought that the word was connected with the Hebrew root יָכָּב II (“to be black”), on the ground that the priests were supposedly always dressed in black. This is most unlikely, since we do know that the Jerusalem priests were traditionally dressed in white, and it is likely that in this they followed an ancient custom. The word is probably to be connected with the root יָכָּב III (“to lay prostrate”), the priest thus being the man who prostrates himself before God.

Here, as always in passages which are earlier than the Priestly Code, we should read “sacrifice” for burn incense.

There has been much discussion concerning the meaning of the Hebrew mazzâlôth. The word is a loan word from the Assyrian, where it means “a place of standing,” and is used of the mansions of the gods, i.e., the territory assigned to them in the skies in the Mesopotamian astral system. In Arabic ’al-manâzîl is used of the twenty-eight mansions of the moon. The word in Syriac refers to the signs of the zodiac, while in rabbinical Hebrew the reference is to the twelve signs of the zodiac and also to the planets (so KJV here). The most likely solution is that the word refers to thirty-six stars which governed the year, three being allocated to each month. In the Aries period (i.e., the period when Aries the ram rises in the first month of the year), the regents for the month Sivan were Orion, Canis Major, and Gemini. In the Taurus period (from ca. 3000 B.C.), these would be the regents for the month Ayar (S. H. Langdon, Babylonian Menologies and the Semitic Calendars [London: British Academy, 1935], pp. 3-10).

6. Wealthy people were buried in caves hollowed out of hillsides, but poor folk were buried in a common graveyard—a large death pit (Jer. 26:23). The contact with the common graves would destroy any holiness which might still cling to the desecrated remains of the idol. Objects could still be regarded at that period as being holy even though they were used in idolatrous cults, and definite desecration was necessary in order to prevent their being regarded as holy.

more of the people than they were inwardly prepared to perform. Had Josiah proceeded with greater prudence, removing the most glaring evils in a way to win popular support, and then sought to educate the people out of more innocent practices which they were not ready to abandon, the result might have been different. No reform—and here is a lesson which we have been slow to learn—can ever be permanent which outruns popular opinion and support. No reform that relies solely on suppression, on negative means, on the heavy hand of the law, can long endure. The solution of no social problem is as simple as that.

Josiah’s reforms dealt with externals only. They did not reach the inward spirit. Here we 7 And he brake down the houses of the sodomites, that were by the house of the Lord, where the women wove hangings for the grove.

8 And he brought all the priests out of the cities of Judah, and defiled the high places where the priests had burned incense, from Geba to Beer-sheba, and brake down the high places of the gates that were in the entering in of the gate of Joshua the governor of the city, which were on a man's left hand at the gate of the city.

9 Nevertheless the priests of the high places came not up to the altar of the Lord in Jerusalem, but they did eat of the unleavened bread among their brethren.

10 And he defiled Topheth, which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom, that no man might make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire to Molech.

7. The cult prostitutes were males (cf. sodomites). This native Palestinian practice was regularly abolished by reforming kings, but found its way back again as soon as the time of the reforms was past (I Kings 14:24; 15:12; 22:46). Prostitutes of both sexes were strictly prohibited in the Deuteronomistic Code (Deut. 23:17).

The translation hangings depends upon the traditional Jewish interpretation, since the Hebrew has the difficult word "houses." Perhaps further information on the cults of Canaan may clarify the Hebrew meaning. The use of hangings or tents in or around the shrines is confirmed by Amos 5:26 (LXX); Ezek. 16:16, and also the LXX of Amos 2:8, which reads, "And binding their clothes [i.e., those received as pledges] with cords, they have made them curtains near the altar."

8. It is customary and almost certainly correct to read, with Hoffmann, סתרים (se'irim, "satyrs," "goats") for שערי (she'arim, gates). The reference is then to the "hairy ones," the goat demons who were worshiped in early times (Lev. 17:7; II Chr. 11:15; W. O. Esterley and T. H. Robinson, Hebrew Religion, Its Origin and Development [2nd ed.; New York: The Macmillan Co., 1937], pp. 112-13).

9. The Deuteronomic intention (Deut. 18:6-8) was that the dispossessed Levites of the southern local shrines should come up to the central sanctuary at Jerusalem and there be on an equal footing with the Jerusalem priests. They were indeed partly recognized as sacred persons, since they ate unleavened bread among their brethren, but they were not admitted as sacrificing priests and so became subordinate officials. In view of the behavior in the priests in the time of Jehosh (12:4-7), and possibly also in the time of Josiah himself (cf. 22:3-7), it is legitimate to assume that the Jerusalem priests themselves were unwilling to share their perquisites, even though these would be vastly increased by the destruction of the local shrines.

10. It is probable that the word Topheth (or Tephath) originally meant "fireplace" and referred to the Valley of Hinnom, where the bodies of child victims were sacrificed are guided by observing the attitude of Jeremiah, the most spiritual of all the prophets, towards this great reform, the greatest effort ever made to bring the life of Israel into conformity to the will of God. At first it won the passionate support of the prophet, who went on a preaching mission in its behalf (Jer. 11:6). Yet as he watched its results he became increasingly convinced that a truly spiritual religion was not to be won for the people by such external procedure. They could not be legislated into either morality or religion. Conformity to external habits of worship would never make religion a matter of the heart. Though the moral code of 11 And he took away the horses that the kings of Judah had given to the sun, at the entering in of the house of the LORD, by the chamber of Nathan-melech the chamberlain, which was in the suburbs, and burned the chariots of the sun with fire.

12 And the altars that were on the top of the upper chamber of Ahaz, which the kings of Judah had made, and the altars which Manasseh had made in the two courts of the house of the LORD, did the king beat down, and brake them down from thence, and cast the dust of them into the brook Kidron.

13 And the high places that were before Jerusalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption, which Solomon the king of Israel had builded for Ashtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemosh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile.

as burnt offerings. The Masoretes as usual inserted the vowels of the word bôsheth (“shameful thing”) because of the heathen associations of the word. According to Jerome the site was a green and wooded place watered by the Pools of Siloam. Here as elsewhere (except I Kings 11:7, which is an error for “Milcom,” the Ammonite god), the name of the god associated with child sacrifice is given as Molech. This is the Hebrew word molēkh (“king”) with the vowels of bôsheth inserted instead of the proper vowels. The worship of the god Melekh (the heavenly “King”) was widespread throughout the Semitic East, and the sacrifice of children was the special and distinctive feature of his cult. It is most probable that the cult observed at Topheth was a syncretism of Yahweh-Melekh.

11. The idea that the sun-god drives across the sky in his chariot is found both in Mesopotamia and in Greece, i.e., both of Shamash and of Helios. Indeed, a solar god can regularly be detected by the fact that he is represented as riding in a winged chariot. This is especially evident in the famous Gaza coin, dating from ca. 400 B.C., in which Yahu the God of the Jews, is depicted as a solar Zeus (Cook, Religion of Ancient Palestine in Light of Archaeology, pp. 147-48). The “chariot” (so LXX) and its horses, which Josiah removed, were situated near the entrance in the precincts—some kind of structure which was to the west of the temple itself (I Chr. 26:18). In the Mishnah and in the Targ. the word parwâr means “suburb” (so KJV) and it is probably to be connected with the Persian parwâr “kiosk,” “summerhouse.”

12. The phrase the upper chamber of Ahaz is out of construction and appears to be a gloss. The altars were on the roof of the temple itself—a natural location for their use in the astral cults which were introduced from Mesopotamia, probably in the time of Ahaz when Assyrian influence became dominant in Judah. It is possible that Ahaz built a roof chamber in connection with them. In this case, the phrase is an intelligent and informed gloss.

13. “The Mount of Olives” (reading mishhâh for mashhith) had been the site of heathen shrines certainly since the time of Solomon (I Kings 11:7), as the references in Deuteronomy might exist as a standard, only some deep, inward spiritual principle could make it operative in their lives (Jer. 7:3-16). The people might perform acts of worship as proscribed, yet go their way as before, living lives of greed and selfishness. True reform, in a word, is the reformation of inward motives, impulses, desires. We must begin there. No out-14 And he brake in pieces the images, and cut down the groves, and filled their places with the bones of men.

15 Moreover the altar that was at Bethel, and the high place which Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, had made, both that altar and the high place he brake down, and burned the high place, and stamped it small to powder, and burned the grove.

16 And as Josiah turned himself, he spied the sepulchres that were there in the mount, and sent, and took the bones out of the sepulchres, and burned them upon the altar, and polluted it, according to the word of the LORD which the man of God proclaimed, who proclaimed these words.

17 Then he said, What title is that that I see? And the men of the city told him, It is the sepulchre of the man of God, which came from Judah, and proclaimed these things that thou hast done against the altar of Bethel.

18 And he said, Let him alone; let no man move his bones. So they let his bones alone, with the bones of the prophet that came out of Samaria.

19 And all the houses also of the high places that were in the cities of Samaria, which the kings of Israel had made to provoke the LORD to anger, Josiah took away, and did to them according to all the acts that he had done in Bethel.

14 And he broke in pieces the pillars, and cut down the Asherim, and filled their places with the bones of men.

15 Moreover the altar at Bethel, the high place erected by Jerobo'am the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, that altar with the high place he pulled down and he broke in pieces its stones, crushing them to dust: also he burned the Asherah.

16 And as Josi'ah turned, he saw the tombs there on the mount: and he sent and took the bones out of the tombs, and burned them upon the altar, and defiled it, according to the word of the LORD which the man of God proclaimed, who had predicted these things.

17 Then he said, "What is yonder monument that I see?" And the men of the city told him, "It is the tomb of the man of God who came from Judah and predicted these things which you have done against the altar at Bethel."

18 And he said, "Let him be; let no man move his bones." So they let his bones alone, with the bones of the prophet who came out of Samaria.

19 And all the shrines also of the high places that were in the cities of Samaria, which kings of Israel had made, provoking the LORD to anger, Josi'ah removed; he did to them according to all that he had done at this verse show. The particular site mentioned was at the south end of the ridge, and is commonly identified with the so-called Mount of Offense (Jebel Batn 'el-Hawa).

15. The destruction of the shrine and altar at Bethel climaxes the work of cultic purification.

e) Josiah and the Bones of the Man of God (23:16-20)

16-20. While Josiah is busy making havoc of the altar and shrine at Bethel, he sees the burial caves in the distance and commands that dead men's bones be brought so that he can effectually desecrate the altar and put it out of commission permanently as a holy place. He sees one particular monument and is informed that it marks the grave of the man of God who years ago prophesied the destruction of the altar. So Josiah commands that his bones be left alone, thus fulfilling the ancient prophecy. Josiah continues on to Samaria, destroys all the idolatrous objects there, slaying the priests over their own altars. These verses are a later addition and belong to the same stratum as I Kings 12:32-13:34. The prophet who had protested against Jeroboam's original ward scheme of salvation will avail so long as men themselves remain self-seeking, materially minded, unbrotherly, indulgent. The world for which we wait depends not on outward organizations but upon the revival of a true religion in the hearts of men. Precisely what we are, the world will become. The reformation of the world depends upon the reformation of the soul. Such are the lessons taught us by the reforms of Josiah.

20 And he slew all the priests of the high places that were there upon the altars, and burned men’s bones upon them, and returned to Jerusalem.

21 And the king commanded all the people, saying, Keep the passover unto the LORD your God, as it is written in the book of this covenant.

22 Surely there was not holden such a passover from the days of the judges that judged Israel, nor in all the days of the kings of Israel, nor of the kings of Judah;

23 But in the eighteenth year of king Josiah, wherein this passover was holden to the LORD in Jerusalem.

24 Moreover the workers with familiar spirits, and the wizards, and the images, and the idols, and all the abominations that were spied in the land of Judah and in Jerusalem, did Josiah put away, that he infamies has his bones left in peace, a just and fitting reward to the dead for faithfulness to the Deuteronomic ideals.

f) Celebration of the Passover (23:21-23)

21-23. The climax of Josiah’s reforms was the celebration of the Passover according to the regulations laid down in Deut. 16:1-8. It is stated that there had never been a Passover such as this since the days of the judges. This is undoubtedly true, since the centralizing of all worship at Jerusalem made new regulations necessary. The centralization would not affect the Passover itself, since that was essentially a home festival and not by any means a pilgrimage feast. It was a seasonal apotropaic rite, i.e., a spring festival which had its distant origin in the exorcism and “turning away” of evil spirits (see such regulations as the prohibition of leaving the house, and the removal of every trace of the victim, however slight). The festival came to be associated in Hebrew lore with the redemption of the first-born and with the rescue from Egypt. In the days before Josiah the people could observe the Passover in their own homes on the night of the full moon, and then set out in the morning to celebrate the feast of Mazzoth (Unleavened Bread) at their nearest or favorite shrine. This feast was the barley harvest festival, and like all harvest festivals it was a pilgrimage feast. When the law of the central sanctuary was enforced, different regulations had to be framed so as to make it possible for the people to observe the Passover and still be in Jerusalem for the feast of Mazzoth which followed immediately upon it (Snaith, Jewish New Year Festival, pp. 13-25). It was thus essential that the people should have a “home” in Jerusalem, so that they could keep both the home festival, which strictly demanded that they should stay at home, and the pilgrimage feast, which demanded that they should keep it in Jerusalem.

g) Conclusion of the Original Book (23:24-25a)

Here is the concluding summary of the Deuteronomic compiler of 610 B.C. Josiah abolished every kind of heathen object and custom in Judah and Jerusalem, and there never was a king like him, who fully and loyally obeyed the law of Moses “with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might” (cf. Deut. 6:5).

24. The teraphim were household images. They were of various sizes, big enough to be mistaken for a man in a bad light (1 Sam. 19:13-16), or small enough to be packed in the saddles of camels (Gen. 31:32, 34). A regular feature of household religion in might perform the words of the law, which were written in the book that Hilkiah the priest found in the house of the Lord.

25 And like unto him was there no king before him, that turned to the Lord with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses; neither after him arose there any like him.

26 Notwithstanding, the Lord turned not from the fierceness of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled against Judah, because of all the provocations that Manasseh had provoked him withal.

27 And the Lord said, I will remove Judah also out of my sight, as I have removed Israel, and will cast off this city Jerusalem which I have chosen, and the house of which I said, My name shall be there.

29 In his days Pharaoh-nechoh king of Egypt went up against the king of Assyria to Jerusalem, that he might establish the words of the law which were written in the book that Hilkiah the priest found in the house of the Lord. 29 Before him there was no king like him, who turned to the Lord with all his heart and with all his soul and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses; nor did any like him arise after him.

26 Still the Lord did not turn from the fierceness of his great wrath, by which his anger was kindled against Judah, because of all the provocations with which Manasseh had provoked him. 27 And the Lord said, “I will remove Judah also out of my sight, as I have removed Israel, and I will cast off this city which I have chosen, Jerusalem, and the house of which I said, My name shall be there.”

28 Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and all that he did, are they not written in the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah? 29 In his days Pharaoh Neco king of Assyria went up against the king of Egypt to Jerusalem, that he might establish the words of the law which were written in the book that Hilkiah the priest found in the house of the Lord. 29 Before him there was no king like him, who turned to the Lord with all his heart and with all his soul and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses; nor did any like him arise after him.

The early days, they were reckoned to be legitimate even by Hosea (3.4), who regarded the loss of them as a deprivation. They may have been in some way connected with the giving of oracles.

25a. With the phrase all the law of Moses the work of the Deuteronomic compiler of 610 B.C. comes to an end. He has told the story of the reforms of Josiah, his hero, the king who more than all that were before him fulfilled the Deuteronomic ideal.

h) Death of Josiah (23:25b-30)

With the untimely death of Josiah the whole Deuteronomic structure which the first editor had erected fell to the ground. The course of events had falsified it, for if ever a king ought to have lived long and prospered, it was Josiah; yet this monarch died before he was forty years old. But in 561 B.C., forty-seven years later, the exiled king Jehoiachin received favor at the hands of the Babylonian king (25:27-30). This good fortune may have encouraged one writer to believe that in spite of the disaster which had ended Josiah’s reign, there was still truth in the tenets of the Deuteronomists. He blamed Manasseh for the disaster, and explained the reduction of Jerusalem and the Exile as a retribution for all the provocations of Manasseh.

28-30. These verses consist of the customary reference which the earlier author made to the source of further information, together with a short and somewhat enigmatic account of Josiah’s death and burial. We have the additional information that the people chose Josiah’s son, Jehoahaz, as king and installed him in his father’s place.

29. Pharaoh Neco II (610-595 B.C.) was the son of Psamtik I, and thus the second Pharaoh of the Twenty-sixth Dynasty. The city of Nineveh had fallen in 612 B.C. (C. J.

29-37. In the Wake of Reform.—First came the tragic death of Josiah at the battle of Megiddo in 608 B.C., when he rashly and foolishly attempted to resist the Egyptians in their advance against Assyria. An unwise, premature, and impulsive use of the fighting instinct, which fails to choose the proper time and occasion for the risks that it involves, has cost many a man to the river Euphrates: and king Josiah went against him: and he slew him at Megiddo, when he had seen him.

30 And his servants carried him in a chariot dead from Megiddo, and brought him to Jerusalem, and buried him in his own sepulchre. And the people of the land took Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, and anointed him, and made him king in his father's stead.

Gadd, ed., The Fall of Nineveh [London: British Museum, 1923], p. 15) to a combined attack of Cyaxares the Mede and Nabopolassar the Babylonian. Neco was marching north and east, either to support the remnants of the Assyrian power, or to carve out an empire for himself. The place at the head of the nations had become vacant with the death of Ashurbanipal in 626 B.C. and the breakup of the Assyrian Empire. Probably Neco was trying to establish the Egyptian power throughout Syria as Thutmos III had done in the fifteenth century B.C. Curiously enough, it was actually at Megiddo that Thutmos III had defeated the Syrian armies and conquered Palestine in 1479 B.c.

The reason for Josiah's advance to Megiddo is unknown, but there is every reason to suppose that Josiah was fighting on his own account in order to extend his own power and authority (cf. II Chr. 35:20-24). He was confident of his own cause; he had already achieved a measure of success, and the Deuteronomic philosophy of history would assure him that he was bound to prosper since he had kept the Deuteronomic law with the utmost devotion and vigor. (According to Herodotus [History II. 159], the battle took place at Magdalaos by the Egyptian border.) Neco subsequently continued his march eastward to garrison Charchemish on the Euphrates, in company with the Assyrian force, both of them anxious to prevent a Babylonian advance to the north. Neco's army was annihilated there in 605 B.C. by Nebuchadrezzar, son of Nabopolassar, who became king of Babylon in the next year (Jer. 46:2; II Chr. 35:20). This ended the Egyptian bid for power, and the Pharaohs were never again able to interfere in the politics of the Near East until the time of the Ptolemies (after 323 B.C.). The death of Josiah was for Judah a disaster of the first magnitude. It was followed by great lamentations (II Chr. 35:25), and the king's memory was greatly treasured for centuries (Eccles. 49:1-3). His death marked the end of any Judahite independence, and it abruptly interrupted the revival of a purified cultus.

The statement that Pharaoh-nechoh . . . went up against the king of Assyria is difficult. Either it means that he went up against whoever happened to be in control in Mesopotamia (cf. Ezra 6:22, where the phrase is used of a Persian) or, more likely, the preposition ב ("against") should be translated "to," as if it were הב. Such a translation suggests that the Egyptian ruler was allying himself with what was left of Assyria.

Mount Megiddo is in Hebrew har-megiddô, and in the Greek Armagedôn. It came to be the traditional site of the last great fight against the enemies of God (Rev. 16:16).

30. The people of Judah buried Josiah and installed Jehoahaz as king.
31 Jehoahaz was twenty and three years old when he began to reign; and he reigned three months in Jerusalem. And his mother’s name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah. 32 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his fathers had done. 33 And Pharaoh-nechoh put him in bands at Riblah in the land of Hamath, that he might not reign in Jerusalem: and put the land to a tribute of a hundred talents of silver, and a talent of gold. 34 And Pharaoh-nechoh made Eliakim the son of Josiah king in the room of Josiah his father, and turned his name to Jehoiakim, and took Jehoahaz away: and he came to Egypt, and died there. 35 And Jehoiakim gave the silver and the gold to Pharaoh; but he taxed the land to give the money according to the commandment of Pharaoh: he exacted the silver and the gold of the people of the land, of every one according to his taxation, to give it unto Pharaoh-nechoh. 36 Jehoiakim was twenty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother’s name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

2. Jehoahaz of Judah (23:31-35)

31-35. This king’s reign was short. The account consists only of a Deuteronomic condemnation of him (vss. 31-32), together with the statement that he ended his days a prisoner in Egypt. He was not the oldest son of Josiah (cf. vss. 31, 36). Presumably this son supported the nationalistic policy of his father, since Neco almost immediately summoned him to the Egyptian headquarters at Riblah by the Orontes and deposed him in favor of his elder brother, Eliakim, whose name he changed to Jehoiakim. The new king instituted a capital levy in order to pay the tribute which the Egyptian king demanded.

Jehoiakim reigned for eleven years. During his reign Neco and his army were annihilated at Charchemish on the Euphrates. This event freed Jehoiakim from the Egyptian suzerainty, but his freedom was short lived because when he attempted to resist the Babylonian domination he found himself faced with Nebuchadrezzar and his army. The Judahite king died before the clash of arms and left his son to deal with a desperate situation.

36-37. Here is the normal Deuteronomic notice of the accession of a new king of Judah. If the earlier Deuteronomic compiler of 610 B.C. did indeed complete his work which an evil king is followed by a good one, and a good one by an evil one. Ahaz and Hezekiah; Hezekiah and Manasseh; Amon and Josiah; Josiah and Jehoiakim. When Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim died in degradation, no tears were shed for them (Jer. 22:10, 18-19). When Josiah died, there was national lamentation and he was buried in honor. The reward of the righteous man always lies in the honor in which he is held after his death; the fate of the unrighteous lies in the infamy which is forever attached to his name. The best commentary on name was Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah.

37 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his fathers had done.

24 In his days Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up, and Jehoiakim became his servant three years: then he turned and rebelled against him.

2 And the Lord sent against him bands of the Chaldees, and bands of the Syrians, and bands of the Moabites, and bands of the children of Ammon, and sent them against Judah to destroy it, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake by his servants the prophets.

3 Surely at the commandment of the Lord came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his sight, for the sins of Manasseh, according to all that he did; before the death of King Josiah, then these verses are the work of the later Deuteronomistic editor of ca. 550 B.C.

24:1-7. Vs. 1 is the final extract from the royal annals of Judah. Vs. 7 seems to be a fragmentary remnant of a passage which told of the defeat of Pharaoh Neco at Carchemish in 605 B.C. Jehoiakim had evidently become vassal to Nebuchadrezzar when the new king of Babylon overran Syria, either in the year after Carchemish, i.e., 604 B.C. (in which case Jehoiakim's rebellion took place in 601 B.C.) or else in 601 B.C. (in which case the rebellion took place ca. 598 B.C.). In the first case we must assume that various robber bands (vs. 2) were acting under Babylonian authority and with Nebuchadrezzar's encouragement in order to keep Jehoiakim busy until Nebuchadrezzar himself was free to deal with the situation. It is more likely that Jehoiakim was free from any outside domination till 601 B.C. Nebuchadrezzar was too busy elsewhere, and the various bands were probably making the most of their opportunities of plunder, consequent upon the collapse of the Egyptian authority in Syria, before Nebuchadrezzar could restore order. For Syrians read "Edomites" (גַּזְרַנָּא for גְּזִירֵה). Lucian adds "and of the Samaritans" (as does LXX in the parallel II Chr. 36:5). The prophets mentioned in vs. 2 were Jeremiah and Uriah (Jer. 26:20 ff.).

3. The later Deuteronomist develops his theme that the dead weight of Manasseh's sins brought ruin to Jerusalem in spite of all that Josiah could do.

the lives of these kings of Judah is found in the eloquent passage in the apocryphal book of the Wisdom of Solomon (5:1-15), which ought to be more often read in our churches.

24:1-7. Jehoiakim and Jeremiah.—Portentous events now follow in swift succession. In 612 B.C. Nineveh fell with a crash which startled the world (Nah. 2–3). And now Babylon rose to power under her brilliant new king Nebuchadrezzar, defeated the Egyptians at Carchemish (Jer. 46:1-12), and then in the fourth or fifth year of the reign of Jehoiakim swept down upon Palestine. Without a struggle Judah yielded and Jehoiakim became a vassal of Babylon. Jerusalem was spared. But it was a short eleven years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Zebi'dah the daughter of Peda'ah of Rumah. 37 And he did what was evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his fathers had done.

24 In his days Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up, and Jehoi'akim became his servant three years: then he turned and rebelled against him. 2 And the Lord sent against him bands of the Chaldeans, and bands of the Syrians, and bands of the Moabites, and bands of the children of Ammon, and sent them against Judah to destroy it, according to the word of the Lord which he spoke by his servants the prophets.

3 Surely this came upon Judah at the command of the Lord, to remove them out of his sight, for the sins of Manasseh, accord-
4 And also for the innocent blood that he shed: for he filled Jerusalem with innocent blood: which the Lord would not pardon.

5 * Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

6 So Jehoiakim slept with his fathers: and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

7 And the king of Egypt came not again any more out of his land: for the king of Babylon had taken from the river of Egypt unto the river Euphrates all that pertained to the king of Egypt.

8 * Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in

5-6. The editor adds the customary obituary notice, continuing it in vs. 7 with a note concerning the complete weakness of Egypt after the disaster at Carchemish.

4. Jehoiachin of Judah (24:8-17)

This young king inherited an impossible situation, with the Babylonian army besieging the city while he had no resources. He surrendered forthwith and went into exile with all his court. Nebuchadrezzar plundered the temple and carried into captivity all the arms, the craftsmen, and the smiths, everyone who was likely to raise the standard of revolt or could manufacture war material, and left only the lowest stratum of the people.

8-9. Here again is the customary Deuteronomic notice of the accession of a king of Judah. The adverse comment on this king is not in accordance with the judgment of Ezekiel, who seems to regard him favorably (Ezek. 17:22-24).

 Jeremiah cared nothing for what became of himself. Such was the contrast. Yet there was a certain identity in their fate. The king came to an unhappy end. But so did the prophet, who never knew the meaning of human happiness. During the whole of this terrible decade he persisted in opposing the policies of Jehoiakim and his parasites, going so far as to predict the conquest of Jerusalem by the Babylonians, thus laying himself open to the charge of treason. It is a mystery that he was allowed to live. As it was, he was flung into a dungeon (Jer. 38:6), and his life ended in sheer tragedy (Jer. 43:1-7). Thus both king and prophet outwardly met much the same fate. Yet in the light of history how different has been their destiny. Jehoiakim's proper epitaph reads, "The name of the wicked shall rot" (Prov. 10:7). The total achievement of Jehoiakim adds up to less than zero. And Jeremiah? His epitaph reads, "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 5:10). Jeremiah lived in a kingdom of which Jehoiakim knew nothing. For the highest of all joys is that in which one's self is wholly lost in complete devotion to the will of God.

This gives to life its highest unity, consistency, power, peace, and joy. Such was the kingdom in which Jeremiah lived, moved, and had his being. And when he died, he left an immortal bequest to humanity: the concepts of a higher, truer, and more spiritual religion than the world had ever known. Derided in his lifetime, scorned and neglected, Jeremiah both in what he was and in what he did became revered as few were revered who came before or after him. He has his permanent place among this world's immortals. Jehoiakim and Jeremiah! Contemporaries, man and man; living in the same place and under the same circumstances. Did two men standing side by side, by their characters, careers, and destinies ever teach such deep and solemn truths: "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23); "He that doeth the will of God abideth for ever" (I John 2:17)?

8-9. Jehoiachin.—Came to the throne Jehoiachin. Here is a man to be pitied. He was a favorite of the people (Jer. 22:24), and there must have been something attractive about him, for brief as his reign was—only three months— he was not forgotten (Ezek. 19:8-9), and his Babylonian captors had mercy on him (25:27-
Jerusalem three months. And his mother's name was Nekushta, the daughter of Elnathan of Jerusalem.

9 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his father had done.

10 At that time the servants of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up against Jerusalem, and the city was besieged.

11 And Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came against the city, and his servants did besiege it.

12 And Jehoiachin the king of Judah went out to the king of Babylon, he, and his mother, and his servants, and his princes, and his officers: and the king of Babylon took him in the eighth year of his reign.

13 And he carried out thence all the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house, and cut in pieces all the vessels of gold which Solomon king of Israel had made in the temple of the Lord, as the Lord had said.

14 And he carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valor, even ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and smiths: none remained, save the poorest sort of the people of the land.

10-17. Jehoiakim died in time, and it was left for the youthful Jehoiachin to surrender quickly and so to save the city and the temple from destruction.

12. The date of the first captivity is here given as Nebuchadnezzar's eighth year (597 b.c.), whereas Jer. 52:28 mentions the “seventh year” (see 25:27).

13-14. These two verses belong to a different stratum of tradition from vss. 15-16. Stade held with some justification that they are more suitable to the deportation of 586 b.c. On the other hand, the figures given, in both vss. 14 and 16, do not agree with

30. We are told (vs. 9) that he did evil. But was it he or his mother Nekushta? For it seems likely that she was the real ruler for this brief period (Jer. 13:18). Neither can we forget that her father Elnathan had dragged back Uriah (Jer. 26:22-23) from Egypt to be murdered by Jehoiakim. Evil influences encompassed the young king, only eighteen, who came into such a terrible situation in national affairs. We read of it in Habakkuk, whose prophecy was written a few years earlier. Corruption and irreligion within the kingdom, and the Chaldeans at the gates!

Here, then, we find tragedy of a kind to arouse our deepest compassion: a young man made for better things, who with a different chance in life might have done well, crushed by circumstances over which he had no control, when he became king, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Nekushta the daughter of Elnathan of Jerusalem. And he did what was evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his father had done.

10 At that time the servants of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up against Jerusalem, and the city was besieged. 11 And Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came to the city, while his servants were besieging it; 12 and Jehoiachin the king of Judah gave himself up to the king of Babylon, himself, and his mother, and his servants, and his princes, and his palace officials. The king of Babylon took him prisoner in the eighth year of his reign, 13 and carried off all the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house, and cut in pieces all the vessels of gold in the temple of the Lord, which Solomon king of Israel had made, as the Lord had foretold. 14 He carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valor, ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and the smiths; none remained, except the poorest people of the land.
15 And he carried away Jehoiachin to Babylon, and the king's mother, and the king's wives, and his officers, and the might of the land, those carried he into captivity from Jerusalem to Babylon.
16 And all the men of might, even seven thousand, and craftsmen and smiths a thousand, all that were strong and apt for war, even them the king of Babylon brought captive to Babylon.
17 And the king of Babylon made Mattaniah his father's brother king in his stead, and changed his name to Zedekiah.
18 Zedekiah was twenty and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

the very moderate figures of Jer. 52:28-50 (a total of 4,600 for three deportations—including that in 581 B.C. with a total of 745 deportees).
15. This verse agrees with Jer. 27:20, which says that Nebuchadrezzar carried away the king and the nobility but makes no reference to any other groups.
17. Mattaniah (Zedekiah) was full brother to the Jehoahaz who had been carried captive to Egypt by Pharaoh Neco in 608 B.C. He would therefore be supposed to be a safe anti-Egyptian.

Zedekiah proved unable to resist the pro-Egyptian party, which gained strength mostly because Nebuchadrezzar had unwisely transported the more responsible elements

What fastens our attention in this fearful drama is the character of King Zedekiah. Personally he was attractive, likable, and well intentioned. He was treated by Jeremiah with a deference never showed to Jehoiakim. Zedekiah, on his part, revered and honored the prophet, placed great confidence in his character and counsel, and doubtless recognized that to submit to the Babylonians was the wiser course to pursue (Jer. 37:7-9; 38:16-24). His personal convictions coincided with those of the prophet. But he was beset on the other hand by political pressure and popular sentiment that favored rebellion. And this course was further supported by other prophets, notably by Hananiah (Jer. 28:1-3), who declared boldly that within two years the captives in Babylon would return and that the yoke of Babylon would be broken. Thus we have the tragic picture of a man whose conscience and whose truest friend urged him one way while the whole crowd of politicians and timeserving prophets were hounding him to the opposite course of action. Why has no one dramatized this fearsome episode in literature? Zedekiah, terrorized by the chauvinists, yielded at last, deliberately broke the 19 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that Jehoiakim had done.

20 For through the anger of the LORD it came to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, until he had cast them out from his presence, that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

25 And it came to pass in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came, he, and all his host, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it; and they built forts against it round about.

2 And the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

3 And on the ninth day of the fourth month the famine prevailed in the city, and there was no bread for the people of the land.

4 ¶ And the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled by night by the way of the gate between two walls, which is by the king's garden: (now the Chaldees were to Babylonia. Apart from the family of Shaphan the scribe, who had been prominent in Josiah's time, the king seems to have had no one left who was capable of supporting the inspired and balanced judgment of the prophet Jeremiah. There is a certain amount of evidence that the accession of Psamtk II to the throne of Egypt in 593 B.C. caused considerable unrest in the western provinces of the Babylonian Empire, but the promised revolt did not take place till Apries (Hophra) secured the Egyptian crown in 588 B.C. Once more the hope of help from the powers of the Nile brought Judah into trouble, and this time it proved to be complete destruction.

25:1. The custom of reckoning the months by number is a postexilic fashion due to Babylonian influence. The siege began about the end of December, on the tenth of the tenth month. By the latter part of June in the next year there was no food left for the civilians.

4. When the city wall was breached, Zedekiah and the surviving fighting men made a sally through the gate which led out from the space between the two ancient Jebusite walls which still existed on the north side of the ancient city. On the other three sides there solemn oath he had made to Nebuchadrezzar, and rebelled. This brought down upon him the scathing condemnation of both Jeremiah and Ezekiel (Ezek. 17:19). Even in those days solemn covenants between nations were held to be more than "a scrap of paper."

How often has this tragedy in the life of Zedekiah been re-enacted in the lives of men, high and low. They are good and well meaning. They know what is right and they want to do it. They are placed in positions which demand stamina, courage, and loyalty to standards of conduct and action in which they themselves believe. They have some friends in whom they can trust, who urge firmness in standing for what they know is right. Yet in the shifting sphere of politics and business there is the belaying crowd which tells them that everything will be won in the way of preferment and success by a policy which involves dishonor, the breaking of solemn pledges, parting with conscience and the demands of simple truth and rectitude. The drama was enacted on a high level in the case of Zedekiah. But the issue is the same on any level, high or low. And always the results are the same.

24:20. The Futility of Rebellion.—Zedekiah rebelled. And rebellion against the plain and 5 And the army of the Chaldees pursued after the king, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho: and all his army were scattered from him.

6 So they took the king, and brought him up to the king of Babylon to Riblah: and they gave judgment upon him.

7 And they slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes, and put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon.

8 And in the fifth month, on the seventh day of the month, which is the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzar-adan, captain of the guard, a servant of the king of Babylon, unto Jerusalem:

9 And he burnt the house of the Lord, and the king's house, and all the houses of Jerusalem, and every great man's house burnt he with fire.

10 And all the army of the Chaldees, that were with the captain of the guard, brake down the walls of Jerusalem round about.

were steep ascents, and little other protection was needed, but on the north side extra precautions had been taken. The double walls on the north have been recently discovered (F. Garrow Duncan, "Millo and the City of David," Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft, XLII [1924], 222-44). To the east the desert country came close up to the city, and this easy access to the desolate lands proved more than once a refuge to the hard-bested defenders of Jerusalem. Many men escaped by this means in the final stages of the resistance against Titus in A.D. 70.

5. Zedekiah followed the same general direction as that by which David had escaped in the first stage of Absalom's revolt, but he was overtaken by the pursuing Babylonians in the Jordan Valley near Jericho.

6. Riblah had been the headquarters of Pharaoh Neco also (23:33). It acted as a convenient center for the subjugation of the whole of Syria.

6. DESTRUCTION OF THE TEMPLE AND THE CITY (25:8-17)

The Babylonians burned the whole city, temple, palace, and all the houses. They deported the population and left behind only agricultural workers. They took away all the metalwork of the temple, bronze, gold, and silver. The annihilation of the city was complete.

8. According to Jer. 52:29, the destruction took place in Nebuchadrezzar's eighteenth year (587 B.C.), but the nineteenth is correct, i.e., 586 B.C. (see Exeg. on 24:12-15).

evident will of God is always folly. However repugnant to the Jewish nationalistic consciousness, nothing was plainer than that it was the will of God that his people must sacrifice pride and accept the humiliation of domination by a foreign power. So urged Jeremiah. They refused. And by their refusal, as a result, final calamity overtook them. Judah paid dearly for its act of perfidy. And many a nation in our modern world has paid a high price for following a similar course of dishonor. God's judgments are true and righteous altogether.

Zedekiah's rebellion was not only dishonorable; it was also futile. Precisely so in personal 11 Now the rest of the people that were left in the city, and the fugitives that fell away to the king of Babylon, with the remnant of the multitude, did Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carry away.

12 But the captain of the guard left of the poor of the land to be vinedressers and husbandmen.

13 And the pillars of brass that were in the house of the Lord, and the bases, and the brazen sea that was in the house of the Lord, did the Chaldees break in pieces, and carried the brass of them to Babylon.

14 And the pots, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away.

15 And the firepans, and the bowls, and such things as were of gold, in gold, and of silver, in silver, the captain of the guard took away.

16 The two pillars, one sea, and the bases which Solomon had made for the house of the Lord; the brass of all these vessels was without weight.

17 The height of the one pillar was eighteen cubits, and the chapter upon it was brass: and the height of the chapter three cubits: and the wreathed work, and pomegranates upon the chapter round about, all of brass: and like unto these had the second pillar with wreathed work.

18 And the captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door:

down the walls around Jerusalem. 11 And the rest of the people who were left in the city and the deserters who had deserted to the king of Babylon, together with the rest of the multitude, Nebuz’azar’ad’an the captain of the guard carried into exile. 12 But the captain of the guard left some of the poorest of the land to be vinedressers and plowmen.

13 And the pillars of bronze that were in the house of the Lord, and the stands and the bronze sea that were in the house of the Lord, the Chaldeans broke in pieces, and carried the bronze to Babylon. 14 And they took away the pots, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the dishes for incense and all the vessels of bronze used in the temple service, 15 the firepans also, and the bowls. What was of gold the captain of the guard took away as gold, and what was of silver, as silver. 16 As for the two pillars, the one sea, and the stands, which Solomon had made for the house of the Lord, the bronze of all these vessels was beyond weight. 17 The height of the one pillar was eighteen cubits, and upon it was a capital of bronze: the height of the capital was three cubits; a network and pomegranates, all of bronze, were upon the capital round about. And the second pillar had the like, with the network.

18 And the captain of the guard took Sera’jah the chief priest, and Ze’phani’ah the second priest, and the three keepers of 16-17. There is a fuller description of these bronzes in Jer. 52:20-23. Here the reference to the bronze bulls which supported the bronze sea is omitted. Perhaps this is deliberate and correct, for it has been stated in II Kings 16:17 that Ahaz had removed them to give them to his Assyrian overlord. The Deuteronomic editor of ca. 550 B.C. was aware of this, and knew also that other bronzes had disappeared before the final destruction. He therefore omitted the numbers of the pomegranates and reduced the other numbers.

7. Execution of the Leaders (25:18-22)

18-22. These were the men who had been responsible for the revolt. The Babylonians might not be able to stop another revolt, though they intended to do their best, but experience we discover the folly of rebellion against the will of God. Times come in a man’s life when he is asked to accept what looks like the undeserved ruin of all his earthly hopes. Pride rebels. He cannot and will not submit. He remains defiant against a fate that is repugnant to all his human desires. He resists with all his strength, only to know at last the bitterness of defeat and alienation from the God in whom once he believed. There is but the one way: submission to and acceptance of whatever may seem most intolerable, if this cannot be avoided

THE INTERPRETER'S BIBLE

19 And out of the city he took an officer that was set over the men of war, and five men of them that were in the king's presence, which were found in the city, and the principal scribe of the host, which mustered the people of the land, and threescore men of the people of the land that were found in the city:

20 And Nebuzaradan captain of the guard took these, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah:

21 And the king of Babylon smote them, and slew them at Riblah in the land of Hamath. So Judah was carried away out of their land.

22 ¶ And as for the people that remained in the land of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon had left, even over them he made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, ruler.

23 And when all the captains of the armies, they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah governor, there came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan the son of Careah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth the Netophathite, and Jaazaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

they certainly made sure that these men could not lead a second one. According to Jer. 52:25, there were seven, not five.

8. GEDALIAH GOVERNOR OF JUDAH (25:23-26)

The editor has reached the last stage in his sad tale. According to Josephus (Antiquities X. 9. 1-2), Gedaliah was a man of gentle and generous disposition who won the confidence of the captains of the guerrilla bands. He sought by his kindness and generosity to conciliate them, and he refused to believe in the treachery of Ishmael when Johanan warned him. He himself preferred to be slain rather than to destroy a man who had fled to him for refuge. Such misplaced generosity brought Gedaliah to his death, for Ishmael, encouraged by the king of Ammon, assassinated him and threw everything once more into confusion. Ishmael slew every man he found in Mizpah, both Jews and Babylonians, all the “collaborators” (Jer. 40:1-16).

23. The town of Mizpah which was Gedaliah's headquarters was Mizpah of Benjamin, fortified by Asa with the timber and the stones which Baasha had been using in his fortification works at Ramah (I Kings 15:22).

and is the plain, even if it remains the mysterious, will of God for us. It is the only pathway to peace and to ultimate victory. Out of the humiliation of earthly hopes often comes the discovery of unsuspected spiritual blessings. “There is only one thing to do,” a devout woman once said, “when you have a bitter cup to drink. You must take it in both hands, put it to your lips, and drink it down to its last dregs. Only so can you absorb it and discover its meaning. So long as you hold it at a distance and refuse to drink it, you will know nothing but bitterness and loss of faith and peace.”

25:22-30. Ave Atque Vale.—One more dreadful episode remains for the historian to chronicle. It is narrated in vss. 22-26. The beggarly
24 And Gedaliah swore to them, and to their men, and said unto them, Fear not to be the servants of the Chaldees: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon; and it shall be well with you.

25 But it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, came, and ten men with him, and smote Gedaliah, that he died, and the Jews and the Chaldees that were with him at Mizpah.

26 And all the people, both small and great, and the captains of the armies, arose, and came to Egypt: for they were afraid of the Chaldees.

27 ¶ And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon in the year that he began to reign did lift up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah out of prison;

28 And he spake kindly to him, and set his throne above the throne of the kings that were with him in Babylon;

29 And changed his prison garments: and he did eat bread continually before him all the days of his life.

30 And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king, a daily rate for every day, all the days of his life.

In the spring of 561 B.C. Jehoiachin, after thirty-seven years of captivity, found himself restored to a position of favor. He was not permitted to return home to Palestine but he did get a measure of preferment. Nebuchadrezzar had died in 562 B.C., and the new king Amel-Marduk (562-560 B.C.) changed his father’s policy with respect to the captive king.

27. The phrase lift up the head is similarly used in Gen. 40:13 for describing release from actual prison.

29. The custom of eating at the king’s table is a high honor (II Sam. 19:33; I Kings 2:7).

30. A number of cuneiform tablets have been recovered from a chamber in the northeast corner of Nebuchadrezzar’s southern fort, beneath the ground floor of the remnant of the people, alarmed by the assassination of Gedaliah and in fear of Babylon, fled back to Egypt, carrying the aged prophet Jeremiah with them. Let the Bible reader turn to the book of Exodus, reread the story of the deliverance of God’s people from Egypt, then think of this stampede of wretched fugitives back to Egypt, and he will have compassed the whole tragic story of a people whose persistent moral disobedience to the will of God had brought about this incredible reversal of their fortunes. It did not take forty years for the return through the wilderness to Egypt. Moral retrogression is always swifter than moral advance. And the life of the people goes out in oblivion and obliquity in the very Egypt from which they had once set out on their pilgrim’s progress to the Promised Land.

The last word in this book (vss. 27-30) contrasts strangely with what has preceded it. For palace. Four of these refer to provisions which were supplied to Jehoiachin and his fellow prisoners. They belong to the period 594-569 B.C., so that the last of them is at least eight years earlier than the time of Jehoiachin's good fortune. It is evident therefore that Evil-merodach increased the king's allowance from the meager amount recorded in the tablets (G. R. Driver, "Jehoiakin in Captivity," Expository Times, LVI [1945] 317-18).

The book of Kings ends on a note of hope. It is not the triumphant expectation of the earlier compiler of 610 B.C., the man who conceived the work itself, but it provides a ground of confidence in God's future redemption, the groundwork on which Second Isaiah and Ezekiel built, and out of which there grew the restored community of post-exilic days.

It tells of a generous act by one of whom we should least have expected it: the pagan King Evil-merodach. Thus we discover that no human heart but has in it the seeds of kindness and compassion. Our historian wrote during the Exile, and he seems glad to record this touch of mercy which he may have felt to be prophetic of mercies yet to come. And so it proved to be. For in God's own time these exiles, taught by sorrow and disciplined by suffering, were to usher in a new day not only for their own people but for all mankind.

Chronicles is one of the most stimulating books in the Bible, courageous and practical—a splendid achievement. But that high valuation depends on understanding that Chronicles is not what it appears to be. Anyone who supposes that it is a history of Judah, which its author wanted or expected his readers to accept as accurate, is almost certain to consider it for the most part dull and frequently incredible. That impression of its character is widely held, and in consequence these two great books have become virtually deadwood in the Bible. They come alive when the real intentions of the Chronicler and the peculiar method which he used to make his purpose effective are apprehended. Properly understood, Chronicles has a rightful and indeed unique place in the Scriptures. It is the only instance of Hebraic philosophy of history presented on an immense scale. It is theology, powerfully and persuasively inculcating three doctrines: that human life exists under the overruling of an immutable moral order ordained by God; that observance of rightful forms of worship is of paramount importance for the community; and that God’s revelation is given not only in past time but in the present—a living word of truth. The Chronicler had to urge this philosophy and these doctrines, not by abstract argument, but by a method wholly strange to us although sufficiently clear to his contemporaries. The Chronicler taught by painting a picture of the past, in which sometimes he laid emphasis on the religio-moral causes and consequences of events that actually had happened and sometimes gave a freely imagined delineation of what ought to have happened. Even where he makes use of facts, his aim is to depict “truth of idea.” The mode should not be lightly esteemed, unfamiliar though it is. Expositors of the New Testament do not belittle the parables of Jesus on the ground that this and that did not really happen; their penetrating “truth of idea” is thankfully and seriously pondered.

The Chronicler’s pictorial method was, of course, dramatic. Drama, except perhaps for the book of Job, is supposed to be unrepresented in Hebrew literature. But Chronicles is essentially a vast and moving drama, ranging from Adam to the destruction of the Judean kingdom. We should see in its first nine chapters a prelude, subtly inviting us to feel that human history from its commencement led up to the radiant morning of David’s reign and the noonday splendor of Solomon, culminating in his dedication of the glorious temple for the rightful worship of God. Thereafter the drama unfolds its grim sequel in the succession of those kings of Judah to whom so much had been entrusted, from whom came so seldom good, so often evil. Again and again light shines, only to be swiftly quenched in darkness. (We should ask ourselves, Will evil prevail in human affairs? Will men fatally never learn to see and choose the ways of God?) Toward the end of the drama there are two periods (the reigns of Hezekiah and Josiah) when it seems as if victory may rest with good; but they are transient. At the last, black night descends on the tragedy of Jerusalem: the city is captured and destroyed and its temple burned. Its kings and people had persisted in wickedness until there was no remedy.

This drama could never be acted. It was composed for reading and reflection. But suppose it had been enacted before the eyes of the men of Jerusalem in the time of the Chronicler, long after the sack of Jerusalem, with what thoughts should they have witnessed it? They realized that overwhelming military might had abolished their political independence. They were men in peril of despondency or despair. But they knew that, although seemingly final night had fallen when the Davidic kingdom had been destroyed, light had arisen in darkness.
Their people had rallied on a religion purified and ennobled by the thoughts of God and duty which the prophets had demanded. Jerusalem's temple had been rebuilt; their national consciousness had not ceased. A wonderful spiritual coherence of Israel was possible, not only among themselves in Palestine, but also among the multitude of their brethren dispersed in many lands. The Chronicler's delineation of the terrible past could therefore stir in them far more than the emotions of pity and terror which great tragic drama creates in the beholder. For them it was a call to the living, a solemn exhortation to faith and hope—that they should trust in the one God of righteousness and remember his precepts to do them. "Believe in the Lord your God, and you will be established; believe his prophets, and you will succeed" (II Chr. 20:20).

I. Characteristics

Unless the purpose and method of the Chronicler are thus realized, a modern reader—especially if he compares Chronicles with Samuel and Kings—is likely to be of the opinion that very little of intellectual and spiritual value would be lost if this strange work had been omitted from the Bible. No doubt he would grant that here and there beautiful verses appear in its long course. Apart from that, Chronicles on a superficial view seems to be for the most part unnecessary, uninteresting, defective in comparison with Samuel and Kings, and in many matters incredible. Consider severally those strictures:

Unnecessary: At least to the extent that fully half of Chronicles copies verbatim, or with some adaptations, parts of Genesis, Samuel, and Kings. What advantage is there in being able to read the same words in two places in the Bible?

Uninteresting: At least in part. Take a glance at the name lists which fill from end to end I Chr. 1–9, and at similar punctilious lists—most of them concerning ancestors of Levites serving the temple in various functions—which recur throughout the book. Presumably these pedigrees interested some Jews dead and buried many centuries ago. But we must ask: "How can they help us to deal with present problems? What value is in them for the spirit of man in the age-long quest for truth and right?"

Defective: Chronicles is lopsided, an exclusive history of Judah which ignores the story of the northern kingdom of Israel, except for a few frowning side glances at times when the doings of certain kings of Israel affected Judah. Not a syllable in Chronicles about Elijah's stand for God and justice! If we want to know fully about the Hebrew monarchies, who would not choose Samuel and Kings? Moreover, even as regards the Judean kingdom, Chronicles strangely omits many of the most memorable and moving narratives told in Samuel and Kings. The acute student, however, will question for two reasons whether this adverse estimate as to deficiency is not too sweeping. He will point out first that Chronicles constantly has modified what it quotes in such a way as to alter the significance of the record. In thus changing the color of things is there justifiable improvement? But the general effect of the changes is that what was vivid and convincing in Samuel and Kings has become stiff and artificial. It is as if the vitality has been taken out of the narratives and, instead, the Chronicler offers us "History in a stained-glass window." For example, in Samuel, David lives before us, an imperfect but very great and attractive personality. In Chronicles, David is an almost perfect saint, his years as monarch concentrated on caring for the sacred ark and its clergy, and on making provision for the future temple. But second, there is in Chronicles a large number of passages—many complete chapters—purporting to give information not recorded in Samuel and Kings. What is their worth? On scrutiny it appears indisputable that they furnish an absolute minimum (if any at all) of reliable new information about the kingdom of Judah. And most of their contents concerns the temple, the organization of its staff, celebrations of religious rites on great occasions. We are bound to ask, "What abiding importance have those matters for us?"

Incredible: Consider the unbelievable features in Chronicles. For one thing, it ascribes to David the institution of elaborate arrangements about the Levites. For overwhelmingly strong reasons, based on other scriptures, what is related is not credible history. Next, the Chronicler exaggerates numbers and amounts out of all possibility; sometimes we are able to contrast his allegations with comparatively reasonable figures in Kings. David and Solomon were rulers of a nascent Palestinian state: the Chronicler declares that between them they amassed for the building and decoration of a small temple treasure of such value that it would suffice to meet the modern world's financial crises. Again, the Chronicler ascribes to certain good Judean kings stupendous armies—to Jehoshaphat, 1,160,000 soldiers attending him in Jerusalem. Moreover, the point he drives home is this: that the issues of war turned not upon the vast numbers of soldiers, but upon something radically different. Whenever, he declares, a king of Judah, threatened by foes, sought divine aid and obeyed the guidance of a ideal: in its sternness and beauty he was persuading them to revere and love its righteousness in order that they and their children after them should translate the abiding ideal into actuality. Then their difficulties would turn into boundless opportunity. Chronicles surpasses all else in the Old Testament in this mode; the stories of the patriarchs in Genesis exemplify it, but in a less exalted degree. In modern literature we have nothing really comparable, the nearest approach being the free treatment of past events found in historical novels or dramas. Shakespeare, for example, drew upon the facts of history to construct his drama of Henry V, but he did so with creative liberty, ascribing to the king a most noble character and the utterance of immortal words. The motion picture added photographic aid to the poet’s genius. Who that has seen the result on stage or screen can forget the presented ideal of youthful charm and royal responsibility, of forethought, endurance, courage, and generosity crowned with success? The book of Chronicles asks to be weighed as portrayal of profound principles which enable us rightly to deal with life’s vicissitudes and choices. In reading Chronicles do not say, “This cannot possibly have happened as related.” That would be a frame of mind which misconceives the intention of the Chronicler, and fails to see the strength of his teaching.

Accordingly, outline realization of the circumstances amid which the Chronicler lived is imperatively necessary. Here are the historical landmarks that would dwell in his own and his fellows’ thoughts. (a) In 721 B.C. the kingdom of Israel had come to an end when the Assyrians captured Samaria and removed into captivity some thirty thousand Israelites, replacing them by alien settlers. (b) In 586 ended the kingdom of Judah when the Babylonians sacked Jerusalem, broke down its walls, burned temple and palace, and deported to Babylonia its leading citizens and craftsmen, in number about thirty to fifty thousand persons. (c) In 538, when Cyrus the Persian conquered Babylon, he permitted Jews to go back to Palestine. Some returned to Jerusalem; and among them in all likelihood not a few were sons whose fathers had been members of the Zadokite hierarchy of Solomon’s temple. (d) In 520-516 a substitute temple was built; pitifully poor it seemed in comparison with Solomon’s; still for the moment hopes ran high. (e) Thereafter for about 150 years nothing in particular happened, until in 384—perhaps not 444, as used to be thought—Nehemiah, coming from Babylonia with authority from its Persian king, rebuilt Jerusalem’s walls. (f) Shortly afterward a caravan of some 1,800 Jews led by Ezra (if the event is not exaggerated) returned to Jerusalem from Babylonia, among them being 262 Levites.

II. Purpose

The Chronicler shows absorbing interest in the temple and its staff of priests. Levites, musicians, custodians, and so on. To understand his purpose it is necessary to consider what had been happening to the worship of Yahweh, and its administration, from the fall of the kingdoms down to the Chronicler's period. In conquered Israel the Assyrians in 721 B.C. had prohibited sacrifice to Yahweh at the Hebrew sanctuaries. Many would acquiesce to the fact that Assyrian deities must now be propitiated instead of Yahweh who had “let them down.” But obstinate Israelites hated the humiliating religious restriction and began to think seriously about their own God. (Take the Bible away and people will clamor to be allowed to read it.) They reflected that certain prophets had foretold disaster and that it would be just retribution for their social cruelty and for worshipping baals as well as Yahweh. All Israelish Levites who would not serve Assyrian deities had to seek other employment. Some years after 721 the Assyrians permitted sacrifices to Yahweh, but at one place only in the occupied land, at Bethel. Meantime, many bold Israelites (see Exeg. on II Chr. 30:1-31:27) had accepted an invitation from the Judean King Hezekiah to go to Jerusalem to keep the Passover: they would be impressed by its splendid temple in the still independent kingdom.

When the kingdom of Judah was overthrown in 586 its inhabitants were stunned for a time. But in Judah, as earlier in Israel, the mass of the population—perhaps four out of every five Hebrews—was left in Palestine. The stout-hearted did not collapse like weaklings. Hebrews stand up to protracted calamity, a tenacious, resilient people. But what could they do? They carried on with ordinary life and began to take seriously the teachings of the great prophets. They began to believe that the overthrow of their city and kingdom had happened not because the gods of the Babylonians were mightier than Yahweh, but because there really is only one God, the Almighty, whose will is righteousness. The disaster had been, as the prophets had foreseen, his just retribution on their fathers' and their own iniquities (cf. Lam. 2; 4:13). That was an illuminating and recreative thought. They began to ask how rightly they should treat one another, and how rightly reverence God.

In all probability not very long after 586, and certainly long before 538, worship of Yahweh was resumed at the sacred area in Jerussome men to forget the ancient enmities, and to see in God-fearing Israelites their brethren. He bade them read that to the coronation of David 400,000 such Israelites had come, and 22,000 Judeans (I Chr. 12:29-38). He related that when two good kings, Hezekiah and Josiah, were reigning in Jerusalem, a huge concourse of Israelites had come to keep Passover, the Hebrew sacrament of deliverance and unity (II Chr. 30; 35). What wise, far-sighted teaching that was for the Chronicler's time! Perhaps he had glimpsed an ineffable hope latent in his generous attitude. Did he descry, faintly and afar, that if only bitter men, intent on prestige, eager about so-called principles but blind to the holy purpose of God, did not wreck the hope, there might yet be one people of God throughout the wide world, wherever Jews had taken to heart Jeremiah's inspiration that in any land they could pray to God and be answered, if they would love and serve his righteous will? (Jer. 29:1-14; the Chronicler was aware of Jeremiah's greatness: see II Chr. 36:12.) It is a thought which should stab the sleeping conscience of divided Christendom. In the depressing fifth century, when nothing in particular happened and the walls remained broken down, apathy and worldliness set in. The priests slew slack and slovenly, the people careless about their support and negligent in coming to the great occasions of worship. Against that deadly tendency the Chronicler set himself. He painted "what should be" in a parable of "history"—David's ceaseless care for the sacred ark and the Levites and the future house of God; the splendor of Solomon's temple with its golden vessels, throngs of diligent Levites, countless sacrifices offered by thankful king and people, and magnificence of music; and how, whenever under the good kings this faithfulness had been renewed, there came not only from Judah, but from Israel also, "a multitude keeping festival" (Ps. 42:4). After this fashion the Chronicler idealized the worship of Judah's past kingdom, and in everything was solemnly declaring his fundamental faith concerning life, that out of evil, evil comes, and out of good, good. Again and again he said it, symbolically, with utmost emphasis. He said it with a great confidence upholding him; for he was very sure of the abiding mercy of God. In effect, he told his readers that if they had a million soldiers to protect them, everything would really depend on whether their reliance was in God. If they would trust their lives to the ways of righteousness, would listen to the words of the living God, then no power on earth could defeat their spirit or turn aside their destiny in the high providence of God. Great teaching for his own period and for many another century since then!

III. Date

The outcome of clerical tension in Jerusalem during the fifth century was that certain Levitical families who could claim descent from Levi through Zadok or, more widely, through Aaron, established themselves as having exclusive sacerdotal rights: they alone were "priests unto God," in contrast to all other Levites (musicians, singers, custodians, porters) whose status was that of "ministers unto their brethren the priests" (see Exeg. on I Chr. 6:1-81). Subsequent to this strict differentiation an orthodox Jew would be careful to refer to "the priests and the Levites": at an earlier stage it was permissible to use the Deuteronomical phrase "the priests, the Levites," and, as the Chronicler does, to allude to Levites (unspecified) as exercising functions later reserved to the Aaronite Zadokites. The superiority of the Aaronite Zadokites was solemnly documented as carrying the authority of Moses by those portions of the Pentateuch which are termed the Priestly Code, and when the whole Pentateuch was promulgated—apparently not earlier than 450 nor later than 550 b.c.—a final settlement had been reached: this, and neither more nor less, was the law of God given by Moses.

Prevailing opinion has been that the Chronicler wrote during the succeeding century, 550-250 b.c. This conclusion would follow if he were the compiler of the books of Nehemiah and Ezra, but the reason assigned for that opinion is not cogent (see Exeg. on II Chr. 36:22-23; a minor argument for a very late date does not now carry weight—see Exeg. on I Chr. 3:19-24). Linguistic features (discussed below) are deemed to imply no earlier period than late in the fourth century. If so, we have to think of the Chronicler as one who lived a long while after the establishment of the system of ritual set forth in the Priestly Code, after the Aaronite Zadokites had attained their supremacy, after the written promulgation of the law immutably given by Moses. It is held, for instance, that the Chronicler's work should be regarded as "a sequel and supplement to the Priestly Code," written as an "endeavor to raise the rank and prestige of the Levites to those of the priests. . . . The Priestly Code . . . became the charter of normative Judaism. The Chronicler is not the great architect of the edifice but a humble restorer and decorator who reverently adds to its usefulness for a subsequent age." 1 But if so, how incomprehensible and naïve was the Chronicler's mentality! Beyond question he was a devout Jew, in uttermost earnest that all things should be properly and punctiliously performed in the ritual of the temple. How could such a man, living a hundred or at least fifty years after the authoritative, written enactments of the law given by Moses had been in operation, challenge or even speak loosely about its sacred provisions and a cardinal principle in its system? If he did pen such heterodoxy, hoping to induce the entrenched priests to contravene the word of God and admit to their privileges numbers of the inferior clergy, how naïve he was! The optimism of Joshua bidding the sun to stand still in the heavens was by comparison sensible. If, further, he was the author of the entire text of Chronicles as it now stands, how weakly he advanced his astonishing plea! For whenever he alludes to Levites and ritual in a way not incompatible with the earlier Deuteronomic standpoint, but incompatible with the ultimate orthodoxy of the Priestly Code—always there we find qualifying and contradictory phrases and verses to the effect that nevertheless orthodox procedure had been observed on the occasion. There is, however, virtual unanimity that these phrases and verses were not part of the Chronicler's original writing, but are corrective additions inserted into his text at a later date. The motive that would give rise to them is not difficult to perceive (see below, p. 347).

On the other hand, consider whether the Chronicler's original work may be dated in the circumstances of the fifth century; or, say, 450-350 B.C. It would then have been very relevant, and we could credit him with fine qualities and with making a sensible endeavor. The battle for a generous outlook was not yet lost. If he wrote before the Aaronite Zadokites had won complete victory, and before the law as it stands in the Pentateuch had been finally written and declared, then his mode of referring to Levites does not perplex. And his idealizing picture of the past was a moving plea to the Judeans and men of Jerusalem to treat all loyalist Israelites, and not least their Levites, as brethren. This conception of the Chronicler's purpose and period has been powerfully advocated by A. C. Welch, and, in general, it seems that a date in the latter part of the fifth century, or very little later, should be accepted. It gives naturalness to the Chronicler's mind, and the great and complex perplexities which otherwise confront us in the basic characteristics of Chronicles vanish.

A conspicuous problem of style, however, remains to be considered. Chronicles contains many and lengthy quotations from the books of Samuel and Kings. Those books are written in what may be termed "classical" Hebrew, whereas all else in Chronicles—that is, the Chronicler's own composition—differs startlingly in details of vocabulary and syntax from the Hebrew of Samuel and Kings. Obviously the Chronicler, if he had so desired, was learned enough to try to conform his own writing to the "classical" style—much as a modern preacher could shape his sermon in close conformity with strictly biblical English. He made no such attempt whatever. Evidently he wanted his readers to realize without difficulty just when they were reading quotations and when his own idealizing presentation of affairs. The Chronicler's own diction must be that of ordinary contemporary use, and admittedly it is similar to that found in the latest Hebrew writings in the Old Testament.

But even by the middle of the third century B.C. vernacular speech in Jerusalem had, it seems, ceased to be Hebrew and become Aramaic. Moreover, at about 400 B.C. a reference in Neh. 8:8 to a public reading from the Law probably signified that the people understood clearly only when they were given an interpretation in their everyday terms. It may reasonably be asked, How early did ordinary Hebrew diction begin to diverge from the "classical" literary idiom, and how rapid was the process of change? (As soon as thirty years after the issue of the ASV the editors of the RSV found it desirable to alter its remnant archaism, alike in vocabulary and syntax.) Before summing up, consideration may be given to a suggestion arising from the Chronicler's intense sympathy for loyalist Israelites and their Levites. Was his family home within the bounds of the territory of ancient Israel? Had he or his father before him migrated to Jerusalem and become one of many Levites with Israelitish lineage who served in the second temple, and whose position was being undermined and scorned by the Judean Zadokites? Israelitish Hebrew differed in particulars from the Judean: there is evidence as far back as the compilation of the northern records concerning Elijah and Elisha. In addition to the divergencies from the "classical" mode current in the normal diction of the Jews of Jerusalem in the Chronicler's time, did he also impart to his writing a flavor of northern variations? That is extremely conjectural.

We know too little about the development of ordinary Hebrew speech to be dogmatic that the Chronicler (being not desirous to disguise his own composition) could not have written as he does during the fifth century, especially toward its close. 4

IV. Additions

The view of the structure of Chronicles indicated above affords a consistent and reasonable criterion for distinguishing the original writing of the Chronicler from the numerous additions which, as all scholars are agreed, were in course of time introduced into the manuscripts. When the final Law obtained, devout readers were sure to be distressed by passages and verses which conflicted with its provisions, or were ambiguous or perilously vague. In general it would be felt that quite inadequate attention was paid to the primary dignity and rights of the Zadokite-Aaronite priests. What should be done? Let the writing perish? Fortunately its goodness touched good men—its unshakable faith in the reality and providence of God; its stern declaration of moral retribution and reward; its radiant love of the temple and worship; its perception that out of the perishable kingdom had emerged imperishable spiritual strength; its plea that there should be one people of God. Attempts were therefore made to improve it. What seem to be the consequent corrections and amplifications will be pointed out in the Exegesis.

V. Sources

A subordinate and difficult problem is how far, if at all, the Chronicler for his new material availed himself of lost sources, and whether in consequence his work adds anything reliable to what Kings tells about the history of Judah. In Chronicles there is a great parade of alleged sources, among them notably references to lost prophetic writings (e.g., I Chr. 29:29; II Chr. 9:29). But for the most part these references on investigation merge into one general question—whether the Chronicler had before him a large-scale document other than Kings about the history of Judah and Israel (e.g., II Chr. 16:11; 27:7). If he did, it was an edifying rather than a historically trustworthy work; and he did not quote from it, as he does from Kings, but transmuted into his own style what he wanted to reproduce. Its existence is doubtful: its worth for reliable new information is certainly slender. Nevertheless, it is difficult not to feel that the Chronicler was able to avail himself of some written and oral minor sources of information other than Kings, and to some extent of pre-exilic date, which he used as a basis for numerous details regarding ancestors, places, building operations, and certain events and dates. And indeed, evidence to that effect has grown in recent years: an outstanding instance is II Chr. 16:1-6 (see Exeg.). 5 The most important feature concerns the differences between Kings and Chronicles in respect of the reigns of Hezekiah and Josiah. It is becoming much more likely that what is said in Chronicles about those two kings throws valuable light on efforts made by the Judean kingdom to gain the nationalistic and religious adherence of the northern Hebrews after the fall of Samaria in 721 B.C. As regards postexilic thought and problems, Chronicles as a composite whole is, of course, an invaluable, firsthand source.

VI. Text

The text of Chronicles is in fairly good condition. Where it is faulty, the Septuagint translation does not help; for it was made from a manuscript virtually identical with the present Hebrew text. A Greek translation of II Chr. 55-36, found in I Esdras, differs from the Septuagint of those chapters. It has great interest for study of the relations and characteristics of the Greek versions. Further, we know 6 4 W. F. Albright did not regard the diction of Chronicles as incompatible with the end of the fifth century, since he has argued that the Chronicler was none other than Ezra ("The Date and Personality of the Chronicler," Journal of Biblical Literature, XL [1921], 104-24).

that in the course of manuscript transmission the text in Chronicles was sometimes adjusted to that found in Samuel and Kings; sometimes the reverse process is to be detected.

VII. Place in Canon

The translators of the Septuagint placed Chronicles after Kings, and in consequence that is its position in our Bibles. But it was very nearly excluded from the Jewish scriptures and was set as the last book. An interesting story must lie behind that fact. The immediate purposes for which the Chronicler wrote concerned now-forgotten disputes. The revisers had done their part, and made the book less glaringly out of accord with orthodoxy. Nevertheless, learned Jewish students would not miss the inner inconsistencies; and whereas Samuel and Kings were indispensable, Chronicles was hardly debatable.

When toward the end of the first century A.D. the rabbis at Jamnia reached decisions as to which writings should be classed as sacred, there must have been anxious discussion about Chronicles. Its virtues prevailed, and it was included. For that we can be thankful. Cleared of the confusing accretions, the Chronicler's own work stands out as a noble creation, wrought by a man who, although he was no poet in words, was poet in soul; a man great in religious convictions and moral integrity, who in this work presented to his contemporaries a moving plea to believe that the issues in life are ruled and overruled by the righteousness of God. His resolute faith and his generous longing that good men should stand together united in spirit in the bond of peace and in holiness of life speak to our needs. One God, one faith, one people—the Chronicler had, in his own way, an ecumenical mind.

I. Genealogies (1:1–9:44)

The Chronicler commenced his idealized history of the kingdom of Judah not with these nine chapters of names, but dramatically with the death of Saul (10:1) as initiating the reign of David. There are cumulative reasons for thinking that these genealogies were not composed or collected by the Chronicler. For one thing, it is sometimes evident that more than one collector was at work; but chiefly they seem in general to emanate from the later period when the final system of the Law was operative, when the Zadokite or Aaronite priests had gained accepted superiority over those Levites who served as musicians, singers, doorkeepers. Accordingly, in this Exeg., the compilers of the name lists in chs. 1–9 will be termed “genealogists.”

The genealogists were not pedigree hunters impelled merely by antiquarian curiosity or by pride. Their lists originated in serious and sacred purpose, for they established the rights of the several Levitical families in postexilic Jerusalem to fulfill their various functions; they also supported the claim of other important families in the Jewish community to count themselves truly as children of Abraham, heirs of the divine promise. It meant a great deal to loyal and devout men to read their ancestors’ names in an approved list. The genealogical interest was not related only to matters of dignity and of title to emolument. It rested upon the deep and honorable belief that the elect people had a sacred trust by reason of their knowledge of the one real God, and of the right way to worship him and serve his righteous will. As time passed every scrap of ascertainable genealogical information was gathered, sifted, and eventually co-ordinated to form these (superficially dry-as-dust) nine chapters.

A. The Ancestors of All Peoples (1:1–54)

1:1–34. These verses (abbreviated from Gen. 5:3–32; 10:2–29; 25:1–16) name first the antediluvian patriarchs, next the reputed founders of the nations of the world, and so lead up to the first ancestors of the Hebrew people.

1:1. Adam.—The interest of the men who compiled the names in the opening chapters of Chronicles was concentrated on their own people, or rather on certain of the Hebrew tribes, and above all on the Levitical families. Why then did they not begin with Abraham and his sons? The easy and correct reply is to say that they were utilizing the book of Genesis, which has much to relate concerning those who lived before Abraham and were therefore the reputed ancestors of all the peoples of the world. But the question repays closer consideration. Every 9 And the sons of Cush: Seba, and Havilah, and Sabata, and Raamah, and Sabtechah. And the sons of Raamah: Sheba, and Dedan.

10 And Cush begat Nimrod: he began to be mighty upon the earth.
11 And Mizraim begat Ludim, and Anamim, and Lehabim, and Naphtuhim, 12 And Pathrusim, and Casluhim, (of whom came the Philistines,) and Caphtorim.
13 And Canaan begat Zidon his first-born, and Heth, 14 The Jebusite also, and the Amorite, and the Girgashite, 15 And the Hivite, and the Arkite, and the Sinite,
16 And the Ardavite, and the Zamarite, and the Hamathite.
17 The sons of Shem: Elam, and Asshur, and Arphaxad, and Lud, and Aram, and Uz, and Hul, and Gether, and Meshech.
18 And Arphaxad begat Shelah, and Sheelah begat Eber.
19 And unto Eber were born two sons: the name of the one was Peleg; because in his days the earth was divided: and his brother's name was Joktan.
20 And Joktan begat Almodad, and Sheleph, and Hazarmaveth, and Jerah, nation is guilty of regarding others as a mere circumference around its self-interest; but the Hebrews are often accused of particularly crude nationalism because they esteemed themselves the people preferred by Yahweh, their God, above all other nations. Abundant evidence to that effect can be adduced, and is likely to suffice those whom half a truth will satisfy. It can be urged that even when the Hebrew kingdoms had perished Hebrew-Jewish particularism was intensified in that the Jews, impotent politically, became so proudly conscious of possessing a religion immeasurably superior to the beliefs of polytheistic Gentiles. By way of rebuttal it is not enough to cull a few outstanding, explicit acknowledgments of universalism from the O.T., as if these were the only indications of a wider outlook. Such passages, in general and in detail, deserve to be emphasized—the prophetic insistence on moral obligation as supernatural; recognition that the divine vocation of Israel denoted duty, not favoritism; the parable of Jonah. The point here stressed is that when the Jew worshiped God he believed that he worshiped the Creator and Father of all men, whose "tender mercies are over all his works" (Ps. 145:9). Implicit universalism pervades almost the whole of the great literature of the Jewish period and gives it its timeless quality. The Psalter contains the songs of Zion and her children, but in such wise that Jerusalem seems to be the city of redeemed mankind, and her hymns prove themselves a universal treasure. If the genealogists were to be true to their faith, they

8 The sons of Ham: Cush. Egypt, Put, and Canaan. 9 The sons of Cush: Seba, Hav'ilah, Sabata, Ra'ama, and Sab'teca. The sons of Ra'amah: Sheba and Dedan.
10 Cush was the father of Nimrod; he began to be a mighty one in the earth.
11 Egypt was the father of Ludim, An'amim, Leha'bim, Naph'tu'him, 12 Pathru'sim, Caslu'him (whence came the Philis'tines), and Caphtorim.
13 Canaan was the father of Sidon his first-born, and Heth, 14 and the Jebusites, the Amorites, the Gir'gashites, 15 the Hivites, the Arkites, the Sinites, 16 the Ar'vadites, the Zem'arites, and the Ha'mathites.
17 The sons of Shem: Elam, Asshur, Arpach'shad, Lud, Aram, Uz, Hul, Gether, and Meshech. 18 Arpach'shad was the father of Shelah; and Shelah was the father of Eber. 19 To Eber were born two sons: the name of the one was Peleg (for in his days the earth was divided), and the name of his brother Joktan. 20 Joktan was the father of Almodad, Sheleph, Hazarmaveth, Jerah, 21 Hador'am, Uzal, Diklah, 22 Ebal, Abim'ael, and Sheba, 23 And Ophir, Havilah, and Jobab; all these were the sons of Joktan.

THE INTERPRETER'S BIBLE

The sons of Abraham; Isaac, and Ishmael.

These are their generations: The firstborn of Ishmael, Nebaioth: then Kedar, and Adbeel, and Mibsam, 30 Mishma, and Dumah, Massa, Hadad, Tema, 31 Jetur, Naphish, and Kedemah. These are the sons of Ishmael.

Now the sons of Keturah, Abraham's concubine: she bare Zimran, and Jokshan, and Medan, and Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah. And the sons of Jokshan: Sheba, and Dedan.

And the sons of Midian: Ephah, and Epher, and Henoch, and Abida, and Eldaah. All these are the sons of Keturah.

And Abraham begat Isaac. The sons of Isaac: Esau and Israel.

The sons of Esau: Eliphaz, Reuel, and Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah.

The sons of Eliphaz: Teman, and Omar, Zephi, and Gatam, and Kenaz, and Timna, and Amalek.

The sons of Reuel: Nahath, Zerah, Shammah, and Mizzah.

And the sons of Seir: Lotan, Shobal, Zibeon, Anah, Dishon, Ezer, and Dishan.

The sons of Lotan: Hori, and Homam: and Timna was Lotan's sister.

The sons of Shobal: Al'ian, and Manahath, and Ebal, Shephi, and Onam. And the sons of Zibeon: Aiah, and Anah.

The sons of Anah: Dishon. And the sons of Dishon: Amram, and Eshban, and Ithran, and Cheran.

The sons of Ezer: Bilhan, and Zavan, and Jakan. The sons of Dishan: Uz, and Aran.

35-54. These verses trace the descendants of Esau, who forfeited his birthright, and became the ancestor of the desert-dwelling Edomites, whose early chieftains (dukes, had to commence with Adam, Seth, Enosh, and proceed to confess the original affinity of Israel with all other races stemming from Adam. We, like them, can lightly affirm that primeval all men were brothers without improving our treatment of other nations. Yet the brotherhood of mankind is a fact which, if it is disregarded, spells calamity. Could God devise other means to bring home to us its significance? Could he show us “a second Adam” in whose life and death we might perceive the obligations which the fact entails?
43 ¶ Now these are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom before any king reigned over the children of Israel: Bela the son of Beor, and the name of his city was Dinhabah.

44 And when Bela was dead, Jobab the son of Zerah of Bozrah reigned in his stead.

45 And when Jobab was dead, Husham of the land of the Temanites reigned in his stead.

46 And when Husham was dead, Hadad the son of Bedad, which smote Midian in the field of Moab, reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was Avith.

47 And when Hadad was dead, Samlah of Masrekah reigned in his stead.

48 And when Samlah was dead, Shaul of Rehoboth by the river reigned in his stead.

49 And when Shaul was dead, Baal-hanan the son of Achbor reigned in his stead.

50 And when Baal-hanan was dead, Hadad reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was Pai; and his wife's name was Mehetabel, the daughter of Matred, the daughter of Mezahab.

51 ¶ Hadad died also. And the dukes of Edom were; duke Timnah, duke Aliah, duke Jeteth, 52 Duke Aholibamah, duke Elah, duke Pinon,

53 Duke Kenaz, duke Teman, duke Mibzar,

54 Duke Magdiel, duke Iram. These are the dukes of Edom.

2 These are the sons of Israel: Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun, vss. 51-54) are named. The archaic English dukes (Latin dux, "leaders") is sensibly translated chiefs by the RSV.

B. DESCENDANTS OF JUDAH (2:1-55)

Twelve sons of Jacob are cited, but in the sequel it will appear that the genealogists were absorbingly concerned only with three southern tribes—Judah, Simeon, Benjamin—and with the tribe of Levi.

2:1. The Sons of Israel.—The genealogies from this point concern the Hebrew families. Each individual is designated as "the son of..." That description has a significance which we do not readily realize, so deeply is our social attitude to others influenced by Greco-Roman civilization which tragically lacked the Hebraic point of view concerning the basis of peaceful relations between men. The individual Hebrew felt that his very existence was due to his having in his body part of the family's blood: from the totality of his family or kindred he possessed his personal strength and virtue, and to the welfare of its collective life he must contribute his utmost. If he prospered, not only he but also all his family benefited; and no member of his kindred became weak except to the loss of all. Family meant to a Hebrew not a unit household
2 Dan, Joseph, and Benjamin, Naphtali, Gad, and Asher.

3 The sons of Judah: Er, and Onan, and Shelah: which three were born unto him of the daughter of Shua the Canaanitess. And Er, the firstborn of Judah, was evil in the sight of the LORD; and he slew him.

4 And Tamar his daughter-in-law bare him Pharez and Zerah. All the sons of Judah were five.

5 The sons of Pharez; Hezron, and Hamul.

6 And the sons of Zerah; Zimri, Ethan, Heman, Calcol, and Dara: five of them in all.

Three names have special importance: Ram (vs. 10) as an ancestor of David, Caleb (in vs. 9 Chelubai is a variant spelling of Caleb), and Jerahmeel (vss. 9, 25, 42). The Calebites and Jerahmeelites were originally not Hebrews but nomadic Edomites who had left the desert and settled in southern Judah about the time of David, and who after the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. moved northward close to Jerusalem, while other Edomites from the desert took their place. In time these Calebite-Jerahmeelite families became an important element—regarded as true Hebrews—in postexilic Jerusalem and its neighborhood (cf. vss. 42-55). Hence the genealogists' keen interest. Modern scholars are even more interested in the incursion and northward shift of these many really Edomite families (cf. E. L. Curtis and A. A. Madsen, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Books of Chronicles [New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1910; "International Critical Commentary"], pp. 89-90). For these had their own ancestral ideas and memories, and allowance has to be made for their influence on the distinctively Hebrew "Mosaic" tradition and on the older Canaanitish elements in the O.T. The consequences were certainly not negligible—and may be far-reaching—for study of the biblical narratives; but the possibilities are too subtle and intricate for mention here.

2:6, 21. The fact that no reference is made elsewhere to the sons of Zerah, or to the statement that some Hezronites entered Canaan with the Hebrews from Gilead (vs. 21), furnishes one of many indications that the genealogists had some traditions besides those in the canonical books. The rest of the Hezronites entered Judah from the south at a later date.

as in our usage, but the whole community—however extensive—of men with whom he could or should have any form of peaceful relations; all those persons were his family or house, men of his covenant.

Observe that the Hebrew kingdoms were termed "the house of Judah," "the house of Israel." The point is that every individual was related to all the men of his covenant by no lesser bond of obligation than that of giving utmost brotherly support. Of necessity as well as natural desire, the strong must help the weak, and the weak must help the strong. This principle of social health—the great prophets insisted—the Hebrews knew, and were without excuse if they did not practice it. When that attitude broke down in the later monarchy, horrible cruelty and social chaos calamitously ensued. The climax of Hebrew prophetic hope envisaged a world wherein the nations joyously realized themselves as one family under God, each contributing its gifts in fulfillment of the divine purpose (cf. Isa. 42:5-7; 56:6-7; 60:1-22). For individuals likewise the principle was that no man must be allowed to live unto himself (cf. Rom. 14:7). He who attempts to do so is Cain, the murderer, who cannot be tolerated within the civilized community. The conception of covenantal relationship with all its obligations is fundamental in O.T. religion and morality.

3, 7. Er and Achar.—Some men and women single themselves out by their singular infamy, and history is prone to record their memory.
7 And the sons of Carmi: Achar, the troubler of Israel, who transgressed in the thing accursed.
8 And the sons of Ethan: Azariah.
9 The sons also of Hezron, that were born unto him: Jerahmeel, and Ram, and Chelubai.
10 And Ram begat Amminadab: and Amminadab begat Nahshon, prince of the children of Judah;
11 And Nahshon begat Salma, and Salma begat Boaz, 12 And Boaz begat Obed, and Obed begat Jesse.
13 ¶ And Jesse begat his firstborn Eliab, and Abinadab the second, and Shimma the third,
14 Nethaneel the fourth, Raddai the fifth,
15 Ozem the sixth, David the seventh:
16 Whose sisters were Zeruiah, and Abigail. And the sons of Zeruiah; Abishai, and Joab, and Asahel, three.
17 And Abigail bare Amasa: and the father of Amasa was Jether the Ishmaelite.
18 ¶ And Caleb the son of Hezron begat children of Azubah his wife, and of Jerioth: her sons are these; Jesher, and Shobab, and Ardon.
19 And when Azubah was dead, Caleb took unto him Ephrath, which bare him Hur.
20 And Hur begat Uri, and Uri begat Bezaaleel.
21 ¶ And afterward Hezron went in to the daughter of Machir the father of Gilead, whom he married when he was threescore years old; and she bare him Segub.
22 And Segub begat Jair, who had three and twenty cities in the land of Gilead.
23 And he took Geshur, and Aram, with the towns of Jair, from them, with Kenath, and the towns thereof, even threescore cities. All these belonged to the sons of Machir the father of Gilead.

We ought to be much more mindful of the conspicuously good; or at least be more thankfully conscious of our heritage from the virtuous.

13. Eliab.—The meaning of Eliab is “My god is father.” Study of proper names throws light on Hebrew religion, history, and literature to a surprising extent. For example, we know that many names appear in these lists which cannot possibly be of early date but are postexilic. Again, names compounded with “Baal” or “Melech” show the old Canaanitish sense of the gods as masters, owners, kings; whereas those with “El”—such as Eliab—preserve the desert tribesmen’s way of thinking of their god in terms of personal relationships. The Hebrews attached great significance to names, for each man was 24 And after that Hezron was dead in Caleb-ephratah, then Abiah Hezron’s wife bare him Ashur the father of Tekoa.

25 ¶ And the sons of Jerahmeel the first-born of Hezron were, Ram the first-born, and Bunah, and Oren, and Ozem, and Ahijah.
26 Jerahmeel had also another wife, whose name was Atarah; she was the mother of Onam.
27 And the sons of Ram the first-born of Jerahmeel were, Maaz, and Jamin, and Eker.
28 And the sons of Onam were, Shammai, and Jada. And the sons of Shammai; Nadab, and Abishur.
29 And the name of the wife of Abishur was Abihail, and she bare him Ahban, and Molid.
30 And the sons of Nadab: Seled, and Appaim: but Seled died without children.
31 And the sons of Appaim; Ishi. And the sons of Ishi; Sheshan. And the children of Sheshan; Ahlai.
32 And the sons of Jada the brother of Shammai; Jether, and Jonathan: and Jether died without children.
33 And the sons of Jonathan; Peleth, and Zaza. These were the sons of Jerahmeel.
34 ¶ Now Sheshan had no sons, but daughters. And Sheshan had a servant, an Egyptian, whose name was Jarha.
35 And Sheshan gave his daughter to Jarha his servant to wife; and she bare him Attai.
36 And Attai begat Nathan, and Nathan begat Zabad, 37 And Zabad begat Ephlal, and Ephlal begat Obed, 38 And Obed begat Jehu, and Jehu begat Azariah, 39 And Azariah begat Helez, and Helez begat Eleasah.

father of Gilead. 24 After the death of Hezron, Caleb went in to Eph’rathah, a the wife of Hezron his father, and she bore him Ashur, the father of Teko’a.

25 The sons of Jerahmeel, the first-born of Hezron: Ram, his first-born, Bunah, Oren, Ozem, and Ahijah. 26 Jerahmeel also had another wife, whose name was A’tarah; she was the mother of Onam.

27 The sons of Ram, the first-born of Jerahmeel: Ma’az, Jamin, and Eker. 28 The sons of Onam: Sham’mai and Jada. The sons of Sham’mai: Nadab and Abi’shur. 29 The name of Abi’shur’s wife was Abi’hail, and she bore him Ahban and Molid. 30 The sons of Nadab: Seled and Ap’pa-im; and Seled died childless. 31 The sons of Ap’pa-im: Ishi. The sons of Ishi: Sheshan. The sons of Sheshan: Ahlai. 32 The sons of Jada, Sham’mai’s brother: Jether and Jonathan; and Jether died childless. 33 The sons of Jonathan: Peleth and Zaza. These were the descendants of Jerahmeel. 34 Now Sheshan had no sons, only daughters; but Sheshan had an Egyptian slave, whose name was Jarha. 35 So Sheshan gave his daughter in marriage to Jarha his slave; and she bore him Attai. 36 Attai was the father of Nathan and Nathan of Zabad. 37 Zabad was the father of Ephlal, and Ephlal of Obed. 38 Obed was the father of Jehu, and Jehu of Azari’ah. 39 Azari’ah was the father of deemed realistically to have in him the qualities of his ancestors; hence name in the O.T. is almost equivalent to character. When it is said that God’s name is honored, the implication is of reverence paid to God’s justice and mercy—to all that is in the divine character. The Hebrews also were prone to extract from names meanings philologically unfounded or dubious, e.g., Jacob, “the trickster” (Gen. 25:26; 27:36).

Many “lessons” could be thus extracted from genealogies, but a modern teacher, when he uses a text as a pretext, should make acknowledgment of the fact. Allegorizing the O.T. is a perniciously dangerous device. Anyone disposed to 43 And the sons of Hebron; Korah, and Tappuh, and Rekem, and Shema.

44 And Shema begat Raham, the father of Jorkam: and Rekem begat Shammai.
45 And the son of Shammai was Maon: and Maon was the father of Beth-zur.
46 And Ephah, Caleb’s concubine, bare Hanan, and Moza, and Gazez: and Hanan begat Gazez.
47 And the sons of Jahdai; Regem, and Jotham, and Gesham, and Pelet, and Ephah, and Shaaph.
48 Maachah, Caleb’s concubine, bare Sheber, and Tirhanah.
49 She bare also Shaaph the father of Madmannah, Sheva the father of Machbe-nah, and the father of Gibe: and the daughter of Caleb was Achsa.
50 ¶ These were the sons of Caleb the son of Hur, the firstborn of Ephratah; Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim, 51 Salma the father of Beth-lehem, Hareph the father of Beth-gader.
52 And Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim had sons; Haroeh, and half of the Manahathites.
53 And the families of Kirjath-jearim; the Ithrites, and the Puhites, and the Shumathites, and the Mishritaes; of them came the Zareathites, and the Eshtaulites.
54 The sons of Salma; Beth-lehem, and the Netophathites, Ataroth, the house of Joab, and half of the Manahathites, the Zorites.

C. DESCENDANTS OF DAVID (3:1-24)

3:1-9. Bathshua (vs. 5) is a variant form of Bathsheba. For Eliada (vs. 8), see Exeg. on 14:7.
10-18. These verses give the list of the kings of Judah from Solomon to Zecariah. Very surprising is the inclusion of Johanan (vs. 15), since the book of Kings does not subject. Jesus said of God, "My Father" and "your Father"; a lifetime is not sufficient to reveal the full meaning of his words.
3:10-18. The Kings of Judah.—A few of these Hebrew kings were to be remembered for the good they did; others were to be remembered for their iniquity. We all bear a name; it is a great issue whether the men and women who know us, or come after us, think of good or evil when they recall our name.

17 And the sons of Jeconiah: Assir, Salathiel his son, 18 Malchiram also, and Pedaiah, and Shenazar, Jecamiah, Hoshama, and Nedabiah.
19 And the sons of Pedaiah were. Zerubbabel, and Shimei: and the sons of Zerubbabel: Meshullam, and Hananiah, and Shelomith their sister:
20 And Hashubah, and Ohel, and Berechiah, and Hasadiah, Jushab-hesed, five.
21 And the sons of Hananiah: Pelatiah, and Jesaiah: the sons of Rephaiah, the sons of Arnan, the sons of Obadiah, the sons of Shecaniah.
22 And the sons of Shecaniah; Shemaiah: and the sons of Shemaiah; Hattush, and Igeal, and Bariah, and Neariah, and Shaphat, six.
23 And the sons of Neariah; Elioenai, and Hezekiah, and Azrikam, three.
24 And the sons of Elioenai were, Hodaiah, and Eliashib, and Pedaiah, and Akkub, and Johanan, and Dalaiah, and Anani, seven.

4 The sons of Judah; Pharez, Hezron, and Carmi, and Hur, and Shobal.
2 And Reaiah the son of Shobal begat Jahath; and Jahath begat Ahumai, and Lahad. These are the families of the Zorathites.
3 And these were of the father of Etam; Jezerel, and Ishma, and Idbash: and the name of their sister was Hazelelponi:

Son: 17 and the sons of Jeconi'ah, the captive: She-ali'el his son, 18 Malchi'ram, Peda'iah, Shenaz'zar, Jekami'ah, Hosh'ama, and Nedabi'ah: 19 and the sons of Peda'iah: Zerub'babel and Shini'e-i: and the sons of Zerub'babel: Meshul'lam and Hanani'ah, and Shelomith was their sister; 20 and Hashu'bah, Ohel, Berech'i'ah, Hasadi'ah, and Ju'shab-he'sed, five. 21 The sons of Hanani'ah: Pelati'ah and Jesha'iah, his son Repha'i'ah, his son Arnan, his son Obadi'ah, his son Shecan'i'ah. 22 The sons of Shecans'i'ah: Shema'iah. And the sons of Shemai'ah: Hattush, Jal, Bar'iah, Neari'ah, and Shaphat, six. 23 The sons of Ne'ar'i'ah: Eli-o-ei'nah, Hizk'i'ah, and Azri'kam, three.
24 The sons of Eli-o-ei'nah: Hod'avi'ah, Eli-asib, Pela'iah, Akkub, Joha'nan, Dela'iah, and Ana'ni, seven.

The sons of Judah: Perez, Hezron, Carmi, Hur, and Shobal. 2 Re-a'iah the son of Shobal was the father of Jahath, and Jahath was the father of Ahu'mai and Lahad. These were the families of the Zo'ra-thites. 3 These were the sons of Etam: Jezerel, Ishma, and Idbash; and the name mention him, and it appears that he did not reign. Zedekiah (vs. 16) was uncle (son is a conventional term) of his predecessor Jeconiah, who in II Chr. 36:8 and II Kings 24:6 is called Jehoiachin, and in Jer. 22:24, Coniah.

19-24. These verses give the list of David's descendants after the captivity. The point is that Zerubbabel, who was ruler of Jerusalem under the Persians in 520 B.C. (see Hag. 1:1; 2:21), is here recorded to be grandson of the exiled King Jeconiah. In him, therefore, as civil head of the renascent community, the Jews could feel that in some measure "the house of David" had been restored. The names cited thereafter imply for the latest of them a date ca. 350 B.C.; while the LXX extends the list to the eleventh generation, ca. 250. These facts do not require us to date the Chronicler as late as 350, still less 250 B.C., for there is no solid evidence that the Chronicler wrote these verses. As for the LXX's extension, what more natural than that in the copying of MSS such a list would be kept up-to-date? In vs. 22, omit And the sons of Shemaiah.

D. SONS OF JUDAH AND SIMEON (4:1-48)

1. CALEBITES AND OTHERS (4:1-23)

4:1-23. Judah's genealogy has already been given in ch. 2. The present list seems likely to be an older version in view of vs. 9 (a fanciful etymology) and vs. 21-23. Another genealogist later inserted the longer list of ch. 2. In vs. 1 Carmi is a textual error for 4 And Peniel the father of Gedor, and Ezer the father of Hushah. These are the sons of Hur, the firstborn of Ephrathah, the father of Beth-lehem.
5 And Ashur the father of Tekoa had two wives, Helah and Naarah.
6 And Naarah bare him Ahuzam, and Hepher, and Temeni, and Haahashtari. These were the sons of Naarah.
7 And the sons of Helah were, Zereth, and Jetooar, and Ethnan.
8 And Coz begat Anub, and Zobebah, and the families of Aharhel the son of Harum.
9 And Jabez was more honorable than his brethren: and his mother called his name Jabez, saying, Because I bare him with sorrow.
10 And Jabez called on the God of Israel, saying, Oh that thou wouldst bless me indeed, and enlarge my coast, and that thine hand might be with me, and that thou wouldest keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me! And God granted him that which he requested.
11 And Chelub the brother of Shuah begat Mehir, which was the father of Eshton.
12 And Eshton begat Beth-rapha, and Paseah, and Tehinnah the father of Ir-nahash. These are the men of Rechah.
13 And the sons of Kenaz; Othniel, and Seraiah; and the sons of Othniel; Hathath.
14 And Meonothai begat Oprah; and Seraiah begat Joab, the father of the valley of Charashim: for they were craftsmen.

Caleb.” The mention of skilled craftsmen in vss. 21-23 is a notable feature. As regards the expert potters, it has been argued on the basis of some excavated jar handles inscribed with similar names that the men were of Calebite-Jerahmeelite families.
15 And the sons of Caleb the son of Jephunneh: Iru, Elah, and Na'am: and the sons of Elah, even Kenaz.
16 And the sons of Jehalleleel: Ziph, and Zippah, Tiria, and Asareel.
17 And the sons of Ezra were, Jether, and Mered, and Epher, and Jalon, and she bare Miriam, and Shammia, and Ishbah the father of Eshtemoa.
18 And his wife Jehudijah bare Jered the father of Gedor, and Heber the father of Socho, and Jekuthiel the father of Zanoah. And these are the sons of Bithiah the daughter of Pharaoh, which Mered took.
19 And the sons of his wife Hodiah the sister of Naham, the father of Keilah the Garmite, and Eshtemoa the Maachathite.
20 And the sons of Shimon were, Amnon, and Rinnah, Ben-hanan, and Tilon. And the sons of Ishi were, Zoheth, and Ben-zo'het.
21 ¶ The sons of Shelah the son of Judah were, Er the father of Lecah, and Laadah the father of Mareshah, and the families of the house of them that wrought fine linen, of the house of Ashbea, 22 And Jokim, and the men of Chozeba, and Joash, and Saraph, who had the dominion in Moab, and Jashubi-lehem. And these are ancient things.
23 These were the potters, and those that dwelt among plants and hedges: there they dwelt with the king for his work.
24 ¶ The sons of Simeon were, Nemuel, and Jamin, Jarib, Zerah, and Shaul:

because they were craftsmen. 15 The sons of Caleb the son of Jephun'neh: Iru, Elah, and Na'am: and the sons of Elah: Kenaz.
16 The sons of Jehovahel: Ziph, Zippah, Tir'a, and As'arel. 17 The sons of Ezra: Jether, Mered, Epher, and Jalon. These are the sons of Bith'iah, the daughter of Pharaoh, whom Mered married; and she conceived and bore Miriam, Sham'mai, and Ishbah, the father of Eshtemo'a. 18 And his Jewish wife bore Jered the father of Gedor, Heber the father of Soco, and Jeku'thiel the father of Zano'ah.
19 The sons of the wife of Hodi'ah, the sister of Naham, were the fathers of Keilah the Garmite and Eshtemo'a the Ma-ac'athite. 20 The sons of Shimon: Amnon, Rinnah, Ben-ha'nan, and Tilon. The sons of Ishi: Zoheth and Ben-zo'het.
21 The sons of Shelah the son of Judah: Er the father of Lecah, La'adah the father of Mare'shah, and the families of the house of linen workers at Beth-ashbe'a; 22 and Jokim, and the men of Coze'ba, and Jo'ash, and Saraph, who ruled in Moab and returned to Lehem (now the records are ancient). 23 These were the potters and inhabitants of Neta'im and Ged'e'rah; they dwelt there with the king for his work.
24 The sons of Simeon: Nem'u-el, Jamin,

2. SIMEONITES (4:24-43)

24-43. With these verses cf. Gen. 46:10; Josh. 19:2-8. The two exploits mentioned in vs. 34-43 (not recorded elsewhere) presumably come from an old tradition. In vs. 39

"Give us this day our daily bread." Eventually some of the Hebrews, taught by the great prophets, realized how rightly to offer personal and intercessional prayer and practiced it.

But Jabez deserves kinder treatment. His name signifies "pain" or "sorrow" and the fact preyed on his imagination, suggesting that he was a handicapped in life, sure to be unfortunate. He had the courage to refuse to despond. Face your fears. Put up a fight against misfortunes and difficulties. Beethoven conquered deafness and created immortal music to which he could not listen with the hearing of the ear. Jabez had crude ideas about God. But he was wise in thinking that spiritual aid is a reality, available for those who seek it rightly.

28 And they dwelt at Beer-sheba, and Moladah, and Hazar-shual, 29 And at Bilhah, and at Ezem, and at Tolad,
30 At Bethuel, and at Horam, and at Ziklag, 31 And at Beth-marcaboth, and Hazarsusim, and at Beth-birei, and at Shaaraim. These were their cities unto the reign of David.
32 And their villages were, Etam, and Ain, Rimmon, and Tochen, and Ashan, five cities:
33 And all their villages that were round about the same cities, unto Baal. These were their habitations, and their genealogy.
34 And Meshobab, and Jamlech, and Joshah the son of Amaziah, 35 And Joel, and Jehu the son of Joshibiah, the son of Seraiah, the son of Asiel, 36 And Elioenai and Jaakobah, and Jeshhoaiah, and Asaiah, and Adiel, and Jesimiel, and Beniaiah, 37 And Ziza the son of Shiphi, the son of Allon, the son of Jedaijah, the son of Shimri, the son of Shemaiah;
38 These mentioned by their names were princes in their families: and the house of their fathers increased greatly.
39 ¶ And they went to the entrance of Gedor, even unto the east side of the valley, to seek pasture for their flocks.

These were their cities until David reigned. 32 And their villages were Etam, A’in, Rimmon, Tochen, and Ashan, five cities, 33 along with all their villages which were round about these cities as far as Ba’al. These were their settlements, and they kept a genealogical record.
34 Mesho’bab, Jamlech, Josah the son of Amazi’ah, 35 Jo’el, Jehu the son of Joshi’bi’ah, son of Sera’i’ah, son of As’i’el, 36 Eli-o-e’nai, Ja-ako’bab, Jeshohai’ah, Asa’i’ah, Ad’i-el, Jesim’i-el, Benai’ah, 37 Ziza the son of Shiphi, son of Allon, son of Jedai’ah, son of Shimri, son of Shema’i’ah— 38 these mentioned by name were princes in their families, and their fathers’ houses increased greatly. 39 They journeyed to the entrance of Gedor, to the east side of the valley, to seek pasture for their flocks, 40 where they found rich, good pasture, and the land was very broad, quiet, and peaceful; for the former inhabitants there belonged to Ham.

paraphrased it thus: “They made their dwelling there with the Presence [Shekinah] of the King of the World for the practice of the law.” Is that too high an estimate of these potters and their skill? Or is it true that whenever men practice their tasks to the best of their ability they draw nigh to the divine Presence, and in their achievements show forth the praise of God?
smote their tents, and the habitations that were found there, and destroyed them utterly unto this day, and dwelt in their rooms: because there was pasture there for their flocks.

E. TRANS-JORDAN TRIBES (5:1-26)

This list refers to the sons of Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh, who lived on the eastern side of the Jordan.

5:1-26. The Point of No Return.—This chapter concerns the Hebrew tribes dwelling east of the Jordan, in Gilead and Bashan. It has a sting in its tail, for it records (vs. 25, 26) that they

16 And they dwelt in Gilead in Bashan, and in her towns, and in all the suburbs of Sharon, upon their borders.
17 All these were reckoned by genealogies in the days of Joatham king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam king of Israel.
18 ¶ The sons of Reuben, and the Gadites, and half the tribe of Manasseh, of valiant men, men able to bear buckler and sword, and to shoot with bow, and skilful in war, were four and forty thousand seven hundred and threescore, that went out to the war.

was no recovery, no place for them in the renewal of Jewish life. Chronicles implies that the Judeans and many in Israel did recover because they were willing to learn, acquired finer moral discernment and wiser thoughts as to God and his demands, and so through their faith found strength. Stanley A. Cook has somewhere written that there will be a future for Christianity. But it may not be, as we too lightly assume, in Western civilization. The next stage may be in African and Asian Christianity.

20-22. The God of Battles.—Hapless Hagarites, slaughtered and dispossessed! Hebrews triumphant, because they had obtained the aid of a God mighty in battle (cf. Ps. 24:8; 144:1; but in the Psalter the words are metaphorical). The Chronicler lived many centuries later than this scrap of ancient tradition. Jewish morality and religion had become profound. It would be interesting to ask the Chronicler how he really felt about the ferocity and naive theology implied in these verses.

Damage beyond calculation has been done to the cause of true religion by the notion that everything said about God in the Bible from cover to cover ought somehow to be jumbled.
cried to God in the battle, and he was entreated of them: because they put their trust in him.

21 And they took away their cattle: of their camels fifty thousand, and of sheep two hundred and fifty thousand, and of asses two thousand, and of men a hundred thousand.

22 For there fell down many slain, because the war was of God. And they dwelt in their steads until the captivity.

23 "And the children of the half tribe of Manasseh dwelt in the land: they increased from Bashan unto Baal-hermon and Senir, and unto Mount Hermon.

24 And these were the heads of the house of their fathers, even Epher, and Ishi, and Eliel, and Azriel, and Jeremiah, and Hodaviah, and Jahdiel, mighty men of valor, famous men, and heads of the house of their fathers.

25 "And they transgressed against the God of their fathers, and went a whoring after the gods of the people of the land, whom God destroyed before them.

26 And the God of Israel stirred up the spirit of Pul king of Assyria, and the spirit of Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria, and he carried them away, even the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh, and brought them unto Halah, and Habor, and Hara, and to the river Gozan, unto this day.

6 The sons of Levi: Gershom, Kohath, and Merari.

2 And the sons of Kohath: Amram, Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel.

F. SONS OF LEVI (6:1-81)

This long chapter concerning the ministrants of worship raises a subject of prime interest, but also of great obscurity, in relation to Hebrew history and ritual. Comment has already been made regarding it in the Intro. (Succinct and lucid discussion may be found in the article by N. H. Snaith, "The Priesthood and the Temple," in T. W.

together in an incongruous amalgam. Follow instead, as key to the permanent value of the Scriptures, the thought that by the patient will of the one eternal God the Hebrews were being brought gradually to discernment of his real nature—were led out of darkness into marvelous light.

What should be felt about the appalling situations that seem so often to confront us in the modern world? The massacred Hagrites may at least remind us that might may be used to defend right, but never in the interests of greed and cruelty; and that our ultimate purpose must be not less than the welfare of mankind.

6:1-81. The Sons of Levi — These are the men who were responsible for the rightful ordering of Hebrew worship. They based their authority Manson, ed., A Companion to the Bible [Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1943], pp. 418-43. A study of lasting importance is George Buchanan Gray, Sacrifice in the Old Testament [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1925], pp. 179-255.) Levi, like the other "sons of Jacob," was originally a tribe which together with Simeon—at a date in the patriarchal period, long before the time of Moses—attacked the Canaanite town of Shechem, and afterward suffered so great a defeat that the survivors were no longer a coherent group but dispersed families, of whom some wandered here and there in Canaan and others migrated to Egypt and thence returned in the time of Moses (so Gen. 49:5-7). An interesting conjecture is that Levites chanced to become priest-guardians of the Hebrew holy place at Kadesh-barnea before the invasion of Canaan. If so, it would be natural that Levites were chosen to serve the first Hebrew sanctuaries in Canaan, notably at Shiloh where a temple was built. At the time of the Philistine conflicts this shrine was in the charge of Eli (an Aaronite Levite) whose descendant was Abiathar, one of the two principal priests at the end of David's reign. It was, however, legitimate—and long remained so—for any Hebrew to act as a priest in offering sacrifice. But there is irrefutable evidence from the early period of the judges that Levites were especially esteemed and much coveted as the guardians and priests of sanctuaries (Judg. 17-18). Finding employment thus, the Levites—it is agreed—became in time essentially ministers of the cult (Deut. 33:8-11). Yet down to the end of the Judean kingdom in the sixth century B.C., men who were not of Levitical families were employed in ritual duties, as we know to be the case in Solomon's temple (see Ezek. 44:7) where, of course, men claiming descent from Levi through Zadok were dominant and held the important posts. "Levite" resembles a Hebrew verb lāwâh, meaning "to attach"; and we can therefore readily understand that non-Levitical men employed in the cult, as attached persons, might in time be credited with Levitical ancestry; Chronicles seems to show two instances, Samuel the Ephraimite (6:28; cf. I Sam. 1:1) and Obed-edom the Gittite (see Exeg. on 13:13; cf. 16:5). Reference has been made in the Intro. to developments after the fall of the two Hebrew kingdoms, which eventually had the result that in the second temple only those men who were deemed to be descended from Zadok, and more widely from Levi through Aaron, were accorded the standing of full priests, while all other Levites discharged subordinate duties and had the standing of ministers "unto their brethren the priests." Ch. 6 is eloquent of that eventual stage: mark the emphasis in vs. 49, But Aaron and his sons ... Now the original text of the Chronicler has been freely and confusingly subjected to later insertions. It is possible very clearly to screen out those additions and "corrections," if the view set forth in the Intro. is taken, that they were made in the interests of conforming what the Chronicler had written to the final Law, and if the Chronicler himself is regarded as having lived at a somewhat earlier period. The Chronicler belonged to the antecedent period when Levites, other than only the Zadokites, were acting in the priestly duties, later confined to the Zadokites or "sons of Aaron"—as well as in the other functions of the cult. That earlier stage is the attitude found in Deuteronomy, where it is characterized by the phrase "the priests, the Levites"—perhaps also in Malachi, its date being prior to Nehemiah (see J. M. P. Smith, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi and Jonah [New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1912; "International Critical Commentary"], p. 38, on Mal. 2:4). It is highly significant that the phrase "the priests, the Levites," is found in 13:13 (LXX); II Chr. 23:18; 30:27 (M.T. and LXXB). It may well be that originally it occurred much more often, for it would give grave offense to men of later times. By inserting in the MS a single Hebrew letter, waw (ו), which means "and," they could indicate the differentiation they expected to read, "the priests and the Levites." It is probable that in not a few places the Chronicler himself wrote simply "the Levites," and the revisers inserted "the priests and." However that may be, if and when the Chronicler wrote "the priests and the Levites," he meant thereby Levites (not merely of Zadokite families) acting as priests by sacrificing, burning incense, sounding the sacred trumpets, together with Levites fulfilling other duties. The revisers would suppose he meant

"Aaronite priests and subordinate Levites." The importance of this suble point will be seen in notes on not a few passages.

1. THE AARONITE LINE (6:1-15)

Transparently it is the final stage, not the Chronicler's view, which appears in this chapter, beginning thus with an impressive list of Aaronic chief priests, through Zadok (vs. 8) to Jehozadak (vs. 15), taken prisoner to Babylon in 586 B.C.

6:8. Zadok: The list ignores the other chief priest at the end of David's reign—Abiathar (descendant of Eli) who sided with Adonijah against Solomon. However, the Chronicler was not unwilling to mention him (15:11). Other evidence that this list is not by the Chronicler is its curious failure to name two chief priests referred to in Chronicles: Jehoiada (II Chr. 22:11) and Azariah (II Chr. 26:20). Strangely enough, Urijah, named in II Kings 16:11, is mentioned neither here nor elsewhere in Chronicles.

10. The remark about Azariah should have been attached to his grandfather of the same name (vs. 9), who was contemporary with Solomon.
16 The sons of Levi: Gershom, Kohath, and Merari.
17 And these be the names of the sons of Gershom: Libni, and Shimei.
18 And the sons of Kohath were, Amram, and Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel.

22 The sons of Kohath: Amminadab his son, Korah his son, Assir his son, 23 Elkanah his son, and Ebiaasaph his son, and Assir his son, 24 Tahath his son, Uriel his son, Uzzi his son, and Shaul his son.
25 And the sons of Elkanah: Amasai, and Ahimoth.
26 As for Elkanah: the sons of Elkanah; Zophai his son, and Nahath his son, 27 Eliab his son, Jeroham his son, Elkanah his son.
28 And the sons of Samuel; the first-born Vashni, and Abiah.
29 The sons of Merari; Mahli, Libni his son, Shimea his son, Uzza his son, 30 Shimea his son, Haggiah his son, Asaiah his son.

2. OTHER BRANCHES (6:16-30)

The sons of Gershom and Merari mentioned in the canonical books of the Law were not enough to bridge the generations from Levi to David’s time. Accordingly five new names in vss. 39-40, and nine in vss. 44-47, were provided. However, those names are quite certainly not early Hebrew names, but postexilic. Presumably the genealogists, aware that certain Gershonite and Merarite families had long served the second temple, inserted the earliest known forefathers of those families as the missing men so as to provide a pedigree long enough to reach to the time of David.

27. Elkanah his son: Add “Samuel his son,” which has accidentally dropped out of the text.

3. THE MUSICAL GUILDS (6:31-48)

The Levitical descent of the three principal divisions or families serving the music over the service of song in the house of the LORD, after that the ark had rested.

32 And they ministered before the dwelling-place of the tabernacle of the congregation with singing, until Solomon had built the house of the LORD in Jerusalem: and then they waited on their office according to their order.

33 And these were they that waited with their children. Of the sons of the Kohathites: Heman a singer, the son of Joel, the son of Shemu'el.

34 The son of Elkanah, the son of Jeroham, the son of Elieel, the son of Toah, 35 The son of Zuph, the son of Elkanah, the son of Nahath, the son of Amasai, 36 The son of Elkanah, the son of Joel, the son of Azariah, the son of Zephaniah, 37 The son of Tahath, the son of Assir, the son of Ebiasaph, the son of Korah, 38 The son of Izhar, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi, the son of Israel.
39 And his brother, Asaph, who stood on his right hand, even Asaph the son of Berachiah, the son of Shimea, 40 The son of Michael, the son of Baaseiah, the son of Malchiah, 41 The son of Ethni, the son of Zerah, the son of Adaiah, 42 The son of Ethan, the son of Zimmah, the son of Shime'i, 43 The son of Jahath, the son of Gershom, the son of Levi.
44 And their brethren the sons of Merari stood on the left hand: Ethan the son of Kishi, the son of Abdi, the son of Malluch, 45 The son of Hashabiah, the son of Amaziah, the son of Hilkiah, 46 The son of Amzi, the son of Bani, the son of Shamer, 47 The son of Mahli, the son of Mushi, the son of Merari, the son of Levi.

in charge of the service of song in the house of the LORD, after the ark rested there.

32 They ministered with song before the tabernacle of the tent of meeting, until Solomon had built the house of the LORD in Jerusalem: and they performed their service in due order. 33 These are the men who served and their sons. Of the sons of the Ko‘hatites: Heman the singer the son of Jo‘el, son of Samuel, 34 son of Elka‘nah, son of Jero‘ham, son of Eli‘el, son of To‘ah,
35 son of Zuph, son of Elka‘nah, son of Mahath, son of Amasai, 36 son of Elka‘nah, son of Jo‘el, son of Azari‘ah, son of Zephani‘ah, 37 son of Tahath, son of Assir, son of Ebi‘asaph, son of Korah, 38 son of Izhar, son of Kohath, son of Levi, son of Israel: 39 and his brother Asaph, who stood on his right hand, namely, Asaph the son of Berech‘i‘ah, son of Shim‘e‘a, 40 son of Michael, son of Ba-ase‘iah, son of Malch‘i‘jah, 41 son of Ethni, son of Zerah, son of Ada‘iah, 42 son of Ethan, son of Zimmah, son of Shim‘e‘i, 43 son of Jahath, son of Gershom, son of Levi. 44 On the left hand were their brethren the sons of Merar‘i: Ethan the son of Kishi, son of Abdi, son of Malluch, 45 son of Hashab‘i‘ah, son of Amaz‘i‘ah, son of Hilk‘i‘ah, 46 son of Amzi, son of Bani, son of Shemer, 47 son of Mahli, son of Mushi, son in the second temple: Korah, Asaph, Ethan. Korah was originally an Edomite (Calebite) family (see 2:43).

32. Tabernacle: See Exeg. on 16:37-48. According to their order (Hebrew, mishpāt) signified for the genealogist the duties of their rank in the service of the “Mosaic” tabernacle, not instructions newly issued to them by David.

miliar with the provision for the temple music in his own time; it was controlled by guilds of Levites whose ancestors he here names. He believed that even before Solomon, David had taken care to appoint Levites to be in charge of the praises of the Lord. As the centuries passed, the Levites saw to it that psalms were brought into use which were suitable to accompany the various kinds of sacrifice and appropriate to the sacred festivals and fasts of the year. Moreover, 48 Their brethren also the Levites were appointed unto all manner of service of the tabernacle of the house of God.

49 But Aaron and his sons offered upon the altar of the burnt offering, and on the altar of incense, and were appointed for all the work of the place most holy, and to make an atonement for Israel, according to all that Moses the servant of God had commanded.

50 And these are the sons of Aaron; Eleazar his son, Phinehas his son, Abishua his son,

51 Bukki his son, Uzzi his son, Zerahiah his son,

52 Meraioth his son, Amariah his son, Ahitub his son, 53 Zadok his son, Ahimaaz his son.

54 Now these are their dwelling places throughout their castles in their coasts, of the sons of Aaron, of the families of the Kohathites: for theirs was the lot.

55 And they gave them Hebron in the land of Judah, and the suburbs thereof round about it.

56 But the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, they gave to Caleb the son of Jephunneh.

57 And to the sons of Aaron they gave the cities of Judah, namely, Hebron, the city of refuge, and Libnah with her suburbs, and Jattir, and Eshtemoa, with her suburbs.

58 And Hilen with her suburbs, Debir with her suburbs,

59 And Ashan with her suburbs, and Beth-shemesh with her suburbs:

49. The prescriptive rights of the Aaronite priests are emphatically stated: According to all that Moses the servant of God had commanded.

5. LEVITICAL CITIES (6:54-81)

These verses reproduce Josh. 21:9-25, 33, 40, save that vs. 54 is new, and the introductory verse in Josh. 21:9 has been utilized here in vs. 65, where, however, its statement is not in keeping with the context.

there was no copyright in antiquity. The Levites were free to alter and adapt psalms, discard old and accept new ones. Eventually they did their work well. The Psalter as we have it is truly monotheistic, and may rightly be styled "The Hymnbook of the Second Temple." Are we drastic enough in revising the contents of our hymnbooks? Some hymns which suited the outlook of a century ago may misrepresent contemporary belief and do harm to impressionable worshipers.

Times of special religious enthusiasm and revival give rise to fresh praising of the Lord, as was seen in the period of the Reformation and the Wesleyan Revival. In Ecclus. 50:16 an account of a religious festival at Jerusalem in 60 And out of the tribe of Benjamin: Geba with her suburbs, and Alemeth with her suburbs, and Anathoth with her suburbs. All their cities throughout their families were thirteen cities.

61 And unto the sons of Kohath, which were left of the family of that tribe, were cities given out of the half tribe, namely, out of the half tribe of Manasseh, by lot, ten cities.

62 And to the sons of Gershom throughout their families out of the tribe of Issachar, and out of the tribe of Asher, and out of the tribe of Naphtali, and out of the tribe of Manasseh in Bashan, thirteen cities.

63 Unto the sons of Merari were given by lot, throughout their families, out of the tribe of Reuben, and out of the tribe of Gad, and out of the tribe of Zebulun, twelve cities.

64 And the children of Israel gave to the Levites these cities with their suburbs.

65 And they gave by lot out of the tribe of the children of Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, and out of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, these cities, which are called by their names.

66 And the residue of the families of the sons of Kohath had cities of their coasts out of the tribe of Ephraim.

67 And they gave unto them, of the cities of refuge, Shechem in mount Ephraim with her suburbs; they gave also Gezer with her suburbs,

68 And Jokmeam with her suburbs, and Beth-horon with her suburbs,

69 And Ajalon with her suburbs, and Gath-rimmon with her suburbs:

70 And out of the half tribe of Manasseh; Aner with her suburbs, and Bileam with her suburbs, for the family of the remnant of the sons of Kohath.

71 Unto the sons of Gershom were given, out of the family of the half tribe of Manasseh, Golan in Bashan with her suburbs, and Ashtaroth with her suburbs:

72 And out of the tribe of Issachar; Kedesh with her suburbs, Daberath with her suburbs, 73 And Ramoth with her suburbs, and Anem with her suburbs:
74 And out of the tribe of Asher: Mashal with her suburbs, and Abdon with her suburbs, 75 And Hukok with her suburbs, and Rehob with her suburbs:
76 And out of the tribe of Naphtali: Kedesh in Galilee with her suburbs, and Hammon with her suburbs, and Kirjathaim with her suburbs.
77 Unto the rest of the children of Merari were given, out of the tribe of Zebulun, Rimmon with her suburbs, Tabor with her suburbs:
78 And on the other side Jordan by Jericho, on the east side of Jordan, were given them, out of the tribe of Reuben, Bezer in the wilderness with her suburbs, and Jahzah with her suburbs, 79 Kedemoth also with her suburbs, and Mephaath with her suburbs:
80 And out of the tribe of Gad: Ramoth in Gilead with her suburbs, and Mahanaim with her suburbs, 81 And Heshbon with her suburbs, and Jazer with her suburbs.

7 Now the sons of Issachar were, Tola, and Puah, Jashub, and Shimrom, four.
2 And the sons of Tola; Uzzi, and Rephaiah, and Jeriel, and Jahmai, and Jiabsam, and Shemuel, heads of their father's house, to wit, of Tola: they were valiant men of might in their generations; whose number was in the days of David two and twenty thousand and six hundred.
3 And the sons of Uzzi; Issahiah: and the sons of Issahiah; Michael, and Obadiah, and Joel, Ishiah, five: all of them chief men.

73 Ramoth with its pasture lands, and Anem with its pasture lands; 74 out of the tribe of Asher: Mashal with its pasture lands, Abdon with its pasture lands, 75 Hukok with its pasture lands, and Rehob with its pasture lands; 76 and out of the tribe of Naphtali: Kedesh in Galilee with its pasture lands, Ham'mon with its pasture lands, and Kiriaha'im with its pasture lands. 77 To the rest of the Merar'ites were allotted out of the tribe of Zeb'ulun: Rim'mono with its pasture lands, Tabor with its pasture lands, 78 and beyond the Jordan at Jericho, on the east side of the Jordan, out of the tribe of Reuben: Bezer in the steppe with its pasture lands, Jahzah with its pasture lands, 79 Ked'emoth with its pasture lands, and Mepha'a-ath with its pasture lands; 80 and out of the tribe of Gad: Ramoth in Gilead with its pasture lands, Mahana'im with its pasture lands, 81 Heshbon with its pasture lands, and Jazer with its pasture lands.

7 The sons of Is'sachar: Tola, Pu'ah, Jashub, and Shimron, four. 2 The sons of Tola: Uzzi, Repha'iah, Je'ri-el, Jah'mai, Ibsam, and Schem'uel, heads of their fathers' houses, namely of Tola, mighty warriors of their generations, their number in the days of David being twenty-two thousand six hundred. 3 The sons of Uzzi: Izrah'iah. And the sons of Izrah'iah: Michael, Obadi'ah, Jo'el, and Isshi'ah, five, all of them chief.

G. The Northern Tribes (7:1-40)

7:1-5. These verses are from an unknown source.

Tunes are perilous to comment on. The zeal of organists and choirs is sometimes rewarded by a responsive congregation. But not always; the unmusical may be coldly indifferent, obstructive, or conventional. How tragic when quarrels arise in consequence! This playing and singing is in the house of the Lord.

7:2. Idealizing the Soldier.—The Chronicler skillfully utilized the list of names in order to give an idealistic sketch of the establishment of Yahweh's people in Canaan. His readers would understand that symbolic, not actual, history is presented. In ch. 6 he has delineated the upbuilding of a devoted hierarchy. Here and in ch. 8 he turns to the civil aspect and by the recurrent phrases heads of their fathers' houses and warriors of their generations, subtly invites us to reflect that the Canaanites were subdued not because a few adventurous Hebrews became professional soldiers, but because household by household the men of Israel were willing to fight the good fight. The heading "Idealizing
4 And with them, by their generations, after the house of their fathers, were bands of soldiers for war, six and thirty thousand men: for they had many wives and sons.
5 And their brethren among all the families of Issachar were valiant men of might, reckoned in all by their genealogies fourscore and seven thousand.
6 The sons of Benjamin: Bela, and Becher, and Jededia, three.
7 And the sons of Bela; Ezbon, and Uzzi, and Uzziel, and Jerimoth, and Iri, five: heads of the house of their fathers, mighty men of valor: and were reckoned by their genealogies twenty and two thousand and thirty and four.
8 And the sons of Becher; Zemira, and Joash, and Eliezer, and Eloena, and Omri, and Jeremoth, and Abiah, and Anathoth, and Alameth. All these are the sons of Becher.
9 And the number of them, after their genealogy by their generations, heads of the house of their fathers, mighty men of valor, was twenty thousand and two hundred.
10 The sons also of Jededia; Bilhan: and the sons of Bilhan; Jeush, and Benjamin, and Ehud, and Chenaanah, and Zethan, and Tharshish, and Ahishahar.
11 All these the sons of Jededia, by the heads of their fathers, mighty men of valor, men: 4 and along with them, by their generations, according to their fathers' houses, were units of the army for war, thirty-six thousand, for they had many wives and sons. 5 Their kinsmen belonging to all the families of Issachar were in all eighty-seven thousand mighty warriors, enrolled by genealogy.
6 The sons of Benjamin: Bela, Becher, and Jed'a-el, three. 7 The sons of Bela: Ezbon, Uzzi, Uz'ziel, Jer'imoth, and Iri, five, heads of fathers' houses, mighty warriors; and their enrollment by genealogies was twenty-two thousand and thirty-four. 8 The sons of Becher: Zemi'rah, Jo'ash, Elie'zer, Eli-o-e'nai, Omri, Jer'emoth, Abi'jah, An'-athoth, and Al'emoth. 9 All these were the sons of Becher; and their enrollment by genealogies, according to their generations, as heads of their fathers' houses, mighty warriors, was twenty thousand two hundred. 10 The sons of Jed'a-el: Bilhan. And the sons of Bilhan: Je'ush, Benjamin, Ehud, Chena'anah, Zethan, Tarshish, and Ahish'ahar. 11 All these were the sons of Jed'a-el according to the heads of their fathers' heads.

2. BENJAMIN (7:6-12)
6. The sons of Benjamin: The original text undoubtedly was "sons of Zebulun" (the difference is slight in Hebrew). The authentic Benjaminite list is given in 8:1-40.

the Soldier" is perhaps less than just to the Chronicler. He is here concerned simply to stress that the whole community willingly shared in the grim ordeal of war. But we should sadly reflect: How many young men died in these battles? How many were maimed? What did the Hebrew women feel when fathers and husbands and sons went to war? Must there always be fighting? Unlike the Western and central Asiatic peoples, the very ancient Chinese civilization did not idealize the soldier. He ranked very low in its grading of society. Suddenly there has taken place a change of opinion in China with incalculable consequences, for China represents a quarter of the world's population. For the nations of the West there is only a hope that the former attitude, during which for two thousand years the man of war was not idealized, may re-emerge in Chinese life.

The Western nations in this awful century can scarcely be said to idealize war. But they are under the profoundest duty to honor the soldier and to reverence the morale of the fighting services. The morals of the soldier—cut off from normal life and home surroundings, and enduring, it may be, suffering or imminent death—are not perfect. Criticisms may be merited, but not on the lips of the sheltered and the safe.

How about the morale of the Christian army?

Soldiers of Christ, arise,
And put your armor on.

11. Fit to Go Out for War.—What a memorable, challenging remark this is! It sets a standard: Fit for duty. Apply the test to the community in which we live. Are some thousands of its population careless and undisciplined in

This unlucky textual error occurred very early, for some Benjaminites names (e.g., vs. 10) were inserted in the Zebulun genealogy.

character, neither willing nor able to do their best in the conflict between right and wrong? Apply it to the Christian congregation. Are its members trained and ready to contend for Christ? Wiser it is to apply the challenge to oneself; for nothing so swiftly makes one unfit to be a disciple of Jesus as to be censorious of others (cf. Matt. 7:1-5).
because they came down to take away their cattle.
22 And Ephraim their father mourned many days, and his brethren came to comfort him.
23 ¶ And when he went in to his wife, she conceived and bare a son, and he called his name Beriah, because it went evil with his house.
24 (And his daughter was Sherah, who built Beth-horon the nether, and the upper, and U'zen-sherah.)
25 And Rephah was his son, also Resheph, and Telah his son, and Tahan his son, 26 Laadan his son, Ammihud his son, Elisahma his son, 27 Non his son, Jehoshuah his son.
28 ¶ And their possessions and habitations were, Beth-el and the towns thereof, and eastward Na'aran, and westward Gezer, with the towns thereof: Shechem also and the towns thereof, unto Gaza and the towns thereof:
29 And by the borders of the children of Manasseh, Beth-shean and her towns, Taanach and her towns, Megiddo and her towns, Dor and her towns. In these dwelt the children of Joseph the son of Israel.
30 ¶ The sons of Asher: Imnah, and Isuah, and Ishuai, and Beriah, and Serah their sister.
31 And the sons of Beriah: Heber, and Malchiel, who is the father of Birzavith.
32 And Heber begat Japhlet, and Shomer, and Hotham, and Shua their sister.
33 And the sons of Japhlet: Pasach, and Bimhal, and Ashvath. These are the children of Japhlet.
34 And the sons of Shamer: Ahi, and Rohgah, Jehubbah, and Aram.
35 And the sons of his brother Helam; Zophah, and Imna, and Shelesh, and Amal.
36 The sons of Zophah: Suah, and Harnepher, and Shual, and Beri, and Imrah, 37 Bezer, and Hod, and Shamma, and Shilshah, and Ithran, and Beera.
38 And the sons of Jether; Jephunneh, and Pispah, and Ara.

24. His Daughter . . . Built Beth-horon.—On this a commentator of the last century—let him take shelter in anonymity—remarked, "In verse 24, chapter vii, we actually find a woman doing something." But immediately thereafter he wrote: "What builders women may be! What character they can build in their sons and daughters! What influence they can build round themselves! Women can do a work which men cannot even attempt."
39 And the sons of Ulla: Arah, and Haniel, and Rezia.
40 All these were the children of Asher, heads of their father’s house, choice and mighty men of valor, chief of the princes. And the number throughout the genealogy of them that were apt to the war and to battle was twenty and six thousand men.

8 Now Benjamin begat Bela his firstborn, Ashbel the second, and Aharah the third,
2 Nohah the fourth, and Rapha the fifth.
3 And the sons of Bela were, Addar, and Gera, and Abihud,
4 And Abishua, and Naaman, and Ahoah,
5 And Gera, and Shephuphan, and Huram.
6 And these are the sons of Ehud: these are the heads of the fathers of the inhabitants of Geba, and they removed them to Manahath:
7 And Naaman, and Ahiah, and Gera, he removed them, and begat Uzza, and Ahihud.
8 And Shaharaim begat children in the country of Moab, after he had sent them away; Hushim and Baara were his wives.
9 And he begat of Hodesh his wife, Jobab, and Zibia, and Mesha, and Malcam, 10 And Jeuz, and Shachia, and Mirma. These were his sons, heads of the fathers.
11 And of Hushim he begat Abitub and Elpaal.
12 The sons of Elpaal; Eber, and Misham, and Shemed, who built Ono, and Lod, with the towns thereof:
13 Beriah also, and Shema, who were heads of the fathers of the inhabitants of Ajalon, who drove away the inhabitants of Gath:

H. SONS OF BENJAMIN (8:1-40)

The twentieth century has seen the rapid extension of women’s influence from family life into almost every aspect of communal affairs, not only in the Western world but even, to a lesser degree, in the Islamic countries and China. The transformation may be ascribed to modern freedom of thought breaking down unreasonable conventions, but it is wholly consonant with fundamental implications of Jewish and Christian religion. As Paul put it, “There is neither male nor female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus” (Gal. 3:28).

18 Ishmerai also, and Jezliah, and Jobab, the sons of Elpaal;
19 And Jakim, and Zichri, and Zabdi,
20 And Elienai, and Zithai, and Eliel,
21 And Adaiah, and Beraih, and Shimrath, the sons of Shimhi:
22 And Ishpan, and Heber, and Elieel,
23 And Abdun, and Zichri, and Hanan,
24 And Hananiah, and Elam, and Anthothijah,
25 And Iphedeiah, and Penuel, the sons of Shashak;
26 And Shamsherai, and Shehariah, and Athaliah.
27 And Jaresiah, and Eliah, and Zichri, the sons of Jeroham.
28 These were heads of the fathers, by their generations, chief men. These dwelt in Jerusalem.
29 And at Gibeon dwelt the father of Gibeon: whose wife's name was Maachah:
30 And his firstborn son Abdon, and Zur, and Kish, and Baal, and Nadab, 31 And Gedor, and Ahio, and Zacher.
32 And Mikloth begat Shimel. And these dwelt with their brethren in Jerusalem, over against them.
33 ¶ And Ner begat Kish, and Kish begat Saul, and Saul begat Jonathan, and Malchi-shua, and Abinadab, and Esh-baal.
34 And the son of Jonathan was Meribbaal: and Meribbaal begat Micah.
35 And the sons of Micah were, Pithon, and Melech, and Tarea, and Ahaz.
36 And Ahaz begat Jehoadah; and Jehoadah begat Alemeth, and Azmaveth, and Zimri; and Zimri begat Moza;
37 And Moza begat Binea: Raphah was his son, Eleasah his son, Azel his son, and Joha were sons of Beriah. 17 Zebadiah, Meshul'lam, Hizki, Heber, 18 Ishmerai. Ith'ah, and Jobab were the sons of Elpa'al. 19 Jakim, Zichri, Zabdi, 20 Eli-e'ni, Zil'e-thai, Eli'el, 21 Ada'ia'h, Bera'ia'h, and Shimrath were the sons of Shim'e'i. 22 Ishpan, Eber. Eli'el, 23 Abdun, Zichri, Hanan, 24 Hanani'ah. Elam, Anthothi'jah, 25 Iph'de'ia'h, and Penu'el were the sons of Sha-shak. 26 Sham'sherai, Shehara'iah, Athali'ah, 27 Ja-areshi'ah, Eli'jah, and Zichri were the sons of Jero'ham. These were the heads of fathers' houses, according to their generations, chief men. These dwelt in Jerusalem.
29 Je'i'el the father of Gibeon dwelt in Gibeon, and the name of his wife was Ma'-aca'h. 30 His first-born son Abdon, then Zur, Kish, Ba'al, Nadab, 31 Gedor, Abi'o, Zecher, 32 and Mikloth (he was the father of Shim'e-ah). Now these also dwelt opposite their kinsmen in Jerusalem, with their kinsmen. 33 Ner was the father of Kish, Kish of Saul, Saul of Jonathan, Mal'chishua'ah, Abin'adab, and Eshba'al; 34 and the son of Jonathan was Mer'ib-ba'al; and Mer'ib-ba'al was the father of Micah. 35 The sons of Micah: Pithon, Melech, Ta're'a, and Ahaz. 36 Ahaz was the father of Jeho'addah; and Jeho'addah was the father of Al'emeth, Az'maveth, and Zimri; Zimri was the father of Moza. 37 Moza was the father of Bin'e-a; Raphah was his son, Ele-

29-38. This list of Saul's ancestors is repeated in 9:35-44, where it becomes the immediate prelude to Chronicles' history of David and of the kings of Judah; for that reason probably it seemed desirable to repeat it there.

33. Eshbaal: The meaning is "Man [worshiper] of baal." In II Sam. 2:8 the name of Saul's son was altered to Ishboseth, "Man of shame," because that book was read aloud in synagogue services, whereas Chronicles was not. Baal came to denote a god other than Yahweh; in Saul's thought it meant a title of honor, implying that Yahweh was Master (bd'al) of Canaan.

The territory anciently occupied by the tribe of Benjamin lay close to Jerusalem on the north. One can understand that after the fall of the kingdom of Israel in 721 B.C., its occupants would turn for support to the surviving capital; likewise, after the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C., it would be natural that Hebrews resident in Benjamin would 38 And Azel had six sons, whose names are these, Azrikam, Bocheru, and Ishmael, and Sheariah, and Obadiah, and Hanan. All these were the sons of Azel.

39 And the sons of Eshek his brother were. Ulam his firstborn, Jechush the second, and Eliphelet the third.

40 And the sons of Ulam were mighty men of valor, archers, and had many sons, and sons' sons, a hundred and fifty. All these were of the sons of Benjamin.

9 So all Israel were reckoned by genealogies: and, behold, they were written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah, who were carried away to Babylon for their transgression.

2 Now the first inhabitants that dwelt in their possessions in their cities were, the Israelites, the priests, Levites, and the Nethinim.

3 And in Jerusalem dwelt of the children of Judah, and of the children of Benjamin, and of the children of Ephraim, and Manasseh; become closely linked in sympathy and practical interests with the nascent community in Jerusalem. That this did happen is strikingly attested by vs. 28, These dwelt in Jerusalem, i.e., Benjaminitish families whose forefathers are named in vs. 15-27.

J. Jerusalem Families (9:1-16)

9:1. Of Israel: The LXX adds "and Judah." The source cited in this verse was not the canonical book of Kings: see Intro., p. 347.

2a. This list of inhabitants of Jerusalem appears also in Neh. 11:3-19. Vs. 2 is rather less obscure in the parallel Neh. 11:3, where "the chief of the province" is read for the first inhabitants, and "the towns of Judah" for the meaningless in their cities. The list of course refers to postexilic Jerusalem.

2b-3. Israel here denotes not the long-ago fallen kingdom of Israel, but Jews loyal to postexilic Jerusalem and its worship (cf. II Chr. 30:18; Ps. 80:2). They are said to include men of the areas of Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh, as well as the Judeans.

9:1. Lessons of the Past.—Hope stirs that the catalogue of ancestors will now end; but the following forty-three verses are packed with names. Only at ch. 10 does the Chronicler begin a readable narrative. His contemporaries were keenly interested in these lists of names. If their families could thus trace back their lineage the fact was warrant for claiming rights and privileges in the Jewish community. The Chronicler's genealogical zeal was not for an unpractical study of antiquity for its own sake: the past was held to have a close bearing on the present. How far is that attitude sensible or important?

"History is bunk," Henry Ford once said. Yet probably he set himself to acquire thorough knowledge of the history of the internal combustion engine. A nation which ignores or despises past events stands in deadly peril of plunging into errors the consequences of which have been repeatedly made plain in former times. In the sphere of religion the danger is seldom that of ignoring history, but is often that of allowing what our fathers thought and did authoritatively to determine our own outlook. In any extreme form that attitude is a cardinal error, for it is virtual disbelief in the promised guidance of the Holy Spirit, failure to conceive of God as the living God. It induces the devout to seal their minds against the impact of new facts instead of courageously believing that greater knowledge will but enrich understanding of the essential faith. In the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries the attitude of the churches toward the findings of scientific research was for the most part futile, calamitous, and shortsighted. The mistake is now generally realized, but it will take a long time to undo the tragic consequences. Great reverence is due to what wise Christians have believed. Nevertheless, knowledge of the history of Christianity should be our guide but not our chain. The reformers understood and honored the strength and grandeur in medieval theology, but they were open to try to receive present revelation, and therein were in accord with the deepest conviction of Hebraic prophetic faith and with the Christian doctrine of the Holy Spirit declared in John 16:12-14. With the same great and humble wisdom concerning his own teaching spoke John Robinson in 1612, when he bade the Pilgrim Fathers farewell in these memorable words:

I charge you, before God and His blessed Angels, that you follow me no further than you have seen me follow the Lord Jesus Christ. If God reveal anything to you by any other instrument of His, be as ready to receive it as you were to receive any truth by my ministry, for I am verily persuaded the Lord hath more truth yet to break forth out of His holy word.*

19 And Shallum the son of Kore, the son of Ebia’saph, the son of Korah, and his brethren, of the house of his father, the Korahites, were over the work of the service, keepers of the gates of the tabernacle: and their fathers, being over the host of the Lord, were keepers of the entry.

gifted that it was very easy for them to be proficient. By diligence in learning their tasks and by unaltering attention to their duties, one and all, however, won the reputation of being very able men for the work of the service of the house of God. Were they puffed up by their good qualities? Pride, as Reinhold Niebuhr insists,⁷ is the taproot of evil in human nature, and the temptation to it grows stronger and more insidious when we have real merits. In any walk of life it is exceedingly difficult to become a very able personality and yet remain humble in spirit.

⁷ The Nature and Destiny of Man (New York: Charles Scribner’s Sons, 1941), I, 198 ff.

These conspicuous men were priests. If proud they were, then all the more heinous their sin of pride. There is no excuse whatsoever for self-conceit in those (however able) who are engaged in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ, who “being in the form of God, . . . took upon him the form of a servant, . . . and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross” (Phil. 2:6-8; cf. Mark 10:45; John 13:14).

17. Menial Workers.—The gatekeepers or the porters were the men charged with custody of the temple and its courts and with many other so-called menial duties. No doubt the priests
They were enrolled by genealogies in their villages. David and Samuel the seer established them in their office of trust. 23 So they and their children had the oversight of the gates of the house of the Lord, namely, the house of the tabernacle, by wards.

24 In four quarters were the porters, toward the east, west, north, and south.

25 And their brethren, which were in their villages, were to come after seven days from time to time with them.

26 For these Levites, the four chief porters, were in their set office, and were over the chambers and treasuries of the house of God.

27 And they lodged round about the house of God, because the charge was upon them, and the opening thereof every morning pertained to them.

28 And certain of them had the charge of the ministering vessels, that they should bring them in and out by tale.

29 Some of them also were appointed to oversee the vessels, and all the instruments of the sanctuary, and the fine flour, and the wine, and the oil, and the frankincense, and the spiceries.

offering the sacrifices, and the Levites rendering the psalms, counted themselves much above these, the very inferior clergy—and let them know it. But, said a psalmist, "I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness" (Ps. 84:10). Lord Keynes and another British peer were once overheard keenly discussing the best way of washing dishes. As they were very able men, no doubt the technique they favored was both efficient and economical. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might" (Eccl. 9:10). Less secular and more memorable is the verse in George Herbert’s "The Elixir."

Teach me, my God and King,
In all things thee to see;
And what I do in anything,
To do it as for thee.

L. Ancestors of Saul (9:35-44)

See Exeg. on 8:29-38. The list here repeated may have displaced some of the Chronicler's words introductory to his account of Judah's kingdom.

39. Here (and in 8:33) read "begat Abner." Ner was Saul's uncle (I Sam. 14:51).

II. The Reign of David (10:1-29:30)

A. The End of Saul (10:1-14)

The Chronicler had in mind a great purpose: to relate how a kingdom, brought into being by the will of God, had in the end been reduced to nought by human perversity.
2 And the Philistines followed hard after Saul, and after his sons: and the Philistines slew Jonathan, and Abin'adab, and Mal'chishu'a, the sons of Saul.

3 And the battle went sore against Saul, and the archers hit him, and he was wounded of the archers.

4 Then said Saul to his armor-bearer, Draw thy sword, and thrust me through therewith; lest these uncircumcised come and abuse me. But his armor-bearer would not; for he was sore afraid. So Saul took a sword, and fell upon it.

5 And when his armor-bearer saw that Saul was dead, he fell likewise on the sword, and died.

6 So Saul died, and his three sons, and all his house died together.

7 And when all the men of Israel that were in the valley saw that they fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, then they forsook their cities, and fled: and the Philistines came and dwelt in them.

8 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, when the Philistines came to strip the slain, that they found Saul and his sons fallen in mount Gilbo' a.

9 And when they had stripped him, they took his head, and his armor, and sent into the land of the Philistines round about, to carry tidings unto their idols, and to the people.

He also wished to show that the high design of God had not been finally frustrated. Out of the fallen kingdom there had come into existence the temple and its worship: a visible sign of faith indestructible. Except for the farewell speech which the Chronicler assigned to David (ch. 29), he was no great artist in words. Nevertheless, steadily and with cumulative effect he pursued his theme with an artist's eye for selecting what mattered and rejecting the irrelevant. He saw that the vivid narratives in Samuel about Saul's life were beside the point, for in Saul the kingdom had made, as it were, a false start. Only Saul's death mattered, because it had been a prelude to David's reign. With that, therefore, he began, quoting I Sam. 31:1-13; skillfully he altered one verse (vs. 6) and added his own reflection (vss. 13-14).

10:1. Now the Philistines fought . . . : Possibly some introductory words by the Chronicler are lost—having been replaced by the genealogical chapters—but not necessarily so. For ancient taste the opening would not seem so abrupt as it does to us.

6. And all his house: His whole family, all his sons (contrast I Sam. 31:6, "all his men," i.e., his soldiers). Yet the Chronicler knew that at least two sons of Saul, Ishbosheth and Mephibosheth, survived Saul's death; for the book of Samuel says much about them, and relates that Ishbosheth (not David) was accepted by the northern and southern tribes, reigning over them as king for two years. He knew that II Sam. 3:1 says, "Now there was long war between the house of Saul and the house of David." He knew that for seven years David was no more than king of the Judeans at Hebron, and became 10 And they put his armor in the house of their gods, and fastened his head in the temple of Dagon.

11 And when all Jabesh-gilead heard all that the Philistines had done to Saul, 12 They arose, all the valiant men, and took away the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, and brought them to Jabesh, and buried their bones under the oak in Jabesh, and fasted seven days.

13 So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it;

14 And inquired not of the Lord: therefore he slew him, and turned the kingdom unto David the son of Jesse.

effectively ruler of all the Hebrews only after he captured Jerusalem (Zion) from the Jebusites. In the same way the Chronicler ignored the narrative which tells how David, late in his reign, was almost overthrown by a rebellion led by his son Absalom. Thus, why did the Chronicler, in face of known facts, deliberately declare that all Saul’s family perished when the Battle of Gilboa was fought? Because David as the chosen of the Lord ought at once to have been crowned enthusiastically by all the Hebrews. This verse prepares the way for him to say so. Clearer proof need not be asked to show that the Chronicler was not attempting to write a history to be credited as literal fact, but was obviously setting out to portray an ideal.

13-14. The Chronicler’s own comment. Saul perished not in the fortunes of war and because the Philistines were stronger, but because he had defied the injunction of Samuel, the true prophet of God, and sought counsel from the dead.

steps leading to the priests’ hall, ready to render the psalm when the sacrifice was completed* (cf. the hymn attributed to Gregory the Great, “Father, we praise thee, now the night is over”).

10:13-14. A Man Who Failed.—Notice that the Chronicler chooses to ignore the efforts and successes of Saul’s career. He records only his final defeat and death on Mount Gilboa and the action of the valiant men who carried his body to Jabesh. The Chronicler then pronounces verdict. Contrast these verses with the eulogy and lament which David, whom Saul had wronged, composed concerning the fallen king and Jonathan his lovable son (II Sam. 1:17-27).

Does not David’s generous tribute exemplify the right attitude in estimating the blend of virtues and faults in a man’s character, especially in one who has carried difficult and high responsibility? For long years Saul had striven to rally the quarrelsome Hebrew tribes and prevent their subjugation by the Philistines. Often he had fought successfully, and the final battle was lost because the Philistines attacked in great force and were far better armed than the Hebrews. It is true that his unwarranted jealousy of David fatefuly weakened his cause. But we should mercifully judge that in Saul’s mind there may have been all along a tendency toward derangement. Jealousy gave it actuality: that green-eyed monster from whose insidious influence few are perfectly exempt. Who of us would unreservedly condemn Saul? The Chronicler did so: Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord.

The Chronicler was not out to do full justice to the memory of Saul. He was wholeheartedly concerned to insist throughout his account of Judah’s history that whenever men flouted what they believed to be the will of God the consequences were not trivial but disastrous. This verse collects the evidence against Saul in that respect, and upon those sad facts alone the harsh verdict results. A deep issue is raised. Does deliberate wrongdoing lead to destruction?

*See The Jewish Encyclopedia (New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1906), XII, 81-83.
Then all Israel gathered themselves to David unto Hebron, saying, Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh. 2 And moreover in time past, even when Saul was king, thou wast he that ledest out and broughtest in Israel: and the Lord thy God said unto thee, Thou shalt feed my people Israel, and thou shalt be ruler over my people Israel. 3 Therefore came all the elders of Israel to the king of Hebron: and David made a covenant with them in Hebron before the Lord: and they anointed David king over Israel, according to the word of the Lord by Samuel. 4 And David and all Israel went to Jerusalem, which is Jebus; where the Jebusites were, the inhabitants of the land. 5 And the inhabitants of Jebus said to David, Thou shalt not come hither. Nevertheless David took the castle of Zion, which is the city of David. 6 And David said, Whosoever smiteth the Jebusites first shall be chief and captain. So Joab the son of Zeruiah went first up, and was chief.

And David dwelt in the castle; therefore they called it the city of David.

B. David's Triumphs (11:1-12:40)

11:1-3. Instantly, effortlessly, David (says the Chronicler) was acclaimed as king by all the Hebrews. The pretext for this assertion was found in II Sam. 5:1-3, but the whole of II Sam. 1-4 and 5:4-5 had to be ignored.

4-9. The impression is given that David's master stroke in capturing Zion from the Jebusites was an immediate sequel to his coronation, and the text stresses that all Israel

Is that truth or delusion concerning human affairs? Horrible deeds have been perpetrated at the dictate of conscience. It is as necessary to educate our moral as our mental sense. We need to let the mind of Christ illumine our conscience and constrain our will.

11:1-3. Behold the Man!—Here is a significant fact. A personality appears whose qualities are such that men can take heart again amidst perils that seem overwhelming; and not only so, they can also feel he will bring them more than had ever been hoped. His right to leadership is transparent and is welcomed. In the new enthusiasm former uncertainty and causes of division vanish. It is "a time for greatness."

All Israel was of one mind to make David king. They felt him to be the answer to their common need—"the man born to be king." There are three notable features in these verses.

First, the tribes of the north assert that they, not only the Judeans, are David's kith and kin: Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh. Second, they declare their conviction that David is what he is, and what he will be, through the purpose and power of God. And third, their confidence in his character was not mistaken. David responded to their overture as a true man to his brethren: he made a covenant with them in Hebron before the Lord.

National histories afford many parallels for the emergence of a solitary, outstandingly great person. World history shows one supreme instance—Jesus Christ: Ecce Homo. Of him it was said, "Behold, the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world!" (John 1:29). All Israel came together to make David king. Jesus said that he would draw all men unto himself. It has not so happened. But it ought to happen.
8 And he built the city round about, even from Millo round about: and Joab repaired the rest of the city.
9 So David waxed greater and greater: for the Lord of hosts was with him.
10 These also are the chief of the mighty men whom David had, who strengthened themselves with him in his kingdom, and with all Israel, to make him king, according to the word of the Lord concerning Israel.
11 And this is the number of the mighty men whom David had: Jashobeam, a Hachmonite, the chief of the captains: he lifted up his spear against three hundred slain by him at one time.
12 And after him was Eleazar the son of Dodo, the Ahohite, who was one of the three mighties.
13 He was with David at Pas-dammim, and there the Philistines were gathered together to battle, where was a parcel of ground full of barley; and the people fled from before the Philistines.
14 And they set themselves in the midst of that parcel, and delivered it, and slew the Philistines; and the Lord saved them by a great deliverance.
15 Now three of the thirty captains went down to the rock of David, into the cave of Adullam; and the host of the Philistines encamped in the valley of Rephaim.
16 And David was then in the hold, and the Philistines' garrison was then at Bethlehem.

was with him in the enterprise. We see in that emphasis the first indication of the Chronicler's cumulative plea to his contemporaries that the men of Israel ought to be reckoned true Hebrews, brethren of the Judeans (contrast II Sam. 5:6, which alludes merely to "the king and his men").

10-47. The equivalent passage in II Sam. 23:8-39 suggests correctly that the exploits happened at sundry times during David's life. The Chronicler by placing them together at the outset, implies that all these heroes from all Israel had risked their lives for David even before he became king.

need be no delay for the individual to recognize in Christ his king and allow him to dispel the confusion of his mind, heal its divisions, and deliver his soul from peril.

10. Loyal Helpers.—In the verses which follow, the Chronicler assembled names, exploits, and numbers of valiant men who served David, as if all of them had been with him in the time of his youth. It is much as if we were to compile a vast catalogue of those who throughout the centuries had nobly served Christ. Who could read that list understandingly and not be heartened? To do so should check somber reflections about nominal Christians unworthy of his name. It is a prevalent fault to allow disheartening facts to loom in our thoughts. Paul was wise when he urged us to concentrate attention on whatsoever things are good (Phil. 4:8).
17 And David longed, and said, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, that is at the gate!
18 And the three brake through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: but David would not drink of it, but poured it out to the Lord,
19 And said, My God forbid it me, that I should do this thing: shall I drink the blood of these men that have put their lives in jeopardy? for with the jeopardy of their lives they brought it: therefore he would not drink it. These things did these three mightiest.

20 And Abishai the brother of Joab, he was chief of the three: for lifting up his spear against three hundred, he slew them, and had a name among the three.
21 Of the three, he was more honorable than the two; for he was their captain: howbeit he attained not to the first three.
22 Benai'ah the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man of Kabzeel, who had done many acts; he slew two lionlike men of Moab: also he went down and slew a lion in a pit in a snowy day.
23 And he slew an Egyptian, a man of great stature, five cubits high; and in the Egyptian's hand was a spear like a weaver's beam; and he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and slew him with his own spear.
24 These things did Benai'ah the son of Jehoiada, and had a name among the three mighties.

17-19. Grace Before Meals.—This episode has been an inexhaustible well from which to draw refreshing water. David was not subsisting from thirst, but water available at the stronghold at Adullam was warm with the heat of its rocks, and he longed for the coolness found in Beth-lehem's deep well. One may hope that, in consideration for the feelings of the men who risked their lives to evade the Philistine sentinels and fetch it to him, David poured... out only a token amount of the water and drank most of it. Scholars may point to the widespread custom of offering a libation, pouring out a portion of wine in honor of the gods before drinking the rest. Suffice it to infer that David's action on the occasion effectively showed that he set the safety of his followers incomparably above his physical desires. Are there comparable testing situations in our lives, when we are in danger of accepting benefits from others without giving due thanks either to them or to God for the self-sacrifice or kindness involved?

22. The Lion Killer.—What a quaint verse this is! We could do with a photograph of the two lionlike men of Moab whom Benai'ah killed. Were their beards so exuberant as to resemble a lion's mane? But as the RSV (he smote two ariels of Moab) indicates, the Hebrew is obscure. The original reading may have recorded the comparatively tame fact that Benai'ah slew...
Behold, he was honorable among the thirty, but attained not to the first three: and David set him over his guard.

26 Also the valiant men of the armies were Asahel the brother of Joab, Elhanan the son of Dodo of Beth-lehem, 27 Shammoth the Hatorite, Helez the Pelonite, 28 Ira the son of Ikkesh the Tekoite, Abiezir the Antothite, 29 Shibbeai the Hushathite, Ilai the Ahohite, 30 Maharai the Netophathite, Heled the son of Baanah the Netophathite, 31 Ithai the son of Ribai of Gibeah, that pertained to the children of Benjamin, Beniah the Pirathonite, 32 Hurai of the brooks of Gaash, Abiel the Arbathite, 33 Azmaveth the Bahanumite, Eliahab the Shaalbonite, 34 The sons of Hashem the Gizonite, Jonathan the son of Shage the Hararite, 35 Ahiam the son of Sacar the Hararite, Eliphal the son of Ur, 36 Heper the Mecherathite, Ahijah the Pelonite, 37 Hezro the Carmelite, Naarai the son of Ezbi, 38 Joel the brother of Nathan, Mibhar the son of Haggeri, 39 Zelek the Ammonite, Naharai the Beerothite, the armor-bearer of Joab the son of Zeruiah, 40 Ira the Ithrite, Gabre the Ithrite, 41 Uriah the Hitteite, Zabad the son of Ahlai, 42 Adina the son of Shiza the Reubenite, a captain of the Reubenites, and thirty with him, 43 Hanan the son of Maachah, and Joshaphat the Mithnathite, 44 Uzza the Asherathite, Shama and Jehiel the sons of Hotham the Aroerite, 45 Jediel the son of Shimri, and Joah his brother, the Tizite, 46 Eliel the Mahavite, and Jeribai and Joshaviah the sons of Elnaam, and Ithmah the Moabite, two young lions in their den. On the second part of the verse George Adam Smith comments: "The beast had strayed up from Jordan, and been caught in a snowstorm. Where else [than in Palestine] could lions and snow come togethet?" An evangelist found in the episode the topics for his three-dimensional sermon: slaying lions—in pits—on snowy days.

47 Eliel, and Obed, and Jasiel the Mesobaite.

12 Now these are they that came to David to Ziklag, while he yet kept himself close because of Saul the son of Kish: and they were among the mighty men, helpers of the war. 2 They were armed with bows, and could use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones and shooting arrows out of a bow, even of Saul's brethren of Benjamin. 3 The chief was Ahiezer, then Joash, the sons of Shemaah the Gibeathite; and Zeziel, and Pelet, the sons of Azmaveth; and Bera-chah, and Jehu the Antothite,

4 And Ismaiah the Gibeonite, a mighty man among the thirty, and over the thirty; and Jeremiah, and Jahaziel, and Johanan, and Josabad the Gederathite,

5 Eluzai, and Jerimoth, and Bealiah, and Shemariah, and Shephatiah the Haruphite,

6 Elkanah, and Jediael, and Azareel, and Jozer, and Jashobeam, the Korhites,

7 And Joelah, and Zebadiah, the sons of Jeroham of Gedor.

8 And of the Gadites there separated themselves unto David into the hold to the wilderness men of might, and men of war fit for the battle, that could handle shield and buckler, whose faces were like the faces of lions, and were as swift as the roes upon the mountains;

12:1-40. The colossal assertion of this chapter (without any basis in Samuel) must be regarded mainly as the Chronicler's fertile invention; but some use of popular traditions seems indicated by vss. 2, 8, 15, 17-19, which are not in the Chronicler's colorless style.

2. It is utterly unlikely that more than a few Benjaminites joined David, for the tribe as a whole sided with Ishbosheth, Saul's son.

12:1-40. Unrealized Possibilities.—This is a lovely chapter, provided its underlying purpose is perceived. At its outset the Chronicler emphasizes the fact that, even when David was no more than a hunted fugitive from Saul, fighting men of surpassing skill and courage came to be with him, some even from Saul's own territory of Benjamin and others from the Israelite regions of Gad and Manasseh. A vast concourse assembled at Hebron—155,000 from the lesser tribes of the north alone, their numbers utterly surpassing the men from Judah. A united people made David king. The Chronicler's contemporaries, who could read the books of Samuel, knew this was not fact. It piles the incredible on the unhistorical. For whom then, for what sort of men, was it written that they might take to heart its contemporary implications? For self-satisfied men in the Jerusalem of the Chronicler's age, who felt no pity for former Israel but prided themselves that Jerusalem was exclusively the city of God, and they its elite. For men who opposed the view that loyal Israelites should serve in the temple. For cynics who thought the promise of Abraham, that his children should be innumerable as the sand upon the shore of the sea, was sentimental moonshine. The Chronicler was painting a picture of unity so radiant that to see it would be to desire it.

Translate his dream into terms of the unrealized possibilities in Western history. Rancorous cherishing of old wrongs—how prevalent that evil is! But North and South in the United States have seen one such deep wound healed.
9 Ezer the first, Obadiah the second, Eliab the third,
10 Mishannah the fourth, Jeremiah the fifth,
11 Attai the sixth, Elieel the seventh,
12 Johanan the eighth, Elzabad the ninth,
13 Jeremiah the tenth, Machbanai the eleventh.
14 These were of the sons of Gad, captains of the host: one of the least was over a hundred, and the greatest over a thousand.
15 These are they that went over Jordan in the first month, when it had overflowed all his banks; and they put to flight all of them of the valleys, both toward the east, and toward the west.
16 And there came of the children of Benjamin and Judah to the hold unto David.
17 And David went out to meet them, and answered and said unto them, If ye be come peaceably unto me to help me, mine heart shall be knit unto you: but if ye be come to betray me to mine enemies, seeing there is no wrong in mine hands, the God of our fathers look thereon, and rebuke it.
18 Then the spirit came upon Amasai, who was chief of the captains, and he said, Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse: peace, peace be unto thee, and peace be to thine helpers; for thy God helpeth thee. Then David received them, and made them captains of the band.

18. This remarkable verse has the rhythmic form of Hebrew poetry: a probable indication of its antiquity.

Imagine a world-wide healing: the nations united peaceably, ancient enmities forgiven. Picture the countless homes from which the shadows of fear and want would pass away. Or turn to Christian history. Suppose there had been no split between Orthodox and Catholic, Catholic and Protestant, because so deeply, so boldly, so generously the followers of Jesus had interpreted his definition of those who are his disciples (John 13:34-35). How vast and vague are these unrealized ideals! But there is one region over which we can exercise some measurable and immediate control—the region of our individual character. There, if we would, we could readily set to work to remedy past wrongs, to forgive, and to rebuild. There has been one Ideal that became fact in this dark world—Jesus of Nazareth.

17. A Clear Conscience.—David and his followers who were taking refuge in the cave of Adullam were in great danger. The tribe of Benjamin as a whole supported Saul's son Ishbosheth. If these men from Benjamin approaching the stronghold were hostile and intended to seize him and hand him over to Ishbosheth, it meant that his end had come and he must die in his youth. David had not been a traitor to Saul. Sometimes the Chronicler shoots an arrow straight to the mark. In this moment of mortal peril it was possible for David to say with honesty, there is no wrong in my hands.

18. A Right Response.—David had his integrity, and Amasai and the Benjaminites with him were men who knew and admired his spirit. Fire kindled fire. They wished to be his friends, not his foes. So sometimes it happens in life, 19 And there fell some of Manasseh to David, when he came with the Philistines against Saul to battle: but they helped them not: for the lords of the Philistines upon advisement sent him away, saying, He will fall to his master Saul to the jeopardy of our heads.

20 As he went to Ziklag, there fell to him of Manasseh, Adnah, and Jozabad, and Je-diael, and Michael, and Jozabad, and Elihu, and Zillthai, captains of the thousands that were of Manasseh.

21 And they helped David against the band of the rovers: for they were all mighty men of valor, and were captains in the host.

22 For at that time day by day there came to David to help him, until it was a great host, like the host of God.

23 ¶ And these are the numbers of the bands that were ready armed to the war, and came to David to Hebron, to turn the kingdom of Saul to him, according to the word of the Lord.

24 The children of Judah that bare shield and spear were six thousand and eight hundred, ready armed to the war.

25 Of the children of Simeon, mighty men of valor for the war, seven thousand and one hundred.

26 Of the children of Levi four thousand and six hundred.

27 And Jehoiada was the leader of the Aaronites, and with him were three thousand and seven hundred;

28 And Zadok, a young man mighty of valor, and of his father's house twenty and two captains.

29 And of the children of Benjamin, the kindred of Saul, three thousand: for hitherto the greatest part of them had kept the ward of the house of Saul.

30 And of the children of Ephraim twenty thousand and eight hundred, mighty

19 Some of the men of Manas'seh deserted to David when he came with the Philistines for the battle against Saul. (Yet he did not help them, for the rulers of the Philistines took counsel and sent him away, saying, "At peril to our heads he will desert to his master Saul.")

20 As he went to Ziklag these men of Manas'seh deserted to him: Adnah, Joz'abad, Jed'i'a-el, Michael, Joz'-abad, Eli'hu, and Zil'lethai, chiefs of thousands in Manas'seh. 21 They helped David against the band of raiders; for they were all mighty men of valor, and were commanders in the army. 22 For from day to day men kept coming to David to help him, until there was a great army, like an army of God.

23 These are the numbers of the divisions of the armed troops, who came to David in Hebron, to turn the kingdom of Saul over to him, according to the word of the Lord. 24 The men of Judah bearing shield and spear were six thousand eight hundred armed troops. 25 Of the Simeonites, mighty men of valor for war, seven thousand one hundred. 26 Of the Levites four thousand six hundred. 27 The prince Jehoi'ada, of the house of Aaron, and with him three thousand seven hundred. 28 Zadok, a young man mighty in valor, and twenty-two commanders from his own father's house. 29 Of the Benjaminites, the kinsmen of Saul, three thousand, of whom the majority had hitherto kept their allegiance to the house of Saul. 30 Of the Ephraimites

22. Like the host of God: Superhumanly vast in number; vss. 23-40 supply a fantastic commentary.

23. The deputation (heads of families) that comes to crown David numbers just under 400,000, and all but 22,000 hail from the central and northern tribes. Obviously a symbolic mode of insisting that Israelites had indeed been truly Hebrews. Ponder it, all ye unbrotherly men in Jerusalem—378,000 Israelites did their duty on that great day!

when a man can face peril with a good conscience. He may meet the reward he deserves. It is a point of special interest that Amasai's answer, We are yours, O David, is cast in the rhythmic form of emotional Hebrew speech. This makes it probable that a really ancient tradition, otherwise unrecorded, is here preserved.
men of valor, famous throughout the house of their fathers.

31 And of the half tribe of Manasseh eighteen thousand, which were expressed by name, to come and make David king.

32 And of the children of Issachar, which were men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do; the heads of them were two hundred: and all their brethren were at their commandment.

33 Of Zebulun, such as went forth to battle, expert in war, with all instruments of war, fifty thousand, which could keep rank: they were not of double heart.

34 And of Naphtali a thousand captains, and with them with shield and spear thirty and seven thousand.

35 And of the Danites expert in war twenty and eight thousand and six hundred.

36 And of Asher, such as went forth to battle, expert in war, forty thousand.

37 And on the other side of Jordan, of the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and of the half tribe of Manasseh, with all manner of instruments of war for the battle, a hundred and twenty thousand.

38 All these men of war, that could keep rank, came with a perfect heart to Hebron, to make David king over all Israel: and all the rest also of Israel were of one heart to make David king.

39 And there they were with David three days, eating and drinking: for their brethren had prepared for them.

40 Moreover they that were nigh them, even unto Issachar and Zebulun and Naphtali, brought bread on asses, and on camels, and on mules, and on oxen, and meat, meal, cakes of figs, and bunches of raisins, and wine, and oil, and oxen, and sheep abundantly: for there was joy in Israel.

And David consulted with the captains of thousands and hundreds, and with every leader.

13 David consulted with the commanders of thousands and of hundreds,

C. David's Failure to Bring the Ark to Zion (13:1-14)

According to II Sam. 5:6 ff., David (a) captured Zion from the Jebusites, then (b) proceeded to wage two successful conflicts with the Philistines; (c) with aid of materials

39. A Welcome Prepared.—This verse strikes home to the feelings of any hospitable person for whom the entertaining of a guest has become a problem. The idealistic Chronicler is delightfully practical; for, of course, instead of happy-
2 And David said unto all the congregation of Israel, If it seem good unto you, and that it be of the Lord our God, let us send abroad unto our brethren every where, that are left in all the land of Israel, and with them also to the priests and Levites which are in their cities and suburbs, that they may gather themselves unto us:

3 And let us bring again the ark of our God to us: for we inquired not at it in the days of Saul.

4 And all the congregation said that they would do so: for the thing was right in the eyes of all the people.

5 So David gathered all Israel together, from Shihor of Egypt even unto the entering of Hemath, to bring the ark of God from Kirjath-jearim.

6 And David went up, and all Israel, to Ba'alah, that is, to Kirjath-jearim, which belonged to Judah, to bring up thence the ark of God the Lord, that dwelleth between the cherubim, whose name is called on it.

7 And they carried the ark of God in a new cart out of the house of Abinadab: and Uzza and Ahio drave the cart.

and craftsmen from the king of Tyre began to build for himself a palace; only thereafter (d) tried to bring the ark to Zion from its humiliating storage at Kirjath-jearim; and (e), in making the attempt, paid no attention to what the Chronicler regarded as being the king's obvious duty, viz., to entrust its transport to the care of the Levites. Conceivably the Chronicler was so shocked by that sequence as to deem it unhistorical. However that may be, his narrative in this and the following chapter effectively reverses the order of events: it declares that after capturing Zion, David's first concern had been for the ark, and that he had at once made a first effort to achieve the perilous task of transporting it to Zion (vs. 1-11).

13:1-5. Introductory verses by the Chronicler, the purpose being to emphasize that David convened all Israel to assist him in the task (contrast II Sam. 6:2, "with all the people that were with him"); that all Israel's laity faithfully responded (vs. 5); and that with them came Levites, legitimate ministrants of worship (vs. 2).

2. Very revealing of the Chronicler's postexilic standpoint is the wording of this verse. Mark that our brethren are termed men in all the land of Israel, and that the remarkable phrase who remain appears first in postexilic writings and seems a designation of the Hebrews left in the Israelitish territory after the Assyrian conquest (so Adam C. Welch, The Work of the Chronicler [London: British Academy, 1959], pp. 16-17). In vs. 2b read, with RSV, pasture lands. In vs. 2c the words the priests and may be an instance of the revisers' correction. But further, it is notable that here all MSS of the LXX pears that those who came from a distance had done their utmost toward self-help.

13:2. Seek Ye First the Kingdom of God.—The ark was deemed to contain two stone tablets on which had been graven the great Commandments and was regarded as the token of assurance that Yahweh would be with his people. David was determined to set that treasure in the heart of his kingdom. In our world's civilization there is desperate need to establish at its center the Christian faith more wisely and more securely than in the past.

8 And David and all Israel played before God with all their might, and with singing, and with harps, and with psALTERies, and with timbrels, and with cymbals, and with trumpets.

9 And when they came unto the threshing-floor of Chidon, Uzza put forth his hand to hold the ark: for the oxen stumbled.

10 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Uzza: and he smote him because he put forth his hand to the ark: and there he died before God.

11 And David was displeased, because the LORD had made a breach upon Uzza: wherefore that place is called Perez-uzzah to this day.

12 And David was afraid of God that day, saying, How shall I bring the ark of God home to me?

13 So David brought not the ark home to himself to the city of David, but carried it aside into the house of Obed-edom the Gittite.

14 And the ark of God remained with the family of Obed-edom in his house three months. And the LORD blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that he had.

read the typically Deuteronomic phrase “the priests, the Levites,” i.e., that was the reading of the Hebrew MS used in making the LXX translation in the second century A.D.

13. Obed-edom the Gittite: The man derived from the PhilistinE city of Gath. It disturbed the Chronicler that the king should have placed the sacred ark in the house of one who was not even a pure-blooded Hebrew. Accordingly, in vs. 14 he slightly altered II Sam. 6:11 in order to indicate that the ark was not actually under the Gittite’s roof; for the Hebrew of vs. 14 should be translated “by [near] the house of Obed-edom, in its own house.” The man’s descendants were in the postexilic period engaged in the Levitical service of the temple, and so it comes to pass that in various references to Obed-edom elsewhere in Chronicles, he, as their ancestor, appears respectfully transformed into a son of Levi, keeping the doors (15:18, 24; 16:38; 26:4, 8, 15; II Chr. 25:24), or playing a harp in the temple (15:21; 16:5).

9. The Death of Uzza.—Here, quoted from the book of Samuel, is an ancient Hebrew story portraying the irascible sanctity of the Deity. It is passing strange to our minds that anyone could have copied such a story without rebuke or alteration of its crude theology. We, however, can see with full understanding that rightful thoughts of God developed slowly in Hebrew history. And realization of that fact answers a thousand “difficulties” which formerly perplexed good men about the authority and value of the Bible. Our primary duty, however, is not condescendingly to despise our forefathers for crudity but ourselves to do better; for to whom much enlightenment has been entrusted, from them the more is required. Horribly crude ideas of what Christianity believes and teaches still are held by masses of people today. There is plenty of sound teaching to be done in order that the light of Christ may shine with clarity.

12. Reverence.—It is instructive to note the sequence of David’s moods in fetching the ark to Zion. First, he regards it as an occasion for solemnity and arranges an impressive ceremonial (vss. 1-7). Then he is jubilant (vs. 8). Then he is—not unreasonably—indignant about the tragic fate of well-intentioned Uzza (vs. 11). Then he becomes afraid.
Now Hiram king of Tyre sent messengers to David, and timber of cedars, with masons and carpenters, to build him a house.

2 And David perceived that the Lord had confirmed him king over Israel, for his kingdom was lifted up on high, because of his people Israel.

3 And David took more wives at Jerusalem: and David begat more sons and daughters.

4 Now these are the names of his children which he had in Jerusalem; Shammua, and Shobab, Nathan, and Solomon,

5 And Ibhar, and Elishua, and Elpalet,

6 And No'gah, and Nepheg, and Japhia,

7 And Elishama, and Beeliada, and Eliphalet.

8 And when the Philistines heard that David was anointed king over all Israel, all the Philistines went up to seek David. And David heard of it, and went out against them.

9 And the Philistines came and spread themselves in the valley of Rephaim.

10 And David inquired of God, saying, Shall I go up against the Philistines? and wilt thou deliver them into mine hand? And the Lord said unto him, Go up; for I will deliver them into thine hand.

11 So they came up to Baal-perazim; and David smote them there. Then David said, God hath broken in upon mine enemies by mine hand like the breaking forth of waters: therefore they called the name of that place Baal-perazim.

D. PALACE AND VICTORIES (14:1-17)

14:7. Beeliada: This son of David bears a name compounded with “baal.” Perhaps by inadvertence the Chronicler did not alter it to the innocuous “Eliada,” found in 3:8.

8. Note the omission of the phrase found in II Sam. 5:17, which clearly points to David’s early difficulties, “went down to the hold,” i.e., to the cave of Adullam.

Carelessness about the forms of religious practice may indicate triviality about holy things. But equally out of place, and very frequent, is a superficial solemnity. It is a mood which derives from crude ideas of the Deity. There is a world of difference between such solemnity and true reverence. The former we can put on like a garment and plume ourselves that we are properly dressed for Sunday. The spiritual consequence of such an attitude of mind is apt to be only increased self-approval. Our need is an awareness that to God the secrets of our hearts are open, and consequent consciousness of what truly is sacred in his sight. The famous saying in Prov. 9:10, “The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom,” would be better translated, “Reverence for God . . . .” Perhaps we may infer that as a result of poor Uzza’s death David began to be really reverent.

14:3. More Wives.—David’s polygamy is mentioned without censure. In II Chr. 24:3 we are told that the chief priest, Jehoiada, selected two wives for the young king Joash. This of course was consonant with the Eastern assump-12 And when they had left their gods there, David gave a commandment, and they were burned with fire.

13 And the Philistines yet again spread themselves abroad in the valley.

14 Therefore David inquired again of God: and God said unto him, Go not up after them: turn away from them, and come upon them over against the mulberry trees.

15 And it shall be, when thou shalt hear a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt go out to battle: for God is gone forth before thee to smite the host of the Philistines.

16 David therefore did as God commanded him: and they smote the host of the Philistines from Gibeon even to Gazer.

17 And the fame of David went out into all lands; and the LORD brought the fear of him upon all nations.

18 And David built houses for himself in the city of David; and he prepared a place for the ark of God, and pitched for it a tent.

19 And David went up there to the ark of God, and to his servants that were with him, to bring up the ark of God out of the city of David, to bring it unto his own place.

20 And David would not go up into the ark of God unto the city of David, but went unto the place that is by the sanctuary of the LORD.

21 And Hiram king of Tyre sent messengers to David, and cedar trees, and stonemasons, and carpenters, for the building of the house.

22 And David perceiued the blessing of God in his own house. Therefore David did as the LORD had said, and prospered in all things.

23 And David knew that the LORD had established him king over Israel, and that his kingdom was established thereunto by the LORD, according to all that Saul had done.

24 And the LORD gave unto David a light, to keep him in the way, that the报告期内的残余, the Philistines once again spread themselves abroad in the valley. Therefore David inquired again of the LORD, saying, Shall I go up again to the Philistines? shall I smite them? And the LORD said unto him, Go up; for I will deliver them into thine hand. And David went on his way, he and all his men, and smote the Philistines, and smote them as far as Gazer. And David returned from thence in the way of his house; and the four hundred thousand valiant men that accompanied him were births in the cities of the Philistines. If one man killed a thousand, and another a thousand and five hundred, the LORD made David great upon them. And all the Levites were skilled in all manner of work. And David was valiant in the way of the LORD; and he was valiant also in battle. And David spake to the LORD the words of this song also, upon the day that he received the craft, and the horses, and the chariots; and he called the name of the craft, the craft of the LORD.
2 Then David said, None ought to carry the ark of God but the Levites: for them hath the Lord chosen to carry the ark of God, and to minister unto him for ever.

3 And David gathered all Israel together to Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of the Lord unto his place, which he had prepared for it.

4 And David assembled the children of Aaron, and the Levites:

5 Of the sons of Kohath; Uriel the chief, and his brethren a hundred and twenty:

6 Of the sons of Merari; Asaiah the chief, and his brethren two hundred and twenty:

7 Of the sons of Gershom; Joel the chief, and his brethren a hundred and thirty:

8 Of the sons of Elizaphan; Shemaiah the chief, and his brethren two hundred:

9 Of the sons of Hebron; Eliel the chief, and his brethren fourscore:

10 Of the sons of Uzziel; Amminadab the chief, and his brethren a hundred and twelve.

11 And David called for Zadok and Abiathar the priests, and for the Levites, for Uriel, Asaiah, and Joel, Shemaiah, and Eliel, and Amminadab, 12 And said unto them, Ye are the chief of the fathers of the Levites: sanctify yourselves, both ye and your brethren, that ye may bring up the ark of the Lord God of Israel unto the place that I have prepared for it.

13 For because ye did it not at the first, the Lord our God made a breach upon us, for that we sought him not after the due order.

2. Note that the Levites are termed ministers unto God, the standpoint of the Chronicler and Deuteronomy. Their position in the final system of the Law is that of ministers to their brethren, the priests.

4-10. From this point appear corrections by revisers trying to bring what the Chronicler wrote about the Levites into conformity with the final Law. Their touches may be seen in vs. 4 (the sons of Aaron and; Welch [op. cit., p. 65 n.] points out that LXXB has the peculiar reading “the sons of Aaron, the Levites,” which may imply that here the original text in Chronicles was “the priests, the Levites”); in vs. 11 (for Zadok and Abiathar the priests, and); in vs. 14 (the priests and); and probably vs. 15 (as Moses . . . Lord). The Levites number 872 men, to whose six leaders (mentioned by name, and in vs. 12 called the heads of . . . the Levites) the king’s injunction is "secular life.” On his second attempt David succeeded because he had the grace to learn from a failure. He now took thought how rightly to make preparation for the ark’s arrival at Zion, and accordingly entrusted its transport to the proper men for the duty—not laymen but Levites (see Exeg.). Our modern mistake is seen in the popular opinion that the maintenance and strengthening of religious belief and practice is the affair of the clergy. Rather it is 14 So the priests and the Levites sanctified themselves to bring up the ark of the Lord God of Israel.

15 And the children of the Levites bare the ark of God upon their shoulders with the staves thereon, as Moses commanded, according to the word of the Lord.
16 And David spake to the chief of the Levites to appoint their brethren to be the singers with instruments of music, psalters and harps and cymbals, sounding, by lifting up the voice with joy.
17 So the Levites appointed Heman the son of Joel; and of his brethren, Asaph the son of Berechiah; and of the sons of Merari their brethren, Ethan the son of Kushaiah;
18 And with them their brethren of the second degree, Zechariah, Ben, and Jaaziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, Eliab, and Benaiah, and Maaseiah, and Mattithiah, and Elipheleth, and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, the porters.
19 So the singers, Heman, Asaph, and Ethan, were appointed to sound with cymbals of brass;
20 And Zechariah, and Aziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, and Eliab, and Maaseiah, and Benaiah, with psalters on Alamoth;
21 And Mattithiah, and Elipheleth and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, and Azaziah, with harps on the Sheminith to excel.
22 And Chenaniah, chief of the Levites, was for song: he instructed about the song, because he was skilful.
23 And Berechiah and Elkanah were doorkeepers for the ark.

that is ordained. 14 So the priests and the Levites sanctified themselves to bring up the ark of the Lord, the God of Israel.
15 And the Levites carried the ark of God upon their shoulders with the poles, as Moses had commanded according to the word of the Lord.
16 David also commanded the chiefs of the Levites to appoint their brethren as the singers who should play loudly on musical instruments, on harps and lyres and cymbals, to raise sounds of joy. 17 So the Levites appointed Heman the son of Jo'el; and of his brethren Asaph the son of Berechiah; and of the sons of Merar'i, their brethren, Ethan the son of Kusha'i'ah; and with them their brethren of the second order, Zechar'i'ah, Ja'a'ziel, Shemira'moth, Jehi'el, Unni, Eli'ab, Benai'ah, Ma'ase'i'ah, Mattithi'ah, Eliph'elehu, and Mik'nei'ah, and the gatekeepers O'bed-e'dom and Jei'el. 18 The singers, Heman, Asaph, and Ethan, were to sound bronze cymbals; 20 Zechar'i'ah, A'zi-el, Shemira'moth, Jehi'el, Unni, Eli'ab, Ma-a'se'iah, and Benai'ah were to play harps according to Al'amoth; 21 but Mattithi'ah, Eliph'elehu, Mik'nei'ah, O'bed-e'dom, Je-i'el, and Azaz'i'ah were to lead with lyres according to the Shem'i'inth. 22 Chena'nia'h, leader of the Levites in music, should direct the music, for he understood it. 23 Berech'i'ah and Elka'nah addressed, not to Zadok and Abiathar. Zadok was a leading priest at the end of David's reign, but at this time was describable as “a young man mighty in valor” (12:28).

15. The Priestly Code passages in Numbers do not mention the ark in relation to the transportation of the tabernacle. Num. 4:15 specifically forbids mere Levites to handle the sacred things in the tabernacle until priests had wrapped them up.

17-24. Revisional contributions are present, and in more than one layer. Observe the tangled references to Obed-edom and Jei'el—now as doorkeepers in vss. 18 and 24 (where Jehi'ah=Je-ei'el), now as harpists in vs. 21. Perhaps their postexilic descendants rose in status from doorkeepers to musicians.

an enterprise that should be regarded by all good men as their bounden duty.

16. A Joyful Noise.—Full thought was taken to ensure that the music was worthy of the occasion; and David was fortunate in the choirmaster who directed the music, “for he understood it” (vs. 22). From many references to temple music and psalmody one gathers that the popular estimate was the more noise the better. Over the choir stalls in a village church in Britain's Cornwall is inscribed this motto: Amor, non clamor, ascendit in aures Dei; wise words
24 And Shebaniah, and Jehoshaphat, and Nethaneel, and Amasai, and Zechariah, and Benaiah, and Eliezer, the priests, did blow with the trumpets before the ark of God: and Obed-edom and Jehiah were doorkeepers for the ark.

25 So David, and the elders of Israel, and the captains over thousands, went to bring up the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of the house of Obed-edom with joy.

26 And it came to pass, when God helped the Levites that bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, that they offered seven bullocks and seven rams.

27 And David was clothed with a robe of fine linen, and all the Levites that bare the ark, and the singers, and Chenaniah the master of the song with the singers: David also had upon him an ephod of linen.

28 Thus all Israel brought up the ark of the covenant of the Lord with shouting, and with sound of the cornet, and with trumpets, and with cymbals, making a noise with psalteries and harps.

29 And it came to pass, as the ark of the covenant of the Lord came to the city of David, that Michal the daughter of Saul looking out at a window saw king David dancing and playing: and she despised him in her heart.

So they brought the ark of God, and set it in the midst of the tent that David had pitched for it: and they offered burnt sacrifices and peace offerings before God.

16:1 And they brought in the ark of God, and set it inside the tent which David had pitched for it; and they offered burnt offerings and peace offerings before God.

25. The Chronicler's straightforward narrative continues without later corrections from this point to 16:3.

26. They sacrificed: By plain inference the Levites did so. It seems the revisers let the vague phrase pass, feeling that their previous insertions mentioning the presence of priests safeguarded readers.

27. Of the song: The Hebrew means, lit., “of the lifting up,” i.e., the carrying of the ark. Someone misunderstood it as “lifting up the voice” and added with the singers.

16:1. At Zion in the tent which he had prepared David placed the ark. Later the Chronicler tells how devotedly David longed to build a temple worthy of its permanent reception. At the moment the king could do one thing more, and did it: order Levites to maintain rites of worship there before the ark.

for choir and congregation alike. “Love, not loudness, riseth to the ears of God.”

27-29. Enthusiasm and Disdain.—What could be more vivid, and assuredly historical, than the record of Queen Michal looking down on the procession and despising David because on this day of religious ardor he could deem it fitting to behave as if he were on an equality with the people and the priests? How incredibly imprudent, as well as undignified! He had even 2 And when David had made an end of offering the burnt offerings and the peace offerings, he blessed the people in the name of the Lord.

3 And he dealt to every one of Israel, both man and woman, to every one a loaf of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine.

4 ¶ And he appointed certain of the Levites to minister before the ark of the Lord, and to record, and to thank and praise the Lord God of Israel:

5 Asaph the chief, and next to him Zechariah, Jeiel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Mattithiah, and Eliab, and Benaiah, and Obed-edom: and Jeiel with psalteries and with harps: but Asaph made a sound with cymbals;

4. The revisers did not insert here a correction to the effect that David appointed priests to minister (i.e., to offer sacrifice) while the Levites were merely to praise. Probably they inferred that to invoke, to thank, and to praise had reference only to musical worship conducted by Levites. But, in fact, to invoke (an obscure word) does seem to mean or to cover the function of sacrificing, and the phrase as ministers must have implied in the Chronicler’s view sacrificial offerings. The revisers, in order to ensure their view of things, ought to have omitted from the text the and before to thank (see KJV).

5a. Obed-edom and Jeiel would seem to have given satisfaction as harpists (15:21).

5b-6. Asaph . . . of God: In the final Law, sounding the sacred trumpets was priestly prerogative. These are revisers’ words, harmonizing with the previous revisionary insertion (vss. 19-21).

put off his regal attire. He was dancing and rejoicing like one of the mob. How barbaric! She, sophisticated daughter of royalty, scorned both him and them.

Religious enthusiasm stands in need of restraint as we well know. But icy disdain for its manifestations has far worse consequences in human life. Michal, at any rate, was wrong: she had no vestige of insight to see that before God all men are equal, and that David was going to establish in Israel a constitutional monarchy, a concept of kingship incomparably finer than the world had ever known.

16:2. Blessing and Power.—The king, as the anointed of the Lord, was the mediator of the divine blessing to his people. When kings were no more, the Jewish law entrusted to the priests alone the prerogative of pronouncing a blessing in the rites of worship. The Hebrews counted interchange of blessing—from God to man, from man to God, from individual to individual—to be a realistic necessity. Thus in 29:10, 20 it is related that David, having blessed the congregation in the name of the Lord, commanded that those who had thus received into their souls the divine strengthening, should in turn “bless the Lord,” rendering to God the responsive strength of their human wills. One cannot comprehend this matter clearly without understanding the Hebrew psychological standpoint. So Johannes Pedersen:

The soul is a whole saturated with power. . . . This vital power, without which no living being can exist, is called by the Israelites bَ ثَحَاحَ, blessing. . . . Behind the blessing of the individual stand the fathers; from them he has derived it, and its strength depends on their powers. . . . The blessing connects the souls, and so it must be, because it consists in a communication of the contents of the soul. . . . Great assemblies, cultic or non-cultic, must necessarily conclude with a blessing, so that every one may take away with him the strength of the community.

With due regard for modern psychology, there is wisdom in those beliefs. The man or woman who has not at some time longed for and re-

7 Then on that day David delivered first this psalm to thank the Lord into the hand of Asaph and his brethren.

8 Give thanks unto the Lord, call upon his name, make known his deeds among the people.

9 Sing unto him, sing psalms unto him, talk ye of all his wondrous works.

10 Glory ye in his holy name: let the heart of them rejoice that seek the Lord.

11 Seek the Lord and his strength, seek his face continually.

12 Remember his marvelous works that he hath done, his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth;

13 O ye seed of Israel his servant, ye children of Jacob, his chosen ones.

14 He is the Lord our God; his judgments are in all the earth.

15 Be ye mindful always of his covenant; the word which he commanded to a thousand generations;

16 Even of the covenant which he made with Abraham, and of his oath unto Isaac;

17 And hath confirmed the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant, make known his deeds among the peoples!

9 Sing to him, sing praises to him, tell of all his wonderful works!

10 Glory in his holy name;

let the hearts of those who seek the Lord rejoice!

12 Remember the wonderful works that he has done, the wonders he wrought, the judgments he uttered, 13 O offspring of Abraham his servant, sons of Jacob, his chosen ones!

14 He is the Lord our God; his judgments are in all the earth.

15 He is mindful of his covenant for ever, of the word that he commanded, for a thousand generations,

16 the covenant which he made with Abraham, his sworn promise to Isaac,

17 which he confirmed as a statute to Jacob, as an everlasting covenant to Israel,

18 saying, “To you I will give the land of Canaan, as your portion for an inheritance.”

The compiler received the blessing of another has missed one of life's most precious experiences. How much more precious whenever we are able to receive into our soul the strength of the blessing of God!

must have lived later than the time (about 200 B.C.) when the Psalter had been divided into five books, for Ps. 106:48 (= vs. 39) is no part of that psalm itself, but a doxology rounding off the fourth book of the Psalms.
36 Blessed be the LORD God of Israel for ever and ever. And all the people said, Amen, and praised the LORD.
37 So he left there before the ark of the covenant of the LORD Asaph and his brethren, to minister before the ark continually, as every day's work required:
38 And Obed-edom with their brethren, threescore and eight; Obed-edom also the son of Jeduthun and Hosah to be porters:
39 And Zadok the priest, and his brethren the priests, before the tabernacle of the LORD in the high place that was at Gibeon, 40 To offer burnt offerings unto the LORD upon the altar of the burnt offering continually morning and evening, and to do according to all that is written in the law of the LORD, which he commanded Israel;

36 Blessed be the LORD, the God of Israel, from everlasting to everlasting:"
Then all the people said "Amen!" and praised the LORD.
37 So David left Asaph and his brethren there before the ark of the covenant of the LORD to minister continually before the ark as each day required, 38 also O'bed-edom and his sixty-eight brethren: while O'bed-edom, the son of Jeduthun, and Hosah were to be gatekeepers. 39 And he left Zadok the priest and his brethren the priests before the tabernacle of the LORD in the high place that was at Gibeon, 40 to offer burnt offerings to the LORD upon the altar of burnt offering continually morning and evening, according to all that is written in the law of the LORD which he com-

37-43. A key passage as to the present structure of Chronicles. The men who knew the final Law read with growing concern the Chronicler's glowing account of David's transference of the ark and provision of Levites to guard and honor it—duties which, they assumed, must not include offering sacrifices but merely safe custody of the ark and maintenance of musical worship. Accordingly, the Chronicler's words about the Levites' responsibilities were, to say the least, lamentably vague or ambiguous: Why did he not clearly distinguish between priests acting in their respective functions and Levites in theirs? And why did he not indicate that David had been punctilious to see that legitimate sacrifices were being offered by qualified priests? In seeking answer the revisers were confronted by a prior perplexity, for on their view of the Mosaic age the tabernacle—containing the ark and sacred vessels, and served by legitimate priests ("sons of Aaron") and by Levites in their respective duties—had journeyed with the tribes in the wilderness. The revisers asked themselves: "When the Hebrews had entered Canaan, what had happened to the sacred tabernacle? Where was it stationed?" Now I Kings 3:4 tells that after Solomon had gained mastery of the throne he went to offer abundant sacrifices at the altar of "the great high place" at Gibeon (six miles northwest of Jerusalem). Some brilliant student of the Chronicler's writing saw in that statement about Solomon a solution of the prior enigma: the ancient, Mosaic tabernacle (he inferred and probably did not in the least realize how historically impossible his notion was) had been placed at Gibeon, and on the altar there Aaronite priests—duly assisted by subordinate musical Levites—were offering legitimate sacrifices. Let that conception be inserted into the text of Chronicles where occasion required, and all would be well: the book would become salutary reading for the pious. Vss. 39-40 are the first instance of these crucial corrections concerning the tabernacle.

38. The middle clause, Obed-edom ... Jeduthun, is probably a gloss, for elsewhere Obed-edom is classed as a singer; and Hosah should follow Obed-edom at the start of the verse; the required second name is then provided.

work. Someone later felt, not unjustly, that at this moment David ought to have raised his musical voice in thanksgiving. The composer chose well. He knew the books of psalms thoroughly, and that is a capacity worth acquiring. R. E. Prothero did a good service when he compiled from the long centuries of Christian experience records of the use made of the psalms by men and women on great occasions and at solemn moments in their lives. *Unfailingly the 41 And with them Heman and Jeduthun, and the rest that were chosen, who were expressed by name, to give thanks to the Lord, because his mercy endureth for ever; 42 And with them Heman and Jeduthun with trumpets and cymbals for those that should make a sound, and with musical instruments of God. And the sons of Jeduthun were porters. 43 And all the people departed every man to his house: and David returned to bless his house. 17 Now it came to pass, as David sat in his house, that David said to Nathan the prophet, Lo, I dwell in a house of cedars, but the ark of the covenant of the Lord remaineth under curtains.

41-42. The muddled reiteration in these verses suggests that late marginal comments were mistakenly brought into the text. 43. This verse contains the Chronicler’s own dignified conclusion for the story of the ark’s installation at Jerusalem.

F. David’s Desire to Build a Temple (17:1-27)

How could conscientious David be content to live in a palace while the ark was sheltered only by the curtains of a tent? His power and resources increased. Surely he must have longed to build a worthy temple. Why did he never do so? The Chronicler found in II Sam. 7 a satisfying answer to that question, and he therefore copied its narrative almost word for word.

17:1. David said to Nathan the prophet: It was wholly congenial to the Chronicler to read that David had consulted a prophet about his desire. In his subsequent account

Psalter affords words that not only meet daily needs but also sustain in the testing hour. Heine said that in it is collected “sunrise and sunset, birth and death, promise and fulfillment, the whole drama of humanity.”

41. The Everlasting Mercy.—(Cf. Ps. 106:1; 107:1.) No wonder that the Jews wove these words like a refrain throughout the texture of their liturgy, that John Masefield found in them the title for a great poem, and that in their certitude countless men and women have been strengthened to feel that their being is within the knowledge and goodness of God. Mercy, so we are accustomed to translate the Hebrew word. But our language has no one word adequate to render its rich meanings in Hebrew usage. As between man and man, it denoted relations of integrity and kindness; as between God and men, such steadfast love, such unmerited goodness, as can emanate only from the changelessness of divine grace.

43. Religion in the Home.—The words of this verse prompt reflection on the fact that Judaism has far excelled Christian practice in the skill and fullness whereby religious worship was integrated into the lives of its people in their homes, and not predominantly concentrated on the services in the synagogues. In the Christian system the impressions made by worship have been, or have become, far too much dependent on what happens in church on Sundays. No one can be other than deeply moved and delighted by the values of religious ritual in the home, if he has ever had the privilege to be present with a Jewish household when father and mother and children alike participate happily and reverently in picturesquely and solemn observance of the Passover. For practicing Jews and Christians one day in seven is sacred. But what a contrast between the gloomy, restricted solemnity which that recognition used to take in Puritan circles and the wisdom of Judaism which planned to keep the sabbath holy “by making it a day of delight, cheerfulness, gladness and joy; and many of the regulations . . . such as the lights, the special meals and table-songs, are designed to diffuse this spirit of joy in the Jewish home.”

2 Then Nathan said unto David, Do all that is in thine heart; for God is with thee.
3 And it came to pass the same night, that the word of God came to Nathan, saying,
4 Go and tell David my servant, Thus saith the Lord, Thou shalt not build me a house to dwell in:
5 For I have not dwelt in a house since the day that I brought up Israel unto this day; but have gone from tent to tent, and from one tabernacle to another.
6 Wheresoever I have walked with all Israel, spake I a word to any of the judges of Israel, whom I commanded to feed my people, saying, Why have ye not built me a house of cedars?
7 Now therefore thus shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I took thee from the sheepcote, even from following the sheep, that thou shouldst be ruler over my people Israel:
8 And I have been with thee whithersoever thou hast walked, and have cut off all thine enemies from before thee, and have made thee a name like the name of the great men that are in the earth.

of the kings of Judah the Chronicler produced a sequence of otherwise unmentioned prophets who spoke to the monarchs in God's name.

5a. I have not dwelt in a house since the day: Yet I Sam. 3:3 contains memorable record of the ark's having been in the temple of Shiloh, which the Philistines destroyed. Did the writer in II Sam. 7:6 by ignoring that fact wish to suggest—the Chronicler would concur—that no temple other than that in Jerusalem ought ever to have been built?

5b. The Hebrew reads, lit., “but have walked from tent to tent, and in a tabernacle.” The concluding words in the phrase make havoc of its sense and quite clearly reveal the revisers' insistence that the Mosaic tabernacle had continued in existence.

6. The judges is the correct text (see II Sam. 7:7 KJV, "the tribes"; but cf. RSV).

17:24. Second Thoughts.—These verses are of great interest concerning a psychological difference between the many in Hebrew history whom we may rightly call false prophets and the few who, being also gifted with psychic sensitiveness, spoke truth and right as the word of God (cf. Expos. on II Chr. 18:21). Nathan one day in the name of God bids David to build the temple; twenty-four hours later, again claiming divine authority, he commands David not to build. Here is a man positive that he had divine inspiration yet capable of having "second thoughts." What is the reason? Answer should surely be that Nathan was a completely sincere personality, not cocksure about his own inerrancy, not swollen with conceit. God can teach such men. A remarkable parallel is found in Jeremiah's attitude of mind.

4-11. The Unfinished Symphony.—David must understand that he has begun a task so great that it cannot be completed in the span of mortal life. Wonderful as are the achievements he accomplishes, the end is beyond his reaching. Rabbi Tarphon said:

The day is short, and the task is great. . . . It is not for thee to finish the work, nor art thou free to desist therefrom; . . . faithful is the Master of thy work, who will pay thee the reward of thy work, and know that the recompence of the reward of the righteous is for the time to come.6

9 Also I will ordain a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, and they shall dwell in their place, and shall be moved no more; neither shall the children of wickedness waste them any more, as at the beginning,
10 And since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel. Moreover I will subdue all thine enemies. Furthermore I tell thee, that the Lord will build thee a house.
11 And it shall come to pass, when thy days be expired that thou must go to be with thy fathers, that I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons; and I will establish his kingdom.
12 He shall build me a house, and I will establish his throne for ever.
13 I will be his father, and he shall be my son: and I will not take my mercy away from him, as I took it from him that was before thee:
14 But I will settle him in mine house and in my kingdom for ever: and his throne shall be established for evermore.
15 According to all these words, and according to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David.

Let no man think that sudden in a minute
All is accomplished and the work is done;—
Though with thine earliest dawn thou shouldst begin it
Scarcе were it ended in thy setting sun.

13. The Relationship of God to Man.—Personality is the highest category we can conceive, and if we use it concerning God we must employ the terms of human personal relationships and qualities: I will be his father, and he shall be my son. In the context of high religious reflection such usage ought not in the least to be regarded as anthropomorphic thinking. To suppose so is stupid. In Hebraism and Judaism the thought that God deals with men as an ideally perfect father with his children was historically fundamental, being inherent even in the nomadic religious and social ideas before the entry into Canaan. It was gravely threatened by the master-slave (or servant) and king-subject ideas to which the Canaanites were accustomed. But the fatherly conception proved radical for the Hebrews, and was sublimely apprehended by the great prophets (cf. Hos. 11:1-4). Isaiah said, “Mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts” (6:5); but his whole treatment of the grace of God and the wickedness of the people was inspired and controlled by the father-son relationship (cf. Isa. 1:2). The history of Christian theology has exhibited no end of confusion about this vital matter, to the huge detriment of all concerned, frequently insisting upon interpretations that are consonant only with the authority of kings and the legalism of judges. But the doctrine of the divine fatherhood ought never to have been obscured by other ideas. It was dominant in the mind of Christ and pervaded his teaching (“My father, and your father,” John 20:17; see also Matt. 5:45, Luke 15:11-32).

* Frederic W. H. Myers, Saint Paul, st. xv.

14. The Chief Owner.—In my house and in my kingdom, i.e., in God’s house, God’s kingdom. The Chronicler altered the text in II Sam. 7:16 where it reads “thine house” and “thy kingdom,” meaning David’s. This deliberate change indicates the difference between the religious and irreligious view of life’s possessions. The godless man says to himself, “This is my house and I will do what I please with it.” Jeremiah said to his friend, Baruch, that even our individual life is not our own, but is a trust from God wherewith we may be faithful
16. And David the king came and sat before the Lord, and said, Who am I, O Lord God, and what is mine house, that thou hast brought me hitherto?

17. And yet this was a small thing in thine eyes, O God: for thou hast also spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come, and hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree, O Lord God.

18. What can David speak more to thee for the honor of thy servant? for thou knowest thy servant.

19. O Lord, for thy servant's sake, and according to thine own heart, hast thou done all this greatness, in making known all these great things.

20. O Lord, there is none like thee, neither is there any God besides thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.

21. And what one nation in the earth is like thy people Israel, whom God went to redeem to be his own people, to make thee a name of greatness and terribleness, by driving out nations from before thee, whom thou hast redeemed out of Egypt?

22. For thy people Israel didst thou make thine own people for ever; and thou, Lord, becamest their God.

23. Therefore now, Lord, let the thing that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant and concerning his house be established for ever, and do as thou hast said.

24. Let it even be established, that thy name may be magnified for ever, saying, The Lord of hosts is the God of Israel, even a God to Israel: and let the house of David thy servant be established before thee.

25. For thou, O my God, hast told thy servant that thou wilt build him a house: therefore thy servant hath found in his heart to pray before thee.

16. Then King David went in and sat before the Lord, and said, "Who am I, O Lord God, and what is my house, that thou hast brought me thus far? And this was a small thing in thy eyes, O God: thou hast also spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come, and hast shown me future generations, O Lord God! And what more can David say to thee for honoring thy servant? For thou knowest thy servant. For thy servant's sake, O Lord, and according to thy own heart, thou hast wrought all this greatness, in making known all these great things. There is none like thee, O Lord, and there is no God besides thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears. What other nation on earth is like thy people Israel, whom God went to redeem to be his people, making for thyself a name for great and terrible things, in driving out nations before thy people whom thou didst redeem from Egypt? And thou didst make thy people Israel to be thy people for ever; and thou, O Lord, didst become their God. And now, O Lord, let the word which thou hast spoken concerning thy servant and concerning his house be established for ever, and do as thou hast spoken; and thy name will be established and magnified for ever, saying, 'The Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, is Israel's God,' and the house of thy servant David will be established before thee. For thou, my God, hast revealed to thy servant that thou wilt build a house for him; therefore thy servant has found courage to pray be been popular. Has that anything to do with the fact that despite mankind's unique capacity to make nature productive, dearth and destruction have not been eliminated?

16-27. The Doing of God.—Whoever reads this moving passage will, if he can at all discern reasons for thankfulness in the course of his own life, find in its verses words that speak to his particular experience. Above all, he may so feel about David's saying Who am I, O Lord God, . . . that thou hast brought me thus far?
26 And now, LORD, thou art God, and hast promised this goodness unto thy servant:
27 Now therefore let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may be before thee for ever: for thou blessest, O LORD, and it shall be blessed for ever.
18 After this David defeated the Philistines and subdued them, and took Gath and her towns out of the hand of the Philistines.
2 And he defeated Moab; and the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.
3 And David smote Hadadezer king of Zobah unto Hamath, as he went to establish his dominion by the river Euphrates.
4 And David took from him a thousand chariots, and seven thousand horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen: David also houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them a hundred chariots.
5 And when the Syrians of Damascus came to help Hadadezer king of Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.
6 Then David put garrisons in Syria-damasc; and the Syrians became David's servants, and brought gifts. Thus the LORD blessed David wherever he went.
7 And David took the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadadezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.
8 Likewise from Tibhath, and from Chun, cities of Hadarezer, brought David very much brass, wherewith Solomon made the brazen sea, and the pillars, and the vessels of brass.

G. DAVID'S VICTORIES (18:1–20:8)

In Samuel, David's wars are said to precede Nathan's answer that he must not attempt to build a temple. The Chronicler shows an idealized David, having humbly accepted the divine answer from the lips of the prophet, then proceeding to wage wars: after the kingdom became strengthened and protected, resources could be acquired therewith to provide preparations for the future temple.

(vs. 16). The similar words of Moses, facing the commencement of his duty, may be recalled: "Who am I, . . . that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?" (Exod. 3:11). In that spirit men should begin, continue, and end their work. Here David, whatever the future has in store, has reached a point where he can look back in humble gratitude. Whatever has been well done, he counts it as accomplished in the providence and by the grace of God. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2:10).
9 When To'\textsuperscript{u} king of Hamath heard that David had defeated the whole army of Hadade'zer, king of Zobah, \textsuperscript{10}he sent his son Hador'am to King David, to greet him, and to congratulate him because he had fought against Hadade'zer and defeated him; for Hadade'zer had often been at war with To'\textsuperscript{u}. And he sent all sorts of articles of gold, of silver, and of bronze; \textsuperscript{11}these also King David dedicated to the L\textordm{O}rd, together with the silver and gold which he had carried off from all the nations, from Edom, Moab, the Ammonites, the Philistines, and Am'\textalek.

12 And Abi'shai, the son of Zeru'iah, slew of the Edomites in the valley of salt. \textsuperscript{13}And he put garrisons in Edom; and all the Edomites became David's servants. And the L\textordm{O}rd gave victory to David wherever he went.

14 So David reigned over all Israel; and he administered justice and equity to all his people. \textsuperscript{15}And Jo'\textsuperscript{a}b the son of Zeru'iah was over the army; and Jehosh'aphat the 12a. Moreover, Abishai the son of Zeruiah: Almost certainly the original text ran, “And when he [David] returned, he smote Edom.” The difference seems extreme but is slight in the Hebrew.

12b. Of the Edomites: Samuel, obviously by error, has “of the Syrians.” Edom (אֲדֹם) and Syria (סוד) are so nearly identical that confusion was easy. Indeed, that fact may be the ground for the tradition that David won victories against the powerful Syrians as far as the Euphrates.

14-17. David’s high officials. In vs. 16 read, “Abiathar the son of Ahimelech” (cf. 15:11; 24:3). Especially note that David’s sons are termed chief about the king, whereas the text in Samuel says “were priests.” To the Chronicler that was so sacrilegious as to seem certainly unhistorical: he made the arbitrary change.

18:11. Dedicated Loot.—To the service of God David dedicated spoils taken from conquered foes. In that breath-taking marvel, the mosque of St. Sophia in Constantinople—originally the metropolitan church of Eastern Chris- tendom—there are looted treasures, including marble columns reputed to be from the temple of Diana at Ephesus. Similarly, in the Christian church of St. Mark in Venice there are looted treasures. Loot is not absent from our museums. But that perhaps is less open to criticism. Is it not good that some artistic treasures from lands which possess abundant evidence of their own past culture should spread knowledge of that culture elsewhere? If the Elgin marbles, now in the British Museum, had been left in Athens they might have perished, for when they were removed few in Greece cared one drachma about their preservation. Perhaps loot in modern times takes on vaster and more sinister forms: the innumerable sales of cherished possessions enforced by poverty, economic squeeze on the colossal scale. But loot in churches does not seem fitting. What should we think about tainted money put to good uses? Regrettfully one feels that the Chronicler, still more so the 16 And Zadok the son of Ahitub, and Abimelech the son of Abiathar, were the priests; and Shavsha was scribe:
17 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the Cherethites and the Pelethites: and the sons of David were chief about the king.

19 Now it came to pass after this, that Nahash the king of the children of Ammon died, and his son reigned in his stead.
2 And David said, I will show kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, because his father showed kindness to me. And David sent messengers to comfort him concerning his father. So the servants of David came into the land of the children of Ammon to Hanun, to comfort him.
3 But the princes of the children of Ammon said to Hanun, Thinkest thou that David doth honor thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? are not his servants come unto thee for to search, and to overthor, and to spy out the land?
4 Wherefore Hanun took David's servants, and shaved them, and cut off their garments in the midst hard by their buttocks, and sent them away.
5 Then there went certain, and told David how the men were served; and he sent to meet them: for the men were greatly ashamed. And the king said, Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return.
6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon saw that they had made themselves odious to David, Hanun and the children of Ammon sent a thousand talents of silver to hire chariots and horsemen from Mesopotamia, and out of Syria-maachah, and out of Zobah.
7 So they hired thirty and two thousand chariots, and the king of Maachah and his people; who came and pitched before Med-son of Ahim'elech was scribe: 16 and Zadok the son of Ahitub and Abi'melech the son of Abia'far were priests; and Shavsha was secretary: 17 and Be-nai'ah the son of Jehoi'ada was over the Cher'ethites and the Pel-'ethites: and David's sons were the chief officials in the service of the king.

19 Now after this Nahash the king of the Ammonites died, and his son reigned in his stead. 2 And David said, "I will deal loyally with Hanun the son of Nahash, for his father dealt loyally with me." So David sent messengers to console him concerning his father. And David's servants came to Hanun in the land of the Ammonites, to console him. 3 But the princes of the Ammonites said to Hanun, "Do you think, because David has sent comforters to you, that he is honoring your father? Have not his servants come to you to search and to overthor and to spy out the land?" 4 So Hanun took David's servants, and shaved them, and cut off their garments in the midst, at their hips, and sent them away; and they departed. 5 When David was told concerning the men, he sent to meet them, for the men were greatly ashamed. And the king said, "Remain at Jericho until your beards have grown, and then return."

6 When the Ammonites saw that they had made themselves odious to David, Hanun and the Ammonites sent a thousand talents of silver to hire chariots and horsemen from Mesopotamia, from Aram-ma'acah, and from Zobah. 7 They hired thirty-two thousand chariots and the king of actual David, did not realize that loot dedicated to the temple raised a moral problem (see also Expos. on I Chr. 26:27).

19:2-4. Dark Glasses.—Does not this miserable episode throw light on a thousand tragic outcomes in international affairs? David's motive, when he sent the courteous message to King Hanun, was genuine. He sometimes had magnanimity, the power and the will to recall past benefits gratefully. But so poisoned by baseness was the international atmosphere that Hanun's councilors had no difficulty in thinking up a sinister intent on David's part and deciding to return insult for courtesy. So they provoked war

And the children of Ammon gathered themselves together from their cities, and came to battle.

8 And when David heard of it, he sent Joab, and all the host of the mighty men.

9 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in array before the gate of the city: and the kings that were come were by themselves in the field.

10 Now when Joab saw that the battle was set against him before and behind, he chose out of all the choice of Israel, and put them in array against the Syrians.

11 And the rest of the people he delivered unto the hand of Abishai his brother, and they set themselves in array against the children of Ammon.

12 And he said, If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will help thee.

13 Be of good courage, and let us behave ourselves valiantly for our people, and for the cities of our God: and let the Lord do that which is good in his sight.

14 So Joab and the people that were with him drew nigh before the Syrians unto the battle; and they fled before him.

15 And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, they likewise fled before Abishai his brother, and entered into the city. Then Joab came to Jerusalem.

16 ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were put to the worse before Israel, they sent messengers and brought out the Syrians who were beyond the Eu-phra'tes, with Shophach the commander of the army of Hadade'zer at their head. 17 And when it was told David, he gathered all Israel together, and crossed the Jordan, and came to them, and drew up his forces against them. And when David set the battle in array against the Ma'acah with his army, who came and encamped before Med'eba. And the Ammonites were mustered from their cities and came to battle. 8 When David heard of it, he sent Jo'ab and all the army of the mighty men. 9 And the Ammonites came out and drew up in battle array at the entrance of the city, and the kings who had come were by themselves in the open country.

10 When Jo'ab saw that the battle was set against him both in front and in the rear, he chose some of the picked men of Israel, and arrayed them against the Syrians: 11 the rest of his men he put in the charge of Abi'shai his brother, and they were arrayed against the Ammonites. 12 And he said, "If the Syrians are too strong for me, then you shall help me; but if the Ammonites are too strong for you, then I will help you. 13 Be of good courage, and let us play the man for our people, and for the cities of our God; and may the Lord do what seems good to him." 14 So Jo'ab and the people who were with him drew near before the Syrians for battle; and they fled before him. 15 And when the Ammonites saw that the Syrians fled, they likewise fled before Abi'shai, Jo'ab's brother, and entered the city. Then Jo'ab came to Jerusalem.

16 But when the Syrians saw that they had been defeated by Israel, they sent messengers and brought out the Syrians who were beyond the Eu-phra'tes, with Shophach the commander of the army of Hadade'zer at their head. 17 And when it was told David, he gathered all Israel together, and crossed the Jordan, and came to them, and drew up his forces against them. And when David set the battle in array against the

it, for he had declared that all the house of Saul perished when the Battle of Gilboa was fought. Therefore he now proceeded, on the basis of II Sam. 10:1-19, to relate David's courtesy to an Ammonite king, and its curious sequel.

and incurred defeat. We do not know just when King Nahash, father of Hanun, assisted David, but probably it was when the Ammonites were fighting Saul and David was endangered by Saul's jealousy. Shall we therefore infer that Nahash had been actuated not by kindly desire to help David, but by intention to do a dis-service to Saul? If we do so, we find ourselves imputing bad motives as suspiciously as did Hanun's counselors. Satan, in the sense of the archfiend, is a manufacturer of spectacles—mass-produced dark glasses for us all to wear.
18 But the Syrians fled before Israel: and David slew of the Syrians seven thousand men which fought in chariots, and forty thousand footmen, and killed Shophach the captain of the host.

19 And when the servants of Hadarezer saw that they were put to the worse before Israel, they made peace with David, and became his servants: neither would the Syrians help the children of Ammon any more.

20 And it came to pass, that after the year was expired, at the time that kings go out to battle, Joab led forth the power of the army, and wasted the country of the children of Ammon, and came and besieged Rabbah. But David tarried at Jerusalem. And Joab smote Rabbah, and destroyed it.

2 And David took the crown of their king from off his head, and found it to weigh a talent of gold, and there were precious stones in it; and it was set upon David’s head: and he brought also exceeding much spoil out of the city.

3 And he brought out the people that were in it, and cut them with saws, and with harrows of iron, and with axes. Even so dealt David with all the cities of the children of Ammon. And David and all the people returned to Jerusalem.

4 And it came to pass after this, that there arose war at Gezer with the Philistines; at which time Sibbechai the Hushathite slew Sippai, that was of the children of the giant: and they were subdued.

5 And there was war again with the Philistines; and Elhanan the son of Jair was famous among the inhabitants of Bethlehem, he slew an Amalekite whose spear weighed two hundred shekels of gold.

20:4-8. At this point the Chronicler had to omit the section of II Sam. 13:1–21:14 which vividly narrates the revolts of Absalom and Sheba and the vengeance exacted by the Gibeonites on seven surviving sons (or grandsons) of Saul: it was all incompatible with the picture of an idealized David.

5. II Sam. 21:19 reads, “Elhanan the Bethlehemite, slew Goliath,” a statement which startlingly conflicts with the famous tale that youthful David slew Goliath (I Sam. 17:49).

20:5. Did David Slay Goliath?—See Exeg., but let not meticulous scholars rob us of “David and Goliath.” If necessary, take a hint from the Chronicler, and suppress their vexatious opinion. Rather let us add to the famous tale the following picturesque conjecture: The cave dwellers, whom the Hebrews, invading Canaan, dislodged with great difficulty from the limestone caverns near Hebron, were exceptionally tall, Stone Age men. Some of the survivors may have found refuge in the Philistines’ coastal plain. Therefore a great-grandson of one of slew Lahmi the brother of Goliath the Gittite, whose spear staff was like a weaver's beam.

6 And yet again there was war at Gath, where was a man of great stature, whose fingers and toes were four and twenty, six on each hand, and six on each foot: and he also was the son of the giant.

7 But when he defied Israel, Jonathan the son of Shimea David's brother slew him.

8 These were born unto the giant in Gath; and they fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his servants.

21 And Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel.

2 And David said to Joab and to the rulers of the people, Go, number Israel from 17). Perhaps Elhanan really was the giant killer, the credit being legendarily transferred to David. At any rate, Chronicles circumvented or corrected by saying that Elhanan slew Goliath's brother. Lahmi is a mutilated fragment of the word “the Bethlehemite.”

H. CENSUS AND PLAGUE (21:1–22:1)

The Chronicler adapted the narrative of II Sam. 24, for although it showed human David presumptuously sinning in taking the census, it related an ideally good sequel. The king heeded the rebuking prophet; he accepted as just chastisement the visitation of plague; he was therefore not only pardoned but he also received from God an inestimable sign of favor. When David was at the threshing floor of Araunah the Jebusite, a vision of an angel of mercy was vouchsafed, and therefore the prophet told him to purchase the ground and to offer thankful sacrifice. In Samuel this story is feebly placed at the very end of the book. When a reader of the book of Samuel turned for sequel to the book of Kings, he read, “Now King David was old and stricken in years.” Sensibly and skillfully the Chronicler placed it in the midst of David's career. Moreover, the account in Samuel fails to say that Araunah's threshing floor became the site of the temple! The Chronicler of course seized on that outcome as the really glorious significance of the whole episode. Indeed, he saw in it the pivotal point in the ideal history he was writing.

21:1. Satan stood up against Israel: Satan has not here the later meaning of chief of evil, superhuman beings, opposed to the will of God, but denotes a superhuman being more deadly opponent than Despondency. What means of defense or attack should anyone in like circumstance seek to possess? “Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee” (Isa. 26:3). “These things I have spoken unto you,” said Jesus to his disciples, “that in me ye might have peace. . . . Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world” (John 16:33).

21:1. Satan or God?—(See Exeg.) The difference between the statement in II Sam. 24:1, that God incited David to do wrong, and here, Satan . . . incited David, is not doctrinal but more an indication of the effect of Satan's promptings upon man, and the effect of man's responses.

Beer-sheba even to Dan: and bring the number of them to me, that I may know it.

3 And Joab answered, "The Lord make his people a hundred times so many more as they be: but, my lord the king, are they not all my lord's servants? why then doth my lord require this thing? why will he be a cause of trespass to Israel?

4 Nevertheless the king's word prevailed against Joab. Wherefore Joab departed, and went throughout all Israel, and came to Jerusalem.

5 ¶ And Joab gave the sum of the number of the people unto David. And all they of Israel were a thousand thousand and a hundred thousand men that drew sword: and Judah was four hundred threescore and ten thousand men that drew sword.

6 But Levi and Benjamin counted he not among them: for the king's word was abominable to Joab.

7 And God was displeased with this thing; therefore he smote Israel.

8 And David said unto God, I have sinned greatly, because I have done this thing: but now, I beseech thee, do away the iniquity of thy servant; for I have done very foolishly.

(angel, messenger) who furthers the will of God (cf. Job 1:6-12); and particularly Zech. 3:1-2, which indicates that as early as 520 B.C. this mode of expression was well understood as a substitute for the earlier blunt statement that God himself tests ("tempts") men. The parallel text in II Sam. 24:1 reads "He [God] moved David."

6. Not in Samuel. Perhaps a reviser's reservation, since Num. 1:49 exempts Levites from army service. The reason for which Benjamin also is exempted defies conjecture.

reverential, a matter of expression sensitive-ness. Satan is here regarded as an "angelic" agent of God. This does not imply that God was thus mysteriously relieved of ultimate responsibility for the fact that men are confronted by morally testing choices. The metaphysical issue is subject for a volume, not for a brief note. In this chapter the Chronicler was able to relate that David's sinful decision to follow the promptings of power and pride nevertheless resulted in amazingly good great, for David repented, and then God enabled him to see Araunah's (Ornan's) threshing floor as the holy place where the temple should be built.

"O Almighty God, who canst bring good out of evil, and makest even the wrath of men to turn to thy praise. . . ." So begins a beautiful and memorable collect. But it should not be spoken lightly. So startling is its assertion that it should compel us to reflect. How can evil be overruled for good? How can even God bring good out of evil? This incident declares that David's sin resulted in good, only because penitently he realized that he had done wrong and became willing to accept guidance to do right.

When the Hebrew writers said that God (or Satan) incited David in such wise that he sinned, they used a curious idiom of the Hebrew language, and literal translation easily leads to deep misunderstanding on our part. That idiom states a specific decision taken as if it had been the only possibility inherent in the situation and presents the result as if that had been purposed by God. It is not meant that David had no choice when he acted as he did. Two famous examples of this idiom are Isa. 6:9 and Exod. 7:1, 3.
9 And the Lord spake unto Gad, David's seer, saying,
10 Go and tell David, saying, Thus saith the Lord: I offer thee three things: choose thee one of them, that I may do it unto thee.
11 So Gad came to David, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Choose thee.
12 Either three years of famine; or three months to be destroyed before thine enemies, while that the sword of thine enemies overtooketh thee; or else three days the sword of the Lord, even the pestilence, in the land, and the angel of the Lord destroying throughout all the coasts of Israel. Now therefore advise thyself what word I shall bring again to him that sent me.
13 And David said unto Gad, I am in a great strait: let me fall now into the hand of the Lord; for very great are his mercies: but let me not fall into the hand of man.
14 So the Lord sent pestilence upon Israel: and there fell of Israel seventy thousand men.
15 And God sent an angel unto Jerusalem to destroy it: and as he was destroying, the Lord beheld, and he repented of the evil, and said to the angel that destroyed, It is enough, stay now thine hand. And the angel of the Lord stood by the threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite.
16 And David lifted up his eyes, and saw the angel of the Lord stand between the earth and the heaven, having a drawn sword in his hand stretched out over Jerusalem. Then David and the elders of Israel, who were clothed in sackcloth, fell upon their faces.

16. Only in Chronicles. The reference to the angel in II Sam. 24:15-17 is so awkward in that context that one wonders whether the smoother version in Chronicles was originally the text of Samuel.

9-13. Into Thy Hands, O Lord.—Gad the prophet was certain that David's sin of arrogance in taking a census of his subjects must meet with retribution. What form would it take? Gad felt inspired to tell David that God tests him by offering choice between three disasters—famine, defeat in battle, or pestilence. Plague broke out in the land—on the modern view caused not by an immediate intervention by the Deity, but by insanitary habits or infected vermin. For us the intense religious interest of the narrative is seen in David's moving answer (vs. 13). Gone is his arrogance. Humbly he asks that the merited disaster may be determined not by human cruelty, but by the justice of God, "whose property is always to have mercy." The story has very deep significance. For one thing, we should note—as David did (vs. 17)—that the sufferings from the plague were endured by innocent men and women in the country: Jerusalem was not affected, David did not contract the disease and die in agony. What then? This solemn reflection—that seldom if ever are the consequences of our wrongdoing confined to ourselves. We do not live in complete isolation from our fellow men. What we are must either 17 And David said unto God, Is it not I that commanded the people to be numbered? even I it is that have sinned and done evil indeed: but as for these sheep, what have they done? let thine hand, I pray thee, O Lord my God, be on me, and on my father's house: but not on thy people, that they should be plagued.

18 Then the angel of the Lord commanded Gad to say to David, that David should go up, and set up an altar unto the Lord in the threshingfloor of Ornan the Jebusite.

19 And David went up at the saying of Gad, which he spake in the name of the Lord.

20 And Ornan turned back, and saw the angel: and his four sons with him hid themselves. Now Ornan was threshing wheat.

21 And as David came to Ornan, Ornan looked and saw David, and went out of the threshingfloor, and bowed himself to David with his face to the ground.

22 Then David said to Ornan, Grant me the place of this threshingfloor, that I may build an altar therein unto the Lord: thou shalt grant it me for the full price: that the plague may be stayed from the people.

23 And Ornan said unto David, Take it to thee, and let my lord the king do that which is good in his eyes: lo, I give thee the oxen also for burnt offerings, and the threshing instruments for wood, and the wheat for the meat offering; I give it all.

24 And king David said to Ornan, Nay; but I will verily buy it for the full price: for I will not take that which is thine for the Lord, nor offer burnt offerings without cost.

20. In Samuel the presence of Araunah only is mentioned. His four sons may be the Chronicler’s embellishment—the more witnesses the better.

harm or help others. Awareness of that great truth should, if we have any conscience and imagination, restrain us from selfish and wanton impulses.

What is the latent meaning that makes David's answer—let me fall into the hand of the Lord—alike so beautiful and so profound, at least for Christian thought? Surely it is seen in our apprehension that the consequences of wrongdoing need not be merely punitive, but can be transformed into good through God's everlasting redemptive mercy, the fullness of which is manifested in the cross of Christ. Who can read the prayer of David, let me fall into the hand of the Lord, and not remember the trust of the sinless One, “Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit” (Luke 23:46).

24. Bargaining.—Here is a pleasing and vivid example of Oriental bargaining (for a parallel see the story of Abraham’s purchase of the burying place for his wife’s body in Gen. 23:1-16). East and West have radically different views about proper procedure in commercial transactions. We aim at no unnecessary expenditure of precious time in effecting a deal. The East considers that there is time to burn.
25 So David gave to Ornan for the place six hundred shekels of gold by weight.
26 And David built there an altar unto the Lord, and offered burnt offerings and peace offerings, and called upon the Lord:
and he answered him from heaven by fire upon the altar of burnt offering.
27 And the Lord commanded the angel; and he put up his sword again into the sheath thereof.
28 ¶ At that time when David saw that the Lord had answered him in the threshingfloor of Ornan the Jebusite, then he sacrificed there.
29 For the tabernacle of the Lord, which Moses made in the wilderness, and the altar of the burnt offering, were at that season in the high place at Gibeon.
30 But David could not go before it to inquire of God: for he was afraid because of the sword of the angel of the Lord.

Then David said, This is the house of the Lord God, and this is the altar of the burnt offering for Israel.

22 Six hundred shekels of gold: In Samuel, “fifty shekels of silver.” But no sum could be too high to pay for such utterly sacred ground. Moreover, according to Gen.
23:15-17, Abraham paid four hundred silver shekels for the cave of Machpelah. No wonder the Chronicler wrote shekels of gold.

26b. Here and in 22:1 the Chronicler added to what he read in Samuel an important assertion and inference. When David laid on this altar its first sacrifice, his action was divinely approved by a miracle; whereupon (22:1) there came upon him a revelation:
he foreknew that God purposed this place to be the site of the temple, and that on this altar the burnt offerings of the people would be sacrificed.

29-30. The anxious revisers apparently mollified the preceding verse (be sacrificed there) by pointing out that the tabernacle and legitimate altar were at Gibeon: David would of course have gone thither to offer this exceptional sacrifice, but for the fact that he was prevented by the sword of the angel of the Lord!

Compared with the importance of showing per-few politeness and proffering generosity (of which, however, no gentleman would lower himself by taking advantage), what matter moms or hours or days? Besides, the protracted method is interesting, affords scope for skill, and eventually may reach a decision acceptable to both parties. There is something to be said for and against both methods. At any rate, Westerners lose much of the possible joy of living by being continually in such a hurry. Said an eager Londoner in the complex system of the underground railways, “If we change at this station, we can get a train on the other line which will save two minutes.” “And what,” said his companion, “shall we do with the two minutes?” One way and another, by indolence or by haste, it is only too easy not to make the best use of the fleeting minutes, hours, and days of the years of our life.

And on what basis do we conduct our transactions with God? That is a question which gives food for thought. The Scriptures insist that God gives his gifts freely. In what spirit do we receive them?

22:1-19. Preparation.—This fine chapter prompts various reflections. Certain of them may be grouped together in an initial note. In vs. 1, This is the house of the Lord—but not a stone of it was yet laid! The future is seen as realized. Courage of that high order is likely sooner or later to fashion, or cause to be fash-

2 And David commanded to gather together the strangers that were in the land of Israel; and he set masons to hew wrought stones to build the house of God.
3 And David prepared iron in abundance for the nails for the doors of the gates, and for the joinings; and brass in abundance without weight;
4 Also cedar trees in abundance: for the Zidonians and they of Tyre brought much cedar wood to David.
5 And David said, Solomon my son is young and tender, and the house that is to be built for the Lord must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory throughout all countries: I will therefore now make preparation for it. So David prepared abundantly before his death.
6 Then he called for Solomon his son, and charged him to build a house for the Lord God of Israel.
7 And David said to Solomon, My son, as for me, it was in my mind to build a house unto the name of the Lord my God:

2 David commanded to gather together the aliens who were in the land of Israel, and he set stonecutters to prepare dressed stones for building the house of God.
3 David also provided great stores of iron for nails for the doors of the gates and for clamps, as well as bronze in quantities beyond weighing, and cedar timbers without number; for the Sido’nians and Tyrians brought great quantities of cedar to David.
4 For David said, “Solomon my son is young and inexperienced, and the house that is to be built for the Lord must be exceedingly magnificent, of fame and glory throughout all lands; I will therefore make preparation for it.” So David provided materials in great quantity before his death.
5 Then he called for Solomon his son, and charged him to build a house for the Lord, the God of Israel. 6 David said to Solomon, “My son, I had it in my heart to build a house to the name of the Lord my

J. David’s Preparations for the Temple (22:2-19)
The passage 22:3-29:30 has no parallel in Samuel. The Chronicler easily thought that David had devotedly sought to prepare for the future building of the temple.
22:5. Magnificent: Cf. “magnifical” (ERV); it is sad that this resounding adjective should have grown obsolete.

ioned, what it dreams. The great prophets had that quality, penetrating through present darkness, to see the power of a ceaseless divine purpose in the end achieving its aim. Jesus foresaw fulfillment beyond suffering and death. In vs. 3 we are told that David prepared, not only in abundance, but in detail. No other mode of preparation is effective: first, largeness of vision; then meticulous care and toil. It is to be hoped that Solomon—as the Chronicler will charitably but perhaps histori- cally later relate—did not take all the credit to himself when the time came. It is a besetting weakness in human nature to forget indebtedness to predecessors. “Other men labored,” said Jesus, “and ye are entered into their labors” (John 4:38). Vs. 5 reminds us that father and son co-operated. It is written that David, conscious of Solomon’s immaturity, was also confident of his future strength and believed that he would be free from incessant wars (cf. vs. 9) and would prosper exceedingly, for such was the purpose of God. Yet David did not therefore fold his hands and leave the consumption for Solomon to achieve unaided; instead he resolved, I will therefore make preparation for it. In vs. 15 is expressed a parent’s affectionate hope for his son; note that it is taking shape in wise and noble counsel from a father who has won the right to give it.

2. Manual and Menial.—The chapter (cf. Expos. on II Chr. 2:17-18) makes a bad start in this verse, with its implication that it was unbecoming for Hebrews to have to bend their backs to hard work, wherefore only strangers (men of Canaanitish families is meant, not resident aliens) should be set to manual labor. In contrast, remember the energy of the Hebrews of Jerusalem and Judah in Nehemiah’s time, when with one accord they themselves tackled the tremendous task of rebuilding Jerusalem’s broken walls—with the exception of the nobles of Tekoa, who “put not their necks to the work of the Lord” (Neh. 3:5).

7. It Was in My Heart to Build.—What of the good projects, the legitimate longings that we know we shall not live to fulfill? Perchance they will not be done by those who come after us, unless we have hoped and planned and prepared for the ends we shall not ourselves attain.
8 But the word of the Lord came to me, saying, Thou hast shed blood abundantly, and hast made great wars: thou shalt not build a house unto my name, because thou hast shed much blood upon the earth in my sight.

9 Behold, a son shall be born to thee, who shall be a man of rest; and I will give him rest from all his enemies round about: for his name shall be Solomon, and I will give peace and quietness unto Israel in his days.

10 He shall build a house for my name; and he shall be my son, and I will be his father: and I will establish the throne of his kingdom over Israel for ever.

11 Now, my son, the Lord be with thee; and prosper thou, and build the house of the Lord thy God, as he hath said of thee.

12 Only the Lord give thee wisdom and understanding, and give thee charge concerning Israel, that thou mayest keep the law of the Lord thy God.

13 Then shalt thou prosper, if thou hast heed to fulfil the statutes and judgments which the Lord charged Moses with concerning Israel: be strong, and of good courage: dread not, nor be dismayed.

14 Now, behold, in my trouble I have prepared for the house of the Lord a hundred thousand talents of gold, and a thousand thousand talents of silver; and of brass and iron without weight; for it is in abundance: timber also and stone have I prepared; and thou mayest add thereto.

11-12. An interruptive parenthesis which appears to be a pious addition.

14. With great pains: The phrase subtly implies that compared with the wealth which Solomon would possess, David's resources were slender. Now according to 1 Kings 10:14, Solomon's wealth became so amazing that in one year his revenue was 666 gold talents. At the same rate David in forty years would have accumulated 26,640 talents. The Chronicler picturesquely used a double superlative when he stated that David had set aside toward the temple a hundred thousand talents of gold, plus a million talents.

8. Disqualified.—Note the abysmally lower reason assigned in 1 Kings 5:5, viz., that David had been too busy fighting to have time to erect the temple. The Chronicler did not regard the wars of David as wrongdoing. Far from it, his victories provided resources for the future temple. All the more remarkable therefore is the sensitiveness of feeling here expressed. The fierce necessities which David's life had to cope with made it incongruous that the structure of the place, where later generations were to worship the God whose will is righteousness and peace, should be his achieving. Actually David and Solomon would not have seen the point as did the Chronicler, for they thought of God and worship as men did who lived in 1000 B.C., while he was thinking of the temple as men thought of it who lived five hundred years later. That second temple had been built in 520 B.C. by Jews subject to the Persians. No Hebrew king then existed who had shed the blood of other nations; instead, other mighty nations had 15 Moreover, there are workmen with thee in abundance, hewers and workers of stone and timber, and all manner of cunning men for every manner of work.

16 Of the gold, the silver, and the brass, and the iron, there is no number. Arise therefore, and be doing, and the LORD be with thee.

17 Also David also commanded all the princes of Israel to help Solomon his son, saying, Is not the LORD your God with you? and hath he not given you rest on every side? for he hath given the inhabitants of the land into mine hand; and the land is subdued before the LORD, and before his people.

19 Now set your heart and your soul to seek the LORD your God; arise therefore, and build ye the sanctuary of the LORD God, to bring the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and the holy vessels of God, into the house that is to be built to the name of the LORD.

talents of silver: credit Judaeus Apella! (Horace Satires I. 5. 100.) Neither the Jewish Chronicler nor his Jewish readers could have imagined that there would ever be anyone so prodigious as to take the golden words literally.

19. Arise and build: Why the urgent imperative? In order to bring into the temple-to-be the ark of the covenant of the Lord. No trace in the Chronicler’s text about the matter that bulked in the minds of the revisers—transference of the tabernacle from Gibeon.

K. DUTIES OF THE LEVITES (23:1–26:32)

It is natural to expect that the Chronicler would present David as taking meticulous care to provide that the Levites were organized in accordance with their several duties, and so ready to minister in the coming temple. But whatever he wrote on that theme was scrutinized by the devout in later times, and corrections and additions were probably inserted and gave rise eventually to a highly complicated text. By common consent of scholars these four chapters offer the most disconcertingly intricate critical problems in Chronicles (see Welch, Work of the Chronicler, pp. 81–96). This Exeg. takes the view that the Chronicler lived before the rigid distinction between Aaronite priests and the shed abundantly the blood of the Hebrews. No doubt the Chronicler’s constant thought of the temple of his time was as the place of prayer for Jewish worship. But one wonders if perchance he had read and pondered the words in Isa. 56:7, “My house shall be called a house of prayer for all peoples” (cf. Mark 11:17).

23:1. Death Draws Near.—Strange it feels when a man knows the hour has come to make his last arrangements, and that hands other than his will deal with what he thus seeks to set in order. To the utmost of his ability David took pains not to leave that final duty undone. Wrote Horace to his friend,

Alas, . . . not piety nor tears,
Can halt the inexorable passing of the years.7

7 Odes II. 14.
2 And he gathered together all the princes of Israel, with the priests and the Levites.
3 Now the Levites were numbered from the age of thirty years and upward: and their number by their polls, man by man, was thirty and eight thousand.
4 Of which, twenty and four thousand were to set forward the work of the house of the Lord; and six thousand were officers and judges:
5 Moreover four thousand were porters; and four thousand praised the Lord with the instruments which I made, said David, to praise therewith.
6 And David divided them into courses among the sons of Levi, namely, Gershon, Kohath, and Merari.
7 Of the Gershonites were Laadan, and Shimei.
8 The sons of Laadan; the chief was Jehiel, and Zetham, and Joel, three.
9 The sons of Shimei; Shelomith, and Haziel, and Haran, three. These were the chief of the fathers of Laadan.
10 And the sons of Shimei were, Jahath, Zina, and Jeush, and Beriah. These four were the sons of Shimei.
11 And Jahath was the chief, and Zizah the second: but Jeush and Beriah had not many sons; therefore they were in one reckoning, according to their father's house.
12 The sons of Kohath; Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel, four.
13 The sons of Amram; Aaron, and Moses: and Aaron was separated, that he should sanctify the most holy things, he and his sons for ever, to burn incense before the other Levites obtained, and that the chief motive for the revisers' activities in altering and adding to the text he had written was its frequent inconsistency with that distinction.

23:1. It is hinted that long years intervened between this gathering of Levites and David's speech recorded in ch. 22. It is likely that the entire passage was inserted by a reviser, and that his work was in turn subjected in places, e.g., vss. 24-27, 32, to still later amendments.

3. From ... thirty years: Vs. 27 speaks of Levites taking office at the age of twenty (see Exeg. on vss. 24-27).

6. The strict rendering is: "And David divided them into courses. Concerning the sons of Levi . . . ." Perhaps the first clause concluded vss. 1-5; and what follows, "concerning the sons of Levi . . . .," was the heading for the ensuing name list, which had no original connection with vss. 1-5.

136. Aaron was set apart: The author stressed the ordinances of the final Law as to the priests.
Lord, to minister unto him, and to bless in his name for ever.
14 Now concerning Moses the man of God, his sons were named of the tribe of Levi.
15 The sons of Moses were, Gershom, and Eliezer.
16 Of the sons of Gershom, Shebuel was the chief.
17 Of the sons of Eliezer were, Rehaniah the chief. And Eliezer had none other sons: but the sons of Rehaniah were very many.
18 Of the sons of Izhar; Shelomith the chief.
19 Of the sons of Hebron; Jeriah the first, Amariah the second, Jahaziel the third, and Jekameam the fourth.
20 Of the sons of Uzziel; Micah the first, and Jeshua the second.
21 ¶ The sons of Merari; Mahli, and Mushi. The sons of Mahli; Eleazar, and Kish.
22 And Eleazar died, and had no sons, but daughters: and their brethren the sons of Kish took them.
23 The sons of Mushi; Mahli, and Eder, and Jeremoth, three.
24 ¶ These were the sons of Levi after the house of their fathers; even the chief of the fathers, as they were counted by number of names by their polls, that did the work for the service of the house of the Lord, from the age of twenty years and upward.

24-27. From twenty years old and upward: Here is a most interesting amendment of the announcement in vs. 3 that the Levites began service at the age of thirty. No specific reason is assigned for the change; in vs. 27 it is merely said that the twenty years regulation was made by the last words of David. Obviously in the time of the author of vs. 3 (Chronicles or first reviser) the date line was thirty. At what later period did the change to twenty come to pass? No doubt when the second temple was built in 520 B.C. it required an increase of Levites, but that is too early a date for the composition of Chronicles. It is an attractive conjecture that as and when (perhaps the Nehemiah-Ezra period early in the fourth century B.C.) the Zadokites won their contention for supremacy over the other Levites, numbers of Levites may have refused to acquiesce; and that especially those of Israelite lineage abandoned their claim to serve in Jerusalem and left the city. If so, two consequences might well ensue: on the one hand, a shortage of Levitical man power in Jerusalem necessitating the lowering of the age limit; and on
For David said, The Lord God of Israel hath given rest unto his people, that they may dwell in Jerusalem for ever:

And also unto the Levites: they shall no more carry the tabernacle, nor any vessels of it for the service thereof.

For by the last words of David the Levites were numbered from twenty years old and above:

Because their office was to wait on the sons of Aaron for the service of the house of the Lord, in the courts, and in the chambers, and in the purifying of all holy things, and the work of the service of the house of God:

Both for the showbread, and for the fine flour for meat offering, and for the unleavened cakes, and for that which is baked in the pan, and for that which is fried, and for all manner of measure and size;

And to stand every morning to thank and praise the Lord, and likewise at even;

And to offer all burnt sacrifices unto the Lord in the sabbaths, in the new moons, and on the set feasts, by number, according to the order commanded unto them, continually before the Lord:

And that they should keep the charge of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the holy place, and the charge of the sons of Aaron their brethren, in the service of the house of the Lord.

Now these are the divisions of the sons of Aaron. The sons of Aaron; Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.

For David said, The Lord, the God of Israel, has given peace to his people; and he dwells in Jerusalem for ever. And so the Levites no longer need to carry the tabernacle or any of the things for its service — for by the last words of David these were the number of the Levites from twenty years old and upward — but their duty shall be to assist the sons of Aaron for the service of the house of the Lord, having the care of the courts and the chambers, the cleansing of all that is holy, and any work for the service of the house of God; to assist also with the showbread, the flour for the cereal offering, the wafers of unleavened bread, the baked offering, the offering mixed with oil, and all measures of quantity or size. And they shall stand every morning, thanking and praising the Lord, and likewise at evening, and whenever burnt offerings are offered to the Lord on sabbaths, new moons, and feast days, according to the number required of them, continually before the Lord. Thus they shall keep charge of the tent of meeting and the sanctuary, and shall attend the sons of Aaron, their brethren, for the service of the house of the Lord.”

The divisions of the sons of Aaron were these. The sons of Aaron: Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.
2 But Nadab and Abihu died before their father, and had no children: therefore Eleazar and Ithamar executed the priest's office.

3 And David distributed them, both Zadok of the sons of Eleazar, and Ahimelech of the sons of Ithamar, according to their offices in their service.

4 And there were more chief men found of the sons of Eleazar than of the sons of Ithamar: and thus were they divided. Among the sons of Eleazar there were sixteen chief men of the house of their fathers, and eight among the sons of Ithamar according to the house of their fathers.

5 Thus were they divided by lot, one sort with another: for the governors of the sanctuary, and governors of the house of God, were of the sons of Eleazar, and of the sons of Ithamar.

6 And Shemaiah the son of Netaneel the scribe, one of the Levites, wrote them before the king, and the princes, and Zadok the priest, and Ahimelech the son of Abiathar, and before the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites: one principal household being taken for Eleazar, and one taken for Ithamar.

7 Now the first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, the second to Jedaiah, the third to Harim, the fourth to Seorim,

8 The fifth to Machijah, the sixth to Mijamin,

9 The seventh to Hakkoz, the eighth to Abijah,

10 The ninth to Shashab, the tenth to Shecaniah,

11 The eleventh to Eliashib, the twelfth to Jakim,

12 The thirteenth to Huppah, the fourteenth to Jeshebeab,

13 The fifteenth to Bilgah, the sixteenth to Immer, dab, Abi'hu, Elea'zar, and Ith'am'ar. 2 But Nadab and Abihu died before their father, and had no children, so Eleazar and Ithamar became the priests. 3 With the help of Zadok of the sons of Eleazar, and Ahim'elech of the sons of Ithamar, David organized them according to the appointed duties in their service. 4 Since more chief men were found among the sons of Eleazar than among the sons of Ithamar, they organized them under sixteen heads of fathers' houses of the sons of Eleazar, and eight of the sons of Ithamar. 5 They organized them by lot, all alike, for there were officers of the sanctuary and officers of God among both the sons of Eleazar and the sons of Ithamar. 6 And the scribe Shema'iah the son of Nathan'el, a Levite, recorded them in the presence of the king, and the princes, and Zadok the priest, and Ahim'elech the son of Abi'athar, and the heads of the fathers' houses of the priests and of the Levites; one father's house being chosen for Eleazar and one chosen for Ithamar.

7 The first lot fell to Jehoi'arib, the second to Jeda'iah, the third to Harim, the fourth to Seor'rim, the fifth to Malch'i'jah, the sixth to Mi'jam'in, the seventh to Hakkoz, the eighth to Abi'jah, the ninth to Jeshua, the tenth to Shecan'i'ah, the eleventh to Eli'ashib, the twelfth to Jakim, the thirteenth to Huppah, the fourteenth to Jeshebe'ab, the fifteenth to Bilgah,

3. Ahimelech: Read "Abiathar," as also in vs. 6 (see Exeg. on 18:14-17).

5. Echo of an unknown dispute, happily settled by deciding that both parties had rights and should draw lots for the appointments.

24:2. The Parent Outlived the Children.—Nadab and Abihu died before their father and had no children. If the father and the two sons loved one another his grief for their early death had an element of poignancy which they would not have suffered had their father lived a natural length of years and predeceased them. These two died childless. Said a father of his young son killed in battle, "Never again shall I see the wind blowing his hair, or see his marriage and his children." Said David, "O my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died

16 The nineteenth to Pethahiah, the twentieth to Jehezekel, 17 The one and twentieth to Jachin, the two and twentieth to Gamul, 18 The three and twentieth to Delaiah, the four and twentieth to Maaziah.
19 These were the orderings of them in their service to come into the house of the Lord, according to their manner, under Aaron their father, as the Lord God of Israel had commanded him.

20 And the rest of the sons of Levi were these: Of the sons of Amram; Shubael, of the sons of Shubael; Jehdeiah.
21 Concerning Rehabiah: of the sons of Rehabiah, the first was Isshiah.
22 Of the Izharites; Shelomoth: of the sons of Shelomoth; Jahath.
23 And the sons of Hebron; Jeriah the first, Amariah the second, Jahaziel the third, Jekameam the fourth.
24 Of the sons of Uzziel; Michah: of the sons of Michah; Shamir.
25 The brother of Michah was Isshiah: of the sons of Isshiah; Zechariah.
26 The sons of Merari were Mahli and Mushi: the sons of Jaaziah; Beno.
27 The sons of Merari by Jaaziah; Beno, and Shoham, and Zaccur, and Ibri.
28 Of Mahli came Eleazar, who had no sons.
29 Concerning Kish: the son of Kish was Jerahmeel.
30 The sons also of Mushi; Mahli, and Eder, and Jerimoth. These were the sons of the Levites after the house of their fathers.
31 These likewise cast lots over against their brethren the sons of Aaron in the presence of David the king, and Zadok, and Ahimelech, and the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites, even the principal fathers over against their younger brethren.

the sixteenth to Immer, 15 the seventeenth to Hezir, the eighteenth to Hap’pizez, 16 the nineteenth to Pethah’i’ah, the twentieth to Jehe’kkel, 17 the twenty-first to Jachin, the twenty-second to Gamul, 18 the twenty-third to Dela’i’ah, the twenty-fourth to Ma-azi’ah. 19 These had as their appointed duty in their service to come into the house of the Lord according to the procedure established for them by Aaron their father, as the Lord God of Israel had commanded him.

20 And of the rest of the sons of Levi: of the sons of Amram, Shu’ba-el: of the sons of Shu’ba-el, Jehde’i’ah. 21 Of Rehabi’ah: of the sons of Rehabi’ah, Issi’ah the chief. 22 Of the Izharites, Shelo’moth: of the sons of Shelo’moth, Jahath. 23 The sons of Hebron: Jer’i’ah the chief, Amari’ah the second, Jahazi’el the third, Jekame’am the fourth. 24 The sons of Uz’zi’el, Micah; of the sons of Micah, Shamir. 25 The brother of Micah, Issi’ah; of the sons of Issi’ah, Zechari’ah. 26 The sons of Merar’i: Mahli and Mushi. The sons of Ja-azi’ah: Beno. 27 The sons of Merar’i: of Ja-azi’ah, Beno, Shoham, Zaccur, and Ibri. 28 Of Mahli: Elea’zar, who had no sons. 29 Of Kish, the sons of Kish: Jerah’meel. 30 The sons of Mushi: Mahli, Eder, and Jer’i’moth. These were the sons of the Levites according to their fathers’ houses. 31 These also, the head of each father’s house and his younger brother alike, cast lots, just as their brethren the sons of Aaron, in the presence of King David, Zadok, Ahim’elech, and the heads of fathers’ houses of the priests and of the Levites.

20-31. This list has no integral connection with its context, and how it stands related to the list in 23:6-24 is a puzzle. It looks like a very late addition for it ignores the Gershonites, who may have ceased to function at the time of its compilation.

for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!” (II Sam. 18:33.) If length of life were the same for all and a certainty, so that without fail children would outlive parents, and parents live to see their grandchildren, would that be for the best?

To how great an extent the rest and discipline with which life as it is confronts us would vanish to our detriment! There is contingency. We must live as not knowing what a day may bring forth, and the fact is a summons alike to the 25:1 Moreover David and the captains of the host separated to the service of the sons of Asaph, and of Heman, and of Jeduthun, who should prophesy with harps, with psalteries, and with cymbals: and the number of the workmen according to their service was:

2 Of the sons of Asaph: Zaccur, and Joseph, and Nethaniah, and Asarelah, the sons of Asaph under the hands of Asaph, which prophesied according to the order of the king.

3 Of Jeduthun: the sons of Jeduthun: Gedaliah, and Zeri, and Jshaiah, Hashabiah, and Mattithiah, six, under the hands of their father Jeduthun, who prophesied with a harp, to give thanks and to praise the Lord.

4 Of Heman: the sons of Heman; Bukkiah, Mattaniah, Uzziel, Shebuel, and Jeremoth, Hananiah, Hanani, Eliathah, Giddalti, and Romamti-ezer, Joshbekashah, Mallothi, Hothir, and Mahazioth:

5 All these were the sons of Heman the king’s seer in the words of God, to lift up the horn. And God gave to Heman fourteen sons and three daughters.

25:1-31. The chapter taken as a whole may be deemed revisional work, but vs. 1-7 (or a simpler form of them) may be due not merely to the Chronicler himself but to an earlier document from which he used. At any rate, it is of the highest interest to note that the heart of the matter concerns not Levites as skilled in music and psalmody, but picked men from the three chief families of musician Levites (Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun), whose duty was to produce oracular—prophetic—utterances when in an ecstasy induced by rhythmic music. Only recently have scholars adequately envisaged the fact that these professional prophets were part of the regular staff of the temple. One reflects how young and the old to live aright. In bereavement those who have hold of the Christian faith sorrow not as do those without hope.

25:3. The Forgotten Man.—Six, under the direction of their father. But only five sons are here recorded. The sixth deserved recognition and did not get it. Plenty of instances there are of that sort of thing in life, and those who receive publicity are apt to be forgetful that their brother has been overlooked. The forgotten need to learn to say in their hearts, “The work was done, and thank God I took my part in it.” Vs. 17, however, enables us to recover the lost man: he was Shimei. The omission was due to a scribe’s error in copying. Those who realize the difficulty of copying perfectly a very ancient Hebrew MS will give the scribe their sympathy. Over the desk of an expert printer who used to deal with Semitic language work in the Cambridge University Press, there hung this motto: “The man who never made a mistake never made anything.”

4. Buried Treasure.—Here is one of the oddest facts in the text of the Scriptures. From Hananiaiah onward these names of the sons of Heman are not names of men, but (with thin disguise) words of a poem, a prayer, to this effect: “Be gracious unto me, O God, be gracious unto me. Thou art my God. Thou hast increased and raised up help for him that sat in distress. Do thou make the (prophetic) visions abundant.” This fact appears, however, to be remarkable, rather than edifying. Can one extract good counsel from it? Perhaps if we looked with gentler, wiser eyes into the underlying nature and meaning of our lives we might discover, in what we took to be only dull prose, hidden poetry of spiritual significance.
6 All these were under the hands of their father for song in the house of the Lord, with cymbals, psaltries, and harps, for the service of the house of God, according to the king's order to Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman.

7 So the number of them, with their brethren that were instructed in the songs of the Lord, even all that were cunning, was two hundred fourscore and eight.

8 And they cast lots, ward against ward, as well the small as the great, the teacher as the scholar.

9 Now the first lot came forth for Asaph to Joseph: the second to Gedaliah, who with his brethren and sons were twelve:

10 The third to Zaccur, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

11 The fourth to Izri, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

12 The fifth to Nethaniah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

13 The sixth to Bukkiah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

14 The seventh to Jesarelah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

15 The eighth to Jeshaiah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

16 The ninth to Mattaniah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

17 The tenth to Shimei, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

18 The eleventh to Azareel, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

19 The twelfth to Hashabiah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

20 The thirteenth to Shubael, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

21 The fourteenth to Mattithiah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

22 The fifteenth to Jeremoth, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

23 The sixteenth to Hananiah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

24 The seventeenth to Joshbekashah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

They were all under the direction of their father in the music in the house of the Lord with cymbals, harps, and lyres for the service of the house of God. Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman were under the order of the king. The number of them along with their brethren, who were trained in singing to the Lord, all who were skillful, was two hundred and eighty-eight. And they cast lots for their duties, small and great, teacher and pupil alike.

9 The first lot fell for Asaph to Joseph: the second to Gedaliah, to him and his brethren and his sons, twelve: 10 the third to Zaccur, his sons and his brethren, twelve; 11 the fourth to Izri, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 12 the fifth to Nethaniah, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 13 the sixth to Bukki'ah, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 14 the seventh to Jeshare'lah, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 15 the eighth to Jesha'iah, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 16 the ninth to Mattani'ah, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 17 the tenth to Shim'e-i, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 18 the eleventh to Az'arel, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 19 the twelfth to Hashab'iah, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 20 to the thirteenth, Shu'ba-el, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 21 to the fourteenth, Mattiti'ah, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 22 to the fifteenth, to Jeremoth, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 23 to the sixteenth, to Hananiah, his sons and his brethren, twelve: 24 to the seventeenth, to Joshbekash'ah, his sons and his brethren, radically different were their ways and words from the character and spiritual discernment of the supreme, individual prophets (cf. Jer. 18:18; 23:14-22).

Vs. 6 probably comes from an annotator who missed the point about the duty of prophesying, and was conscious of the three families as musician Levites.

7-8. Master and Pupil.—No doubt the beginners stood in full need of instruction in the various instruments and tunes. The teachers had to teach, and the pupils to learn. But it is a pleasing thought that when the time for performance came, the superiority was ignored 25 The eighteenth to Hanani, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

26 The nineteenth to Mallothi, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

27 The twentieth to Eliathah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

28 The one and twentieth to Hothir, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

29 The two and twentieth to Giddalti, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

30 The three and twentieth to MahaziOTH, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

Concerning the divisions of the porters: Of the Korhites was Meshelemiah the son of Kore, of the sons of Asaph.

2 And the sons of Meshelemiah were, Zechariah the firstborn, Jedial the second, Zebadiah the third, Jathniel the fourth,

3 Elam the fifth, Jehohanan the sixth, Eloenai the seventh,

4 Moreover the sons of Obed-edom were, Shemaiah the firstborn, Jehozabad the second, Joah the third, and Sacar the fourth, and Nethaneel the fifth,

5 Ammiel the sixth, Issachar the seventh, Peulthai the eighth: for God blessed him.

6 Also unto Shemaiah his son were sons born, that ruled throughout the house of their father: for they were mighty men of valor.

7 The sons of Shemaiah; Othni, and Raphael, and Obed, Elzabad, whose brethren were strong men, Elihu, and Semachiah.

8 All these of the sons of Obed-edom: they and their sons and their brethren, able men for strength for the service, were three-score and two of Obed-edom.

9 And Meshelemiah had sons and brethren, strong men, eighteen.

10 Also Hosah, of the children of Merari, had sons; Simri the chief, (for though he was not the firstborn, yet his father made him the chief;)

11 Hilkiah the second, Tebaliah the third, Zechariah the fourth: all the sons and brethren of Hosah were thirteen.

26 As for the divisions of the gatekeepers: of the Ko'rahites, Meshelemiah the son of Ko're, of the sons of Asaph.

2 And Meshelemiah had sons. Zechari'ah the first-born, Jed'ia-el the second, Zebadi'ah the third, Jath'ni-el the fourth, 3 Elam the fifth, Jeho-ha'nan the sixth, El'ieho'e-nai the seventh. 4 And O'bed-ed'om had sons: Shema'i'ah the first-born, Jehoz'abad the second, Jo'ah the third, Sacar the fourth, Nathan'el the fifth, 5 Am'mi-el the sixth, Is'sachar the seventh, Pe-ul'let-hai the eighth; for God blessed him. 6 Also to his son Shema'i'ah were sons born who were rulers in their fathers' houses, for they were men of great ability. 7 The sons of She-ma'i'ah: Othni, Repha'el, Obed, and Elza'-bad, whose brethren were able men, Eli'hu and Semach'i'ah. 8 All these were the sons of O'bed-ed'om with their sons and brethren, able men qualified for the service; sixty-two of O'bed-ed'om. 9 And Meshele-mi'ah had sons and brethren, able men, eighteen. 10 And Hosah, of the sons of Merar'i, had sons: Shimri the chief (for though he was not the first-born, his father made him chief), 11 Hilk'i'ah the second, Tebal'i'ah the third, Zechari'ah the fourth: all the sons and brethren of Hosah were thirteen.

26:1-20. Again probably a reviser's supplementation. The verses present some insoluble puzzles, especially when collated with the genealogists' list of doorkeepers in 9:17-27. Perhaps a main purpose was to assert Levitical descent for certain families whose 12 Among these were the divisions of the porters, even among the chief men, having wards one against another, to minister in the house of the Lord.

13 And they cast lots, as well the small as the great, according to the house of their fathers, for every gate.

14 And the lot eastward fell to Shelemiah. Then for Zechariah his son, a wise counselor, they cast lots; and his lot came out northward.

15 To Obed-edom southward: and to his sons the house of Asuppim.

16 To Shuppim and Hosah the lot came forth westward, with the gate Shallecheth, by the causeway of the going up, ward against ward.

17 Eastward were six Levites, northward four a day, southward four a day, and toward Asuppim two and two.

18 At Parbar westward, four at the causeway, and two at Parbar.

19 These are the divisions of the porters among the sons of Kore, and among the sons of Merari.

20 And of the Levites, Ahijah was over the treasures of the house of God, and over the treasures of the dedicated things.

21 As concerning the sons of Laadan; the sons of the Gershonite Laadan, chief fathers, even of Laadan the Gershonite, were Jehieli.

22 The sons of Jehieli; Zetham, and Joel his brother, which were over the treasures of the house of the Lord.

23 Of the Amramites, and the Izharites, the Hebronites, and the Uzzielites:

24 And Shebuel the son of Gershom, the son of Moses, was ruler of the treasures.

25 And his brethren by Eliezer; Rehobiah his son, and Jeshaiiah his son, and 12 These divisions of the gatekeepers, corresponding to their chief men, had duties, just as their brethren did, ministering in the house of the Lord: and they cast lots by fathers' houses, small and great alike, for their gates. 14 The lot for the east fell to Shelemiah. They cast lots also for his son Zechariah, a shrewd counselor, and his lot came out for the north. 15 Obed-edom's came out for the south, and to his sons was allotted the storehouse. 16 For Shuppim and Hosah it came out for the west, at the gate of Shallecheth on the road that goes up. Watch corresponded to watch. 17 On the east there were six each day, on the north four each day, on the south four each day, as well as two and two at the storehouse: and for the parbars on the west there were four at the road and two at the parbar. 19 These were the divisions of the gatekeepers among the Ko'rahites and the sons of Merar'i.

20 And of the Levites, Ahijah had charge of the treasuries of the house of God and the treasuries of the dedicated gifts. 21 The sons of Ladan, the sons of the Gershonites belonging to Ladan, the heads of the fathers' houses belonging to Ladan the Gershonite: Jehi'eli. 22 The sons of Jehi'eli, Zetham and Joel his brother, were in charge of the treasuries of the house of the Lord. 23 Of the Amramites, the Iz'harites, the He'bronites, and the Uz'zielites—24 and She'buel the son of Gershom, son of Moses, was chief officer in charge of the treasuries. 25 His brethren: from Eliezer were his son Rehobiah, and the commanders of thousands and hundreds, and their officers who served the king in all matters concerning the divisions that came and went, month after month throughout the year, each division numbering twenty-four thousand:

  15 The twelfth captain for the twelfth month was Heldai the Netophathite, of Othniel: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.
  16 Furthermore over the tribes of Israel: the ruler of the Reubenites was Eliezer the son of Zichri: of the Simeonites, Shephatiah the son of Maachah:
  17 Of the Levites, Hashabiah the son of Kemuel: of the Aaronites, Zadok:
  18 Of Judah, Elihu, one of the brethren of David: of Issachar, Omri the son of Michael:
  19 Of Zebulun, Ishmaiah the son of Obadiah: of Naphtali, Jerimoth the son of Azriel:

  21 Of the half tribe of Manasseh in Gilead, Iddo the son of Zechariah: of Benjamin, Jaasiel the son of Abner:
  22 Of Dan, Azarel the son of Jeroham. These were the princes of the tribes of Israel.
  23 But David took not the number of them from twenty years old and under: because the Lord had said he would increase Israel like to the stars of the heavens.
  24 Joab the son of Zeruiah began to number, but he finished not, because there fell wrath for it against Israel; neither was the number put in the account of the Chronicles of king David.

23-24. Here is a reviser anxious to say that although David sinned in taking a census, he was scrupulous to comply with the priestly regulation (Num. 1:3) which excluded enumeration of males under twenty years old.

25-31. Possibly an old record underlies; but that precisely twelve officials, guarding David's proprietary rights, are named, is suspiciously like the Chronicler.

Appropriations which we may thus make from such sources are not spoliation and can properly be dedicated to the service of the house of God.

27:25-31. Town and Country.—The Hebrews did not paint pictures on canvas, or attempt to convey in words elaborate descriptions of natural scenery. But they had the eye of the artist none the less, and were intensely sensitive to nature in its manifold relations to human life. Their swift, pictorial language aided their gifts (cf. Pss. 65:9-13; 104). Living in cities may narrow one's interest in the richness and marvel of nature, until the townsman has eyes and thoughts only for busy streets. When that happens, there is great impoverishment of spirit—perhaps even to an irreligious extent, for "the earth is the Loro's, and the fulness thereof" (Ps. 24:1). "I remember," wrote H. V. Morton, "years ago meeting in the hop-fields of Kent, near Faversham, a slum-bred boy; and he was frightened of the stars! At home, among the street-lamps of Whitechapel, however, he was, I have no doubt, the leader of some Arab gang."

An old couple in London were sent to the country for a few days. They went on Friday but returned on Saturday evening to their back-street home. The reason, as Dad ex-

The whole Old Testament literature is rich in small fragments of the most delicate observation of nature embodied in a sentence, sometimes in a word; but these fragments are strung upon a thread of feeling instead of being set forth by artistic composition and grouping of parts. A typical example is the first chapter of the prophecy of Joel. . . . Each little picture, suggested rather than drawn, is in the most exquisite harmony with the feeling of the prophet. The fig tree stripped of its bark, standing white against the arid landscape; the sackcloth-girt bride wailing for her husband; the night watch of the supplicating priests; the empty and ruinous garners; the perplexed rush of the herds maddened with heat and thirst; or the unconscious supplication in which they raise their heads to heaven with piteous lowing, are indicated with a concrete pregnancy of language which the translator vainly strives to reproduce.3

And in these verses in Chronicles, if we pause to perceive it, how vividly the peaceful daily life of the Jewish countryside unfolds.

28-29. The Final Scene.—These chapters depict how the ideal David completed his lifework. He must sum up his endeavors in one final 31 And over the flocks was Jariz the Hagerite. All these were the rulers of the substance which was king David's.

32 Also Jonathan David's uncle was a counselor, a wise man, and a scribe: and Jehiel the son of Hachmoni was with the king's sons:

33 And Ahithophel was the king's counselor: and Hushai the Archite was the king's companion:

34 And after Ahithophel was Jehoiada the son of Beniaiah, and Abiathar: and the general of the king's army was Joab.

28 And David assembled all the princes of Israel, the princes of the tribes, and the captains of the companies that ministered to the king by course, and the captains over the thousands, and captains over the hundreds, and the stewards over all the substance and possession of the king, and of his sons, with the officers, and with the mighty men, and with all the valiant men, unto Jerusalem.

2 Then David the king stood up upon his feet, and said, Hear me, my brethren, and my people: As for me, I had in mine heart to build a house of rest for the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and for the footstool of our God, and had made ready for the building:

3 But God said unto me, Thou shalt not build a house for my name, because thou hast been a man of war, and hast shed blood.

M. DAVID'S FAREWELL (28:1-29:30)

In conclusion the Chronicler was free to reason what the last words of David should have been—David, obedient to prophets, a king who had done all in his power to provide beforehand for the erection of the temple and the right ordering of the worship there to be offered.

28:1-8. First, David exHORTs the nation's leaders.

speech to the princes and commanders of the nation, to Solomon his heir, and to the people.

So ought a perfect reign to end. Here David dies, leaving his country peaceful, powerful, and contented. . . . He dies believing that his people's true prosperity is in its zeal for the worship of God; and for that end, with the popular approval, he has made marvellous preparation. And lastly he dies, in no vain-glory, but conscious of the littleness of man and the majesty of God, and in humble dependence on the continuance of divine Grace.®

The much more realistic record in Samuel shows how somber and tragic were the circumstances at the close of David's reign, chiefly as the result of his own faults. But does not the Chronicler's

4 Howbeit the Lord God of Israel chose me before all the house of my father to be king over Israel for ever: for he hath chosen Judah to be the ruler; and of the house of Judah, the house of my father: and among the sons of my father he liked me to make me king over all Israel:

5 And of all my sons, (for the Lord hath given me many sons,) he hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the Lord over Israel.

6 And he said unto me, Solomon thy son, he shall build my house and my courts: for I have chosen him to be my son, and I will be his father.

7 Moreover I will establish his kingdom for ever, if he be constant to do my commandments and my judgments, as at this day.

8 Now therefore, in the sight of all Israel the congregation of the Lord, and in the audience of our God, keep and seek for all the commandments of the Lord your God: that ye may possess this good land, and leave it for an inheritance for your children after you for ever.

5. Why is Solomon to reign? Not because he is his father's favorite, but because God has providentially so ordained. Contrast this idyllic pronouncement with the horrible facts in I Kings 1:1–2:46 (unmentioned by the Chronicler) concerning the palace intrigues, the murderous violence, through which Solomon secured to himself the throne. Here we are made conscious only of David's profound faith in God and serene trust in a loyal and united people.

idealizing suggest a yet deeper truth concerning the essential David, the man who could so wholeheartedly sorrow about his rebel son, the king who in so many ways and through so many years had been faithful to his high responsibility? Despite his faults he had the right to trust:

All I could never be,
All, men ignored in me,
This, I was worth to God, whose wheel the pitcher shaped.²

28:8. Vital Religion.—Anyone who has even a slight acquaintance with the history of the Jews throughout the Christian Era cannot fail to be amazed by their racial persistence and their intellectual achievements, not least in the sciences and philosophy.⁴ Outwardly their religion may seem to have shown itself in rigid observance of the precepts of their ancient law. But in fact their theological thought has been a living growth century by century, constructively seeking to relate past truth to developing knowledge. What is the secret of their extraordinary vitality, not only in religion but in other spheres as well? It is indicated in the twofold principle which David is said in this verse to have declared to his people as the condition whereby you may possess this good land, and leave it for an inheritance to your children after you for ever: they ought both to observe and seek out all the commandments of the Lord. The principle runs far back in Hebrew history to the tradition that Moses had told the tribesmen not only to keep the statutes declared, but also to await and obey the guidance of the living God who would speak his word to future generations by prophets like himself. We see it in the great prophets seeking and finding fresh and fuller truth in relation to the circumstances of their age. When the Hebrew kingdoms perished noth-
And thou, Solomon my son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind: for the Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts: if thou seek him, he will be found of thee: but if thou forsake him, he will cast thee off for ever.

Take heed now: for the Lord hath chosen thee to build a house for the sanctuary: be strong, and do it.

Then David gave to Solomon his son the pattern of the porch, and of the houses thereof, and of the treasuries thereof, and of the upper chambers thereof, and of the inner parlors thereof, and of the place of the mercy seat,

And the pattern of all that he had by the Spirit, of the courts of the house of the Lord, and of all the chambers round about, of the treasuries of the house of God, and of the treasuries of the dedicated things:

Also for the courses of the priests and the Levites, and for all the work of the service of the house of the Lord, and for all the vessels of service in the house of the Lord.

He gave of gold by weight for things of gold, for all instruments of all manner of service; silver also for all instruments of silver by weight, for all instruments of every kind of service:

Even the weight for the candlesticks of gold, and for their lamps of gold, by weight for every candlestick, and for the lamps thereof: and for the candlesticks of silver by weight, both for the candlestick, and also for the lamps thereof, according to the use of every candlestick.

And you, Solomon my son, know the God of your father, and serve him with a whole heart and with a willing mind: for the Lord searches all hearts, and understands every plan and thought. If you seek him, he will be found by you; but if you forsake him, he will cast you off for ever.

Take heed now, for the Lord has chosen you to build a house for the sanctuary; be strong, and do it.”

Then David gave Solomon his son the plan of the vestibule of the temple, and of its houses, its treasuries, its upper rooms, and its inner chambers, and of the room for the mercy seat;

And the plan of all that he had in mind for the courts of the house of the Lord, all the surrounding chambers, the treasuries of the house of God, and the treasuries for dedicated gifts;

For the divisions of the priests and of the Levites, and all the work of the service in the house of the Lord; for all the vessels for the service in the house of the Lord,

The weight of gold for all golden vessels for each service, the weight of silver vessels for each service,

The weight of the golden lampstands and their lamps, the weight of gold for each lampstand and its lamps, the weight of silver for a lampstand and its lamps, according to the use of each lampstand in the ing that really mattered was lost. On the contrary, immense strength was available for the Jews through acceptance of the vitalizing wisdom of the prophetic conception of God. Rightly understood, biblical theology is not static but dynamic belief. So likewise should it be with Christian theology. There is a fossilized form of piety which is satisfied to look at the past, endeavoring merely to keep the known commandments, and dreading or deeming unnecessary present efforts to seek out what God the Lord will say today. In the long run that attitude of mind is fatal.

9-21. A Father’s Last Charge.—The aged king next speaks to Solomon concerning the qualities he must have if he is to be sustained in his future duty; then he encourages him (vs. 20) to believe that God will not withhold unfailing aid. In vs. 11-19 he commits to Solomon all that he had so sedulously prepared for the
And by weight he gave gold for the tables of showbread, for every table; and likewise silver for the tables of silver:

Also pure gold for the fleshhooks, and the bowls, and the cups: and for the golden basins he gave gold by weight for every basin; and likewise silver by weight for every basin of silver:

And for the altar of incense refined gold by weight; and gold for the pattern of the chariot of the cherubim, that spread out their wings, and covered the ark of the covenant of the Lord.

All this, said David, the Lord made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern.

And David said to Solomon his son, Be strong and of good courage, and do it: fear not, nor be dismayed, for the Lord God, even my God, will be with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the house of the Lord.

And, behold, the courses of the priests and the Levites, even they shall be with thee for all the service of the house of God: and there shall be with thee for all manner of workmanship every willing skilful man, for any manner of service: also the princes and all the people will be wholly at thy commandment.

Furthermore David the king said unto all the congregation, Solomon my son, whom alone God hath chosen, is yet service, 16 the weight of gold for each table for the showbread, the silver for the silver tables, 17 and pure gold for the forks, the basins, and the cups: for the golden bowls and the weight of each: for the silver bowls and the weight of each; 18 for the altar of incense made of refined gold, and its weight; also his plan for the golden chariot of the cherubim that spread their wings and covered the ark of the covenant of the Lord. 19 All this he made clear by the writing from the hand of the Lord concerning it, all the work to be done according to the plan.

Then David said to Solomon his son, “Be strong and of good courage, and do it. Fear not, be not dismayed; for the Lord God, even my God, is with you. He will not fail you or forsake you, until all the work for the service of the house of the Lord is finished. 21 And behold the divisions of the priests and the Levites for all the service of the house of God; and with you in all the work will be every willing man who has skill for any kind of service: also the officers and all the people will be wholly at your command.”

19. Reviser’s caution, hinting that David in reality had relied not on personal inspiration, but on written authority—the Mosaic legislation.

20. A summarizing sentence at the end of this verse has dropped out of the M.T. and is preserved in the LXX.

21. From the reviser again, dragging in mention of the priests. How his words enfeeble David’s peroration!

29:1-21. David’s appeal and farewell to the people. The conception and construction future temple—its plan; its furnishings. As the Chronicler envisaged the scene he was enrapured. Here his verses are literature—the gleam of gold and silver, the miracle of craftsman’s skill shine in them. For the moment a pedestrian writer has become a poet.

Different thoughts may occur to our mind. Poor David! In time past he had hoped to do all this for Absalom, his best-beloved son. What loving expectation he had had that Absalom would be his heir! But Absalom was dead, leaving behind him a name for reckless courage and ruthless plotting to overthrow his father. Most bitter of all, David knew that by his own negligence in royal duty he had tempted Absalom to seize the kingship. David had to transfer his hopes. He had to do his best for the second best—for Solomon, child of his guilty passion for Bathsheba. Poor David!

29:1. The King’s Last Will.—Finally David speaks to his people; and he had won the right to do so. Forbidden in his desire to build the house of the Lord, he had not in chagrin lavished his wealth on building for himself a splenyoung and tender, and the work is great: for the palace is not for man, but for the Lord God.

2 Now I have prepared with all my might for the house of my God the gold for things to be made of gold, and the silver for things of silver, and the brass for things of brass, the iron for things of iron, and wood for things of wood: onyx stones, and stones to be set, glistening stones, and of divers colors, and all manner of precious stones, and marble stones in abundance.

3 Moreover, because I have set my affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house,

4 Even three thousand talents of gold, of the gold of Ophir, and seven thousand talents of refined silver, to overlay the walls of the houses withal:

5 The gold for things of gold, and the silver for things of silver, and for all manner of work to be made by the hands of artificers. And who then is willing to consecrate his work this day unto the Lord?

6 ¶ Then the chief of the fathers and princes of the tribes of Israel, and the captains of thousands and of hundreds, with the rulers of the king's work, offered willingly,

7 And gave, for the service of the house of God, of gold five thousand talents and ten alone God has chosen, is young and inexperienced, and the work is great; for the palace will not be for man but for the Lord God. 2 So I have provided for the house of my God, so far as I was able, the gold for the things of gold, the silver for the things of silver, and the bronze for the things of bronze, the iron for the things of iron, and wood for the things of wood, besides great quantities of onyx and stones for setting, antimony, colored stones, all sorts of precious stones, and marble. 3 Moreover, in addition to all that I have provided for the holy house, I have a treasure of my own of gold and silver, and because of my devotion to the house of my God I give it to the house of my God: 4 three thousand talents of gold, of the gold of Ophir, and seven thousand talents of refined silver, for overlaying the walls of the house, 5 and for all the work to be done by craftsmen, gold for the things of gold and silver for the things of silver. Who then will offer willingly, consecrating himself today to the Lord?

6 Then the heads of fathers' houses made their freewill offerings, as did also the leaders of the tribes, the commanders of thousands and of hundreds, and the officers over the king's work. 7 They gave for the service of the house of God, of gold five thousand talents and ten of the ideal speech is admirable: it culminates in David's confidence in all his subjects, their magnificent response, and his benediction.

1b. For the palace will not be for man but for the Lord God: One must conclude that in some extraordinary way palace has been substituted for "house" or "temple," which was in the original text. It is difficult to suppose that at the climax of his speech about the temple-to-be David suddenly interjected a plea to his hearers to be diligent in seeing to it that Solomon's palace would be erected on a divinely worthy scale. The Hebrew word bārāh, rendered palace, is known only in postexilic Hebrew; in Neh. 2:10 it occurs in reference to a building overlooking the temple which later became the fortress-tower of Antonia. Perhaps for an obscure reason an owner of a MS chanced to jot down this word in its margin, and later it was inserted in the text (here and in vs. 19) in place of "house" or "temple."

2-5. David invites all to make a freewill offering, and tells them that apart from what he has provided from the national revenue account (22:14), he himself heads the thousand drams, and of silver ten thousand talents, and of brass eighteen thousand talents, and one hundred thousand talents of iron.

8 And they with whom precious stones were found gave them to the treasure of the house of the Lord, by the hand of Jehiel the Gershonite.

9 Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly, because with perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord: and David the king also rejoiced with great joy.

10 ¶ Wherefore David blessed the Lord before all the congregation: and David said, Blessed be thou, Lord God of Israel our father, for ever and ever.

11 Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine: thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as head above all.

12 Both riches and honor come of thee, and thou reignest over all; and in thine hand is power and might; and in thine hand it is to make great, and to give strength unto all.

13 Now therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name.

14 But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? for all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee.

15 For we are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding.

submissions with his own contribution of approximately $60,000,000. Could one ask for a finer example to be set? Loyally and liberally the people are said to have responded (vs. 6-9).

10-30. Finally the thankful king—his lifework completed at this exalted moment—in noble words (vss. 11-19) pronounces the divine benediction. In turn the people give thanks to God, offer a multitude of sacrifices, and rejoice together before the Lord on that day with great gladness. There aesthetically the Chronicler should have ended his 10-19. Te Deum.—The king could now give thanks to God and bring his speech to its close. If victorious David had been like only too many prosperous persons who call themselves "self-made," how boastful his last words might have been. But David ended by expressing humble and reverent gratitude to the majesty of God.

14. We Give What We Have Received.—Mark the reiterated insistence (vss. 11, 12, 16) on the thought expressed by James: "Every good endowment and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights with whom there is no variation or shadow due to change" (Jas. 1:17). We ought indeed so to conceive of God, even as Christ in his parable thought of the Father as saying, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine" (Luke 15:31). We should feel that not only 16 O Lord our God, all this store that we have prepared to build thee a house for thine holy name cometh of thine hand, and is all thine own.

17 I know also, my God, that thou triest the heart, and hast pleasure in uprightness. As for me, in the uprightness of mine heart I have willingly offered all these things: and now have I seen with joy thy people, which are present here, to offer willingly unto thee.

18 O Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, our fathers, keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and prepare their heart unto thee:

19 And give unto Solomon my son a perfect heart, to keep thy commandments, thy testimonies, and thy statutes, and to do all these things, and to build the palace, for the which I have made provision.

20 ¶ And David said to all the congregation, Now bless the Lord your God. And all the congregation blessed the Lord God of their fathers, and bowed down their heads, and worshipped the Lord, and the king.

21 And they sacrificed sacrifices unto the Lord, and offered burnt offerings unto the Lord, on the morrow after that day, even a thousand bullocks, a thousand rams, and a thousand lambs, with their drink offerings, and sacrifices in abundance for all Israel:

22 And did eat and drink before the Lord on that day with great gladness. And they made Solomon the son of David king the second time, and anointed him unto the Lord to be the chief governor, and Zadok to be priest.

picture of the ideal David; and there in all probability he did end—apart from a formal annalistic conclusion which is seen in vs. 28 (note its typical stress on prophetic sources) and in vss. 29-30. Of the intervening vss. 22b-28, vs. 22b may be ascribed to a reviser—note its supercautious the second time, as if 25:1 had denoted a first, formal intimation our material possessions but each good and gracious faculty of mind and heart is God-given, and ought to be dedicated to his service. Thus the apostles felt concerning the new life which had come to them through Christ, "Of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace" (John 1:16). So Christ felt in his own communion with God, "All mine are thine, and thine are mine" (John 17:10). How searching are these words of Paul, "You are not your own; you were bought with a price" (I Cor. 6:19, 20).

20. Amen and Amen.—David asked for the people's response, and they gave it according to his hope: And all the congregation blessed the Lord God of their fathers, and bowed down their heads, and worshipped the Lord, and the king.
23 Then Solomon sat on the throne of the LORD as king instead of David his father, and prospered: and all Israel obeyed him.

24 And all the princes, and the mighty men, and all the sons likewise of king David, submitted themselves unto Solomon the king.

25 And the LORD magnified Solomon exceedingly in the sight of all Israel, and bestowed upon him such royal majesty as had not been on any king before him in Israel.

26 * Thus David the son of Jesse reigned over all Israel.

27 And the time that he reigned over Israel was forty years: seven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty and three years reigned he in Jerusalem.

28 And he died in a good old age, full of days, riches, and honor: and Solomon his son reigned in his stead.

29 Now the acts of David the king, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of Samuel the seer, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the seer, 30 With all his reign and his might, and the times that went over him, and over Israel, and over all the kingdoms of the countries.

of Solomon's accession; note also its determination not to leave Zadok out of the picture. Vs. 27 cannot conceivably have been penned by the Chronicler; for ever so carefully he had ruled out allusions to David's initial seven-year reign (of sorts) at Hebron preceding David's kingship over all the Hebrews. Someone put it in to correspond with I Kings 2:11. But the remaining four verses are much more interesting; they concern the commencement of Solomon's reign and (in the order of vss. 26, 23-25) may constitute the Chronicler's original introduction to the narrative concerning King Solomon. II Chr. 1:1-6 is another introduction to Solomon's reign supplied by revisers.
II CHRONICLES

TEXT, EXEGESIS, AND EXPOSITION

1 And Solomon the son of David was strengthened in his kingdom, and the Lord his God was with him, and magnified him exceedingly.

2 Then Solomon spake unto all Israel, to the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and to the judges, and to every governor in all Israel, the chief of the fathers.

3 So Solomon, and all the congregation with him, went to the high place that was at Gibeon; for there was the tabernacle of the congregation of God, which Moses the servant of the Lord had made in the wilderness.

III. THE REIGN OF SOLOMON (1:1–9:31)

Solomon built and equipped the temple in truly “magnifical” style (cf. I Chr. 22:5 ERV), for his kingdom was strong, his wealth immense. The road was open for the Chronicler to describe an ideal Solomon by ignoring the dark aspects of his reign, which the narrative in Kings relates, and by expatiating on Solomonic glories. To begin, therefore, the Chronicler makes no mention whatever of the material now preserved in I Kings 1–2.

A. SOLOMON’S WISDOM (1:1–17)

1:1-6. A reviser probably substituted these verses for the Chronicler’s introductory words concerning Solomon, which he transferred to I Chr. 29:23–26. It was essential from increased, and mobile garrisons were established at strategic places in his realm. Commercially he showed genius. Control of the trade routes from harbors at the Gulf of Aqabah on the Red Sea through Edom and Canaan to the great ports of Phoenicia enabled him to tax the transit of merchandise and to become the equivalent of a multimillionaire. It is true that he became recklessly extravagant, even for his resources; but he cannot be numbered among the many sons of prosperous fathers who have wasted their inheritance in riotous living. Solomon loved grandeur: the riches of his palace and temple, the number of his wives and concubines, were astonishing, even to the eyes of the queen of Sheba (9:1–9). But in the eyes of Jesus the splendor of a single flower surpassed that of

442
4 But the ark of God had David brought up from Kirjath-jearim to the place which David had prepared for it: for he had pitched a tent for it at Jerusalem.

5 Moreover the brazen altar, that Bezalel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, had made, he put before the tabernacle of the Lord: and Solomon and the congregation sought unto it.

6 And Solomon went up thither to the brazen altar before the Lord, which was at the tabernacle of the congregation, and offered a thousand burnt offerings upon it.

7 ¶ In that night did God appear unto Solomon, and said unto him, Ask what I shall give thee.

8 And Solomon said unto God, Thou hast showed great mercy unto David my father, and hast made me to reign in his stead.

9 Now, O Lord God, let thy promise unto David my father be established: for thou hast made me king over a people like the dust of the earth in multitude.

10 Give me now wisdom and knowledge, that I may go out and come in before this people: for who can judge this thy people, that is so great?

The reviser's later standpoint (see Exeg. on I Chr. 16:37-43) to assert that Solomon's first action had been to go to Gibeon—where, as he supposed, the tabernacle was stationed—and to offer there a sacrifice on the bronze altar (see also Exeg. on 5:1-7:10).

7-13. Perhaps this story of Solomon's dream was omitted by the Chronicler and inserted by a reviser to conform with I Kings 3:5-15. Note that vs. 14 would link smoothly onto I Chr. 29:23-26, and on the other hand, that the final vs. 13 of the dream-narrative Solomon in all his glory. If we look to the end of Solomon's reign we see a tyrant hated and feared by subjects ready to revolt; and the seeming strength of his kingdom was ready to fall to pieces. David was able to leave to Solomon a considerable fortune. He wanted to bequeath his own virtues to his son. Those Solomon was too weak in character to inherit. He did not become a ruler carrying high responsibility in order to serve his fellow men. Unlike David, he could not see and acknowledge his sins, and be sorry. Dollars do not fully indicate what children may have inherited or failed to inherit from parents.

Unless material things truly sum up all that matters in human life, Solomon was not great. The reason for his power and prosperity was, according to the Chronicler, that the Lord his God was with him. It is an oversimple assertion to which in all the circumstances we should demur. But the Chronicler thought about Solomon from one angle, a consideration which seemed to him paramount: David's son magnificently fulfilled the sacred trust, laid upon him by David, to build the temple.

7-12. Solomon's Petition.—In these famous words we read not a verbatim report, but the thoughts of good men in later times setting down what they believed appropriate. Did Solomon in actuality desire and pray to be a good as well as a strong king? We may think it probable that he began well. Unhappily his character deteriorated.

The wisdom and knowledge which he is said to have asked from God had in Hebrew usage a wider and deeper significance than intellectual learning; it meant sagacity and prudence in the affairs of life, arising from moral integrity (cf. the Christian conception of true wisdom in Jas. 3:17). Solomon was shrewd (I Kings 3:16-28).
And God said to Solomon, Because this was in thine heart, and thou hast not asked riches, wealth, or honor, nor the life of thine enemies, neither yet hast asked long life: but hast asked wisdom and knowledge for thyself, that thou mayest judge my people, over whom I have made thee king:

Wisdom and knowledge is granted unto thee: and I will give thee riches, and wealth, and honor, such as none of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there any after thee have the like.

Then Solomon came from his journey to the high place that was at Gibeon to Jerusalem, from before the tabernacle of the congregation, and reigned over Israel.

And Solomon gathered chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, which he placed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

And the king made silver and gold at Jerusalem as plenteous as stones, and cedar trees made he as the sycamore trees that are in the vale for abundance.

And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

And they fetched up, and brought forth out of Egypt a chariot for six hundred shekels of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty: and so brought they out horses for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, by their means.

It is certain that he took pleasure, and was himself masterly, in the art of uttering sagacious thoughts in pithy, axiomatic words: "He spake three thousand proverbs" (I Kings 4:32). Such was his fame in this respect that when collections were eventually made of Hebrew wise sayings, the books of Proverbs (1:1; 25:1) and Ecclesiastes were ascribed to him; note also the beautiful work in the apocryphal writings called The Wisdom of Solomon (ca. 50 B.C. or later). But was Solomon really wise? (See Expos. on vs. 1.)

God's Response.—Because the king had wisely asked for wisdom, therefore wisdom the more was granted him. What men aim at they are at least much more likely to attain if they are ardent and persistent in their desire (cf. Luke 11:5-13). It is said further that because Solomon prayed for wisdom, God promised him also riches, possessions, and honor. What should we make of that? Concerning anxieties for food and clothing, Jesus said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matt. 6:33). Frequently it happens that the virtues inherent in a truly religious spirit conduce to health, happiness, and prosperity; but not invariably so. Jesus put first the will of God, 2 And Solomon determined to build a house for the name of the LORD, and a house for his kingdom.

2 And Solomon told out threescore and ten thousand men to bear burdens, and fourscore thousand to hew in the mountain, and three thousand and six hundred to oversee them.

3 And Solomon sent to Huram the king of Tyre, saying, As thou didst deal with David my father, and didst send him cedars to build him a house to dwell therein, even so deal with me.

4 Behold, I build a house to the name of the LORD my God, to dedicate it to him, and to burn before him sweet incense, and for the continual showbread, and for the burnt offerings morning and evening, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the solemn feasts of the LORD our God. This is an ordinance for ever to Israel.

5 And the house which I build is great: for great is our God above all gods.

6 But who is able to build him a house, seeing the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain him? who am I then, that I should build him a house, save only to burn sacrifice before him?

B. BUILDING OF THE TEMPLE (2:1–4:22)

2:4. To dedicate . . . for ever to Israel: This enumeration of the ritual purposes of the temple looks like a heavy-handed addition, and the qualifying clause in vs. 6b—save only to burn sacrifice before him—transparently so.

but he experienced hunger, hardship, disappointments, and an early, excruciating death. His counsel was addressed to “men in the plural.” Then how everlastingly true it is; for if communities and nations had the right spirit, and there could be an end of greed, mistrust, and war, well-nigh unimaginable benefit for mankind could be attained in this age of scientific resources. If humanity were to do the will of God as Christ conceived it, welfare would increase “far more abundantly than all that we ask or think” (Eph. 3:20).

2:6. An Insoluble Problem in Architecture.—
To erect a building commensurate with the glory of God is beyond human contriving; cf. the same acknowledgment in Isa. 66:1-2, but note how far the prophetical insight excels that of Solomon, in that it continues, “For all these things hath mine hand made, and so all these things came to be, saith the LORD: but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word” (ERV). Realization that God is transcendent is basic wisdom. “It is the genius and the task of prophetic religion to insist on the organic relation between historic human existence and that which is both the ground and the fulfillment of this existence, the transcendent.” Nevertheless, right instinct prompts the utmost endeavor, and when the will to build a magnificent place of worship can command gigantic resources, the results are amazing, even if the potentates giving the order may have had mixed motives touching their own renown. Witness the great mosques in Constantinople, the sublime cathedrals in Europe, wherein majesty and mystery blend. This is apparent even to the artistically sensitive; how much more to the believer. But many a lesser church offers to the soul a marvel of strength and quietude, a spirit-

7 Send me now therefore a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in iron, and in purple, and crimson, and blue, and that can skill to grave with the cunning men that are with me in Judah and in Jerusalem, whom David my father did provide.

8 Send me also cedar trees, fir trees, and algum trees, out of Lebanon: for I know that thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon: and, behold, my servants shall be with thy servants, 9 Even to prepare me timber in abundance: for the house which I am about to build shall be wonderful great.

10 And, behold, I will give to thy servants, the hewers that cut timber, twenty thousand measures of beaten wheat, and twenty thousand measures of barley, and twenty thousand baths of wine, and twenty thousand baths of oil.

11 ¶ Then Huram the king of Tyre answered in writing, which he sent to Solomon, Because the Lord hath loved his people, he hath made thee king over them.

12 Huram said moreover, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, that made heaven and earth, who hath given to David the king a wise son, endued with prudence and understanding, that might build a house for the Lord, and a house for his kingdom.

7-8. Help From Tyre.—Solomon had cash in abundance for his desired temple, but he lacked architects, craftsmen, and cedars of Lebanon. Therefore he called in the help of the king of Tyre, worshiper of the Phoenician deities, who responded generously to the request. Wherefore in due course Jerusalem's first temple formed a most impressive instance of a great sanctuary patterned after the fashion normal for Semitic places of worship, the one exceptional feature being that in its innermost holy building there was no image of the deity but as a place to burn incense before him? 7 So now send me a man skilled to work in gold, silver, bronze, and iron, and in purple, crimson, and blue fabrics, trained also in engraving, to be with the skilled workers who are with me in Judah and Jerusalem, whom David my father provided. 8 Send me also cedar, cypress, and algum timber from Lebanon, for I know that your servants know how to cut timber in Lebanon. And my servants will be with your servants, 9 to prepare timber for me in abundance, for the house I am to build will be great and wonderful. 10 I will give for your servants, the hewers who cut timber, twenty thousand cords of crushed wheat, twenty thousand cords of barley, twenty thousand baths of wine, and twenty thousand baths of oil."

11 Then Huram the king of Tyre answered in a letter which he sent to Solomon, "Because the Lord loves his people he has made you king over them." 12 Huram also said, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who made heaven and earth, who has given King David a wise son, endued with discretion and understanding, who will build a temple for the Lord, and a royal palace for himself.

The alignment conformed with worship appropriate to adoration of the sun; the furnishings were eloquent of "heathen" sacred symbols (cf. II Kings 21:5; 23:11). In short, the impression Solomon's temple was likely to make on Hebrew worshipers was not that their God was the only God and utterly unlike the deities of their neighbors. All this, however, might not have mattered so much if what went on in the temple during the monarchic centuries had been clean rites, very different from the customs of the other Semitic peoples. But the cult practiced in the Solomonic temple was often abominably the reverse of pure.

We are in no danger of building Christian churches in the style and with the adornments of heathen temples. But it is not altogether easy to keep out of our buildings some quite heathenish moods and unchristian ideas of God.

13 And now I have sent a cunning man, endued with understanding, of Huram my father's.

14 The son of a woman of the daughters of Dan, and his father was a man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and in silver, in brass, in iron, in stone, and in timber, in purple, in blue, and in fine linen, and in crimson; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him, with thy cunning men, and with the cunning men of my lord David thy father.

15 Now therefore the wheat, and the barley, the oil, and the wine, which my lord hath spoken of, let him send unto his servants:

16 And we will cut wood out of Lebanon, as much as thou shalt need: and we will bring it to thee in floats by sea to Joppa; and thou shalt carry it up to Jerusalem.

17 ¶ And Solomon numbered all the strangers that were in the land of Israel, after the numbering wherewith David his father had numbered them; and they were found a hundred and fifty thousand and three thousand and six hundred.

18 And he set threescore and ten thousand of them to be bearers of burdens, and fourscore thousand to be hewers in the mountain, and three thousand and six hundred overseers to set the people awork.

17. The laborers were aliens, not Hebrew subjects, says the Chronicler, glossing over 1 Kings 5:13.

13. Craftsmanship.—The skilled artisan is very nearly squeezed out in our hurried, price-ridden times. We become accustomed to see and to use mass-produced articles. But however well turned out for their purpose, they lack the excellence and interest which the skill and patience of the individual craftsman can impart. In religion there is great loss when the beliefs which we say we hold are accepted in mass-produced form. It makes a world of difference if we apply our own individuality; then beliefs become (so to say) “hand-made,” the work of our spirit, our very own (cf. Phil. 2:12-13).

17-18. Forced Labor.—Presumably the craftsmen obtained from Huram king of Tyre were very well paid by Solomon, and came willingly to Jerusalem. But the lumbermen whom Huram set to work in the forests of Lebanon, how did they fare? Assuredly Huram exacted from Solomon a price for their labor, but did the money actually pass to them in wages? Vs. 10 notes decorously that Solomon sent a colossal supply of food for their benefit. But significantly the statement is not found in the parallel passage in II Kings. And did the food reach the men? The art of “squeeze” is not a merely modern device.³ Tyrants like Huram or the kings of ancient Egypt (cf. Exod. 1:11-14) conscripted laborers on bare subsistence or slavery terms.

I Kings 5:18-15 relates that Solomon “raised a levy out of all Israel,” to the number of more than 150,000, to toil at his buildings. This the Chronicler interestingly alters by assuring us that no Hebrews were engaged: the 150,000 were aliens in the land, all the aliens whom the king

Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord at Jerusalem in mount Moriah, where the Lord appeared unto David his father, in the place that David had prepared in the threshingfloor of Ornan the Jebusite.

And he began to build in the second day of the second month, in the fourth year of his reign.

Now these are the things wherein Solomon was instructed for the building of the house of God. The length by cubits after the first measure was three score cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits.

And the porch that was in the front of the house, the length of it was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the height was a hundred and twenty: and he overlaid it within with pure gold.

And the greater house he ceiling with fir tree, which he overlaid with fine gold, and set thereon palm trees and chains.

And he garnished the house with precious stones for beauty: and the gold was gold of Parvaim.

3:1. Only in this verse is Zion said to be identical with Mount Moriah (Gen. 22:2).

4a. A hundred and twenty: Read "twenty." The extra hundred cubits probably is a reader's annotation; he knew that Herod's temple was a hundred cubits in height.

3 Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord in Jerusalem on Mount Moriah, where the Lord had appeared to David his father, at the place that David had appointed, on the threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite. He began to build in the second month of the fourth year of his reign. These are Solomon's measurements for building the house of God: the length, in cubits of the old standard, was sixty cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits.

The vestibule in front of the nave of the house was twenty cubits long, equal to the width of the house; and its height was a hundred and twenty cubits. He overlaid it on the inside with pure gold. The nave he lined with cypress, and covered it with fine gold, and made palms and chains on it.

He adorned the house with settings of precious stones. The gold was gold of Parvaim.

43. The Length and the Breadth.—Imagination is apt to conceive the temple itself as an immense building, but in fact its ground plan measured only about ninety by thirty feet. What was impressive, however, was the great sacred area surrounding it—the open-air courts of the temple—magnificently located in Jerusalem, as at this day: that, and Solomon's adjoining palace. The seer of Revelation in his vision of the heavenly Jerusalem saw that there was "no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it" (Rev. 21:22).

It is only too easy to allow our minds to equate the church with the faith itself, and then to worship ecclesiasticism more than Christ. The real glory, the spiritual reality, exists in the souls of those who want to serve the Lord and try to comprehend "what is the breadth and length and height and depth [of] the love of Christ which surpasses knowledge" (Eph. 3:18).

4. Pure Gold.—In this and the following chapter there is such insistence on the lavish use of gold for the adornment of the temple...
7 He overlaid also the house, the beams, the posts, and the walls thereof, and the doors thereof, with gold: and graved cherubim on the walls.

8 And he made the most holy house, the length whereof was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits: and he overlaid it with fine gold, amounting to six hundred talents.

9 And the weight of the nails was fifty shekels of gold. And he overlaid the upper chambers with gold.

10 And in the most holy house he made two cherubim of image work, and overlaid them with gold.

11 ¶ And the wings of the cherubim were twenty cubits long: one wing of the one cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing was likewise five cubits, reaching to the wing of the other cherub.

12 And one wing of the other cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing was five cubits also, joining to the wing of the other cherub.

13 The wings of these cherubim spread themselves forth twenty cubits: and they stood on their feet, and their faces were inward.

14 ¶ And he made the veil of blue, and purple, and crimson, and fine linen, and wrought cherubim thereon.

15 Also he made before the house two pillars thirty-five cubits high, and the chapiter that was on the top of each of them was five cubits.

8b. Not in Kings. Fifty talents per tribe. As to the impossibly vast value of the gold involved cf. Exeg. on I Chr. 29:2-5.

that our mental eyes are dazzled and astonished. The description may serve to remind us of an important fact, viz., the insistence in Hebrew teaching that men must not offer shoddy gifts to God—the first-fruits of the crops must be dedicated, the animals presented as sacrifices must be unblemished, the tithes must be given without deduction (cf. the rebuke in Mal. 1:14; 3:8-10). What do we erect on our profession of belief in God? Agreed that for us the foundation is Christ, and can be no other. But what do we build on that foundation? Ideas that are no better than "wood, hay, stubble" (I Cor. 3:12) or a temple of thoughts throughout expressive of the very mind of Christ? And wherewith do we adorn the basic structure of our faith? With the very qualities of Christ's spirit? Or with unworthy acts and occasional grudging attention? Who is there that does not need to beware of being mean toward God in many things?

8. Six Hundred Talents.—The sum represented fifty talents for each of the twelve tribes: not one of them was omitted. "I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude . . . of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne" (Rev. 7:9). During the past century the two greatest influences on human thought have been the expansion of the knowl-
16 And he made chains, as in the oracle, and put them on the heads of the pillars; and made a hundred pomegranates, and put them on the chains.

17 And he reared up the pillars before the temple, one on the right hand, and the other on the left: and called the name of that on the right hand Jachin, and the name of that on the left Boaz.

Moreover he made an altar of brass, twenty cubits the length thereof, and twenty cubits the breadth thereof, and ten cubits the height thereof.

2 And he made a molten sea, ten cubits from brim to brim, round in compass, and five cubits the height thereof: and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

3 And under it was the similitude of oxen, which did compass it round about: ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about. Two rows of oxen were cast, when it was cast.

4 It stood upon twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

5 And the thickness of it was a handbreadth, and the brim of it like the work of the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies; and it received and held three thousand baths.

6 He made also ten lavers, and put five on the right hand, and five on the left, to wash in them: such things as they offered for the burnt offering they washed in them; but the sea was for the priests to wash in.

7 And he made ten candlesticks of gold according to their form, and set them in the edge of Jesus Christ, and the spread of communism. Yet the importance of the former fact, even in its merely sociological effects, strangely escaped the notice of the editors of The Cambridge Modern History, for in its twelve massive volumes Christian missions are mentioned only once, and that in a footnote.

4:1-22. Without! Within!—The dazzling array of earthly treasure is here summed up. The Solomon of history built for his own glory, and temple, five on the right hand, and five on the left.

8 He made also ten tables, and placed them in the temple, five on the right side, and five on the left. And he made a hundred basins of gold.

9 Furthermore he made the court of the priests, and the great court, and doors for the court, and overlaid the doors of them with brass.

10 And he set the sea on the right side of the east end, over against the south.

11 And Huram made the pots, and the shovels, and the basins. And Huram finished the work that he was to make for king Solomon for the house of God;

12 To wit, the two pillars, and the pommels, and the chapiters which were on the top of the two pillars, and the two wreaths to cover the two pommels of the chapiters which were on the top of the pillars;

13 And four hundred pomegranates on the two wreaths; two rows of pomegranates on each wreath, to cover the two pommels of the chapiters which were upon the pillars.

14 He made also bases, and lavers made he upon the bases;

15 One sea, and twelve oxen under it.

16 The pots also, and the shovels, and the fleshhooks, and all their instruments, did Huram his father make to king Solomon for the house of the Lord, of bright brass.

17 In the plain of Jordan did the king cast them, in the clay ground between Succoth and Zeredathah.

18 Thus Solomon made all these vessels in great abundance: for the weight of the brass could not be found out.

19 ¶ And Solomon made all the vessels that were for the house of God, the golden altar also, and the tables whereon the showbread was set;

20 Moreover the candlesticks with their lamps, that they should burn after the manner before the oracle, of pure gold;

21 And the flowers, and the lamps, and the tongs, made he of gold, and that perfect gold; prescribed, and set them in the temple, five on the south side and five on the north.

8 He also made ten tables, and placed them in the temple, five on the south side and five on the north. And he made a hundred basins of gold. 9 He made the court of the priests, and the great court, and doors for the court, and overlaid their doors with bronze; 10 and he set the sea at the southeast corner of the house.

11 Huram also made the pots, the shovels, and the basins. So Huram finished the work that he did for King Solomon on the house of God: 12 the two pillars, the bowls, and the two capitals on the top of the pillars; and the two networks to cover the two bowls of the capitals that were on the top of the pillars; 13 and the four hundred pomegranates for the two networks, two rows of pomegranates for each network, to cover the two bowls of the capitals that were upon the pillars. 14 He made the stands also, and the lavers upon the stands, 15 and the one sea, and the twelve oxen underneath it. 16 The pots, the shovels, the forks, and all the equipment for these Huram-abi made of burnished bronze for King Solomon for the house of the Lord. 17 In the plain of the Jordan the king cast them, in the clay ground between Succoth and Zeredah. 18 Solomon made all these things in great quantities, so that the weight of the bronze was not ascertained.

19 So Solomon made all the things that were in the house of God: the golden altar, the tables for the bread of the Presence, 20 the lampstands and their lamps of pure gold to burn before the inner sanctuary, as prescribed; 21 the flowers, the lamps, and 22 And the snuffers, and the basins, and the spoons, and the censers, of pure gold: and the entrance of the house, the inner doors thereof for the most holy place, and the doors of the house of the temple, were of gold.

5 Thus all the work that Solomon made for the house of the Lord was finished: and Solomon brought in all the things that David his father had dedicated: and the silver, and the gold, and all the instruments, put he among the treasures of the house of God.

2 Then Solomon assembled the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, the chief of the fathers of the children of Israel, unto Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of the city of David, which is Zion.

3 Wherefore all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto the king in the feast which was in the seventh month.

4 And all the elders of Israel came; and the Levites took up the ark.

5 And they brought up the ark, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, these did the priests and the Levites bring up.

C. CONSECRATION OF THE TEMPLE (5:1–7:10)

Important intricacies are here apparent. The parallel passages in Kings contain some late additions, so we cannot tell exactly what the Chronicler had before him. He probably related, as the grand climax, that Solomon summoned the Levites—priests, musicians, bearers—and that they duly carried the ark into the temple. But such a narrative left the men of later times in a quandary. On their view of the situation Solomon ought also solemnly to have fetched the Mosaic tabernacle from Gibeon, though no one knows what he was to do with it on its arrival at Jerusalem. The legitimate altar at Gibeon he could not shift: they had to say that he made a new altar of brass for the temple, and to declare that it received divine approval by fire from heaven. In the Chronicler’s view the rightful altar already existed, being the altar built by David at Araunah’s threshing floor, on which the heavenly fire (see I Chr. 21:26; 22:1) had then fallen. Probably the Chronicler’s original description is found in 5:1-5a, 6; 6:1-12, 14-42; 7:1, 3-5, and the revisers’ additions in 5:5b, 7-14; 6:13; 7:2, 6-10.

5. The tent of meeting: By these words the revisers signified that the tabernacle was brought from Gibeon. In the tent: The Chronicler referred to the Davidic “tent of curtains” in Zion.

in his pride judged worth by wealth. He might have been wise, but he was foolish toward God. And the splendor of his temple tended only to debase the minds of the priests and people: all glorious without, within it became full of corruption and evil deeds (cf. Jer. 7:1-16). Solomon never came near understanding what God requires from us, as the great prophets understood the divine will.

5:1. Complete at Last.—The dazzling catalogue has reached conclusion: the temple stands complete. Solomon had given the people a 6 Also king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel that were assembled unto him before the ark, sacrificed sheep and oxen, which could not be told nor numbered for multitude.

7 And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place, to the oracle of the house, into the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubim:

8 For the cherubim spread forth their wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubim covered the ark and the staves thereof above.

9 And they drew out the staves of the ark, that the ends of the staves were seen from the ark before the oracle: but they were not seen without. And there it is unto this day.

10 There was nothing in the ark save the two tables which Moses put therein at Horeb, when the Lord made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of Egypt.

11 And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place: (for all the priests that were present were sanctified, and did not then wait by course:

and the Levites brought them up. 6 and King Solomon and all the congregation of Israel, who had assembled before him, were before the ark, sacrificing so many sheep and oxen that they could not be counted or numbered. 7 So the priests brought the ark of the covenant of the Lord to its place, in the inner sanctuary of the house, in the most holy place, underneath the wings of the cherubim. 8 For the cherubim spread out their wings over the place of the ark, so that the cherubim made a covering above the ark and its poles. 9 And the poles were so long that the ends of the poles were seen from the holy place before the inner sanctuary; but they could not be seen from outside; and they are there to this day. 10 There was nothing in the ark except the two tables which Moses put there at Horeb, where the Lord made a covenant with the people of Israel, when they came out of Egypt. 11 Now when the priests came out of the holy place (for all the priests who were present had sanctified themselves, without regard to superlative demonstration of religious generosity. It would be treason to ask whether he had really been building ad majorem gloriam Solomonis. Could and should all this treasure have been put to better use? Most of Solomon's subjects were existing in stringent poverty and housed in hovels. The king felt no vestige of concern about social welfare, and it never occurred to him that God does. There are, however, moments when precious things are rightly expended on spiritual purposes (see Matt. 26:6-13).

Men and women are prone to concentrate their energies and resources on the self and the circle of their immediate family, sometimes with set intention, often through lack of sympathetic attention to others. Christ challenged that attitude in the most drastic and searching terms (Matt. 10:37-39; 25:31-46; Luke 6:38).

7. The Real Treasure.—From this point the narrative improves in value. All the splendor of outward things had not made a temple which was the abode of the Spirit. But now there is solemnly placed in its innermost sanctuary Israel's ancient hallowed ark—felt to be the sign and token of God's being with them; and if the Ten Commandments were inscribed on the stones which Moses put therein, it did indeed contain the essence of Hebrew faith.

Very interesting, but subject of indeterminate discussion, is the history of the ark. The notices of its journeyings from Mount Horeb are exciting (cf. Num. 10:33-36; 14:44; Josh. 3:3-4; 6:6-11; I Sam. 3:3; 4:3-22; II Sam. 6). After it was placed in the temple the record falls silent. Possibly Shishak carried it off (I Kings 14:26), but it may have been in place in Jeremiah's day (Jer. 3:16) and destroyed when the Babylonians sacked Jerusalem in 586 B.C. It is as good as certain that the ark originally contained two stones taken from the Mount of Covenant. It is most unlikely that the Ten Commandments were written on them. After 586 B.C. the Jews, thanks to the great prophets, knew and revered
12 Also the Levites which were the singers, all of them of Asaph, of Heman, of Jeduthun, with their sons and their brethren, being arrayed in white linen, having cymbals and psalteries and harps, stood at the east end of the altar, and with them a hundred and twenty priests sounding with trumpets:

13 It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord: and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of music, and praised the Lord, saying, For he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: that then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the Lord;

14 So that the priests could not minister by reason of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of God.

6 Then said Solomon, The Lord hath said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.

6:1-42. The Chronicler transcribed Solomon's prayer from I Kings 8:22-50, but gave it a finer conclusion.

1-2. Then Solomon . . . ever: But read, in accordance with the LXX of I Kings 8:12,

Then Solomon said,

"The Lord has set the sun in the heavens,
but has said that he would dwell in thick darkness.
I have built thee an exalted house, a place for thee to dwell in for ever."

those commandments, and their faith in God was not dependent on the preservation of a wooden box and inscribed stones.

In the sanctuary of Christian belief the treasure is Jesus, and we cannot do without him. Arguments can be advanced for the validity of theism; but in the last resort Jesus is the only indestructible evidence that God is love.

13-14. Unison.—(Regarding the music, see Expos. on I Chr. 6:31; 15:16; and for correct translation of the Hebrew text see RSV.) Not until united voices were raised in thankful praise was the mystery of divine acceptance felt and an assurance of God's presence given: The house . . . was filled with a cloud; . . . for the glory of the Lord filled the house of God. Apathetic worshipers in church are like a wet blanket of fog, a dismal cloud amidst which the willing long for the clear shining of radiant thankfulness. The unmusical cannot participate in the rendering of hymns with good effect; but there are times of prayer when all can help or hinder. Worship is easily affected by spiritual "temperature." No religion faces the dark aspects of life so gravely as Christianity. But it has such an answer to give that it should excel all religions in joyousness. The early Christians startled their heathen neighbors in that respect. "As Hermas wrote in his Shepherd, The Holy Spirit was a glad spirit. . . . It befits Truth to laugh, because she is glad—to play with her rivals, because she is free from fear,' so said Tertullian. . . . And it was Jesus who was the secret of it."* "Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, Rejoice," urged Paul (Phil. 4:4). A Scottish evangelist rebuked a reticent, gloomy congregation: "If David," said he, "heard you singing the psalms like that, he would take them from you."

6:1-2. The Hidden God.—(See Exeg.) Whether the interesting rhythmic utterance was older than Solomon's time and quoted by him

2 But I have built a house of habitation for thee, and a place for thy dwelling for ever.

3 And the king turned his face, and blessed the whole congregation of Israel: and all the congregation of Israel stood.

4 And he said, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who hath with his hands fulfilled that which he spake with his mouth to my father David, saying,

5 Since the day that I brought forth my people out of the land of Egypt I chose no city among all the tribes of Israel to build a house in, that my name might be there: neither chose I any man to be a ruler over my people Israel:

6 But I have chosen Jerusalem, that my name might be there; and have chosen David to be over my people Israel.

7 Now it was in the heart of David my father to build a house for the name of the Lord God of Israel.

8 But the Lord said to David my father, Forasmuch as it was in thine heart to build a house for my name, thou didst well in that it was in thine heart:

9 Notwithstanding thou shalt not build the house; but thy son which shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house for my name.

10 The Lord therefore hath performed his word that he hath spoken: for I am risen up in the room of David my father, and am set on the throne of Israel, as the Lord promised, and have built the house for the name of the Lord God of Israel.

11 And in it have I put the ark, wherein is the covenant of the Lord, that he made with the children of Israel.

12 ¶ And he stood before the altar of the Lord in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands:

This rhythmic quatrain is said by the LXX to have come from a collection of ancient Hebrew poems called the “Book of Songs,” elsewhere styled the “Book of Jashar” (cf. Josh. 10:13; II Sam. 1:18). Seeing that the initial clause (in Hebrew three words), “The Lord has set his sun in the heavens,” was available to the LXX translators, one feels it from the ancient Song of Songs, or was spoken first by him on this solemn occasion and consequently included in the Song of Songs, must be left to conjecture. The contrast between the unendurable brightness of the sun and the impenetrable darkness of the inner sanctuary in which the ark was deposited is most effective. Jewish religion kept the balance true between divine transcendence and immanence—realization of the infinitude of God himself, and trust that nevertheless he is accessible to man. A Talmudic saying declares: “God is far [for is He...
13 Solomon had made a bronze platform five cubits long, five cubits wide, and three cubits high, and had set it in the court; and he stood upon it. Then he knelt upon his knees in the presence of all the assembly of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven; 14 and said, 'O LORD God of Israel, there is no God like thee in the heaven, nor in the earth: which keepest covenant, and showest mercy unto thy servants, that walk before thee with all their hearts:

15 Thou which hast kept with thy servant David my father that which thou hast promised him: and spakest with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day.

16 Now therefore, O LORD God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father that which thou hast promised him, saying, 'There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit upon the throne of Israel; yet so that thy children take heed to their way to walk in my law, as thou hast walked before me.'

17 Now then, O LORD God of Israel, let thy word be verified, which thou hast spoken unto thy servant David.

18 But will God in very deed dwell with men on the earth? Behold, heaven and the highest heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house which I have built!

must also have been found in the original text of both Kings and Chronicles. What might lead to its eventual deletion? Perhaps a too anxious Jewish scribe, aware that the Solomonic temple had been tainted by sun-cult rites, felt that any allusion whatsoever to the sun was undesirable in Solomon's dedicatory address.

13. The revisers had no cause to alter the noble words of the prayer, yet they took occasion to interject a forehint for their remarks in 7:7. Read platform; the Hebrew word is very similar to scaffold.
19 Have respect therefore to the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O Lord my God, to hearken unto the cry and the prayer which thy servant prayeth before thee:

20 That thine eyes may be open upon this house day and night, upon the place whereof thou hast said that thou wouldest put thy name there; to hearken unto the prayer which thy servant prayeth toward this place.

21 Hearken therefore unto the supplications of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, which they shall make toward this place: hear thou from thy dwelling place, even from heaven; and when thou hearest, forgive.

22 ¶ If a man sin against his neighbor, and an oath be laid upon him to make him swear, and the oath come before thine altar in this house;

23 Then hear thou from heaven, and do, and judge thy servants, by requiting the wicked, by recompensing his way upon his own head; and by justifying the righteous, by giving him according to his righteousness.

24 ¶ And if thy people Israel be put to the worse before the enemy, because they have sinned against thee; and shall return and confess thy name, and pray and make supplication before thee in this house;

the penitent—if he turns toward God and this temple, then hear thou from heaven thy dwelling place, . . . and forgive (vs. 39). The supplication is finely phrased, but why not have reserved it for the close, or used it at most twice in the course of the prayer? Could not the author have shortened and (so to say) tidied up his writing, and thus have made it suitable for publication?

Not so. These are not faults even of construction, but are signs of authentic praying; the outpouring of a man’s soul, touched by the infirmities of his people, striving to cover the whole range of human need, beseeching for erring and suffering men the delivering and restoring mercy of God, who alone knowest the hearts of the children of men (vs. 30). Respect and gratitude are due to the man whose words here quoted perhaps gave form to a prayer which countless times has been offered in Christian worship, and finds a lodging in the hearer’s conscience: “Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid; Cleanse the thoughts of our hearts. . . .”

We may now survey the contents of the prayer ascribed to Solomon, remembering that we have before us the thoughts of a Jew who lived after the fall of the Hebrew kingdoms and here prays as Solomon, he feels, should have done.

22-23. Social Sins.—It was wholly appropriate that the first intercession should concern the inner life of the community—the wrongs which men who should be true brethren inflict on one another, injuring all. The suppliants pray that resolute justice may be upheld, the guilty punished, the cause of the innocent vindicated (cf. Deut. 16:20, “That which is altogether just shalt thou follow, that thou mayest live, and inherit the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee”).

24, 34, 36. In Time of War.—The intercessor may not personally have known the horrors and anguish of defeat by a pitiless foe—massacre, ruin, slavery—but he had the imagination and heart to comprehend what it does entail for human homes, what miseries it had often brought less this house which I have built! 19 Yet have regard to the prayer of thy servant and to his supplication, O Lord my God, hearkening to the cry and to the prayer which thy servant prayeth before thee; 20 that thy eyes may be open day and night toward this house, the place where thou hast promised to set thy name, that thou mayest hearken to the prayer which thy servant offereth toward this place. 21 And hearken thou to the supplications of thy servant and of thy people Israel, when they pray toward this place; yea, hear thou from heaven thy dwelling place: and when thou hearest, forgive.

22 ¶ If a man sins against his neighbor, and is made to take an oath, and comes and swears his oath before thy altar in this house, 23 then hear thou from heaven, and act, and judge thy servants, requiting the guilty by bringing his conduct upon his own head, and vindicating the righteous by rewarding him according to his righteousness.

24 ¶ If thy people Israel be defeated before the enemy because they have sinned against thee, when they turn again and acknowledge thy name, and pray and make submission before thee in this house;
25 Then hear thou from the heavens, and forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them again unto the land which thou gavest to them and to their fathers.

26 When the heaven is shut up, and there is no rain, because they have sinned against thee; yet if they pray toward this place, and confess thy name, and turn from their sin, when thou dost afflict them:

27 Then hear thou from heaven, and forgive the sin of thy servants, and of thy people Israel, when thou hast taught them the good way, wherein they should walk; and send rain upon thy land, which thou hast given unto thy people for an inheritance.

upon his people in times past. He had a quality of soul which the safe and prosperous often lack to their own ruinous impoverishment of spirit (read Jer. 4:5-13, 22:31; Lam. 2; Amos 9:1-4).

Vs. 34, on aggressive warfare, looks like an afterthought, it is so far separated from vs. 24. Perhaps the writer, remembering how often Judean kings had led their young subjects on campaigns for conquest, felt that the matter must be given a place in Solomon’s prayer. Jews in his own time were in no position to wage war on others. Nevertheless, to our feelings this is the one blot in the dedicatory intercession. Christian prayers in time of war may rightly supplicate for the men who at their nation’s summons are face to face with the perils and horrors of battle, but must include and be inspired by longing that the hearts of all peoples, our own and our foes, will be led into the ways of peace. At a religious meeting in Britain during the appalling crisis in World War I, someone offered a prayer of that nature. He was followed by an indignant and perplexed layman who began, “O Lord, O Lord, we are here tonight to pray for the British Empire.”

26-28. Drought and Famine.—Anyone who has seen pastures and crops wither into desolation understands the constraint that prayers should be offered for rain. But Jesus called his disciples to hold such a faith in the impartial goodness of God that we shall accept as from his hand the whole dispensation of events—“the changes and chances of this mortal life”—without mistrust that he knows our need. In antiquity Palestine was much more fertile than it now is, and moreover its luxuriance was seen by its inhabitants in contrast with the aridity of the deserts east and south, where the nomads contrived to exist on the near edge of starvation and thirst (cf. Deut. 8:7-9). When pro-supplication to thee in this house: 25 then hear thou from heaven, and forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them again to the land which thou gavest to them and to their fathers.

26 “When heaven is shut up and there is no rain because they have sinned against thee, if they pray toward this place, and acknowledge thy name, and turn from their sin, when thou dost afflict them, 27 then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy servants, thy people Israel, when thou dost teach them the good way” in which they should walk; and grant rain upon thy land, which thou hast given to thy people as an inheritance.

* Gk Syr Vg: Heb toward the good way longed drought hit ancient Canaan there was no escape to more fortunate surrounding lands, and from the West came no relief ships carrying cargoes of grain. The cattle perished, the springs dried up, and in the homes of the people men, women, and children thirsted and starved (cf. Amos 4:6-10). In the past century the willingness of Western nations to send famine relief to stricken areas has conspicuously differentiated Christian from non-Christian civilization. In the future perhaps it will be characteristic of modern humanity everywhere, if good will and the sciences can defeat the looming menace of world-wide hunger.

27, 31, 35. The Purpose of Forgiveness.—Why should men concern themselves to seek divine forgiveness? Do they hope thus to gain mental assurance that unpleasant consequences will not ensue from their wrongdoing? Is their aim merely to secure the cancellation of one debt in order that they may gaily run again into another debt? Why should God be conceived as so much concerned to forgive? Is it because he finds pleasure in being indulgent, and relishes opportunities to be soft? Heine’s criticism, spoken when he was dying—“God will pardon us; it’s his business”—was pathetic in its shallowness. The O.T. goes to the root of this deep matter. It relates that Moses was bidden to lead undeserving Israel out of Egypt in order that the people might rightly worship God and learn to keep his commandments. So also in this intercession God is besought to pardon his people, being penitent, in order that he might teach them the good way (vs. 27), in order that they may fear thee and walk in thy ways all the days that they live in the land (vs. 31); and yet more, in order that all the peoples of the earth may know thy name and fear thee, as do thy people Israel (vs. 33).
28 "If there be famine in the land, if there be pestilence, if there be blasting or mildew, locusts or caterpillars; if their enemies besiege them in any of their cities: whatever plague, whatever sickness there is; whatsoever sore, or whatsoever sickness there be:

29 Then what prayer or what supplication soever shall be made of any man, or of all thy people Israel, when every one shall know his own sore and his own grief, and shall spread forth his hands in this house:

30 Then hear thou from heaven thy dwelling place, and forgive, and render unto every man according unto all his ways, whose heart thou knowest: (for thou only knowest the hearts of the children of men;)

31 That they may fear thee, to walk in thy ways, so long as they live in the land which thou gavest unto our fathers.

32 Moreover concerning the stranger, which is not of thy people Israel, but is

28. Pestilence and Disease.—We are at least cushioned against the terrors of disease, and have much reason to hope for recovery from sickness. Medical science and hospital service are at our disposal. In ancient Palestine diseases were as rife, painful, and exhausting as now; but next to nothing was known about sensible remedies. Patients were as likely to recover without as with the treatment given by those who claimed to be physicians (see Expos. on 16:12). Moreover, the sufferer was oppressed by belief that the calamity had befallen him because he had angered God by some transgression, whether consciously or unconsciously committed by himself or others of his family. Disaster of any sort was deemed to imply the wrath of God (cf. Luke 13:4). As for plague, wonderfully the bacteriologists have protected modern men against its onset. Formerly it was a horror of horrors—the Black Death in fourteenth-century Europe; the plague in Athens, of which Thucydides wrote an immortal description.7 When plague ravaged the towns and villages of ancient Palestine with its fierce agony, none knew why it struck this home and that, or how to exclude it from barred doors.

From lightning and tempest; from earthquake, fire, and flood; from plague, pestilence, and famine; from battle and murder, and from sudden death, Good Lord, deliver us.8

29, 36a. Individual Need.—It is helpful in worship when a moment of opportunity is given wherein the individual may prayerfully think of his particular need, each knowing his own affliction, and his own sorrow. Manifold beyond enumeration are the strains and stresses which men and women have to bear. This intercessor remembered that. But equally he insists—even as did Jesus (Matt. 6:15)—that the distressed individual must know himself not merely as a person deserving pity but also as one who has wronged others, and should pray to be forgiven, for there is no man who does not sin. That profound appraisal of human imperfection, so difficult constantly to accept, became cardinal doctrine in Judaism and Christianity. Will God forgive iniquity? Not unconditionally—there must first be repentance. Solomon's prayer reiterates the solemn teaching. Does God aid men to repent, seeking to persuade our free personalities to perceive and turn away from evil? And to what length does divine mercy go? Judaism insisted, "To the limit of human imagination and beyond" (Gen. 18:22-33). Christianity answered, "Even to the Cross."

32. Stranger in a Strange Land.—A Jewish patriot is praying, his mind seemingly absorbed in thoughts for his own people. But here—it is so unexpected and wonderful—humanely he recalls the strangers in their midst, and asks that they also may receive the same restoring grace of God. Mark that it is through the He-come from a far country for thy great name's sake, and thy mighty hand, and thy stretched out arm; if they come and pray in this house;

33 Then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for: that all people of the earth may know thy name, and fear thee, as doth thy people Israel, and may know that this house which I have built is called by thy name.

34 If thy people go out to war against their enemies by the way that thou shalt send them, and they pray unto thee toward this city which thou hast chosen, and the house which I have built for thy name, 35 Then hear thou from the heavens their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their cause.

36 If they sin against thee, (for there is no man which sinneth not,) and thou be angry with them, and deliver them over before their enemies, and they carry them away captives unto a land far off or near;

37 Yet if they bethink themselves in the land whither they are carried captive, and turn and pray unto thee in the land of their captivity, saying, We have sinned, we have done amiss, and have dealt wickedly;

38 If they return to thee with all their heart and with all their soul in the land of their captivity, whither they have carried them captives, and pray toward their land, which thou gavest unto their fathers, and toward the city which thou hast chosen, and toward the house which I have built for thy name:

not of thy people Israel, comes from a far country for the sake of thy great name, and thy mighty hand, and thy outstretched arm, when he comes and prays toward this house, 33 hear thou from heaven thy dwelling place, and do according to all for which the foreigner calls to thee: in order that all the peoples of the earth may know thy name and fear thee, as do thy people Israel, and that they may know that this house which I have built is called by thy name.

34 “If thy people go out to battle against their enemies, by whatever way thou shalt send them, and they pray to thee toward this city which thou hast chosen and the house which I have built for thy name, 35 then hear thou from heaven their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their cause.

36 “If they sin against thee — for there is no man who does not sin — and thou art angry with them, and dost give them to an enemy, so that they are carried away captive to a land far or near; 37 yet if they lay it to heart in the land to which they have been carried captive, and repent, and make supplication to thee in the land of their captivity, saying, ‘We have sinned, and have acted perversely and wickedly’; 38 if they repent with all their mind and with all their heart in the land of their captivity, to which they were carried captive, and pray toward their land, which thou gavest to their fathers, the city which thou hast chosen, and the house which I have built browns' kindly treatment of the foreigner that he can dare to hope that eventually the world will be brought to the knowledge of truth and the love of right. This intercession lifts the whole prayer onto the plane of universal, timeless value. Collect from the O.T. or elsewhere in Jewish literature all hostile or contemptuous references to Gentiles that can be found, they weigh not against this verse. Here Jewish religion has risen to perceive that “One touch of nature makes the whole world kin.” 1 One cannot credit the actual Solomon in his pride taking compassionate thought about foreign visitors or a handful of aliens settled in his new capital —diplomatic provision for them to worship their own gods, yes (II Kings 23:13), but not tenderhearted concern for their personal feelings. What caused the maker of the prayer to have such insight concerning the heart of the stranger? He himself may have been among the Jews “captive” in Babylonia, and have been able to return to Jerusalem. We know that from the sixth century onward the Jews of Palestine were very mindful of their brethren dispersed in other lands. But better it is simply to judge that the man from whose soul this great prayer could come had compassion for human beings, had all too rare willingness to realize that the stranger is not exempt from normal anxieties, pains, and sorrows, and that he may be very lonely in a land not his own, heartsick for his former home.

Never was intercession for the stranger in our midst more relevant than in our times. Thousands of refugees may not be altogether 39 Then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling place, their prayer and their supplications, and maintain their cause, and forgive thy people which have sinned against thee.

40 Now, O my God, let, I beseech thee, thine eyes be open, and let thine ears be attentive unto the prayer that is made in this place.

41 Now therefore arise, O Lord God, into thy resting place, thou, and the ark of thy strength: let thy priests, O Lord God, be clothed with salvation, and let thy saints rejoice in goodness.

42 O Lord God, turn not away the face of thine anointed: remember the mercies of David thy servant.

7 Now when Solomon had made an end of praying, the fire came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices: and the glory of the Lord filled the house.

2 And the priests could not enter into the house of the Lord, because the glory of the Lord had filled the Lord's house.

3 And when all the children of Israel saw how the fire came down, and the glory of the Lord upon the house, they bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement, and worshipped, and praised the Lord, saying, For he is good; for his mercy endures for ever.

for thy name, 39 then hear thou from heaven thy dwelling place their prayer and their supplications, and maintain their cause and forgive thy people who have sinned against thee. 40 Now, O my God, let thy eyes be open and thy ears attentive to a prayer of this place.

41 “And now arise, O Lord God, and go to thy resting place, thou and the ark of thy might. Let thy priests, O Lord God, be clothed with salvation, and let thy saints rejoice in thy goodness.

42 O Lord God, do not turn away the face of thy anointed one! Remember thy steadfast love for David thy servant.”

7 When Solomon had ended his prayer, fire came down from heaven and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices, and the glory of the Lord filled the temple. 2 And the priests could not enter the house of the Lord, because the glory of the Lord filled the Lord's house. 3 When all the children of Israel saw the fire come down and the glory of the Lord upon the temple, they bowed down with their faces to the earth on the pavement, and worshiped and gave thanks to the Lord, saying, “For he is good, for his steadfast love endures for ever.”

40-42. This far finer ending replaces I Kings 8:50-53, and should be credited to the Chronicler.

7:1, 3-5. When the culminating sign of divine approval had been vouchsafed, the king and his people—keeping “the feast of the seventh month” (5:3)—could offer their personal sacrifices.

2, 6-10. These are probably the revisers' insertions, confusing and reiterative: note the allusion (vs. 7) to the brazen altar (cf. 4:1); in addition, vss. 8-10 (two weeks plus welcome in the land of refuge, but thousands of them are grateful nonetheless, want to be useful and loyal, and to be received into friendship. Even without intention, the citizens of a country can inflict on such people a sense of isolation in a thousand petty ways; for men tend to be absorbingly interested only in “their own.” The wounds may go deep and sore into the alien's spirit. Extend the application. Was there some lonely person—not of the family circle—invited to the Christmas table? Reflect also that “strangers” have been known at times to attend church worship. They can be chillingly observed by the regular congregation, or their presence simply ignored. “I was a stranger,” said Jesus, “and you welcomed me” (Matt. 25:35).

40-42. Finale.—The last notes of the glorious symphony now are sounded. In I Kings 8:58 the magnificent prayer has a different ending. There the final plea for divine compassion is based on a claim, viz., that Israel is Yahweh's possession because he brought the tribes out of Egypt, the inference being that for that reason he ought to care for his own people. The Chronicler substituted these verses. It is very 4 Then the king and all the people offered sacrifices before the Lord.
5 And King Solomon offered a sacrifice of twenty and two thousand oxen, and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep. So the king and all the people dedicated the house of God.
6 And the priests waited on their offices: the Levites also with instruments of music of the Lord, which David the king had made to praise the Lord, because his mercy endureth for ever, when David praised by their ministry; and the priests sounded trumpets before them, and all Israel stood.
7 Moreover Solomon hallowed the middle of the court that was before the house of the Lord: for there he offered burnt offerings, and the fat of the peace offerings, because the brazen altar which Solomon had made was not able to receive the burnt offerings, and the meat offerings, and the fat.
8 Also at the same time Solomon kept the feast seven days, and all Israel with him, a very great congregation, from the entering in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt.
9 And in the eighth day they made a solemn assembly: for they kept the dedication of the altar seven days, and the feast seven days.
10 And on the three and twentieth day of the seventh month he sent the people away into their tents, glad and merry in heart for the goodness that the Lord had showed unto David, and to Solomon, and to Israel his people.
11 Thus Solomon finished the house of the Lord, and the king's house: and all that a day) accord with the final Law, whereas earlier custom was one week only. The text in I Kings 8:65, as LXX and the first words of vs. 66 there show, has been conformed to Chronicles.

D. Solomon’s Vision (7:11-22)

The Chronicler may have transcribed from I Kings 9:1-19, but the vision’s dismal forebodings are such an anticlimax that one wonders whether it was not added by a gloomy scribe who would not let well enough alone.

difficult to improve on a masterpiece, but the Chronicler improved on the version in Kings. Here “the plea rings with greater exultation in the thought of the Temple being the resting-place of Yahweh, the abode of his ark and of his priests, and in remembrance of David or (better) the divine covenant with him.” That appraisal is the just judgment of a biblical scholar. Considered from a literary standpoint, the Chronicler’s finale was assuredly a touch of genius.

7:10. Worship and Resolve.—In contrast with I Kings 8:65-66, Chronicles doubles the duration of the religious celebrations (see Exeg.). It is came into Solomon’s heart to make in the house of the Lord, and in his own house, he prosperously effected.

12 And the Lord appeared to Solomon by night, and said unto him, I have heard thy prayer, and have chosen this place to myself for a house of sacrifice.

13 If I shut up heaven that there be no rain, or if I command the locusts to devour the land, or if I send pestilence among my people:

14 If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land.

15 Now mine eyes shall be open, and mine ears attent unto the prayer that is made in this place.

16 For now have I chosen and sanctified this house, that my name may be there for ever: and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually.

17 And as for thee, if thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, and do according to all that I have commanded thee, and shalt observe my statutes and my judgments;

18 Then will I establish the throne of thy kingdom, according as I have covenanted with David thy father, saying, There shall not fail thee a man to be ruler in Israel.

19 But if ye turn away, and forsake my statutes and my commandments, which I have set before you, and shall go and serve other gods, and worship them;

20 Then will I pluck them up by the roots out of my land which I have given them; and this house, which I have sanctified for my name, will I cast out of my sight, and will make it to be a proverb and a by-word among all nations.

not said that on the twenty-third day the worshippers departed twice as earnestly resolved to conform their conduct to the laws of the Lord. But that issue is the rest of the worth of our attendances, long or short, at divine worship.

12-22. The Stern Mercy of God.—In this passage the certainty of divine mercy and the certainty of retribution are held together. These words were written by one who if he had not actually witnessed the sack of Jerusalem and the destruction of Solomon’s temple by the Babylonians in 586 B.C., could never forget what befell a people who would not take to heart the warnings of the great prophets. Down to that catastrophe the Hebrews as a whole clung to the notion that Yahweh’s care for them implied a measure of leniency or indulgence, so that even the light repentance of a day would gain 21 And this house, which is high, shall be an astonishment to every one that passeth by it: so that he shall say, Why hath the Lord done thus unto this land, and unto this house?

22 And it shall be answered, Because they forsook the Lord God of their fathers, which brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, and laid hold on other gods, and worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath he brought all this evil upon them.

8 And it came to pass at the end of twenty years, wherein Solomon had built the house of the Lord, and his own house,

5 Also he built Beth-horon the upper, and Beth-horon the nether, fenced cities, with walls, gates, and bars;

6 And Ba'alath, and all the store cities that Solomon had, and all the chariot cities, and the cities of the horsemen, and all that Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, and in Lebanon, and throughout all the land of his dominion.

3 And Solomon went to Hamath-zo'bah, and took it. 4 He built Tadmor in the wilderness and all the store-cities which he built in Hamath. 5 He also built Upper Beth-hor'on and Lower Beth-hor'on, fortified cities with walls, gates, and bars; 6 and Ba'alath, and all the store-cities that Solomon had, and all the cities for his chariots, and the cities for his horsemen, and whatever Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, in Lebanon, and in all the land of his dominion. 7 All the people who were left of

E. Solomon's Constructions and Sacrifices (8:1-18)

8:2. What audacity the Chronicler had! He turns upside down what he read in I Kings 9:11-14, where it is said that Solomon sold to the Phoenician king twenty Hebrew towns for 120 gold talents. Perhaps he could not believe that Solomon was ever in need of cash, or could stoop to so ignominious a deal. At any rate, here is nice instance of the freedom the Chronicler exercised to paint his picture of affairs as they should be.

4. Kings reads "Tamar" (in southern Judah) which the Chronicler misread as Tadmor. This place in later times was the famous desert town, Palmyra, northeast of renewal of his favor (cf. Hos. 6:1-4). If the prodigal son had returned home unrepentant he could not have been received as the lost son born again. It is always terribly hard to face up to the truth that God's mercy upholds the reality of the moral order.

8:7-9. Underdogs and Top Dogs.—Who should be held down in the social scale? Aliens in the land, conquered races, say these verses. Solomon had no hesitations and presumably no scruples about the matter (see Expos. on 2:17-18; I Chr. 22:2). The present world poses comiz/Ites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which were not of Israel.
8 But of their children, who were left after them in the land, whom the children of Israel consumed not, them did Solomon make to pay tribute until this day.
9 But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no servants for his work; but they were men of war, and chief of his captains, and captains of his chariots and horsemen.
10 And these were the chief of king Solomon's officers, even two hundred and fifty, that bare rule over the people.
11 And Solomon brought up the daughter of Pharaoh out of the city of David unto the house that he had built for her: for he said, My wife shall not dwell in the house of David king of Israel, because the places are holy, whereunto the ark of the Lord hath come.
12 ¶ Then Solomon offered burnt offerings unto the Lord upon the altar of the Lord, which he had built before the porch, 13 Even after a certain rate every day, offering according to the commandment of Moses, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the solemn feasts, three times in the year, even in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles.
14 ¶ And he appointed, according to the order of David his father, the courses of the priests to their service, and the Levites to their charges, to praise and minister before

Damascus. It is in the last degree unlikely that Solomon took or fortified (built) Tadmor; and the assertion in vs. 3 that he warred against a powerful place in north Syria may be an effort to lead up to this still more extravagant assertion of his power.

12-15. These verses are probably the revisers' work (cf. II Chr. 2:4b), inserted to safeguard their belief that the altar of the Lord was not the altar built by David, but a new one; and to cover the full ordinances of the final Law. In I Kings 9:15 the text is unreliable.

parable issues. The problems are grave and difficult. But they ought at least to be regarded as conscience-searching.

11. Respect for Sacred Things.—Solomon had contracted a mixed marriage, mixed indeed—Egyptian princess to Hebrew king, worshiper of the many gods of an ancient and mighty realm to worshiper of the one God of an upstart Canaanite kingdom. Solomon, we are here informed, considered that if his foreign queen were to reside within the sacred area in his capital her presence would pollute its holiness and give offense to Yahweh's jealous pride. The daughter of Pharaoh is likely to have had other and strong views on the subject. Altogether a tense situation is indicated: if she wrote home about it to her father in Egypt, an international complication was in the making. We may, somewhat too readily, take a contemptuous view of Solomon's naïve theology. Realistically we feel that if the queen was a good woman, her presence on the holy ground would have enhanced the priests, as the duty of every day required: the porters also by their courses at every gate: for so had David the man of God commanded.

15 And they departed not from the commandment of the king unto the priests and Levites concerning any matter, or concerning the treasures.

16 Now all the work of Solomon was prepared unto the day of the foundation of the house of the Lord, and until it was finished. So the house of the Lord was perfected.

17 And Solomon went to Ezion-geber, and to Eloth, at the sea side in the land of Edom.

18 And Huram sent him, by the hands of his servants, ships, and servants that had knowledge of the sea; and they went with the servants of Solomon to Ophir, and took thence four hundred and fifty talents of gold, and brought them to king Solomon.

9 And when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, she came to prove Solomon with hard questions at Jerusalem, with a very great company, and camels that bare spices, and gold in abundance, and precious stones: and when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart.

2 And Solomon told her all her questions: and there was nothing hid from Solomon which he told her not.

This chapter is closely copied from 1 Kings 10:1-29.

its sanctity. The problem was not clear cut for Solomon. He and his subjects, in the manner of ancient belief, carried respect for holy things to absurd and “fear-ful” conclusions. An opposite fault can be committed by modern men: lack of respect for the fact that things can be put to sacred use. “Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, . . .” (I Cor. 11:27).

9:1. A Royal Visit.—The story of the queen of Sheba visiting Solomon ranks with that of David and Goliath among the best known in the O.T. Even when we take the largest pinch of salt about the size of her retinue and the amount of gold, precious stones, and finest spices that she brought, she still floats romantically and richly in the imagination—like a character in a supplement to The Arabian Nights. But real wealth existed behind the theatrical scene. From remote time the valleys of southern Arabia grew in abundance the trees from which incense was made. The temples in the several civilizations used great quantities of the costly product (cf. Ezek. 27:22), and the value of its export from South Arabia can be reckoned only in millions of modern money.* The traffic in incense was by far the most lucrative in ancient commerce, comparable to the present oil industry. Southern Arabia is some fourteen hundred miles from Jerusalem, and it is not likely that the queen of Sheba came from that distant realm. At this period the Sabean tribes were located much farther north, but probably they exacted lucrative taxes from the incense car-

3 And when the queen of Sheba had seen the wisdom of Solomon, and the house that he had built,
4 And the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel: his cup-bearers also, and their apparel; and his ascent by which he went up into the house of the Lord: there was no more spirit in her.
5 And she said to the king, It was a true report which I heard in mine own land of thine acts, and of thy wisdom:
6 Howbeit I believed not their words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen it: and, behold, the half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me: for thou exceedest the fame that I heard.
7 Happy are thy men, and happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and hear thy wisdom.
8 Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on his throne, to be king for the Lord thy God: because thy God loved Israel, to establish them for ever, therefore made he thee king over them, to do judgment and justice.
9 And she gave the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices great abundance, and precious stones: neither was there any such spice as the queen of Sheba gave king Solomon.
10 And the servants also of Huram, and the servants of Solomon, which brought gold from Ophir, brought algum wood and precious stones.
11 And the king made of the algum trees could not explain to her. 3 And when the queen of Sheba had seen the wisdom of Solomon, the house that he had built, 4 the food of his table, the seating of his officials, and the attendance of his servants, and their clothing, his cupbearers, and their clothing, and his burnt offerings which he offered at the house of the Lord, there was no more spirit in her.
5 And she said to the king, "The report was true which I heard in my own land of your affairs and of your wisdom, 6 but I did not believe the reports until I came and my own eyes had seen it; and behold, half the greatness of your wisdom was not told me; you surpass the report which I heard. 7 Happy are your wives! Happy are these your servants, who continually stand before you and hear your wisdom! 8 Blessed be the Lord your God, who has delighted in you and set you on his throne as king for the Lord your God! Because your God loved Israel and would establish them for ever, he has made you king over them, that you may execute justice and righteousness."
9 Then she gave the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold, and a very great quantity of spices, and precious stones: there were no spices such as those which the queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon.
10 Moreover the servants of Huram and the servants of Solomon, who brought gold from Ophir, brought algum wood and precious stones. 11 And the king made of the algum wood steps  for the house of the

When royalties paid visits to foreign courts, or commissioned their representatives to go, it was an invariable custom, both in courtesy and diplomacy, to take and to receive presents. The awkward aspect was that the value of the gifts given and taken was regarded as a measure of the power and prestige of the donors. The Amarna letters of the fourteenth century B.C. furnish amusing evidence—even a letter sent without an accompanying gift "could be almost a diplomatic incident." Royal example had an unhappy consequence in that the convention ran down the entire social scale. A suppliant must offer a gift to his superior when seeking vans passing through their territory. Astute Solomon was developing traffic by sea to South Arabia from his Red Sea port. Perhaps, then, the anxious Sabeans on the overland route sent to him their queen, furnished with polite and ample gifts, not in order to please her curiosity, but on a commercial mission: to effect, if possible, a modus vivendi, a reasonable trade agreement.

6. Personal Experience.—Someone hears Christians saying extraordinary things about Jesus. He thinks it strange exaggeration—at any rate, no concern of his. But if he looked into the matter for himself, he would say, Half the greatness...was not told me.

9-12. Fair Exchange.—She gave the king... (vs. 9); Solomon gave to the queen... (vs. 12).
Second Chronicles 11:12. And king Solomon gave to the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, besides that which she had brought unto the king. So she turned, and went away to her own land, she and her servants.

13 Now the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred threescore and six talents of gold:

14 Besides that which chapmen and merchants brought. And all the kings of Arabia and governors of the country brought gold and silver to Solomon.

15 And king Solomon made two hundred targets of beaten gold: six hundred shekels of beaten gold went to one target.

16 And three hundred shields made he of beaten gold: three hundred shekels of gold went to one shield. And the king put them in the house of the forest of Lebanon.

17 Moreover the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with pure gold.

18 And there were six steps to the throne, with a footstool of gold, which were fastened to the throne, and stays on each side of the sitting place, and two lions standing by the stays:

19 And twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps. There was not the like made in any kingdom.

20 And all the drinking vessels of king Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold: none were of silver; it was not any thing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

9:13. About $20,000,000, but a trifle compared with the provision for the temple ascribed to David (1 Chr. 22:14).

9:14. Thoughtless persons, only too many of them: some can be summed up in the caustic remark, “All take and no give.” Christ said, “Give, and it shall be given unto you” (Luke 6:38); the principle he had in mind was profoundly deeper than calculated material interests.

15. Shields of Gold.—(See Expos. on 12:10-11.)
21 For the king's ships went to Tarshish with the servants of Huram: every three years once came the ships of Tarshish bringing gold, and silver, ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

22 And king Solomon passed all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom.

23 * And all the kings of the earth sought the presence of Solomon, to hear his wisdom, that God had put in his heart.

24 And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and raiment, harness, and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year.

25 * And Solomon had four thousand stalls for horses and chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen; whom he bestowed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

26 * And he reigned over all the kings from the river even unto the land of the Philistines, and to the border of Egypt.

27 And the king made silver in Jerusalem as stones, and cedar trees made he as the sycamore trees that are in the low plains in abundance.

28 And they brought unto Solomon horses out of Egypt, and out of all lands.

29 * Now the rest of the acts of Solomon, first and last, are they not written in the 21. Ships of Tarshish: Tarshish was probably a Phoenician settlement in Spain, and the Chronicler strangely took the phrase literally. But it denoted ocean-going vessels (cf. "Indiamen"), and the cargoes brought back show that the two kings were trading down the Red Sea to India and Africa.

25. Horses and chariots: It is likely that Solomon had at least 1400 horses for his chariots (cf. I Kings 10:26). (The Assyrian Shalmaneser III claimed to have captured 1200 chariots from the King of Syria and 2000 from Ahab of Israel.) That Solomon stationed them in several strategic towns has been interestingly supported by excavations at Megiddo, undertaken by the University of Chicago in 1929, where stabling for 400 horses was found.

26. The river is the Euphrates. That Solomon traded with Mesopotamia we may be sure; that he ruled as far as the Euphrates we may doubt.

29. The rest of the acts: It was all very well for the Chronicler to refer his readers book of Nathan the prophet, and in the prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite, and in the visions of Iddo the seer against Jeroboam the son of Nebat?
30 And Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel forty years.
31 And Solomon slept with his fathers, and he was buried in the city of David his father: and Rehoboam his son reigned in his stead.

10 And Rehoboam went to Shechem: for to Shechem were all Israel come to make him king.

2 And it came to pass, when Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was in Egypt, whither he had fled from the presence of Solomon the king, heard it, that Jeroboam returned out of Egypt.

3 And they sent and called him. So Jeroboam and all Israel came and spake to Rehoboam, saying, to these now lost prophetic sources (see Intro., p. 347). He himself is responsible for omitting much that is written in canonical Kings concerning Solomon—the king's altars to other gods, the troubles of his reign, his immense harem, his increasing and resented tyranny.

IV. The Kings of Judah (10:1–36:23)
The Chronicler proceeds to trace the checkered history of the Davidic kingdom of Judah down to its destruction in 586 B.C. He does so by selecting and adapting from Kings only what furthered his religious intention, and by adding much thereto. The new

"the book of the acts of Solomon," the Chronicler names prophets—Nathan, Ahijah, Iddo. Those alleged writings may have been passages in a now lost, didactic account of Judean history, but there is a reason why that is improbable (see Intro., p. 347). The important point is that in this stress on prophets we have the first instance of a method which the Chronicler will deliberately pursue in his survey of the future kings—an insistence that God did not fail to send, as the occasions required, prophets to declare his truth, and that in the reactions of the kings to these interpreters of the divine word the sequel showed God's overruling of men and affairs to establish his righteous will. There are some today who, although not called prophets, are voices of truth and right. Response spells our destiny.

10:1–36:21. The Nation Under God.—In these twenty-seven chapters the Chronicler depicts the kingdom of Judah from the accession of Rehoboam to its fall in 586 B.C. in such a way as to inculcate his fundamental beliefs. The reader is subtly offered "truth of idea," not exact history. Jewish readers were more open from first to last, are they not written in the history of Nathan the prophet, and in the prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite, and in the visions of Iddo the seer concerning Jeroboam the son of Nebat? 30 Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel forty years. 31 And Solomon slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David his father: and Rehoboam his son reigned in his stead.

10 Rehoboam went to Shechem, for all Israel had come to Shechem to make him king. 2 And when Jeroboam the son of Nebat heard of it (for he was in Egypt, whither he had fled from King Solomon), then Jeroboam returned from Egypt. 3 And they sent and called him; and Jeroboam and all Israel came and said to Rehoboam,
4 Thv father made our voke grievous: now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude of thy father, and his heavy voke that he put upon us, and we will serve thee.
5 And he said unto them, Come again unto me after three days. And the people departed.
6 And king Rehobo'am took counsel with the old men that had stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, saying, What counsel give ye me to return answer to this people?
7 And they spake unto him, saying, If thou be kind to this people, and please them, and speak good words to them, they will be thy servants for ever.
8 But he forsook the counsel which the old men gave him, and took counsel with the young men that were brought up with him, that stood before him.
9 And he said unto them, What advice give ye that we may return answer to this people, which have spoken to me, saying, Ease somewhat the yoke that thy father did put upon us?
10 And the young men that were brought up with him spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou answer the people that spake unto them.

“What do you advise that we answer this people who have said to me, ‘Lighten the yoke that your father put upon us’?” 10 And the young men who had grown up with him spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou answer the people that spake unto thee.

Material is often the product of his own inventive reasoning as to what ought to have happened or been done; and in its contents we perceive most clearly the ruling principles of his faith.

emerged the spiritual splendor of faith in the one and only God and knowledge how rightly to live. Similar awareness should be in us concerning the worth of true religion in our civilization. But when the Assyrians destroyed Samaria in 721 B.C. nothing comparable had arisen from its ruins. Therefore it was appropriate to the Chronicler’s purpose to ignore the history of the kingdom of Israel, including even the narratives about Elijah and Elisha, which must have stirred his soul. (c) But he did not ignore good Israelites, loyal to the true faith. On the contrary, depicting “truth of idea,” he exaggerates preposterously their devotion (Levites and laity) to David; he glories in declaring how in vast numbers they responded to the brotherly overtures made to them by Hezekiah and Josiah. Thus he would rebuke contemporaries in Jerusalem who were determined to ostracize or belittle religiously the Hebrew population in Canaan outside their Judean circles. His hope was of one household of faith. What are our views about Christian inability to transcend ancient dissensions even in face of the rise of the atheistic communist philosophy? (d) The Chronicler insists on the constant intervention of inspired prophets, thus urging that God gives not only the heritage of our fathers’ insight but also the immediate voices of wise and unflinching servants of truth. Are we willing and swift to perceive and understand their counterpart today?

10:4. Clogs to Clogs.—A few decades ago the textile workers in Lancashire wore wooden shoes (clogs) to save expense in shoe leather. There was a saying among them, “Three generations from clogs to clogs”: a workman rises from the ranks to become owner of the mill; his son makes a great fortune out of the business; his grandchildren scatter the wealth. David—Solomon—Rehoboam. The shepherd boy became a king; his grandson flung away the heritage.

6-15. Wise Heads on Old Shoulders.—Rehoboam had an ultimatum served on him by nine unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it somewhat lighter for us: thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

11 For whereas my father put a heavy yoke upon you, I will put more to your yoke: my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

12 So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam on the third day, as the king bade, saying, Come again to me on the third day.

13 And the king answered them roughly; and king Rehoboam forsook the counsel of the old men, 14 And answered them after the advice of the young men, saying, My father made your yoke heavy, but I will add thereto: my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 So the king hearkened not unto the people: for the cause was of God, that the LORD might perform his word, which he spake by the hand of Ahijah the Shilonite to Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16 ¶ And when all Israel saw that the king would not hearken unto them, the people answered the king, saying, What portion have we in David? and we have none inheritance in the son of Jesse: every man to your tents, O Israel: and now, David, see to thine own house. So all Israel went to their tents.

17 But as for the children of Israel that dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

tenths of his subjects, all except the Judeans: he must accept their stated conditions or there would be an end to their loyalty to his throne. The seniors at his court advised compliance: If you will be kind to this people and please them, . . . they will be your servants for ever (vs. 7). It is not always true that "a soft answer turneth away wrath" (Prov. 15:1). Timid yielding to unreasonable and impudent demands will usually be construed as an open opportunity to double the demands. Comparing these verses with 1 Kings 12:6-7, we find that the Chronicler—if you will be kind—needlessly and feebly modified the wise answer of the old men. According to Kings they counseled, "If you will be a servant to this people today and serve them, . . . then they will be your servants for ever." That advice was based on the realization that the Israelites' complaint was not only just but radically right: autocratic Solomon had perverted the constitutional, "brotherly" concept of kingship which David had exemplified—the king is to rule as under God that he may serve his fellows. The democratic Greeks admired the mighty Persian Empire except in one respect: "Among the Persians all men are slaves, except one."

Rehoboam's ambition, no doubt, was to equal or surpass the strength of his autocratic father, and, following the cruel opinion of his young advisers, haughtily he told the vexatious complainers that he would rule with a rod of iron. When a vexatious circumstance presents itself, immediate anger is natural enough both in young and old. But second thoughts are likely to be best. Sleep overnight before mailing the 18 Then king Rehoboam sent Hadoram that was over the tribute: and the children of Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. But king Rehoboam made speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.
19 And Israel rebelled against the house of David unto this day.

11 When Rehoboam came to Jerusalem, he gathered of the house of Judah and Benjamin a hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against Israel, that he might bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam.
2 But the word of the LORD came to Shemaiah the man of God, saying,
3 Speak unto Rehoboam the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and to all Israel in Judah and Benjamin, saying,
4 Thus saith the LORD, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren: return every man to his house: for this thing is done of me. And they obeyed the words of the LORD, and returned from going against Jeroboam.
5 And Rehoboam dwelt in Jerusalem, and built cities for defense in Judah.

A. REIGN OF REHOBOAM (10:1-12:16)

10:19. Mark that I Kings 12:20—“there was none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah only”—is ignored. The Chronicler's purpose would have been impaired if he had frankly admitted the desperate weakness of the Davidic kingdom under Rehoboam. Enough for him to admit Rehoboam's sin of provocation, and to declare that nevertheless Israel's action was a heinous sin of rebellion.

11:1-4. The Chronicler judged that Rehoboam exceeded all bounds when he proposed to attack the apostate brethren, the Israelites. Accordingly, he gladly inserted from I Kings 12:22-24 the tale that a prophet, Shemaiah, forbade, and that the king desisted. Whereupon he expanded the logic of the situation, and—no parallel in Kings—in 11:5-23 indicated Rehoboam's reward for obeying the prophet; but in 12:1-8 (cf. I Kings 14:22, 25-28) he also expatiated on the chastisement which Rehoboam's wicked intention had merited.

18 Then King Rehobo''am sent Hador'am, who was taskmaster over the forced labor, and the people of Israel stoned him to death with stones. And King Rehobo''am made haste to mount his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem. 19 So Israel has been in rebellion against the house of David to this day.

11 When Rehobo'am came to Jerusalem, he assembled the house of Judah, and Benjamin, a hundred and eighty thousand chosen warriors, to fight against Israel, to restore the kingdom to Rehobo'am.
2 But the word of the LORD came to Shemai'ah the man of God: 3 "Say to Reho-bo'am the son of Solomon king of Judah, and to all Israel in Judah and Benjamin,
4 'Thus says the LORD, You shall not go up or fight against your brethren. Return every man to his home, for this thing is from me.' " So they hearkened to the word of the LORD, and returned and did not go against Jerobo'am.
5 Rehobo'am dwelt in Jerusalem, and 6 He built even Beth-lehem, and Etam, and Tekoa,
7 And Beth-zur, and Shoco, and Adullam,
8 And Gath, and Marreshah, and Ziph,
9 And Adoraim, and Lachish, and Azekah,
10 And Zorah, and Aijalon, and Hebron, which are in Judah and in Benjamin, fenced cities.

11 And he fortified the strongholds, and put captains in them, and store of victuals, and oil and wine.
12 And in every several city he put shields and spears, and made them exceeding strong, having Judah and Benjamin on his side.

13 And the priests and the Levites that were in all Israel resorted to him out of all their coasts.

14 For the Levites left their suburbs and their possession, and came to Judah and Jerusalem: for Jeroboam and his sons had cast them off from executing the priest's office unto the Lord:

15 And he ordained him priests for the high places, and for the devils, and for the calves which he had made.

6-12. None of the towns were in Benjamin (vs. 10); all in Judah. Their fortification would assist defense against an Egyptian army. An old tradition may have been utilized here.

12. Having . . . Benjamin on his side: Historically it was not, but in the Chronicler's lifetime the people of that area were closely aligned with the Jerusalem community, and it was fitting to represent Benjamin as not having sided with rebel Israel (see Exeg. on 1 Chr. 8:1-10).

13-15. The priests and the Levites that were in all Israel: Regarding the reasons for considering the priests and to be a reviser's correction, or for supposing that the original text of the Chronicler was "the priests, the Levites," see Exeg. on 1 Chr. 6:1-81 and Intro., pp. 345-47. The purport of these verses is to stress that it was only the Israelitish laity who rebelled; the Israelitish Levites on the contrary were so loyal that they suffered persecution from Jeroboam, relinquished their worldly possessions, and 16 And after them, out of all the tribes of Israel, such as set their hearts to seek the Lord God of Israel came to Jerusalem, to sacrifice unto the Lord God of their fathers.

17 So they strengthened the kingdom of Judah, and made Rehoboam the son of Solomon strong, three years: for three years they walked in the way of David and Solomon.
18 ¶ And Rehoboam took him Mahalath the daughter of Jerimoth the son of David to wife, and Abihail the daughter of Eliab the son of Jesse:
19 Which bare him children; Jeush and Shemariah, and Zaham.
20 And after her he took Maachah the daughter of Absalom; which bare him Abijah, and Attai, and Ziza, and Shelomith.
21 And Rehoboam loved Maachah the daughter of Absalom above all his wives and his concubines: (for he took eighteen wives, and threescore concubines; and begat twenty and eight sons, and threescore daughters.)
22 And Rehoboam made Abijah the son of Maachah the chief, to be ruler among his brethren: for he thought to make him king.
23 And he dealt wisely, and dispersed of all his children throughout all the countries of Judah and Benjamin, unto every fenced city: and he gave them victuals in abundance. And he desired many wives.
24 And it came to pass, when Rehoboam had established the kingdom, and had strengthened himself, he forsook the law of the Lord, and all Israel with him.
25 And it came to pass, that in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, Shishak king of Egypt came to Jerusalem to serve in the Solomonic temple. The assertion was not historic fact: it was the Chronicler's way of urging that Levites of Israelitish families ought to be given full rights to serve—as priests, musicians, or custodians—in the second temple. Note the point that in Israel they are said to have functioned as priests (vs. 14).
18-25. Not in Kings. The details given perhaps imply the use of an old tradition.
12:1. Here and in vs. 6, Israel denotes the Judeans as the surviving true "Israel."
2-9. Shishak's plundering of Jerusalem is recorded in 1 Kings 14:25-28. The Chronicler represented the disaster as merited, not only because Rehoboam had attacked the monic beings supposed to inhabit waste places. Jeroboam, we may be sure, did not foster devil-worship in his new kingdom. He was anxious to demonstrate his zeal for the worship of Yahweh, and since he could not present a temple rivaling Solomon's he made Bethel and Dan royal sanctuaries and there erected two gold-plated images in the shape of bulls (calves). The monotheist Jews to whom we owe Kings and Chronicles, who scorned idolatry, probably realized that the bulls had been set up in honor of Yahweh. But they made the act a focus of denunciation in respect of the religious practices in the Northern Kingdom which were in fact somewhat more Egypt came up against Jerusalem, because they had transgressed against the Lord.

3 With twelve hundred chariots, and three-score thousand horsemen: and the people were without number that came with him out of Egypt: the Lubim, the Sukkiim, and the Ethiopians.

4 And he took the fenced cities which pertain to Judah, and came to Jerusalem.

5 ¶ Then came Shemaiah the prophet to Rehoboam, and to the princes of Judah, that were gathered together to Jerusalem because of Shishak, and said unto them, Thus saith the Lord, Ye have forsaken me, and therefore have I also left you in the hand of Shishak.

6 Whereupon the princes of Israel and the king humbled themselves; and they said, The Lord is righteous.

7 And when the Lord saw that they humbled themselves, the word of the Lord came to Shemaiah, saying, They have humbled themselves: therefore I will not destroy them, but I will grant them some deliverance; and my wrath shall not be poured out upon Jerusalem by the hand of Shishak.

8 Nevertheless they shall be his servants; that they may know my service, and the service of the kingdoms of the countries.

9 So Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, and took away the treasures of the house of the Lord and the treasures of the king's house; he took all: he carried away also the shields of gold which Solomon had made.

10 Instead of which king Rehoboam made shields of brass, and committed them to the hands of the chief of the guard, that kept the entrance of the king's house.

11 And when the king entered into the house of the Lord, the guard came and fetched them, and brought them again into the guard chamber.

Israelites but also (vs. 1) because in his pride he forsook the law of the Lord. At the same time the Chronicler emphasized the gross and polytheistic than the customs at Judean sanctuaries, though these became vile enough (cf. Jer. 2:20-28). The venom shown by this verse is perhaps pardonable.

12:10-11. Shields of Brass.—Imitation articles in place of the real thing (cf. 9:15). There is a very human aspect in this incident. How swiftly the bubble of Rehoboam's pride was pricked, and the glory of Solomon's realm departed. Up came the king of Egypt, and in a twinkling Jerusalem was "off the gold standard." Various reflections are possible. Was anything that mattered really lost? What was the use of gold which set no wheels of trade in motion? The scornful could laugh at the foolish king's pretense, and say about his brass shields, "All that 12 And when he humbled himself, the wrath of the Lord turned from him, that he would not destroy him altogether: and also in Judah things went well.

13 * So king Rehoboam strengthened himself in Jerusalem, and reigned: for Rehoboam was one and forty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city which the Lord had chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess.

14 And he did evil, because he prepared not his heart to seek the Lord.

15 Now the acts of Rehoboam, first and last, are they not written in the book of Shemaiah the prophet, and of Iddo the seer concerning genealogies? And there were wars between Rehoboam and Jeroboam continually.

16 And Rehoboam slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David: and Abijah his son reigned in his stead.

17 Now in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam began Abijah to reign over Judah.

2 He reigned three years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Michaiah the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah. And there was war between Abijah and Jeroboam.

3 And Abijah set the battle in array with an army of valiant men of war, even four hundred thousand chosen men: Jeroboam had strengthened himself with a like host.

and pointed out that the judgment had been loss of treasure, not total destruction of the kingdom.

15. Concerning genealogies: The text is corrupt.

B. Reign of Abijah (13:1-22)

13:1-2. Rehoboam having been chastised, it was time that Israel should suffer retribution commensurate with its apostasy and heathenish worship (cf. 11:15). But Rehoboam's son Abijah was not fit to inflict the chastisement, for I Kings 15:1, 2, 6-7 had nothing good to say about him. The Chronicler, however, found a solution for his difficulty when he read in Kings that God for the sake of David's merits allowed Abijah to establish Jerusalem and to be succeeded by his son, and that fighting with Israel was constant throughout his reign. (In Kings Abijah is called "Abijam.")

3-20. The Battle of Zemaraim has no parallel in Kings. Zemaraim was a place on the border between the two kingdoms. Perhaps there was tradition of a fight there won glisters is not gold"; * but one may also reflect that Rehoboam had the courage to rally from the blow and make the most of such resources as remained to him.

* Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice, Act II, scene 7.

13:1-22. Soft Words and Hard Blows.—If this chapter is read through to its quaint close, what a dreadful passage it is to encounter in Holy Writ! Abijah's specious plea was backed by the mailed fist. When the Israelites' military also set the battle in array against him with eight hundred thousand chosen men, being mighty men of valor.

4 ¶ And Abijah stood up upon mount Zemaraim, which is in mount Ephraim, and said, Hear me, thou Jeroboam, and all Israel;

5 Ought ye not to know that the Lord God of Israel gave the kingdom over Israel to David for ever, even to him and to his sons by a covenant of salt?

6 Yet Jeroboam the son of Nebat, the servant of Solomon the son of David, is risen up, and hath rebelled against his lord.

7 And there are gathered unto him vain men, the children of Belial, and have strengthened themselves against Rehoboam the son of Solomon, when Rehoboam was young and tender-hearted, and could not withstand them.

8 And now ye think to withstand the kingdom of the Lord in the hand of the sons of David; and ye be a great multitude, and there are with you golden calves, which Jeroboam made you for gods.

9 Have ye not cast out the priests of the Lord, the sons of Aaron, and the Levites, and have made you priests after the manner of the nations of other lands? so that whosoever cometh to consecrate himself with a young bullock and seven rams, the same may be a priest of them that are no gods.

10 But as for us, the Lord is our God, and we have not forsaken him; and the priests, which minister unto the Lord, are hundred thousand picked men; and Jerobo'am drew up his line of battle against him with eight hundred thousand picked mighty warriors. 4 Then Abij'ah stood up on Mount Zemara'im which is in the hill country of Ephraim, and said, “Hear me, O Jeroboam and all Israel! 5 Ought you not to know that the Lord God of Israel gave the kingship over Israel for ever to David and his sons by a covenant of salt? 6 Yet Jerobo'am the son of Nebat, a servant of Solomon the son of David, rose up and rebelled against his lord; and certain worthless scoundrels gathered about him and defied Rehobo'am the son of Solomon, when Rehobo'am was young and irresolute and could not withstand them.

8 “And now you think to withstand the kingdom of the Lord in the hand of the sons of David, because you are a great multitude and have with you the golden calves which Jerobo'am made you for gods. 9 Have you not driven out the priests of the Lord, the sons of Aaron, and the Levites, and made priests for yourselves like the peoples of other lands? Whoever comes to conse-

by the Judeans. Possibly the victory is the Chronicler's invention. Certainly its colossal scale reveals his symbolic language. Abijah with 400,000 soldiers marched to the frontier, and there in moving terms harangued Jeroboam and the men of Israel, urging them to repent their rebellion; to forgive and forget since Rehoboam had been an impetuous youth misled by bad counselors; to realize now that they were setting themselves against God, who had entrusted his kingdom to the house of David. While the parley went on the Israelites got forces to the rear of the Judeans. Battle was joined, and Israel was defeated with a loss of 500,000 men. The Chronicler must not be blamed for not foreseeing that there might be readers prosaic enough to suppose he meant the tale to be credited as actual fact. He was writing doctrine in parable (cf. 14:9-15; 20:1-30).

9, 10b, 11. Clear instance of a late insertion. Of special interest is the reference to the regular burning of incense (spices, דִּשְׁנָה), with which cf. Exod. 30:7 (P). Incidental maneuver failed, and it is said that 500,000 of their soldiers were slaughtered, the narrator does not seem to turn a hair. But there is no parallel in Kings for the tale. It is of course only the Chronicler's quaint, pictorial way of arguing that, although Rehoboam had been grievously wrong and the Israelites' revolt in accordance with God's will, nevertheless the fatal schism ought not to have continued; and that since Israel was wrong to persist in alienathe sons of Aaron, and the Levites wait upon their business:

11 And they burn unto the Lord every morning and every evening burnt sacrifices and sweet incense: the showbread also set they in order upon the pure table; and the candlestick of gold with the lamps thereof, to burn every evening: for we keep the charge of the Lord our God; but ye have forsaken him.

12 And, behold, God himself is with us for our captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets to cry alarm against you. O children of Israel, fight ye not against the Lord God of your fathers; for ye shall not prosper.

13 ¶ But Jeroboam caused an ambushment to come about behind them: so they were before Judah, and the ambushment was behind them.

14 And when Judah looked back, behold, the battle was before and behind: and they cried unto the Lord, and the priests sounded with the trumpets.

15 Then the men of Judah gave a shout: and as the men of Judah shouted, it came to pass, that God smote Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah.

16 And the children of Israel fled before Judah: and God delivered them into their hand.

17 And Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter: so there fell down slain of Israel five hundred thousand chosen men.

18 Thus the children of Israel were brought under at that time, and the children of Judah prevailed, because they relied upon the Lord God of their fathers.

19 And Abijah pursued after Jeroboam, and took cities from him, Beth-el with the towns thereof, and Jeshanah with the towns thereof, and Ephraim with the towns thereof.

20 Neither did Jeroboam recover strength again in the days of Abijah: and the Lord struck him, and he died.

21 ¶ But Abijah waxed mighty, and married fourteen wives, and begat twenty and two sons, and sixteen daughters.

crate himself with a young bull or seven rams becomes a priest of what are no gods. 10 But as for us, the Lord is our God, and we have not forsaken him. We have priests ministering to the Lord who are sons of Aaron, and Levites for their service. 11 They offer to the Lord every morning and every evening burnt offerings and incense of sweet spices, set out the showbread on the table of pure gold, and care for the golden lamp-stand that its lamps may burn every evening: for we keep the charge of the Lord our God, but you have forsaken him. 12 Behold, God is with us at our head, and his priests with their battle trumpets to sound the call to battle against you. O sons of Israel, do not fight against the Lord, the God of your fathers; for you cannot succeed.”

13 Jeroboam had sent an ambush around to come on them from behind; thus his troops were in front of Judah, and the ambush was behind them. 14 And when Judah looked, behold, the battle was before and behind them; and they cried to the Lord, and the priests blew the trumpets.

15 Then the men of Judah raised the battle shout. And when the men of Judah shouted, God defeated Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah. 16 The men of Israel fled before Judah, and God gave them into their hand. 17 Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter; so there fell slain of Israel five hundred thousand picked men. 18 Thus the men of Israel were subdued at that time, and the men of Judah prevailed, because they relied upon the Lord, the God of their fathers. 19 And Abijah pursued Jeroboam, and took cities from him, Bethel with its villages and Jeshanah with its villages and Ephraim with its villages. 20 Jeroboam did not recover his power in the days of Abijah; and the Lord smote him, and he died. 21 But Abijah grew mighty. And he took fourteen wives, and had twenty-two sons and sixteen

2 And Asa did that which was good and right in the eyes of the Lord his God:

3 For he took away the altars of the strange gods, and the high places, and brake down the images, and cut down the groves:

4 And commanded Judah to seek the Lord God of their fathers, and to do the law and the commandment.

5 Also he took away out of all the cities of Judah the high places and the images: and the kingdom was quiet before him.

6 ¶ And he built fenced cities in Judah: for the land had rest, and he had no war in those years; because the Lord had given him rest.

7 Therefore he said unto Judah, Let us build these cities, and make about them walls and towers, gates and bars, while the land is yet before us; because we have sought the Lord our God, we have sought him, and he hath given us rest on every side. So they built and prospered.

8 And Asa had an army of men that bare targets and spears, out of Judah three hundred thousand; and out of Benjamin, that bare shields and drew bows, two hundred and fourscore thousand: all these were mighty men of valor.

2 And Asa did what was good and right in the eyes of the Lord his God. 3 He took away the foreign altars and the high places, and broke down the pillars and hewed down the Ashe'rim, 4 and commanded Judah to seek the Lord, the God of their fathers, and to keep the law and the commandment. 5 He also took out of all the cities of Judah the high places and the incense altars. And the kingdom had rest under him. 6 He built fortified cities in Judah, for the land had rest. He had no war in those years, for the Lord gave him peace. 7 And he said to Judah, "Let us build these cities, and surround them with walls and towers, gates and bars; the land is still ours, because we have sought the Lord our God; we have sought him, and he has given us peace on every side." So they built and prospered. 8 And Asa had an army of three hundred thousand from Judah, armed with bucklers and spears, and two hundred and eighty thousand men from Benjamin, that carried shields and drew bows; all these were mighty men of valor.

C. REIGN OF ASA (14:1-16:14)

14:3. He took away the foreign altars and the high places: This is the Deuteronomic test of a good king, to which the Chronicler will add his own—obedience to a prophet (15:1-2, 8). But the author of Kings had already credited both Rehoboam and Abijah with sufficient piety to remove the high places. The Chronicler conveniently ignored the inconsistency, and also suppressed the admission in Kings that Asa's fathers had allowed temple prostitutes and idols. I Kings 15:9-24 portrays Asa as a very good king, but tells also that he relied on Syrian help when Baasha of Israel menaced Judah, and that he died of disease in his feet. It was easy for the Chronicler to embroider upon that record.

8. As a very good king, Asa is said to have had 580,000 soldiers. His even more important successor, Jehoshaphat, will be credited with double the number.
9 ¶ And there came out against them Zerah the Ethiopian with a host of a thousand thousand, and three hundred chariots; and came unto Mareshah.

10 Then Asa went out against him, and they set the battle in array in the valley of Zephathah at Mareshah.

11 And Asa cried unto the Lord his God, and said, Lord, it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power: help us, O Lord our God; for we rest on thee, and in thy name we go against this multitude. O Lord, thou art our God; let not man prevail against thee.

12 So the Lord smote the Ethiopians before Asa, and before Judah; and the Ethiopians fled.

13 And Asa and the people that were with him pursued them unto Gerar: and the Ethiopians were overthrown, that they could not recover themselves; for they were destroyed before the Lord, and before his host; and they carried away very much spoil.

14 And they smote all the cities round about Gerar; for the fear of the Lord came upon them: and they spoiled all the cities; for there was exceeding much spoil in them.

15 They smote also the tents of cattle, and carried away sheep and camels in abundance, and returned to Jerusalem.

9 Zerah the Ethiopian came out against them with an army of a million men and three hundred chariots, and came as far as Mare'shah. 10 And Asa went out to meet him, and they drew up their lines of battle in the valley of Zeph'athah at Mare'shah. 11 And Asa cried to the Lord his God, "O Lord, there is none like thee to help, between the mighty and the weak. Help us, O Lord our God, for we rely on thee, and in thy name we have come against this multitude. O Lord, thou art our God; let not man prevail against thee." 12 So the Lord defeated the Ethiopians before Asa and before Judah, and the Ethiopians fled. 13 Asa and the people that were with him pursued them as far as Gerar, and the Ethiopians fell until none remained alive; for they were broken before the Lord and his army. The men of Judah carried away very much booty. 14 And they smote all the cities round about Gerar, for the fear of the Lord was upon them. They plundered all the cities, for there was much plunder in them. 15 And they smote the tents of those who had cattle, and carried away sheep in abundance and camels. Then they returned to Jerusalem.

9. Zerah the Ethiopian: Hebrew, "the Cushite," i.e., an Arabian. The KJV—perhaps also the Chronicler—supposed Cush to be Ethiopia and Zerah to be king of Egypt—perhaps Osorkon I or II of the Bubasite dynasty.

9-15. No parallel in Kings. The attack by Zerah's army of a million footmen and three hundred chariots is made the occasion for a marvelous sign of God's satisfaction with Asa. He trusted not in his own army of half a million, but cast all his care upon the Lord (vs. 11).

14:11. Dauntless Tenacity. —The quality of this utterance in its confidence and supplication must be measured not as if it were the actual words of King Asa, but as showing the spirit of the Chronicler in relation to his own times and circumstances. All too regularly in warfare victory goes to the big battalions, almost regardless of the merits of the case. One reaction to that fact is a craven materialistic view of life; but another may be dauntless tenacity despite overwhelming peril. If the few do not flinch, they may sometimes defeat the many. The men and women of the resistance movements in Europe during World War II thought so, and so did the population of Britain in 1940-41, although almost everyone else reckoned total destruction inevitable. The Chronicler had even sterner facts to face. He knew that politically his people had been utterly conquered; the two Hebrew kingdoms had gone down like a pack of cards before the onslaught of the Assyrians and Babylonians. Nevertheless he held that in the ceaseless conflict between right and wrong the things that are right stand ultimately secure in the immutable purpose of God. So in this para-
And the Spirit of God came upon Azariah the son of Oded:
2 And he went out to meet Asa, and said unto him, Hear ye me, Asa, and all Judah and Benjamin; The Lord is with you, while ye be with him; and if ye seek him, he will be found of you; but if ye forsake him, he will forsake you.
3 Now for a long season Israel hath been without the true God, and without a teaching priest, and without law.
4 But when they in their trouble did turn unto the Lord God of Israel, and sought him, he was found of them.
5 And in those times there was no peace to him that went out, nor to him that came in, but great vexations were upon all the inhabitants of the countries.
6 And nation was destroyed of nation, and city of city: for God did vex them with all adversity.
7 Be ye strong therefore, and let not your hands be weak: for your work shall be rewarded.
8 And when Asa heard these words, and the prophecy of Oded the prophet, he took courage, and put away the abominable idols out of all the land of Judah and Benjamin, and out of the cities which he had taken from mount Ephraim, and renewed the altar of the Lord, that was before the porch of the Lord.

II CHRONICLES 15:8

The spirit of God came upon Azari'a'ah the son of Oded, and he went out to meet Asa, and said to him, "Hear me, Asa, and all Judah and Benjamin: The Lord is with you, while you are with him. If you seek him, he will be found by you, but if you forsake him, he will forsake you.
3 For a long time Israel was without the true God, and without a teaching priest, and without law; but when in their distress they turned to the Lord, the God of Israel, and sought him, he was found by them. 5 In those times there was no peace to him who went out or to him who came in, for great disturbances afflicted all the inhabitants of the lands. 6 They were broken in pieces, nation against nation and city against city, for God troubled them with every sort of distress. 7 But you, take courage! Do not let your hands be weak, for your work shall be rewarded."

When Asa heard these words, the prophecy of Azari'ah the son of Oded, he took courage, and put away the abominable idols from all the land of Judah and Benjamin and from the cities which he had taken in the hill country of Ephraim, and he repaired the altar of the Lord that was in front of the vestibule of the house of the 15:1-15. No parallel in Kings. The Chronicler saw an opportunity, perhaps utilizing an old tradition, to introduce two prophets, otherwise unknown, and made Azariah's prophetic intervention lead to exactly what he wanted to impress on his own contemporaries, viz., that as a result of Asa's piety and success Israelites in great numbers came to Jerusalem (vss. 9-15) to celebrate the thanksgiving for the harvest of corn (feast of Weeks).

ble he calls us to see, on the one side, Zerah with his 1,000,000 soldiers, on the other, Asa with his 580,000, and to believe that the issue will not turn on numbers: Help us, O Lord our God, for we rely on thee, and in thy name we have come against this multitude . . . ; let not man prevail against thee.

15:2, 7, 12, 15. Reform.—The little that is said in 1 Kings 15:9-15 about Asa is good—he "did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord," and "forty and one years reigned he in Jerusalem." The Chronicler saw in this yet another opportunity to preach his sermon on the theme that, given a chance, there were plenty of good Israelites. So he relates that a prophet was raised up to exhort Asa; that the king obeyed the word of God and strenuously reformed religious conditions in his territory; and that not merely his Judean subjects, but Israelites in abundance (vs. 9) responded to his spirit and came to Jerusalem to keep the harvest festival. Observe two features. First, that 9 And he gathered all Judah and Benjamin, and the strangers with them out of Ephraim and Manasseh, and out of Simeon: for they fell to him out of Israel in abundance, when they saw that the Lord his God was with him.

10 So they gathered themselves together at Jerusalem in the third month, in the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa.

11 And they offered unto the Lord the same time, of the spoil which they had brought, seven hundred oxen and seven thousand sheep.

12 And they entered into a covenant to seek the Lord God of their fathers with all their heart and with all their soul;

13 That whosoever would not seek the Lord God of Israel should be put to death, whether small or great, whether man or woman.

14 And they sware unto the Lord with a loud voice, and with shouting, and with trumpets, and with cornets.

15 And all Judah rejoiced at the oath: for they had sworn with all their heart, and sought him with their whole desire; and he was found of them: and the Lord gave them rest round about.

16 ¶ And also concerning Maachah the mother of Asa the king, he removed her from being queen, because she had made an idol in a grove: and Asa cut down her idol, and stamped it, and burnt it at the brook Kidron.

the prophet blended warning with encouragement in addressing king and people, The Lord is with you, while you are with him (vs. 2); and Do not let your hands be weak (vs. 7). God does not do our duty for us, but gives us strength to do our duty. Second, that when the men of Judah together with the faithful out of Israel unidly and earnestly entered into a covenant to seek the Lord, the God of their fathers (vs. 12), it is written that all Judah rejoiced over the oath (vs. 15). The Judeans did not look askance at the men from Israel as if at returning prodigals; there was the gladness of brethren united. There have been members of the Christian church who meet wanderers returned to the fold with a dubious glance and a very limp handshake.

13. Should Be Put to Death.—The ferocious penalty is matched by passages in Deuteronomy ordering that the Canaanites be slaughtered, and that Hebrews guilty of worshiping gods other than Yahweh be stoned to death (Deut. 7:1-4: 13:6-10). When Deuteronomy was written the Canaanites as a national entity had long since ceased to exist, but the contamination of their polytheism and gross customs continued as a mental menace to the conception of God and duty which the great prophets had proclaimed and which the makers of Deuteronomy and the Chronicler longed to promote. The seeming mercilessness in this verse is a figurative way of insisting that the community must do all possible to put an end to bad theology and consequent bad morals. There is current in modern society a plenitude of quite primitive theology and a naïve assumption that God and mammon can both be worshiped. Lukewarmness about the 17 But the high places were not taken away out of Israel: nevertheless the heart of Asa was perfect all his days.

18 ¶ And he brought into the house of God the things that his father had dedicated, and that he himself had dedicated, silver, and gold, and vessels.

19 And there was no more war unto the five and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa.

16 In the six and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa, Baasha king of Israel came up against Judah, and built Ramah, to the intent that he might let none go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

2 Then Asa brought out silver and gold out of the treasures of the house of the Lord and of the king’s house, and sent to Ben-hadad king of Syria, that dwelt at Damascus, saying,

3 There is a league between me and thee, as there was between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent thee silver and gold; go, break thy league with Baasha king of Israel, that he may depart from me.

4 And Ben-hadad hearkened unto king Asa, and sent the captains of his armies and the vessels.

17. The statement, transcribed from 1 Kings 15:14, contradicts what the Chronicler has said in 14:3. Vs. 19 conflicts with vs. 16 in Kings, but this latter divergence is tolerable, since Kings placed the war with Baasha early in Asa’s reign, whereas the Chronicler transposed it to the end.

16:1-10. Not in Kings. The Chronicler’s assertion that in the thirty-sixth year of his reign Asa was at war with Baasha and successfully obtained aid from Ben-hadad of Damascus conflicts with the chronology given in Kings. But a recently discovered inscription on stone (stele), made by Ben-hadad about 850 B.C., appears decisively to confirm purity and practice of our faith has terrible consequences (cf. Rev. 3:16).

17. An Inconsistency.—Here we read that the high places were not taken away by Asa, but in vs. 8 that they were! Strange that the Chronicler should overlook the manifest inconsistency. The reason probably is that this verse was later inserted into the original text. However that may be, we note a factual discrepancy in the Scriptures. What does that sort of thing matter in regard to the true value of the Bible? Nothing at all.

Sin and its consequences, hunger and thirst after righteousness, love, hate and jealousy, heartbreak, grief and tragedy, joy, hope, and the need of God. . . . The strength of the Bible has always been its appeal to this deep and abiding realm of man’s basic experiences, for out of that realm the Bible came.7

In those issues does the Bible yield enlightenment? Were the Hebrews being led into knowledge of the one true God? That is what matters.

16:1-10. An Impious Alliance Suitsly Punished.—Kings relates nothing to the discredit of Asa, unless failure to take away the high places is to be counted. But it tells that in his old age “he was diseased in his feet” (1 Kings 15:23). The Chronicler inferred in that a punishment for some wrongdoing. He then spun partly out of his imagination this story, how Asa, menaced by Baasha king of Israel, persuaded the king of Syria, Ben-hadad, to break his treaty with Baasha and attack Israel. The result of being thus “yoked with an unbeliever” removed the danger to Asa and gained him some useful plunder. But how heinous the king’s sin of mistrust in Yahweh! Had not Asa years earlier, by reliance solely on Yahweh, been granted an astounding victory over the invading against the cities of Israel; and they smote Ijon, and Dan, and Abel-maim, and all the store cities of Naphtali:
5 And it came to pass, when Baasha heard it, that he left off building of Ramah, and let his work cease.
6 Then Asa the king took all Judah; and they carried away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha was building; and he built therewith Geba and Mizpah.

7 ¶ And at that time Hanani the seer came to Asa king of Judah, and said unto him, Because thou hast relied on the king of Syria, and not relied on the LORD thy God, therefore is the host of the king of Syria escaped out of thine hand.

8 Were not the Ethiopians and the Lubim a huge host, with very many chariots and horsemen? yet, because thou didst rely on the LORD, he delivered them into thine hand.
9 For the eyes of the LORD run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him. Herein thou hast done foolishly: therefore from henceforth thou shalt have wars.
10 Then Asa was wroth with the seer, and put him in a prison house; for he was in a rage with him because of this thing. And Asa oppressed some of the people the same time.

11 ¶ And, behold, the acts of Asa, first and last, lo, they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

And it sent the commanders of his armies against the cities of Israel, and they conquered Ijon, Dan, A'bel-ma'im, and all the store-cities of Naphtali. And when Ba'asha heard of it, he stopped building Ramah, and let his work cease. Then King Asa took all Judah, and they carried away the stones of Ramah and its timber, with which Ba'asha had been building, and with them he built Geba and Mizpah.

7 At that time Hana'ni the seer came to Asa king of Judah, and said to him, “Because you relied on the king of Syria, and did not rely on the LORD your God, the army of the king of Syria has escaped you.
8 Were not the Ethiopians and the Libyans a huge army with exceedingly many chariots and horsemen? Yet because you relied on the LORD, he gave them into your hand.
9 For the eyes of the LORD run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show his might in behalf of those whose heart is blameless toward him. You have done foolishly in this; for from now on you will have wars.”
10 Then Asa was angry with the seer, and put him in the stocks, in prison, for he was in a rage with him because of this. And Asa inflicted cruelties upon some of the people at the same time.
11 The acts of Asa, from first to last, are written in the Book of the Kings of Judah.

that it is the figures in Kings which are inaccurate, and allows further chronological inferences to be drawn. The important, wider conclusion follows that the Chronicler was in places utilizing some pre-exilic, annalistic sources which the compilers of Kings neglected or did not possess (cf. W. F. Albright, “A Votive Stele Erected by Ben-Hadad I of Damascus to the God Melcarth,” Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research, No. 87 [1942], pp. 23-29).

And Asa transgressed by purchasing Syrian assistance against Baasha at the cost of temple treasure—a grievous sin in the eyes of the Chronicler, who proceeded to add that a seer rebuked Asa for his failure to rely on Yahweh and that Asa (who had begun so well) now so far lapsed from grace as to punish the bold prophet.

11-14. It is then told (cf. I Kings 15:23-24) that Asa met his merit end through a disease in his feet, but received high honors at his burial.

Ethiopian host? It is said that Hanani, an otherwise unknown seer, administered due reproach and told Asa that if he had relied only on Yahweh he could have beaten both the Israelites and the Syrians as well. Whereupon Asa added to his iniquity by imprisoning Hanani. Alas! What a falling away from grace was here. The Jewish reader of Chronicles could feel that the disease which came upon once good Asa was fully deserved. The truth we may take to heart.
12 And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great: yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians.

13 ¶ And Asa slept with his fathers, and died in the one and fortieth year of his reign.

14 And they buried him in his own sepulchres, which he had made for himself in the city of David, and laid him in the bed which was filled with sweet odors and divers kinds of spices prepared by the apothecaries' art: and they made a very great burning for him.

17 And Jehoshaphat his son reigned in his stead, and strengthened himself against Israel.

2 And he placed forces in all the fenced cities of Judah, and set garrisons in the land of Judah, and in the cities of Ephraim, which Asa his father had taken.

3 And the Lord was with Jehoshaphat, because he walked in the first ways of his father David, and sought not unto Baalim;

4 But sought to the Lord God of his father, and walked in his commandments, and not after the doings of Israel.

D. Reign of Jehoshaphat (17:1–20:37)

Three of the Judean kings are credited in Kings with outstanding virtue and success—Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, and Josiah. Naturally the Chronicler used and enlarged all that was said to their credit in Kings, but he added a great deal of fresh material. It is a moot question whether the Chronicler derived this new material to a considerable degree, or to some degree, from an extensive lost source, or whether it sprang solely from his creative imagination as to what ideally should have happened. (See the remarks on sources in the Intro. [p. 847] and the Exeg. on 16:1-10; 34:1–35:27.)

It seems that the conjectured large source must have been an edifying work, lacking the comparatively high historical value of canonical Kings. What tells heavily against its existence, and in favor of the Chronicler's own authorship, is that virtually all the medicinal remedies but also spells and incantations. Interesting is the very different attitude to doctors taken by Ben Sirach, the author of Ecclesiasticus (200 B.C.), who writes, “My son, in thy sickness be not negligent; but pray unto the Lord, and he shall heal thee. Put away wrongdoing, and order thine hands aright, and cleanse thy heart from all manner of sin. . . . Then give place to the physician, for verily the Lord hath created him; and let him not go from thee, for thou hast need of him. There is a time when in their very hands is the issue for good. For they also shall beseech the Lord, that he may prosper them in giving relief and 5 Therefore the Lord established the kingdom in his hand; and all Judah brought to Jehoshaphat presents; and he had riches and honor in abundance.

6 And his heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord: moreover he took away the high places and groves out of Judah.

7 ¶ Also in the third year of his reign he sent to his princes, even to Ben-hail, and to Obadiah, and to Zechariah, and to Nathan-eel, and to Michaiah, to teach in the cities of Judah.

8 And with them he sent Levites, even Shemaiah, and Nathaniah, and Zebadiah, and Asahel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehonathan, and Adonijah, and Tobijah, and Tob-adonijah, Levites; and with them Elishama and Jehoram, priests.

9 And they taught in Judah, and had the book of the law of the Lord with them, and went about throughout all the cities of Judah, and taught the people.

10 ¶ And the fear of the Lord fell upon all the kingdoms of the lands that were round about Judah, so that they made no war against Jehoshaphat.

new information is cast in the Chronicler's distinctive style. To Jehoshaphat the Chronicler (not Kings) attributed two important measures—arrangements to teach the people the rightful manner of worshipping Yahweh, and a new judicial system.

17:6. He took away the high places: But 20:33 (= 1 Kings 22:43) states the opposite. For a similar contradiction cf. 14:3 with 15:17 (= 1 Kings 15:14). Perhaps 15:17 and 20:33 were inserted by an overzealous scribe to conform with the readings in Kings.

7-9. A royal commission to teach the law of Yahweh. There can be little or no doubt that such action was not taken in Jehoshaphat's reign. But in the sixth century, when the second temple had been built, it was wholly natural and necessary that the religious leaders in Jerusalem should make systematic efforts to revive in the people a belief in their God and an understanding of the reformed ritual. They had taken to heart the exhortations, instructions, and encouragement which found expression in Deuteronomy; and it is significant that Deuteronomy, alone in the Pentateuchal codes, insists that diligent instruction must be given the people, and lays on the Levites this

17:7-9. Religious Education.—(See Exeg.) In this difficult duty and necessity Judaism has excelled. Its system skillfully blends worship in the synagogue and religious customs in the home. Down the centuries the Jews have taken to heart the solemn injunctions in Deut. 6:7-9; 11:18-20, and have stressed that study of the faith should be a lifelong obligation. Christian practice tends to send the child to the church or Sunday school and let religious education end there. It is only too easy to learn to repeat “I believe in . . . ,” but to make no sustained effort to apprehend the Creed more deeply.

11 Also some of the Philistines brought Jehoshaphat presents, and tribute silver; and the Arabians brought him flocks, seven thousand and seven hundred rams, and seven thousand and seven hundred he goats.

12 And Jehoshaphat waxed great exceedingly; and he built in Judah castles, and cities of store.

13 And he had much business in the cities of Judah: and the men of war, mighty men of valor, were in Jerusalem.

14 And these are the numbers of them according to the house of their fathers: Of Judah, the captains of thousands; Adnah the chief, and with him mighty men of valor three hundred thousand.

15 And next to him was Jehohenanan the captain, and with him two hundred and fourscore thousand.

16 And next him was Amasiah the son of Zichri, who willingly offered himself unto the LORD; and with him two hundred thousand mighty men of valor.

17 And of Benjamin; Eliada a mighty man of valor, and with him armed men with bow and shield two hundred thousand.

18 And next him was Jehozabad, and with him a hundred and fourscore thousand ready prepared for the war.

These waited on the king, besides those whom the king put in the fenced cities throughout all Judah.

Now Jehoshaphat had riches and honor in abundance, and joined affinity with Ahab.

18 Now Jehoshaphat had great riches and honor; and he made a marriage paramount duty (see Deut. 6:6-9; 27:11-26; 31:9-13; cf. Adam C. Welch, The Work of the Chronicler [London: British Academy, 1939], pp. 74, 129). Observe the remarkable composition of the commission: five lay nominees of the king, nine Levites, and two priests. Evidently the Chronicler paid scant regard to priests as priests, assigned much responsibility to the laity, but the predominant part to Levites.

14-19. Jehoshaphat’s colossal army numbered 1,160,000 soldiers, not including garrison troops in the Judean towns! For similar symbolic exaggerations cf. 11:1; 13:3; 14:8; also I Chr. 12:25 ff.

18:1-34. Here alone a lengthy narrative primarily concerned with the kingdom of Israel is incorporated in Chronicles (see I Kings 22:1-37). The Chronicler needed this driven to all sorts of devices in order to produce merely interesting discourses with a minimum of educative matter. There is a great need that they should feel freer to talk (as it is said) “over the heads of the people,” relying on a more general eagerness to apprehend better the substance of the Bible and Christian doctrine. A distinguished British man of letters, who had
2 And after certain years he went down to Ahab to Samaria. And Ahab killed sheep and oxen for him in abundance, and for the people that he had with him, and persuaded him to go up with him to Ramoth-gilead.

3 And Ahab king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat king of Judah, Wilt thou go with me to Ramoth-gilead? And he answered him, I am as thou art, and my people as thy people; and we will be with thee in the war.

4 And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, Inquire, I pray thee, at the word of the Lord to-day.

5 Therefore the king of Israel gathered together of prophets four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, Go up: for God will deliver it into the king's hand.

6 But Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the Lord besides, that we might inquire of him?

7 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet one man, by whom we may inquire of the Lord: but I hate him; for he never prophesied good unto me, but always evil: the same is Micaiah the son of Imla. And Jehoshaphat said, Let not the king say so.

8 And the king of Israel called for one of his officers, and said, Fetch quickly Micaiah the son of Imla.

9 And the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat king of Judah sat either of them on his throne, clothed in their robes, and they sat veered from caustic agnosticism toward the Christian standpoint, is reported to have said to an archbishop that he had been much impressed by reading an able but brief and inexpensive book on Christianity, priced at less than one dollar. He received this deserved answer, "I am glad to hear that, but, you know, there are books about Christianity which cost more."

18:3. Latent Compulsion.—When Ahab king of Israel politely asked Jehoshaphat if he would join forces with him to attack the Syrians at Ramoth-gilead, the invitation was virtually an "If you please, you must." Omri, Ahab's father, had made the kingdom of Israel powerful, and its strength continued under Ahab. Judah was not quite reduced to the status of a satellite, but its king, Jehoshaphat, sensibly regarded close friendship with Ahab as a better state of affairs than an uneasy peace and occasional fighting between the two Hebrew kingdoms. The positor who recalls the narratives in Kings about Elijah's adamant antagonism to Ahab's Phoenician queen, Jezebel—fanatically determined that honor and sacrifices should be offered in Israel to her own god, Baal—will perceive that much else was latent in the present situation. For one thing, Jehoshaphat had married his son to Jezebel's daughter, who was as fanatical as her mother—a sinister wedding for Judah, as the future would show (see 21:6; 22:2-3; 23:1-21). The immediate sequel to Jehoshaphat's acceptance of Ahab's request has very great interest. For one thing, it appears that despite Elijah's unflinching opposition to Ahab and Jezebel, Ahab could collect four hundred Israelite prophets who considered themselves inspired in the name of Yahweh to promise victory in the intended campaign.

4-27. Beware of False Prophets.—This intensely interesting passage poses an issue that in a void place at the entering in of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets prophesied before them.

10 And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah had made him horns of iron, and said, Thus saith the LORD, With these thou shalt push Syria until they be consumed.

11 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

12 And the messenger that went to call Micaiah spake to him, saying, Behold, the words of the prophets declare good to the king with one assent; let thy word therefore, I pray thee, be like one of theirs, and speak thou good.

13 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, even what my God saith, that will I speak.

14 And when he was come to the king, the king said unto him, Micaiah, shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And he said, Go ye up, and prosper, and they shall be delivered into your hand.

15 And the king said to him, How many times shall I adjure thee that thou say nothing but the truth to me in the name of the LORD?

16 Then he said, I did see all Israel scattered upon the mountains, as sheep that have no shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master; let them return therefore every man to his house in peace.

story since it led into what he had subsequently to relate—the dreadful corruption of Judah’s dynasty through the marriage of Athaliah, the Baal-worshiping daughter of Jehoshaphat’s son Jehoram (21:5-6) with Ahab and Jezebel. He told the story from constantly arises in religious affairs. Two persons, two parties, each sincere, urge divergent views. How should others try to judge which is the right opinion? The problem was peculiarly difficult for the Hebrews who believed that when men spoke as prophets they declared not their own ideas but a message from a supernatural Being, received by them in trance or ecstasy. Here four hundred prophets promise victory—that was good enough for Ahab. Mark the Judean king’s uneasy instinct that something is being withheld. Reluctantly Ahab summons the prophet Micaiah. He agrees with the four hundred, but with obvious irony. Adjudged, he declares that utter defeat is in fact the word which Yahweh has given him to speak. Micaiah himself then accounts for the divergence. He does not question the sincerity of the ecstasy of the other prophets. But he believes that God, knowing that Ahab is resolved to follow the desires of his own heart, is testing him. If his conscience had been clear he would know that Micaiah spoke truly. We ask, Why did Micaiah’s trance-experience show him the coming catastrophe? We can reason that there was in this man a depth of moral sincerity which the others lacked, such that his subconsciousness or superconsciousness saw into the real heart of things and sensed the latent moral evil (cf. the story of Balaam, Num. 23, especially vs. 26). It has been well said that the predictions of the prophets of victory and peace were “the outcome of the imagination working upon the material presented by the desires,” whereas “the prophecies of Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and others . . . always express the result of profound meditation into 17 And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would not prophesy good unto me, but evil?
18 Again he said, Therefore hear the word of the Lord: I saw the Lord sitting upon his throne, and all the host of heaven standing on his right hand and on his left.
19 And the Lord said, Who shall entice Ahab king of Israel, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one spake saying after this manner, and another saying after that manner.
20 Then there came out a spirit, and stood before the Lord, and said, I will entice him. And the Lord said unto him, Whereewith?
21 And he said, I will go out, and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And the Lord said, Thou shalt entice him, and thou shalt also prevail: go out, and do even so.
22 Now therefore, behold, the Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of these thy prophets, and the Lord hath spoken evil against thee.
23 Then Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah came near, and smote Micaiah upon the cheek, and said, Which way went the Spirit of the Lord from me to speak unto thee?
24 And Micaiah said, Behold, thou shalt see on that day when thou shalt go into an inner chamber to hide thyself.
25 Then the king of Israel said, Take ye Micaiah, and carry him back to Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king's son;
26 And say, Thus saith the king, Put this fellow in the prison, and feed him with bread of affliction and with water of affliction, until I return in peace.
27 And Micaiah said, If thou certainly return in peace, then hath not the Lord his home in peace.'

17 And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, "Did I not tell you that he would not prophesy good concerning me, but evil?" 18 And Micaiah said, "Therefore hear the word of the Lord: I saw the Lord sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing on his right hand and on his left; 19 and the Lord said, 'Who will entice Ahab the king of Israel, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead?' And one said one thing, and another said another. 20 Then a spirit came forward and stood before the Lord, saying, 'I will entice him.' And the Lord said to him, 'By what means?' 21 And he said, 'I will go forth, and will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets.' And he said, 'You are to entice him, and you shall succeed; go forth and do so.' 22 Now therefore behold, the Lord has put a lying spirit in the mouth of these your prophets; the Lord has spoken evil concerning you.'

23 Then Zedeki'ah the son of Chena'anah came near and struck Mica'iah on the cheek, and said, "Which way did the Spirit of the Lord go from me to speak to you?"
24 And Mica'iah said, "Behold, you shall see on that day when you go into an inner chamber to hide yourself." 25 And the king of Israel said, "Seize Mica'iah, and take him back to Amon the governor of the city and to Jo'ash the king's son; 26 and say, 'Thus says the king, Put this fellow in prison, and feed him with scant fare of bread and water, until I return in peace.'" 27 And Mica'iah said, "If you return in peace, the Lord has Hebrew religion in time tried to see some principle by which to judge if a prophet had spoken wrongly. Deuteronomy laid down this rule: If a prophet speaks in Yahweh's name anything contrary to the fundamental, religious, and moral requirements revealed in the "Mosaic" covenant, he must not be believed (see Deut. 18:1-5; cf. I John 4:1-3). 4 Much more illuminating, however, are the records concerning Jeremiah's wrestling with his perplexity that many prophets of his own time passionately de-29 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, I will disguise myself, and will go to the battle: but put thou on thy robes. So the king of Israel disguised himself; and they went to the battle.

30 Now the king of Syria had commanded the captains of the chariots that were with him, saying, Fight ye not with small or great, save only with the king of Israel.
31 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, It is the king of Israel. Therefore they compassed about him to fight: but Jehoshaphat cried out, and the Lord helped him; and God moved them to depart from him.
32 For it came to pass, that, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, they turned back again from pursuing him.
33 And a certain man drew a bow at a venture, and smote the king of Israel between the joints of the harness: therefore he said to his chariot man, Turn thine hand, that thou mayest carry me out of the host; for I am wounded.
34 And the battle increased that day: howbeit the king of Israel stayed himself up in his chariot against the Syrians until the even: and about the time of the sun going down he died.

counsel of God and thus had not truly heard his word (cf. Jer. 23). 2 19.2. Inventing a Prophet.—Conceivably the Chronicler found this mention of Jehu . . . the seer in a source available to him but not used for Kings. It is much more likely that Jehu is Godly, and love them that hate the Lord: therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord.

3 Nevertheless, there are good things found in thee, in that thou hast taken away the groves out of the land, and hast prepared thine heart to seek God.

4 And Jehoshaphat dwelt at Jerusalem: and he went out again through the people from Beer-sheba to mount Ephraim, and brought them back unto the Lord God of their fathers.

5 ¶ And he set judges in the land throughout all the fenced cities of Judah, city by city,

6 And said to the judges, Take heed what ye do: for ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment.

7 Wherefore now let the fear of the Lord be upon you; take heed and do it: for there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, nor respect of persons, nor taking of gifts.

4-9. Local courts of justice were set up in the provincial towns; in Jerusalem, a court of appeal. No doubt it was so in the postexilic community. There is no solid evidence or probability that Jehoshaphat instituted any such judicial system concerning civil, criminal, and ritual matters. The Chronicler reflected back to the authority of a good king the good institution with which he was cognizant. There was no need, however, which the Chronicler sought in this way to affirm. He did not conceive of God merely as the revealer of rules and regulations in past time, but as the living God. How long has reluctance to believe that been the besetting weakness in the history of the Christian church—and is still?

19:2. Helping the Ungodly.—Men are fertile in excuses (cf. Luke 14:18-20). Jehoshaphat could argue that friendly relations with Israel greatly advantaged Judah and did not imply that he would countenance in its temple sacrifices in honor of the Phoenician Baal which Jezebel imperiously demanded in Israel. The prophet was forthright, Should you help the wicked? It was a memorable saying. For less than affairs of state—for business advantage, social pride, timid impulse—men are tempted to compromise, hoping to touch pitch without being much defiled, and forgetting that wider interests than our own are injured when we attempt to worship God and mammon alike.

6. The Course of Justice.—Hebrew religion evolved a sublime conception of the basis of law and the due administration of justice. The foundation of law (right) should not be conceived to be a social contract—the wishes of the

Moreover, as Welch emphasizes in the context, the vitally important matter is the principle

Moreover in Jerusalem did Jehoshaphat set of the Levites, and of the priests, and of the chief of the fathers of Israel, for the judgment of the LOR, and for controversies, when they returned to Jerusalem.

And he charged them, saying, Thus shall ye do in the fear of the LOR, faithfully, and with a perfect heart.

And what cause soever shall come to you of your brethren that dwell in their cities, between blood and blood, between law and commandment, statutes and judgments, ye shall even warn them that they trespass not against the LOR, and so wrath come upon you, and upon your brethren: this do, and ye shall not trespass.

And, behold, Amariah the chief priest is over you in all matters of the LOR; and Zebadiah the son of Ishmael, the ruler of the house of Judah, for all the king's matters: also the Levites shall be officers before you. Deal courageously, and the LOR shall be with the good.

for him to confer upon it the still more august authority of David. To what king could he more fittingly ascribe its origin than to Jehoshaphat, whose name signifies "Yahweh is judge"?

Mark the composition of the court charged with disputes local to Jerusalem and with appeals. Note also the eminence accorded to Levites—they are named first, and they act as its executive officers (vs. 11). For civil trials the lay representative of government presided; for religious ones, the chief priest.

They returned to Jerusalem is a textual error. A slight change in the Hebrew yields the excellent sense, "and for the controversies of the inhabitants of Jerusalem."

Concerning bloodshed: I.e., whether the case amounted to manslaughter or murder.

Note here and in vss. 6-7 how the solemn demand that the judges shall be incorrupt and fearless corresponds to the like insistence in Deuteronomy which is less precise concerning the institution of the judges—a fact possibly indicating a stage of development rather earlier than Chronicles (see Welch, op. cit., pp. 129-31).

governed—or as the principle that might makes right—what the governors find convenient to enforce. Instead, men must support right by an endeavor to attain an absolute standard—the perfection of God's righteousness. Richard Hooker wrote: "of Law there can be no less acknowledged than that her seat is the bosom of God." That was the conception which Jehoshaphat enjoined upon the men whom he is said to have sent out to teach and maintain the ways of true justice in his land: Ye judge not for man, but for the LOR. Magnificent words! The administrators of justice must be absolutely incorrupt, the path to justice as certain and easy for the poor as for the rich, for the humble as for the influential. When that ideal has once been stated, ever afterward the worth of a civilization's culture ought to be measured by its approximation to that standard. And very searching this is for the pride of powerful nations and persons. Are the poor at a disadvantage in our courts? Are our officers of justice, from the greatest to the least, incorruptible? Or is it only too true that many litigants have sorrowfully had to conclude that Judge Lynch has a brother named "Fleece"? The practical interpretation of the ideal among the Hebrews improved steadily; the present passage marks an upward stage. Is our standard improving? That is another revealing test of a nation's conscience and capacity. Are we simply tolerant of old abuses, or unable to abolish them? There was a phase in American history when Lynch law was in certain places the most practicable defense against crime.

5. The new court: Congruous with the second temple but not with Solomon’s.

In the West, from the Alleghanies to the Golden Gate, the pioneer settlers resorted to popular justice to get rid of bands of outlaws, and to regulate society during that period when laws were weak or confused, when the laws made in the East did not suit western conditions, and when courts and officials were scarce and distant. ... However, the lack of regard for law fostered by the conditions described led to a survival of the lynching habit after the necessity for it had passed away.6

If the habit still persists, is not the indictment grave? Medieval Jewish justice—in the systems of the Beth Din—eventually evolved a way by 20: After this the Moabites and Ammonites, and with them some of the Me-u’mites, came against Jehosh’aphat for battle. Some men came and told Jehosh’aphat, “A great multitude is coming against you from Edom, from beyond the sea; and, behold, they are in Haz’azon-ta’mar” (that is, En-ge’di). Then Jehosh’aphat feared, and set himself to seek the Lord, and proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah. And Judah assembled to seek help from the Lord; from all the cities of Judah they came to seek the Lord.

5 And Jehosh’aphat stood in the assembly of Judah and Jerusalem, in the house of the Lord, before the new court,

6 And said, O Lord God of our fathers, art thou not God in heaven? Dost thou not rule over all the kingdoms of the nations? In thy hand are power and might, so that none is able to withstand thee?

7 Art not thou our God, who didst drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and gavest it to the seed of Abraham thy friend for ever?

8 And they dwelt therein, and have built thee a sanctuary therein for thy name, saying,
9 If, when evil cometh upon us, as the sword, judgment, or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence, (for thy name is in this house,) and cry unto thee in our affliction, then thou wilt hear and help.

10 And now, behold, the children of Ammon and Moab and mount Seir, whom thou wouldest not let Israel invade, when they came out of the land of Egypt, but they turned from them, and destroyed them not;

11 Behold, I say, how they reward us, to come to cast us out of thy possession, which thou hast given us to inherit.

12 O our God, wilt thou not judge them? for we have no might against this great company that cometh against us; neither know we what to do: but our eyes are upon thee.

13 And all Judah stood before the LORD, with their little ones, their wives, and their children.

14 ¶ Then upon Jahaziel the son of Zechariah, the son of Beniaah, the son of Jeiel, the son of Mattaniah, a Levite of the sons of Asaph, came the Spirit of the LORD in the midst of the congregation;

15 And he said, Hearken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat, Thus saith the LORD unto you, Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not yours, but God's.

16 To-morrow go ye down against them: behold, they come up by the cliff of Ziz; and ye shall find them at the end of the brook, before the wilderness of Jeruel.

17 Ye shall not need to fight in this battle: set yourselves, stand ye still, and see the salvation of the LORD with you, O Judah and Jerusalem: fear not, nor be dis-thy name, saying, 9 'If evil comes upon us, the sword, judgment, or pestilence, or famine, we will stand before this house, and before thee, for thy name is in this house, and cry to thee in our affliction, and thou wilt hear and save.' 10 And now behold, the men of Ammon and Moab and Mount Se'ir, whom thou wouldest not let Israel invade when they came from the land of Egypt, and whom they avoided and did not destroy — 11 behold, they reward us by coming to drive us out of thy possession, which thou hast given us to inherit. 12 O our God, wilt thou not execute judgment upon them? For we are powerless against this great multitude that is coming against us. We do not know what to do, but our eyes are upon thee.'

13 Meanwhile all the men of Judah stood before the LORD, with their little ones, their wives, and their children. 14 And the Spirit of the LORD came upon Jahaziel the son of Zechariah, son of Benai'ah, son of Je'i-el, son of Mattan'i'ah, a Levite of the sons of Asaph, in the midst of the assembly. 15 And he said, "Hearken, all Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem, and King Jehoshaphat: Thus says the LORD to you, 'Fear not, and be not dismayed at this great multitude; for the battle is not yours but God's. 16 To-morrow go down against them; behold, they will come up by the ascent of Ziz; you will find them at the end of the valley, east of the wilderness of Jeruel. 17 You will not need to fight in this battle; take your position, stand still, and see the victory of the LORD on your behalf, O Judah and Jerusale.' Fear not, and be not dismayed; tomorrow!

Or the sword of judgment
18 And Jehoshaphat bowed his head with his face to the ground: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem fell before the Lord, worshipping the Lord.
19 And the Levites, of the children of the Kohathites, and of the children of the Korhites, stood up to praise the Lord God of Israel with a loud voice on high.
20 ¶ And they rose early in the morning, and went forth into the wilderness of Tekoa: and as they went forth, Jehoshaphat stood and said, Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem; Believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper.
21 And when he had consulted with the people, he appointed singers unto the Lord, and that should praise the beauty of holiness, as they went out before the army, and to say, Praise the Lord; for his mercy endureth for ever.
22 ¶ And when they began to sing and to praise, the Lord set ambushments against the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, which were come against Judah; and they were smitten.
23 For the children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the inhabitants of mount Seir, utterly to slay and destroy them: and when they had made an end of the inhabitants of Seir, every one helped to destroy another.
24 And when Judah came toward the watchtower in the wilderness, they looked unto the multitude, and, behold, they were dead bodies fallen to the earth, and none escaped.
25 And when Jehoshaphat and his people came to take away the spoil of them, they found among them in abundance both men, and women, and children, and in abundance of spoil, and more than could be brought away; and they rested three days.

20. Believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper: Surely the Chronicler had, as the collect puts it, read, marked, learned, and inwardly digested Isaiah's undeviating trust in God (see Isa. 7:9).
26 ¶ And on the fourth day they assembled themselves in the valley of Berachah; for there they blessed the Lord: therefore the name of the same place was called, the valley of Berachah, unto this day.

27 Then they returned, every man of Judah and Jerusalem, and Jehoshaphat in the forefront of them, to go again to Jerusalem with joy; for the Lord had made them to rejoice over their enemies.

Mareshah prophesied against Jehoshaphat, saying, Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, the Lord hath broken thy works. And the ships were broken, that they were not able to go to Tarshish.

Now Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David. And Jehoram his son reigned in his stead.

And he had brethren the sons of Jehoshaphat, Azariah, and Jehiel, and Zechariah, and Azariah, and Michael, and Shephatiah: all these were the sons of Jehoshaphat king of Israel.

And their father gave them great gifts of silver, and of gold, and of precious things, with fenced cities in Judah: but the kingdom gave he to Jehoram; because he was the firstborn.

Now when Jehoram was risen up to the kingdom of his father, he strengthened himself, and slew all his brethren with the sword, and divers also of the princes of Israel.

Jehoram was thirty and two years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

And he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, like as did the house of Ahab: for he had the daughter of Ahab to wife: and he wrought that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord.

Howbeit the Lord would not destroy the house of David, because of the covenant that he had made with David, and as he promised to give a light to him and to his sons for ever.

In his days the Edomites revolted from under the dominion of Judah, and made themselves a king.

Then Jehoram went forth with his princes, and all his chariots with him: and he rose up by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him in, and the captains of the chariots.

So the Edomites revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. The same time also did Libnah revolt from under his kingdom.

against Jehosh’aphat, saying, “Because you have joined with Ahazi’ah, the Lord will destroy what you have made.” And the ships were wrecked and were not able to go to Tarshish.

Jehosh’aphat slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David; and Jeho’ram his son reigned in his stead. He had brothers, the sons of Jehosh’aphat: Azari’ah, Jehi’el, Zecari’ah, Azari’ah, Michael, and Shepha-ti’ah; all these were the sons of Jehosh’aphat king of Judah. Their father gave them great gifts, of silver, gold, and valuable possessions, together with fortified cities in Judah; but he gave the kingdom to Jeho’ram, because he was the first-born. When Jeho’ram had ascended the throne of his father and was established, he slew all his brothers with the sword, and also some of the princes of Judah.

Jeho’ram was thirty-two years old when he became king, and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem. In his days Edom revolted from the rule of Judah, and set up a king of their own. Then Jeho’ram passed over with his commanders and all his chariots, and he rose by night and smote the E’domites who had surrounded him and his chariot commanders.

So Edom revolted from the rule of Judah to this day. At that time Libnah also rebuked Jehoshaphat, saying, “Because you have joined with Ahazi’ah, the Lord will destroy what you have made.” And the ships were wrecked and were not able to go to Tarshish.

So Edom revolted from the rule of Judah to this day. At that time Libnah also re-hand; because he had forsaken the Lord God of his fathers.

11 Moreover he made high places in the mountains of Judah, and caused the inhabitants of Jerusalem to commit fornication, and compelled Judah thereto.

12 ¶ And there came a writing to him from Elijah the prophet, saying, Thus saith the Lord God of David thy father, Because thou hast not walked in the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father, nor in the ways of Asa king of Judah,

13 But hast walked in the way of the kings of Israel, and hast made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to go a whoring, like to the whoredoms of the house of Ahab, and also hast slain thy brethren of thy father's house, which were better than thyself:

14 Behold, with a great plague will the Lord smite thy people, and thy children, and thy wives, and all thy goods:

15 And thou shalt have great sickness by disease of thy bowels, until thy bowels fall out by reason of the sickness day by day.

16 ¶ Moreover the Lord stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines, and of the Arabians, that were near the Ethiopians:

17 And they came up into Judah, and brake into it, and carried away all the substance that was found in the king's house, and his sons also, and his wives; so that there was never a son left him, save Jehoahaz, the youngest of his sons.

There may have been some traditional authority for these notices, but it should be remembered that after the fall of Jerusalem pressure from those regions was persistently exerted against the stricken Judeans.

17. This curious verse cannot signify that the Arabians took and plundered Jerusalem. Presumably they carried off royal property from Judah and persons of the royal family who had been with the defeated army.

would scruple to rob the dead spend all their time in robbing the living.”

21:12-15. Denounced by the Dead.—Elijah, long dead, did not compose this letter to be delivered to a future king of Judah. Why was the Chronicler not content to evoke yet another of his otherwise unknown prophets to reproach Jehoram? Possibly he felt King Jehoram’s enormities so flagrant that only the mighty Elijah would seem adequate to denounce them. A conjecture, however, may be hazarded. Did a deeply wronged citizen inscribe on the walls of Jehoram’s palace certain of the flaming words which Elijah had formerly addressed to Ahab and Jezebel? Popular memory of the daring deed may have been transmuted by the Chronicler into a writing to him from Elijah. When the ruins of the Maccabean governor’s house at 21:18 And after all this the Lord smote him in his bowels with an incurable disease.
19 And it came to pass, that in process of time, after the end of two years, his bowels fell out by reason of his sickness: so he died of sore diseases. And his people made no burning for him, like the burning of his fathers.
20 Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem eight years, and departed without being desired. Howbeit they buried him in the city of David, but not in the sepulchres of the kings.

22 And the inhabitants of Jerusalem made Ahaziah his youngest son king in his stead: for the band of men that came with the Arabs to the camp had slain all the eldest. So Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah reigned.
22 Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Athaliah the daughter of Omri.
3 He also walked in the ways of the house of Ahab: for his mother was his counselor to do wickedly.
4 Wherefore he did evil in the sight of the Lord like the house of Ahab: for they were his counselors, after the death of his father, to his destruction.
5 ¶ He walked also after their counsel, and went with Jehoram the son of Ahab king of Israel to war against Hazael king of Syria at Ramoth-gilead: and the Syrians smote Joram.

22:1-9. Ahaziah (son of Jehoram and Athaliah, grandson of Jehoshaphat) was king of Judah for one year only, and on his death Athaliah, the queen mother, seized the throne. Ahab, the king of Israel contemporary with the Judean Jehoshaphat and Jehoram, had married the Baal-worshiping Phoenician princess, Jezebel. They had a daughter and two sons, one of whom, Ahaziah, ruled Israel after Ahab's death for two years only, and was succeeded on the throne by his brother Jehoram. The daughter Athaliah was as strong-minded as her mother; the point is that through her marriage terrible defeat, died in protracted agony, and at burial was shown signal dishonor. One phrase that he used may give us pause: Jehoram departed with no one's regret. His people were glad when he died; the world was better without him. How far do we ourselves possess or lack qualities which will make men give thanks that we were born, and mourn for our death?

22:3. An Evil Heritage.—It stands written, his mother was his counselor in doing wickedly.
6 And he returned to be healed in Jezreel because of the wounds which were given him at Ramah, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria. And Azariah the son of Jehoram king of Judah went down to see Jehoram the son of Ahab at Jezreel, because he was sick.

7 And the destruction of Ahaziah was of God by coming to Joram: for when he was come, he went out with Jehoram against Jehu the son of Nimshi, whom the Lord had anointed to cut off the house of Ahab.

8 And it came to pass, that, when Jehu was executing judgment upon the house of Ahab, and found the princes of Judah, and the sons of the brethren of Ahaziah, that ministered to Ahaziah, he slew them.

9 And he sought Ahaziah: and they caught him, (for he was hid in Samaria,) and brought him to Jehu: and when they had slain him, they buried him: Because, said they, he is the son of Jehoshaphat, who sought the Lord with all his heart. So the house of Ahaziah had no power to keep still the kingdom.

10 But when Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the seed royal of the house of Judah.

11 But Jehoshabeath, the daughter of the king, took Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons that were slain, and put him and his nurse in a bedchamber. So Jehoshabeath, the daughter of king Jehoram, the wife of Jehoiada the priest, (for she was the sister of Ahaziah,) hid him from Athaliah, so that she slew him not.

12 And he was with them hid in the house of God six years: and Athaliah reigned over the land.

And the Syrians wounded Joram, 6 and he returned to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds which he had received at Ramah, when he fought against Haz'ael king of Syria. And Ahazi'ah the son of Jeho'ram king of Judah went down to see Joram the son of Ahab in Jezreel, because he was sick.

7 But it was ordained by God that the downfall of Ahazi'ah should come about through his going to visit Joram. For when he came there he went out with Jeho'ram to meet Jehu the son of Nimshi, whom the Lord had anointed to destroy the house of Ahab. 8 And when Jehu was executing judgment upon the house of Ahab, he met the princes of Judah and the sons of Ahazi'ah's brothers, who attended Ahazi'ah, and he killed them. 9 He searched for Ahazi'ah, and he was captured while hiding in Sam'aria, and he was brought to Jehu and put to death. They buried him, for they said, "He is the grandson of Jehosh'aphat, who sought the Lord with all his heart." And the house of Ahazi'ah had no one able to rule the kingdom.

10 Now when Athali'ah the mother of Ahazi'ah saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the royal family of the house of Judah. 11 But Jeho-shab'e-ath, the daughter of the king, took Jo'ash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him away from among the king's sons who were about to be slain, and she put him and his nurse in a bedchamber. Thus Jeho-shab'e-ath, the daughter of King Jeho'ram and wife of Jehoi'ada the priest, because she was a sister of Ahazi'ah, hid him from Athali'ah, so that she did not slay him; 12 and he remained with them six years, hid in the house of God, while Athali'ah reigned over the land.

to the Judean king named Jehoram, the poison of Jezebel's fanatical zeal for her Phoenician god became venomously active in Jerusalem (vss. 3-4). No wonder that her son, the Judean Ahaziah, was hand-in-glove with his uncle, Jehoram king of Israel (vs. 5). In vs. 2 granddaughter is correct. In vs. 9 Samaria must denote the territory, not the city itself.

22:10-23:21. Concerning Athaliah's tyranny, and assassination, II Kings 11:1-21 relates that Jehoiada the chief priest gained the aid of army officers for his plot to kill Frightful epitaph, deservedly inscribed on the memory of Queen Athaliah. Alas for her son Ahaziah, environed by her strong, merciless personality. She had the same disposition as had her imperious mother, Queen Jezebel. Perhaps it is not masculine prejudice to feel that when a woman is bad she is apt to be venomously bad. History and literature spotlight famous women, not least those in high places whose wickedness entailed great consequences, e.g., Cleopatra,
And in the seventh year Jehoiada strengthened himself, and took the captains of hundreds, Azariah the son of Jeroham, and Ishmael the son of Jehohanan, and Azariah the son of Obed, and Maaseiah the son of Adaiah, and Elishaphat the son of Zichri, into covenant with him.

And they went about in Judah, and gathered the Levites out of all the cities of Judah, and the chief of the fathers of Israel, and they came to Jerusalem.

And all the congregation made a covenant with the king in the house of God. And he said unto them, Behold, the king’s son shall reign, as the Lord hath said of the sons of David.

This is the thing that ye shall do; A third part of you entering on the sabbath, of the priests and of the Levites, shall be porters of the doors; and a third part shall be at the king’s house; and a third part at the gate of the foundation: and all the people shall be in the courts of the house of the Lord.

But let none come into the house of the Lord, save the priests, and they that minister of the Levites; they shall go in, for they are holy: but all the people shall keep the watch of the Lord.

And the Levites shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand; and whosoever else cometh into the house, he shall be put to death: but be ye with the king when he cometh in, and when he goeth out.

So the Levites and all Judah did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest had commanded, and took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that were to go out on the sabbath: for Jehoiada the priest dismissed not the courses.

Moreover Jehoiada the priest delivered to the captains of hundreds spears, and bucklers, and shields, that had been king David’s, which were in the house of God.

But in the seventh year Jehoi’ada took courage, and entered into a compact with the commanders of hundreds, Azari’ah the son of Jeroh’am, Ish’mael the son of Jeho’ha’nan, Azari’ah the son of Obed, Na-as’e’i’ah, the son of Ada’i’ah, and Elisha’phat the son of Zichri. And they went about through Judah and gathered the Levites from all the cities of Judah, and the heads of fathers’ houses of Israel, and they came to Jerusalem. And all the assembly made a covenant with the king in the house of God. And Jehoi’ada said to them, “Behold, the king’s son! Let him reign, as the Lord spoke concerning the sons of David. This is the thing that you shall do: of you priests and Levites who come off duty on the sabbath, one third shall be gatekeepers, and one third shall be at the king’s house, and one third at the Gate of the Foundation; and all the people shall be in the courts of the house of the Lord. Let no one enter the house of the Lord except the priests and ministering Levites; they may enter, for they are holy, but all the people shall keep the charge of the Lord. The Levites shall surround the king, each with his weapons in his hand; and whoever enters the house shall be slain. Be with the king when he comes in, and when he goes out.”

The Levites and all Judah did according to all that Jehoi’ada the priest commanded. They each brought his men, who were to go off duty on the sabbath, with those who were to come on duty on the sabbath; for Jehoi’ada the priest did not dismiss the divisions. And Jehoi’ada the priest delivered to the captains the spears and the large and small shields that had been King David’s, which were in the house

Heb he
10 And he set all the people, every man having his weapon in his hand, from the right side of the temple to the left side of the temple, along by the altar and the temple, by the king round about.

11 Then they brought out the king's son, and put upon him the crown, and gave him the testimony, and made him king. And Jehoiada and his sons anointed him, and said, God save the king.

12 ¶ Now when Athaliah heard the noise of the people running and praising the king, she came to the people into the house of the LORD:

13 And she looked, and, behold, the king stood at his pillar at the entering in, and the princes and the trumpets by the king: and all the people of the land rejoiced, and sounded with trumpets, also the singers with instruments of music, and such as taught to sing praise. Then Athaliah rent her clothes, and said, Treason, treason.

14 Then Jehoiada the priest brought out the captains of hundreds that were set over the host, and said unto them, Have her forth of the ranges: and whoso followeth her, let him be slain with the sword. For the priest said, Slay her not in the house of the LORD.

15 So they laid hands on her; and when she was come to the entering of the horse gate by the king's house, they slew her there.

16 ¶ And Jehoiada made a covenant between him, and between all the people, and between the king, that they should be the LORD's people.

17 Then all the people went to the house of Ba'al, and brake it down, and brake his altars and his images in pieces, and slew Mattan the priest of Ba'al before the altars.

18 Also Jehoiada appointed the offices of the house of the LORD by the hand of the priests the Levites, whom David had distributed in the house of the LORD, to offer the burnt offerings of the LORD, as it is written in the law of Moses, with rejoicing and with singing, as it was ordained by David.

23:11. And gave him the testimony: An ingenious emendation (נאניה instead of נאהיה, "and the bracelets") possibly restores the correct reading.

18. The priests the Levites: See also 50:27. That the Deuteronomic equation of priests with Levites in general has not everywhere in Chronicles been "corrected" to accord with the standpoint of the final Law ("the priests and the Levites") is most 19 And he set the porters at the gates of the house of the Lord, that none which was unclean in any thing should enter in.

20 And he took the captains of hundreds, and the nobles, and the governors of the people, and all the people of the land, and brought down the king from the house of the Lord: and they came through the high gate into the king's house, and set the king upon the throne of the kingdom.

21 And all the people of the land rejoiced: and the city was quiet, after that they had slain Athaliah with the sword.

24 Joash was seven years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Zibiah of Beer-sheba.

2 And Joash did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all the days of Jehoiada the priest.

3 And Jehoiada took for him two wives; and he begat sons and daughters.

4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Joash was minded to repair the house of the Lord.

5 And he gathered together the priests and the Levites, and said unto them, Go out unto the cities of Judah, and gather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year, and see that ye hasten the matter. Howbeit the Levites fastened it not.

6 And the king called for Jehoiada the chief, and said unto him, Why hast thou not required of the Levites to bring in out of Judah and out of Jerusalem the collection, according to the commandment of Moses the servant of the Lord, and of the congregation of Israel, as it is written in the law?

important evidence that the Chronicler himself used the phrase since it was not unorthodox in his time (see Exeg. on I Chr. 6:1-81).

F. REIGN OF JOASH (24:1-27)

Joash, seven years old, owed his accession to the priest Jehoiada, and his preservation in infancy to Jehoiada's sister (22:11). Joash came to a bad end, but the Chronicler could make the most of his youthful years during which the king was under the good influence of Jehoiada.

24:4-14. The Chronicler could rejoice to credit the young king with making arrangements for the repair and maintenance of the temple, which was in shocking condition of such children! May your reward be great in heaven! In the Lady Chapel of twentieth-century Liverpool Cathedral there are, uniquely, twenty-one windows dedicated to women who were good and great in English history.

24:5. Mercenary Clerics.—Howbeit the Levites fastened it not. The clergy went on a "Go slow strike," dreading lest perhaps the king's collection might lessen their revenues. Shame on them! And there is no reason to suppose gation of Israel, for the tabernacle of witness?
7 For the sons of Athaliah, that wicked woman, had broken up the house of God; and also all the dedicated things of the house of the LORD did they bestow upon Baalim.
8 And at the king's commandment they made a chest, and set it without at the gate of the house of the LORD.
9 And they made a proclamation through Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to the LORD the collection that Moses the servant of God laid upon Israel in the wilderness.
10 And all the princes and all the people rejoiced, and brought in, and cast into the chest, until they had made an end.
11 Now it came to pass, that at what time the chest was brought unto the king's office by the hand of the Levites, and when they saw that there was much money, the king's scribe and the high priest's officer came and emptied the chest, and took it, and carried it to his place again. Thus they did day by day, and gathered money in abundance.
12 And the king and Jehoiada gave it to such as did the work of the service of the house of the LORD, and hired masons and carpenters to repair the house of the LORD, and also such as wrought iron and brass to mend the house of the LORD.
13 So the workmen wrought, and the work was perfected by them, and they set the house of God in his state, and strengthened it.
14 And when they had finished it, they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada, whereof were made vessels for the house of the LORD, even vessels to minister, and to offer withal, and spoons, and vessels of gold and silver. And they by Moses, the servant of the LORD, on the congregation of Israel for the tent of testimony?" 7 For the sons of Athalia'h, that wicked woman, had broken into the house of God; and had also used all the dedicated things of the house of the LORD for the Ba'als.
8 So the king commanded, and they made a chest, and set it outside the gate of the house of the LORD. 9 And proclamation was made throughout Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in for the LORD the tax that Moses the servant of God laid upon Israel in the wild-derness. 10 And all the princes and all the people rejoiced and brought their tax and dropped it into the chest until they had finished. 11 And whenever the chest was brought to the king's officers by the Levites, when they saw that there was much money in it, the king's secretary and the officer of the chief priest would come and empty the chest and take it and return it to its place.
Thus they did day after day, and collected money in abundance. 12 And the king and Jehoi'ada gave it to those who had charge of the work of the house of the LORD, and they hired masons and carpenters to restore the house of the LORD, and also workers in iron and bronze to repair the house of the LORD. 13 So those who were engaged in the work labored, and the repairing went forward in their hands, and they restored the house of God to its proper condition and strengthened it. 14 And when they had finished, they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoi'ada, and with it were made utensils for the house of the LORD, both for the service and for the burnt offerings, and dishes for incense, and vessels of gold and silver. And they offered burnt due to Athaliah and her partisans (sons). He could assign to the Levites charge of the generous contributions for the "fabric fund," which the laity placed in an offertory box. This account subtly differs from II Kings 12:5-16, where seemingly the first intention for effecting repairs was to use part of the clergy's revenues, and the offertory box was resorted to only when the proposal was stultified by clerical opposition. Revisers (in vss. 5, 6, 9, 14a) overlaid what the Chronicler wrote in order to align proceedings with the provisions concerning maintenance of the tabernacle in the desert (see Welch, op. cit., pp. 78-80).

that in Solomon's temple the Levites were other than amply supported. Ugly instances of clerical avarice and obstruction of good causes can be gleaned from history. Today the broad fact is that no learned profession is so cruelly underpaid as a whole. Often it is the minister's family handicapped by financial strain, and his dwelling with worn-out furnishings, which stand offered burnt offerings in the house of the Lord continually all the days of Jehoiada.

15 ¶ But Jehoiada waxed old, and was full of days when he died; a hundred and thirty years old was he when he died.

16 And they buried him in the city of David among the kings, because he had done good in Israel, both toward God, and toward his house.

17 Now after the death of Jehoiada came the princes of Judah, and made obeisance to the king. Then the king hearkened unto them.

18 And they left the house of the Lord God of their fathers, and served groves and idols: and wrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem for this their trespass.

19 Yet he sent prophets to them, to bring them again unto the Lord; and they testified against them: but they would not give ear.

20 And the Spirit of God came upon Zechariah the son of Jehoiada the priest, which stood above the people, and said unto them, Thus saith God, Why transgress ye the commandments of the Lord, that ye cannot prosper? because ye have forsaken the Lord, he hath also forsaken you.

21 And they conspired against him, and stoned him with stones at the commandment of the king in the court of the house of the Lord.

22 Thus Joash the king remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, but slew his son. And when he died, he said, The Lord look upon it, and require it.

23 ¶ And it came to pass at the end of the year, that the host of Syria came up against him: and they came to Judah and Jerusalem, and destroyed all the princes of the people from among the people, and sent all the spoil of them unto the king of Damascus.

15-26. On the death of Jehoiada a faction which favored Athaliah's unregenerate regime gained the good will of Joash. That may well be true. This development leads up to the dark end of Joash's reign. Threatened by victories of Hazael, the powerful in much more need of repairs than the church; and it is the laity who do not hasten to observe the needs and remedy them.

22. Black ingratitude.—Joash owed the preservation of his life in infancy to the boldness of Jehoiada's wife (22:10-12); owed his succession to the throne to Jehoiada's courage against Athaliah, and owed how much more in the ensuing years to his support and good counsel. But as soon as his benefactor was dead, he and his nobles undid the reforms that had been made (vss. 17-18), and in the end he slew his

24 For the army of the Syrians came with a small company of men, and the Lord delivered a very great host into their hand, because they had forsaken the Lord God of their fathers. So they executed judgment against Joash.

25 And when they were departed from him, (for they left him in great diseases,) his own servants conspired against him for the blood of the sons of Jehoiada the priest, and slew him on his bed, and he died: and they buried him in the city of David, but they buried him not in the sepulchres of the kings.

26 And these are they that conspired against him; Zabad the son of Shim'eath an Ammonitess, and Jehozabad the son of Shimrith a Moabitess.

27 ¶ Now concerning his sons, and the greatness of the burdens laid upon him, and the repairing of the house of God, behold, they are written in the story of the book of the kings. And Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.

25 Amaziah was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, but not with a perfect heart.

3 ¶ Now it came to pass, when the kingdom was established to him, that he slew his servants that had killed the king his father.

king of Syria, Joash is said to have purchased immunity by use of temple treasure, and thereafter to have been assassinated by his servants. An old tradition may provide the vivid tale of the murder of the prophet Zechariah (see Luke 11:51).

G. Reign of Amaziah (25:1-28)

Kings relates that Amaziah, puffed up by a victory over Edom, rashly challenged the king of Israel and was utterly defeated; Jerusalem was taken and part of its wall benefactor's son, Zechariah, who as a prophet denounced his wickedness to his royal face. Now the persons of the prophets were regarded as sacrosanct, since they claimed to be speaking under divine constraint. Angry, defiant kings might go so far as to maltreat them, but when Joash had Zechariah stoned to death, that was appalling sacrilege. The populace must have been horrified; and some even in the palace circles also, for when the opportunity came they slew Joash in his bed (vs. 25). It is perhaps to the martyrdom of this Zechariah that Christ referred (Matt. 23:35). Ingratitude, we may think to ourselves, so black does not closely concern our character. Are there, however, deeds or frames of mind that might be styled dark, gray, or even white ingratitude?

25:1-28. Unstable in All His Ways.—Read through this chapter and it will be apparent that instability (cf. Jas. 4:8) suitably describes 4 But he slew not their children, but did as it is written in the law in the book of Moses, where the Lord commanded, saying, The fathers shall not die for the children, neither shall the children die for the fathers, but every man shall die for his own sin.

5 Moreover Amaziah gathered Judah together, and made them captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, according to the houses of their fathers, throughout all Judah and Benjamin: and he numbered them from twenty years old and above, and found them three hundred thousand choice men, able to go forth to war, that could handle spear and shield.

6 He hired also a hundred thousand mighty men of valor out of Israel for a hundred talents of silver.

7 But there came a man of God to him, saying, O king, let not the army of Israel go with thee; for the Lord is not with Israel, to wit, with all the children of Ephraim.

8 But if thou wilt go, do it, be strong for the battle: God shall make thee fall before the enemy: for God hath power to help, and to cast down.

9 And Amaziah said to the man of God, But what shall we do for the hundred talents which I have given to the army of Israel? And the man of God answered, The Lord is able to give thee much more than this.

10 Then Amaziah separated them, to wit, the army that was come to him out of Ephraim, to go home again: wherefore their anger was greatly kindled against Judah, and they returned home in great anger.

11 ¶ And Amaziah strengthened himself, and led forth his people, and went to the valley of Salt, and smote the children of Seir ten thousand.

who had slain the king his father. 4 But he did not put their children to death, according to what is written in the law, in the book of Moses, where the Lord commanded, "The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, or the children be put to death for the fathers; but every man shall die for his own sin."

5 Then Amazi'ah assembled the men of Judah, and set them by fathers' houses under commanders of thousands and of hundreds for all Judah and Benjamin. He mustered those twenty years old and upward, and found that they were three hundred thousand picked men, fit for war, able to handle spear and shield. 6 He hired also a hundred thousand mighty men of valor from Israel for a hundred talents of silver.

7 But a man of God came to him and said, "O king, do not let the army of Israel go with you, for the Lord is not with Israel, with all these Ephraimites. 8 But if you suppose that in this way you will be strong for war, 9 God will cast you down before the enemy, for God has power to help or to cast down." 9 And Amazi'ah said to the man of God, "But what shall we do about the hundred talents which I have given to the army of Israel?" The man of God answered, "The Lord is able to give you much more than this." 10 Then Amazi'ah discharged the army that had come to him from Ephraim, to go home again. And they became very angry with Judah, and returned home in fierce anger. 11 But Amazi'ah took courage, and led out his people, and went to the Valley of Salt and smote ten thou-destroyed. Amaziah fled to Lachish, was extradited, and was put to death by his subjects. The Chronicler has woven into that account allusions to two unnamed prophets (vss. 5-10, 14-16). The interesting new material is typical of his method, but may be based on a lost source.

11-12. One hopes that the savage treatment of the men of Seir, i.e., the Edomites, is due to some old tradition, not to the Chronicler's own invention.

King Amaziah, at least as Chronicles, amplifying II Kings 14:1-20, portrays his conduct. There is a comical touch in the story. Wanting to attack the Edomites, he hired soldiers from the king of Israel at great expense; warned by a prophet in the usual way that this is sinful, he asked pathetically, How about the money he had spent? Then he deferred to the prophet's injunction and, before setting out on his campaign against Edom, dismissed the Israelite mercenaries—without, however, any payment for their coming, with the not unnatural result 12 And other ten thousand left alive did the children of Judah carry away captive, and brought them unto the top of the rock, and cast them down from the top of the rock, that they all were broken in pieces.

13 ¶ But the soldiers of the army which Amaziah sent back, that they should not go with him to battle, fell upon the cities of Judah, from Samaria even unto Beth-horon, and smote three thousand of them, and took much spoil.

14 ¶ Now it came to pass, after that Amaziah was come from the slaughter of the Edomites, that he brought the gods of the children of Seir, and set them up to be his gods, and bowed down himself before them, and burned incense unto them.

15 Wherefore the anger of the Lord was kindled against Amaziah, and he sent unto him a prophet, which said unto him, Why hast thou sought after the gods of the people, which could not deliver their own people out of thine hand?

16 And it came to pass, as he talked with him, that the king said unto him, Art thou made of the king's counsel? forbear; why shouldst thou be smitten? Then the prophet forbade, and said, I know that God hath determined to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast not hearkened unto my counsel.

17 ¶ Then Amaziah king of Judah took advice, and sent to Joash, the son of Jeho'ahaz, the son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, Come, let us see one another in the face.

18 And Joash king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, The thistle that was in Lebanon sent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, saying, Give thy daughter to my son to wife: and there passed by a wild beast that was in Lebanon, and trode down the thistle.

19 Thou sayest, Lo, thou hast smitten the Edomites; and thine heart lifteth thee up to boast: abide now at home; why shouldst thou meddle to thine hurt, that thou shouldst fall, even thou, and Judah with thee?

sand men of Se'ir. 12 The men of Judah captured another ten thousand alive, and took them to the top of a rock and threw them down from the top of the rock; and they were all dashed to pieces. 13 But the men of the army whom Amazi'ah sent back, without letting go with him to battle, fell upon the cities of Judah, from Samari'ah to Beth-hor'on, and killed three thousand people in them, and took much spoil.

14 After Amazi'ah came from the slaughter of the E'domites, he brought the gods of the men of Se'ir, and set them up as his gods, and worshiped them, making offerings to them. 15 Therefore the Lord was angry with Amazi'ah and sent to him a prophet, who said to him, "Why have you resorted to the gods of a people, which did not deliver their own people from your hand?"

16 But as he was speaking the king said to him, "Have we made you a royal counselor? Stop! Why should you be put to death?"

So the prophet stopped, but said, "I know that God has determined to destroy you, because you have done this and have not listened to my counsel."

17 Then Amazi'ah king of Judah took counsel and sent to Jo'ash the son of Jeho'ahaz, son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, "Come, let us look one another in the face." 18 And Jo'ash the king of Israel sent word to Amazi'ah king of Judah, "A thistle on Lebanon sent to a cedar on Lebanon, saying, ‘Give your daughter to my son for a wife’; and a wild beast of Lebanon passed by and trampled down the thistle. 19 You say, ‘See, I have smitten Edom,’ and your heart has lifted you up in boastfulness. But now stay at home; why should you provoke trouble so that you fall, you and Judah with you?"
20 But Amaziah would not hear; for it came of God, that he might deliver them into the hand of their enemies, because they sought after the gods of Edom. 21 So Joash the king of Israel went up; and they saw one another in the face, both he and Amaziah king of Judah, at Beth-shemesh, which be longeth to Judah. 22 And Judah was put to the worse before Israel, and they fled every man to his tent. 23 And Joash the king of Israel took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, at Beth-shemesh, and brought him to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem from the gate of Ephraim to the corner gate, four hundred cubits. 24 And he took all the gold and the silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of God with Obededom, and the treasures of the king's house, the hostages also, and returned to Samaria. 25 ¶ And Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah lived after the death of Joash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel fifteen years. 26 Now the rest of the acts of Amaziah, first and last, behold, are they not written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel? 27 ¶ Now after the time that Amaziah did turn away from following the Lord they made a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem; and he fled to Lachish: but they sent to Lachish after him, and slew him there. 28 And they brought him upon horses; and he was buried with his fathers in the city of David.

26 And all the people of Judah took Uzziah, who was sixteen years old, and made him king in the room of his father Amaziah. 2 He built Elath, and restored it to Judah, after that the king slept with his fathers. 3 Sixteen years old was Uzziah when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and two years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Jecoliah of Jerusalem.

in vacillation. It is always a fault which may lead from small mistakes to ruin. 26:3. King for Fifty-Two Years.—Uzziah's prosperous reign ran parallel with the equally long and prosperous rule of Jeroboam II over Israel. But from the books of Amos, Hosea, and Isaiah vividly we learn that under those monarchs the prosperity of the few was coincident with the miseries of the many and the growth of monstrous social corruption.
4 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father Amaziah did.
5 And he sought God in the days of Zechariah, who had understanding in the visions of God: and as long as he sought the LORD, God made him to prosper.
6 And he went forth and warred against the Philistines, and brake down the wall of Gath, and the wall of Jabneh, and the wall of Ashdod, and built cities about Ashdod, and among the Philistines.
7 And God helped him against the Philistines, and against the Arabians that dwelt in Gur-baal, and the Meunim.
8 And the Ammonites gave gifts to Uzziah: and his name spread abroad even to the entering in of Egypt; for he strengthened himself exceedingly.
9 Moreover Uzziah built towers in Jerusalem at the corner gate, and at the valley gate, and at the turning of the wall, and fortified them.
10 Also he built towers in the desert, and digged many wells: for he had much cattle, both in the low country, and in the plains; husbandmen also, and vinedressers in the mountains, and in Carmel: for he loved husbandry.
11 Moreover Uzziah had a host of fighting men, that went out to war by bands, according to the number of their account by the hand of Jeiel the scribe and Maaseiah the ruler, under the hand of Hananiah, one of the king's captains.
12 The whole number of the chief of the fathers of the mighty men of valor were two thousand and six hundred.
13 And under their hand was an army, three hundred thousand and seven thousand and five hundred, that made war with mighty power, to help the king against the enemy.
14 And Uzziah prepared for them throughout all the host shields, and spears, and helmets, and habergeons, and bows, and slings to cast stones.
15 And he made in Jerusalem engines, invented by cunning men, to be on the name was Jecol'iah of Jerusalem. 4 And he did what was right in the eyes of the LORD, according to all that his father Amaz'iah had done. 5 He set himself to seek God in the days of Zechariah, who instructed him in the fear of God; and as long as he sought the LORD, God made him to prosper.
6 He went out and made war against the Philistines, and broke down the wall of Gath and the wall of Jabneh and the wall of Ashdod; and he built cities in the territory of Ashdod and elsewhere among the Philistines. 7 God helped him against the Philistines, and against the Arabs that dwelt in Gur-ba'al, and against the Meu'nitites.
8 The Ammonites paid tribute to Uzziah, and his fame spread even to the border of Egypt, for he became very strong. 9 Moreover Uzziah built towers in Jerusalem at the Corner Gate and at the Valley Gate and at the Angle, and fortified them. 10 And he built towers in the wilderness, and hewed out many cisterns, for he had large herds, both in the Shephe'lah and in the plain, and he had farmers and vinedressers in the hills and in the fertile lands, for he loved the soil. 11 Moreover Uzziah had an army of soldiers, fit for war, in divisions according to the numbers in the muster made by Je-i'l the secretary and Ma-asai'ah the officer, under the direction of Hanani'ah, one of the king's commanders. 12 The whole number of the heads of fathers' houses of mighty men of valor was two thousand six hundred.
13 Under their command was an army of three hundred and seven thousand five hundred, who could make war with mighty power, to help the king against the enemy. 14 And Uzziah prepared for all the army shields, spears, helmets, coats of mail, bows, and stones for slinging. 15 In Jerusalem he made engines, invented by skilful men, to towers and upon the bulwarks, to shoot arrows and great stones withal. And his name spread far abroad; for he was marvelously helped, till he was strong.

16 But when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction: for he transgressed against the Lord his God, and went into the temple of the Lord to burn incense upon the altar of incense.

17 And Azariah the priest went in after him, and with him fourscore priests of the Lord, that were valiant men:

18 And they withstood Uzziah the king, and said unto him, It appertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incense unto the Lord, but to the priests the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense: go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed; neither shall it be for thine honor from the Lord God.

19 Then Uzziah was wroth, and had a censer in his hand to burn incense: and while he was wroth with the priests, the leprosy even rose up in his forehead before the priests in the house of the Lord, from beside the incense altar.

20 And Azariah the chief priest, and all the priests, looked upon him, and, behold, he was leprous in his forehead, and they thrust him out from thence; yea, himself hasted also to go out, because the Lord had smitten him.

21 And Uzziah the king was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a several house, being a leper; for he was cut off from the house of the Lord: and Jotham his son was over the king’s house, judging the people of the land.

22 Now the rest of the acts of Uzziah, first and last, did Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, write.

23 So Uzziah slept with his fathers, and they buried him with his fathers in the field of the burial which belonged to the kings; be on the towers and the corners, to shoot arrows and great stones. And his fame spread far, for he was marvelously helped, till he was strong.

16 But when he was strong he grew proud, to his destruction. For he was false to the Lord his God, and entered the temple of the Lord to burn incense on the altar of incense. 17 But Azari’ah the priest went in after him, with eighty priests of the Lord who were men of valor; 18 and they withstood King Uzzi’ah, and said to him, “It is not for you, Uzzi’ah, to burn incense to the Lord, but for the priests the sons of Aaron, who are consecrated to burn incense. Go out of the sanctuary; for you have done wrong, and it will bring you no honor from the Lord God.” 19 Then Uzzi’ah was angry. Now he had a censer in his hand to burn incense, and when he became angry with the priests leprosy broke out on his forehead, in the presence of the priests in the house of the Lord, by the altar of incense. 20 And Azari’ah the chief priest, and all the priests, looked at him, and behold, he was leprous in his forehead! And they thrust him out quickly, and he himself hastened to go out, because the Lord had smitten him. 21 And King Uzzi’ah was a leper to the day of his death, and being a leper dwelt in a separate house, for he was excluded from the house of the Lord. And Jotham his son was over the king’s household, governing the people of the land.

22 Now the rest of the acts of Uzzi’ah, from first to last, Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz wrote. 23 And Uzzi’ah slept with his fathers, and they buried him with his fathers in the burial field which belonged

16-23. Uzziah died a leper (cf. II Kings 15:5). The Chronicler assigned general reason for the king’s affliction in vs. 16a. It is probable that the interesting story in vss. 16b-20 is a very late addition; for although the use of incense—perhaps not employed until nearly the end of the monarchy—became increasingly prominent in the postexilic period,

16. When He Was Strong.—King Uzziah was neither the first nor the last to be spoiled by success. Often the talented man thinks and behaves as if he could ascribe solely to himself all the credit, not only for his native ability but for the use he has made of his talents. Everyone needs to be on guard against the temptation to ignore the extent to which his prosperity and his virtues may be due not to achievements but to endowment. Self-esteem is always a deadly for they said, He is a leper; and Jotham his son reigned in his stead.

27 Jotham was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Jerushah, the daughter of Zadok.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father Uzziah did: howbeit he entered not into the temple of the LORD. And the people did yet corruptly.

3 He built the high gate of the house of the LORD, and on the wall of Ophel he built much.

4 Moreover he built cities in the mountains of Judah, and in the forests he built castles and towers.

5 ¶ He fought also with the king of the Ammonites, and prevailed against them. And the children of Ammon gave him the same year a hundred talents of silver, and ten thousand measures of wheat, and ten thousand of barley. So much did the children of Ammon pay unto him, both the second year, and the third.

6 So Jotham became mighty, because he prepared his ways before the LORD his God.

7 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jotham, and all his wars, and his ways, lo, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah.

8 He was five and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem.

9 ¶ And Jotham slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city of David: and Ahaz his son reigned in his stead.

28 Ahaz was twenty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem: but he did not that mention of an altar for the purpose (vs. 16) seems to belong only to the latest stage of the P legislation.

 menace to character. The fault takes many shapes; e.g., the capable official becomes first efficient, then dictatorial, unable to envisage that even in his case "second thoughts" may be best. Too readily we forget how Paul said that all our gifts are worthless if we lack love—the greatest gift of all (I Cor. 13); and, said Paul, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall" (I Cor. 10:12).

27:1. The Reign of Jotham.—There is only one good reason why Jotham should be remembered, and that is not due to anything he did himself: during his years on the throne of David, Isaiah was a prophet in Jerusalem.

which was right in the sight of the Lord, like David his father:

2 For he walked in the ways of the kings of Israel, and made also molten images for Baalim.

3 Moreover he burnt incense in the valley of the son of Hinnom, and burnt his children in the fire, after the abominations of the heathen whom the Lord had cast out before the children of Israel.

4 He sacrificed also and burnt incense in the high places, and on the hills, and under every green tree.

5 Wherefore the Lord his God delivered him into the hand of the king of Syria; and they smote him, and carried away a great multitude of them captives, and brought them to Damascus. And he was also delivered into the hand of the king of Israel, who smote him with a great slaughter.

6 ¶ For Pekah the son of Remaliah slew in Judah a hundred and twenty thousand in one day, which were all valiant men; because they had forsaken the Lord God of their fathers.

7 And Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim, slew Maaseiah the king’s son, and Azrikam the governor of the house, and Elkanah that was next to the king.

8 And the children of Israel carried away captive of their brethren two hundred thousand, women, sons, and daughters, and took also away much spoil from them, and brought the spoil to Samaria.

9 But a prophet of the Lord was there, whose name was Oded: and he went out before the host that came to Samaria, and said unto them, Behold, because the Lord God of your fathers was wroth with Judah, he hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage that reacheth up unto heaven.

28:6-15. A comparison between this passage and II Kings 16 illustrates the Chronicler’s method. II Kings 16:1-4 gave him warrant for treating Ahaz as a monster of iniquity; but he also read in Kings the story—so vividly recorded in Isa. 7—that Ahaz, when menaced by the kings of Syria and Israel, sought support from the Assyrians, and that the threatened danger from the two kings came to nought. It was contrary to the Chronicler’s view of the fitness of things that Ahaz did not suffer as a result of 28:8-15. An Act of Magnanimity.—Well done, Oded, prophet of the Lord in Samaria! He urged the victorious soldiers of Israel to be magnanimous toward the captive Judeans and let them return to their homes. So finely did he voice his appeal that it more than succeeded. For his words, we are told, so completely touched the hearts of the captors that instead of a horde of miserable refugees trailing back to Judah, ragged and hungry, there returned a 10 And now ye purpose to keep under the children of Judah and Jerusalem for bondmen and bondwomen unto you: but are there not with you, even with you, sins against the Lord your God?

11 Now hear me therefore, and deliver the captives again, which ye have taken captive of your brethren: for the fierce wrath of the Lord is upon you.

12 Then certain of the heads of the children of Ephraim, Azariah the son of Johanann, Berechiah the son of Meshillemoth, and Jehizziah the son of Shallum, and Amasa the son of Hadlai, stood up against them that came from the war.

13 And said unto them, Ye shall not bring in the captives hither: for whereas we have offended against the Lord already, ye intend to add more to our sins and to our trespass: for our trespass is great, and there is fierce wrath against Israel.

14 So the armed men left the captives and the spoil before the princes and all the congregation.

15 And the men which were expressed by name rose up, and took the captives, and with the spoil clothed all that were naked among them, and arrayed them, and shod them, and gave them to eat and to drink, and anointed them, and carried all the feeble of them upon asses, and brought them to Jericho, the city of palm trees, to their brethren: then they returned to Samaria.

16 ¶ At that time did king Ahaz send unto the kings of Assyria to help him.

17 For again the Edomites had come and smitten Judah, and carried away captives.

18 The Philistines also had invaded the cities of the low country, and of the south of Judah, and had taken Beth-shemesh, and reached up to heaven. 10 And now you intend to subjugate the people of Judah and Jerusalem, male and female, as your slaves. Have you not sins of your own against the Lord your God? 11 Now hear me, and send back the captives from your kinsfolk whom you have taken, for the fierce wrath of the Lord is upon you." 12 Certain chiefs also of the men of Ephraim, Azari'ah the son of Joha'nan, Berech'i'ah the son of Meshe'llemoth, Jehizki'ah the son of Shallum, and Ama'sa the son of Hadlai, stood up against those who were coming from the war, 13 and said to them, "You shall not bring the captives in here, for you propose to bring upon us guilt against the Lord in addition to our present sins and guilt. For our guilt is already great, and there is fierce wrath against Israel." 14 So the armed men left the captives and the spoil before the princes and all the assembly. 15 And the men who had been mentioned by name rose and took the captives, and with the spoil they clothed all that were naked among them; they clothed them, gave them sandals, provided them with food and drink, and anointed them; and carrying all the feeble among them on asses, they brought them to their kinsfolk at Jericho, the city of palm trees. Then they returned to Samar'ia.

16 At that time King Ahaz sent to the king of Assyria for help. 17 For the E'domites had again invaded and defeated Judah, and carried away captives. And the Philis'tines had made raids on the cities in the multitude of men and women and children who had been fed and cared for, as well as released, and who now could not think of Israelites as pitiless foes but as men who had shown them kindness (vs. 15). Oded deserved to succeed, for he had said to the victors that they ought to forgive because they themselves needed to be forgiven (vs. 10), and had told Ajalon, and Gederoth, and Shocho with the villages thereof, and Timnah with the villages thereof, Gimzo also and the villages thereof: and they dwelt there.

19 For the LORD brought Judah low because of Ahaz king of Israel; for he made Judah naked, and transgressed sore against the LORD.

20 And Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria came unto him, and distressed him, but strengthened him not.

21 For Ahaz took away a portion out of the house of the LORD, and out of the house of the king, and of the princes, and gave it unto the king of Assyria: but he helped him not.

22 ¶ And in the time of his distress did he trespass yet more against the LORD: this is that king Ahaz.

23 For he sacrificed unto the gods of Damascus, which smote him: and he said, Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, therefore will I sacrifice to them, that they may help me. But they were the ruin of him, and of all Israel.

24 And Ahaz gathered together the vessels of the house of God, and cut in pieces the vessels of the house of God, and shut up the doors of the house of the LORD, and he made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem.

25 And in every several city of Judah he made high places to burn incense unto other gods, and provoked to anger the LORD God of his fathers.

24. Shut up the doors of the house of the LORD: As part of the price for Assyrian support Ahaz no doubt had to honor in the temple the great gods of Assyria, but he did not close its doors. It was, however, appropriate for the Chronicler’s idealized history to vilify Ahaz thoroughly. Moreover, he thus adroitly prepared for an inspiring sequel in Hezekiah’s reign.

them that the captives were their brethren (vs. 11). This narrative is not in Kings. The Chronicler devised it. Well done, the Chronicler!

23. They Were the Ruin of Him.—The Chronicler was confused (see Exeg.) about the real historical situation, which is clear from II Kings 16:1-20, combined with Isa. 7:1-17. The kings of Syria and Israel were determined to have the Judean army with them in a coalition for defense against the might of the Assyrians which loomed over them. Ahaz refused, sought Assyrian support by paying tribute, later paid honor to their gods in Jerusalem, and they were the ruin of him. It was enough for the Chronicler to reiterate his standing accusation: failure to rely on God alone. The general application is that when men in difficulties have recourse to what they know to be evil, “the latter end is worse with them than the beginning” (II Pet. 2:20).

24. Acts of Desperation.—It is entirely credible that Ahaz was in straits to find treasure enough to provide his bribe to the Assyrians, but from II Kings 16:14-18 the inference to be drawn is not that Ahaz closed the temple area, but that he instituted an altar for sacrifice to Assyria’s gods (see Exeg.). That was too outrageous a sacrilege for the Chronicler to believe, 26 ¶ Now the rest of his acts and of all his ways, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

27 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city, even in Jerusalem; but they brought him not into the sepulchres of the kings of Israel: and Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead.

29 Hezekiah began to reign when he was five and twenty years old, and he reigned nine and twenty years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Abijah, the daughter of Zechariah.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that David his father had done.

J. Reign of Hezekiah (29:1–32:33)

Beyond doubt Hezekiah was a good and enlightened ruler. II Kings 18:3-6 pays unqualified tribute to his virtue: “There was none like him among all the kings of Judah after him, nor among those who were before him.” That superlative eulogy seems to leave out of thought David, and the coming Josiah with his decisive reform. It provided full reason for the Chronicler to expiate in praise of Hezekiah, to depict him indeed as a second “Saint David.” It is no surprise to find that in the long section he devoted to Hezekiah more than three chapters (chs. 29–31 and part of ch. 32) present new material. The Chronicler might well ask himself, “What would such a good king, following such a bad king, do in Jerusalem?” It seems that he had an inspiration and he gave a vivid reply. Obviously Hezekiah would rectify the religious abuses of Ahaz’s reign. Further, the Chronicler had represented that Ahaz had closed the doors of the temple closed. Churches have been closed for diverse reasons—in periods of persecution, when believers have nobly shown that faith can dispense with buildings; or because the population has departed from a district, as in Central London, with its numerous, ancient parish churches. (Practical sense feels that they should be pulled down, their very valuable sites sold and the proceeds used elsewhere; but sentiment rebels.) When the former members have moved to a distance from a church building, why is it so often that the remaining inhabitants in the district have no use for organized Christianity and that church stands desolate? Where should blame be placed? Does the tragedy arise from too conventional modes of presenting the faith? Or is the fault in the people? The common people heard Jesus gladly (Mark 12:37; cf. Acts 2:41).

29:1–32:33. Hezekiah’s Reign.—Ahaz died, the ruler who had uncomprehendingly rejected the word of the Lord spoken to him by Isaiah (Isa. 7:1-17) when Jerusalem was menaced by the kings of Syria and Israel, the man whose theology” in that crisis impelled him to seek the favor of Yahweh by sacrificing his son as a burnt offering (II Kings 16.3). He was succeeded by Hezekiah, who shares with Josiah (cf. chs. 34–35) chief honors as being the best of the Judean monarchs. During his reign Isaiah was at the height of his prophetic powers. There are satisfying reasons to believe that Hezekiah was zealous for religious reforms, and it is likely that very discreetly he made overtures to loyalist Hebrews in the former kingdom of Israel (from 721 b.c. an Assyrian province) that they should see in Jerusalem a remaining citadel for their trust in Yahweh. Optimists could hope that the house of David might yet again rule over a reunited people of God (see Exeg. on 29:1–32:35).

Ample material was available concerning Hezekiah in II Kings 18–20. It is very interesting to compare the account in Kings with that in Chronicles, and to note how dexterously the Chronicler adapted it to his cardinal purpose, quoting and omitting, abridging and expanding. 29:1-35. The Purification of the Temple.—The Chronicler disregarded the dull order of

| 29 | Now the rest of his acts and all his ways, from first to last, behold, they are written in the Book of the Kings of Judah and Israel. 27 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city, in Jerusalem, for they did not bring him into the tombs of the kings of Israel. And Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead. |
| 29 | Hezekiah began to reign when he was twenty-five years old, and he reigned twenty-nine years in Jerusalem. His mother’s name was Abijah the daughter of Zechariah. 2 And he did what was right in the eyes of the Lord, according to all that David his father had done. |
3 ¶ He in the first year of his reign, in the first month, opened the doors of the house of the Lord, and repaired them.

4 And he brought in the priests and the Levites, and gathered them together into the east street,

5 And said unto them, Hear me, ye Levites; sanctify now yourselves, and sanctify the house of the Lord God of your fathers, and carry forth the filthiness out of the holy place.

6 For our fathers have trespassed, and done that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord our God, and have forsaken him, and have turned away their faces from the habitation of the Lord, and turned their backs.

7 Also they have shut up the doors of the porch, and put out the lamps, and have not burned incense nor offered burnt offerings in the holy place unto the God of Israel.

8 Wherefore the wrath of the Lord was upon Judah and Jerusalem, and he hath delivered them to trouble, to astonishment, and to hissing, as ye see with your eyes.

9 For, lo, our fathers have fallen by the sword, and our sons and our daughters and our wives are in captivity for this.

3 In the first year of his reign, in the first month, he opened the doors of the house of the Lord, and repaired them. 4 He brought in the priests and the Levites, and assembled them in the square on the east, 5 and said to them, "Hear me, Levites! Now sanctify yourselves, and sanctify the house of the Lord, the God of your fathers, and carry out the filth from the holy place. 6 For our fathers have been unfaithful and have done what was evil in the sight of the Lord our God; they have forsaken him, and have turned away their faces from the habituation of the Lord, and turned their backs. 7 They also shut the doors of the vestibule and put out the lamps, and have not burned incense nor offered burnt offerings in the holy place to the God of Israel. 8 Therefore the wrath of the Lord came upon Judah and Jerusalem, and he has made them an object of horror, of astonishment, and of hiss, as you see with your own eyes. 9 For, lo, our fathers have fallen by the sword and our sons and our daughters and our wives are in captivity for this.

temple (28:24): he could now picture the closed doors being reopened, the temple thoroughly cleansed from its pollution, and thereafter a glorious day of rededication and thanksgiving. Hezekiah's accession is to be dated in 725 or 720—either just before or just after the terrible siege and capture of Samaria which put an end to the kingdom of Israel (see W. O. E. Oesterley and T. H. Robinson, A History of Israel [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1952], I, 460; also John Skinner, Kings [Edinburgh: T. C. & E. C. Jack, 1904; "The New-Century Bible"], p. 44).

1. Cleansing of the Temple (29:1-36)

29:3. In the first year of his reign, in the first month: It was logical to infer that the good king would lose not a moment in ordering the good work to begin. How vivid the impression of Hezekiah thus given in comparison with the nebulous account of II Kings 18:1-12 which, after praising him and in a single verse recording that he fought the Philistines, mentions the Assyrian attack on Samaria as happening in his fourth year, and immediately thereafter relates how in his fourteenth year the terrible Assyrian assault on Judah ended in miraculous deliverance. Actually that crisis took place in 701 B.C. toward the very end of Hezekiah's reign.

4-5. The priests and the Levites: In vs. 5 only the Levites are addressed, and the charge laid on them involved their entering the temple sanctuary, a privilege which events stated in II Kings. He assumed that the good king would put first things first. Ahaz, he had just affirmed, had plundered and closed the temple. Therefore he devised a glowing and elaborate description of its reopening, cleansing, and consecration.

Hezekiah in the first year of his reign, in the first month, opened the doors of the house of the Lord. But the reopened temple was in a filthy condition, and its sanctity had been polluted. Next, then, a good king would summon the proper men, Levites, to undertake its cleans-10 Now it is in mine heart to make a covenant with the LORD God of Israel, that his fierce wrath may turn away from us.
11 My sons, be not now negligent: for the LORD hath chosen you to stand before him, to serve him, and that ye should minister unto him, and burn incense.
12 ¶ Then the Levites arose, Mahath the son of Amasai, and Joel the son of Azariah, of the sons of the Kohathites: and of the sons of Merari; Kish the son of Abdi, and Azariah the son of Jehalelel: and of the Gershonites; Joah the son of Zimmah, and Eden the son of Joha:
13 And of the sons of Elizaphan; Shimri, and Jehiel: and of the sons of Asaph; Zechariah, and Mattaniah:
14 And of the sons of Heman; Jehiel, and Shimei: and of the sons of Jeduthun; Shemaiah, and Uzzziel.
15 And they gathered their brethren, and sanctified themselves, and came, according to the commandment of the king, by the words of the LORD, to cleanse the house of the LORD.
16 And the priests went into the inner part of the house of the LORD, to cleanse it, and brought out all the uncleanness that they found in the temple of the LORD into the court of the house of the LORD. And the Levites took it, to carry it out abroad into the brook Kidron.
17 Now they began on the first day of the first month to sanctify, and on the eighth day of the month came they to the porch of the LORD: so they sanctified the house of the LORD in eight days; and in the sixteenth day of the first month they made an end.
18 Then they went in to Hezekiah the king, and said, We have cleansed all the

the final Law reserved to the Zadokite priests. The conjunction and represents a reviser's neat emendation to rule out such a sacrifice.

11. Note the Levites' high standing: they it is who minister to the LORD, not merely to Zadokite priests, and Hezekiah calls them my sons.

16. The priests went into: Added by revisers to correct the implication in vs. 15 that Levites other than priests entered the sacred building. Perhaps the phrase by the words of the LORD (vs. 15b) is also revisional, to avert the idea that the king's order was given solely on his royal authority.

ing (vs. 4). And they must be one with him in understanding the sacred nature of their task, conscious of how evil the past had been, how merited the calamity which had befallen the land and its homes (vss. 5-10). Young in years but old in wisdom, Hezekiah terms the Levites My sons, speaking not as a master giving orders (vs. 11). So at last the moment came (vs. 30), when from a temple purified by men of right spirit the sound of instruments and psalms, 29:19 "We have cleansed all the house of the Lord, the altar of burnt offering and all its utensils, and the table for the showbread and all its utensils. All the utensils which King Ahaz discarded in his reign when he was faithless, we have made ready and sanctified; and behold, they are before the altar of the Lord.

20 Then Hezekiah the king rose early, and gathered the rulers of the city, and went up to the house of the Lord. And they brought seven bullocks, and seven rams, and seven lambs, and seven he goats, for a sin offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah. And he commanded the priests the sons of Aaron to offer them on the altar of the Lord. So they killed the bullocks, and the priests received the blood and sprinkled it on the altar: likewise, when they had killed the rams, they sprinkled the blood upon the altar: they killed also the lambs, and they sprinkled the blood upon the altar. And they brought forth the he goats for the sin offering before the king and the congregation; and they laid their hands upon them:

24 And the priests killed them, and they made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar, to make an atonement for all Israel: for the king commanded that the burnt offering and the sin offering should be made for all Israel.

25 And he set the Levites in the house of the Lord with cymbals, harps, and lyres, according to the commandment of David and of Gad the king’s seer, and Nathan the prophet: for so was the commandment of the Lord by his prophets. And the Levites stood with the instruments of David, and the priests with the trumpets. And when the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord was prefixed; and the priests sprinkled blood on the altar.

26 The Levites stood with the instruments of David, and the priests with the trumpets. And when the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord was prefixed; and the priests sprinkled blood on the altar.

27 Then Hezekiah commanded that the burnt offering be offered on the altar. And 21-30. The dedicatory sacrifices are said to have been duplicated. The explanation may be that vss. 25-27 are the Chronicler’s statement, to which revisers prefixed vss. 21-24 in order to make the procedure fully consonant with the final Law.

the words of David and of Asaph the seer, could rise acceptably to God. We are told that the feelings of the people were roused to enthusiasm, and that they then brought multitudes of sacrifices (vss. 31-33, 35). That is ever such a man as mortal man; for he is not able to bear the presence of the Lord, and his garments are spoiled in the day when he comes. But you shall die, and not live; and he shall speak to you in his name, saying, ‘I am the Lord; I shall speak in this manner, and in this manner will I do; wait for me, and I will answer you, and you shall know that there is no God beside me, that I am God, and there is none else.’ And even in this ye shall know, and be sure, that the Lord is God, besides whom there is none else.” (Deut. 32:30-35).

the Lord began also with the trumpets, and with the instruments ordained by David king of Israel.

28 And all the congregation worshipped, and the singers sang, and the trumpeters sounded: and all this continued until the burnt offering was finished.

29 And when they had made an end of offering, the king and all that were present with him bowed themselves, and worshipped.

30 Moreover Hezekiah the king and the princes commanded the Levites to sing praise unto the Lord with the words of David, and of Asaph the seer. And they sang praises with gladness, and they bowed their heads and worshipped.

31 Then Hezekiah answered and said,
Now ye have consecrated yourselves unto the Lord, come near and bring sacrifices and thank offerings into the house of the Lord. And the congregation brought in sacrifices and thank offerings; and as many as were of a free heart, burnt offerings.

32 And the number of the burnt offerings, which the congregation brought, was three score and ten bullocks, a hundred rams, and two hundred lambs: all these were for a burnt offering to the Lord.

33 And the consecrated things were six hundred oxen and three thousand sheep.

34 But the priests were too few, so that they could not flay all the burnt offerings:
wherefore their brethren the Levites did help them, till the work was ended, and until the other priests had sanctified themselves: for the Levites were more upright in heart to sanctify themselves than the priests.

35 And also the burnt offerings were in abundance, with the fat of the peace offerings, and the drink offerings for every burnt offering. So the service of the house of the Lord was set in order.

36 And Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people, that God had prepared the people:
for the thing was done suddenly.

when the burnt offering began, the song to the Lord began also, and the trumpets, ac-accompanied by the instruments of David king of Israel. 28 The whole assembly worshiped, and the singers sang, and the trump-peters sounded; all this continued until the burnt offering was finished. 29 When the offering was finished, the king and all who were present with him bowed themselves and worshipped. 30 And Hezeki'ah the king and the princes commanded the Levites to sing praises to the Lord with the words of David and of Asaph the seer. And they sang praises with gladness, and they bowed down and worshipped.

31 Then Hezeki'ah said, “You have now consecrated yourselves to the Lord; come near, bring sacrifices and thank offerings to the house of the Lord.” And the assembly brought sacrifices and thank offerings; and all who were of a willing heart brought burnt offerings. 32 The number of the burnt offerings which the assembly brought was seventy bulls, a hundred rams, and two hundred lambs; all these were for a burnt offering to the Lord. 33 And the consecrated offerings were six hundred bulls and three thousand sheep. 34 But the priests were too few and could not flay all the burnt offerings, so until other priests had sanctified themselves their brethren the Levites helped them, until the work was finished — for the Levites were more upright in heart than the priests in sanctifying themselves. 35 Besides the great number of burnt offerings there was the fat of the peace offerings, and there were the libations for the burnt offerings.
Thus the service of the house of the Lord was restored. 36 And Hezeki'ah and all the people rejoiced because of what God had done for the people; for the thing came about suddenly.

34. A perplexing verse, because normally the lay offerers flayed the carcases. Also,

And Hezekiah sent to all Israel and Judah, and wrote letters also to Ephraim and Manasseh, that they should come to the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, to keep the passover unto the Lord God of Israel.

The Chronicler now credits Hezekiah with a master stroke of human sympathy, which at the same time was astute statesmanship. He relates that Hezekiah sent couriers into the territory of the fallen kingdom of Israel, bearing a letter which invited the subjugated Hebrews to come to Jerusalem and there to keep the Passover and the feast of Unleavened Bread. Presumably his action was taken in the years following soon after the conquest of Samaria in 721, during the period when the Assyrians prohibited the conquered people from worshiping Yahweh, but preceding the date when they allowed the cult of Yahweh to be resumed at Bethel. The Judean king’s gesture would be timely and, though risky, adroit. For Assyrian troops could not be everywhere, and Hezekiah’s couriers would move circumspectly. In any case the Assyrians, vigilant against signs of revolt, might see no danger if some Hebrews resorted to a religious rite in Jerusalem. Little did they guess how stimulating to nationalist feeling was Passover—the celebration of the deliverance of Hebrews long ago from the tyranny of an Egyptian king. Vss. 10-11 state that many of the Israelites scoffed at the invitation, or—it may be inferred—feared to run the risk, but that many responded and came to Jerusalem. Granting that the Chronicler exaggerates numbers, is this alleged event fiction or fact? The question, as will appear in connection with Josiah’s reign, has no small importance concerning the development of Hebrew literature and religious practice. A further matter requires comment. It seems certain that originally the night ritual of Passover was observed by the Hebrews in their homes, after which they resorted to the sanctuaries to keep Mazzoth. But Deuteronomy—a formulation of the Israelites’ customs—enjoins that Passover be kept at a sanctuary. It may be therefore that by his time the northern Hebrews had departed from the ancient home method of celebration. If so, for them the unprecedented feature in regard to Hezekiah’s proposal would be solely that they should go not to one of their own sanctuaries, but to Jerusalem. Rankling under the Assyrian prohibition to worship Yahweh, not a few may have resolved to hazard the journey. What was unprecedented for the Judeans was that for the first time—or for this once—they were summoned to keep Passover not at home, but at their capital. It is likely enough that, constrained by the king’s urgency, they did so. It is true that the Chronicler, following his logic that good Israelites would respond to a good Judean king, was capable of inventing the episode. His logic may chance to have led him to infer an actual event. However, he may have followed a popular tradition or even some written source not utilized in Kings. The historical situation would seem to have afforded Hezekiah an excellent opportunity.

2 For the king had taken counsel, and his princes, and all the congregation in Jerusalem, to keep the passover in the second month.

3 For they could not keep it at that time, because the priests had not sanctified themselves sufficiently, neither had the people gathered themselves together to Jerusalem.

4 And the thing pleased the king and all the congregation.

5 So they established a decree to make proclamation throughout all Israel, from Beer-sheba even to Dan, that they should come to keep the passover unto the Lord God of Israel at Jerusalem: for they had not done it of a long time in such sort as it was written.

6 So the posts went with the letters from the king and his princes throughout all Israel and Judah, and according to the commandment of the king, saying, Ye children of Israel, turn again unto the Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, and he will return to the remnant of you, that are escaped out of the hand of the kings of Assyria.

7 And be not ye like your fathers, and like your brethren, which trespassed against the Lord God of their fathers, who therefore gave them up to desolation, as ye see. 8 Now be ye not stiffnecked, as your fathers were, but yield yourselves unto the Lord, and enter into his sanctuary, which he hath sanctified for ever: and serve the Lord your God, that the fierceness of his wrath may turn away from you.

9 For if ye turn again unto the Lord, your brethren and your children shall find compassion before them that lead them captive, so that they shall come again into this land: for the Lord your God is gracious and merciful, and will not turn away his face from you, if ye return unto him.

10 So the posts passed from city to city through the country of Ephraim and Manasseh, even unto Zebulun: but they laughed them to scorn, and mocked them.

11 Nevertheless, divers of Asher and Manasseh and of Zebulun humbled themselves, and came to Jerusalem.

30:2. In the second month: Difficulties in organizing the arrival of the willing Israelites—not the reason adduced (by revisers?) in vs. 3—probably accounted for the postponement from the statutory first month.
12 Also in Judah the hand of God was to give them one heart to do the commandment of the king and of the princes, by the word of the Lord.

13 ¶ And there assembled at Jerusalem many people to keep the feast of unleavened bread in the second month, a very great congregation.

14 And they arose and took away the altars that were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for incense took they away, and cast them into the brook Kidron.

15 Then they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the second month: and the priests and the Levites were ashamed, and sanctified themselves, and brought in the burnt offerings into the house of the Lord.

16 And they stood in their place after their manner, according to the law of Moses the man of God: the priests sprinkled the blood, which they received of the hand of the Levites.

17 For there were many in the congregation that were not sanctified: therefore the Levites had the charge of the killing of the passovers for every one that was not clean, to sanctify them unto the Lord.

18 For a multitude of the people, even many of Ephraim and Manasseh, Issachar and Zebulun, had not cleansed themselves, yet did they eat the passover otherwise than it was written. But Hezekiah prayed for them, saying, The good Lord pardon every one 19 That prepareth his heart to seek God, the Lord God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary.

20 And the Lord hearkened to Hezekiah, and healed the people.

21 And the children of Israel that were present at Jerusalem kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with great gladness.

came to Jerusalem. 12 The hand of God was also upon Judah to give them one heart to do what the king and the princes commanded by the word of the Lord.

13 And many people came together in Jerusalem to keep the feast of unleavened bread in the second month, a very great assembly. 14 They set to work and removed the altars that were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for burning incense they took away and threw into the Kidron valley.

15 And they killed the passover lamb on the fourteenth day of the second month. And the priests and the Levites were put to shame, so that they sanctified themselves, and brought burnt offerings into the house of the Lord. 16 They took their accustomed posts according to the law of Moses the man of God; the priests threw the blood which they received from the hand of the Levites. 17 For there were many in the assembly who had not sanctified themselves; therefore the Levites had to kill the passover lamb for every one who was not clean, to make it holy to the Lord. 18 For a multitude of the people, many of them from Ephraim, Manasseh, Issachar, and Zebulun, had not cleansed themselves, yet they ate the passover otherwise than as prescribed. For Hezekiah had prayed for them, saying, The good Lord pardon every one 19 who sets his heart to seek God, the Lord the God of his fathers, even though not according to the sanctuary's rules of cleanness. 20 And the Lord heard Hezekiah, and healed the people. 21 And the people of Israel that were present at Jerusalem kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with great gladness.

12-27. The text shows confusion: Vss. 12, 15a, 17-20 concern Passover; vss. 13-14, 15b, 21-27 concern Mazzoth.

17-20. Not According to the Rules.—This is a fascinating passage, and it is due to the Chronicler himself. He realized that great numbers who had come from the north could not have complied with the complicated regulations about ceremonial cleanness. The fact made strict observance of the ritual rules impossible ness: and the Levites and the priests praised the Lord day by day, singing with loud instruments unto the Lord.

22 And Hezekiah spake comfortably unto all the Levites that taught the good knowledge of the Lord: and they did eat throughout the feast seven days, offering peace offerings, and making confession to the Lord God of their fathers.

23 And the whole assembly took counsel to keep other seven days: and they kept other seven days with gladness.

24 For Hezekiah king of Judah did give to the congregation a thousand bullocks and seven thousand sheep, and the princes gave to the congregation a thousand bullocks and ten thousand sheep: and a great number of priests sanctified themselves.

25 And all the congregation of Judah, with the priests and the Levites, and all the congregation that came out of Israel, and the strangers that came out of the land of Israel, and that dwelt in Judah, rejoiced.

26 So there was great joy in Jerusalem: for since the time of Solomon the son of David king of Israel there was not the like in Jerusalem.

27 ¶ Then the priests the Levites arose and blessed the people: and their voice was heard, and their prayer came up to his holy dwelling place, even unto heaven.

31 Now when all this was finished, all Israel that were present went out to the cities of Judah, and brake the images in pieces, and cut down the groves, and threw down the high places and the altars out of all Judah and Benjamin, in Ephraim also and Manasseh, until they had utterly destroyed them all. Then all the children of Israel returned, every man to his possession, into their own cities.

2 ¶ And Hezekiah appointed the courses of the priests and the Levites after their courses, every man according to his service, the priests and Levites for burnt offerings leavened bread seven days with great gladness; and the Levites and the priests praised the Lord day by day, singing with all their mights to the Lord. 22 And Hezeki'ah spoke encouragingly to all the Levites who showed good skill in the service of the Lord. So the people ate the food of the festival for seven days, sacrificing peace offerings and giving thanks to the Lord the God of their fathers.

23 Then the whole assembly agreed together to keep the feast for another seven days; so they kept it for another seven days with gladness. 24 For Hezeki'ah king of Judah gave the assembly a thousand bulls and seven thousand sheep for offerings, and the princes gave the assembly a thousand bulls and ten thousand sheep. And the priests sanctified themselves in great numbers. 25 The whole assembly of Judah, and the priests and the Levites, and the whole assembly that came out of Israel, and the sojourners who came out of the land of Israel, and the sojourners who dwelt in Judah, rejoiced. 26 So there was great joy in Jerusalem, for since the time of Solomon the son of David king of Israel there had been nothing like this in Jerusalem. 27 Then the priests and the Levites arose and blessed the people, and their voice was heard, and their prayer came to his holy habitation in heaven.

31 Now when all this was finished, all Israel who were present went out to the cities of Judah and broke in pieces the pillars and hewed down the Ashe'rim and broke down the high places and the altars throughout all Judah and Benjamin, and in Ephraim and Manas'seh, until they had destroyed them all. Then all the people of Israel returned to their cities, every man to his possession.

2 And Hezeki'ah appointed the divisions of the priests and of the Levites, division by division, each according to his service, the 31:1-21. The subject is how to secure adequate maintenance for the clergy—at all times a troublesome problem. The Chronicler here reflects back to Hezekiah's reign on the occasion. He did not think the rules were wrong, but he felt certain that there was a circumstance in which they must be swept aside in order that "the weightier matters of the law" (cf. Matt. 23:23) might be vindicated and glorified. This was a magnificent decision coming from a king who was a wholehearted ecclesiastic, according to the Chronicler. What a text it offers for today! Translate the matter into the discussions in divided Christendom. What

3 He appointed also the king’s portion of his substance for the burnt offerings, to wit, for the morning and evening burnt offerings, and the burnt offerings for the sabbaths, and for the new moons, and for the set feasts, as it is written in the law of the Lord.

4 Moreover he commanded the people that dwelt in Jerusalem to give the portion of the priests and the Levites, that they might be encouraged in the law of the Lord.

5 ¶ And as soon as the commandment came abroad, the children of Israel brought in abundance the firstfruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey, and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundantly.

6 And concerning the children of Israel and Judah, that dwelt in the cities of Judah, they also brought in the tithe of oxen and sheep, and the tithe of holy things which were consecrated unto the Lord their God, and laid them by heaps.

7 In the third month they began to lay the foundation of the heaps, and finished them in the seventh month.

8 And when Hezekiah and the princes came and saw the heaps, they blessed the Lord, and his people Israel.

9 Then Hezekiah questioned with the priests and the Levites concerning the heaps.

10 And Azariah the chief priest of the house of Zadok answered him, and said, Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the Lord, we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty: for the Lord hath blessed his people; and that which is left is this great store.

11 ¶ Then Hezekiah commanded to prepare chambers in the house of the Lord;
and they prepared them, what was being done in his own time, or what ought to be done, to obtain fair contributions alike from the Judeans and from the loyalists in the former Israelite localities.

But the problem as known in the Chronicler’s time had not reached final settlement;

a challenge it presents to modern representatives of theology and church order!

31:10. Superabundance.—Contributions surpassed even the utmost needed for the maintenance of the temple and its ministerial. If anything comparable were to happen today there would be no difficulty in finding how to use the surplus in the furtherance of good causes 12 And brought in the offerings and the tithes and the dedicated things faithfully: over which Cononiah the Levite was ruler, and Shimei his brother was the next.

13 And Jehiel, and Azaziah, and Nahath, and Asahel, and Jerimoth, and Joザabad, and Elie, and Ismachiah, and Mahath, and Beneiah, were overseers under the hand of Cononiah and Shimei his brother, at the commandment of Hezekiah the king, and Azariah the ruler of the house of God.

14 And Kore the son of Imnah the Levite, the porter toward the east, was over the freewill offerings of God, to distribute the oblations of the Lord, and the most holy things.

15 And next him were Eden, and Miniamin, and Jeshua, and Shemaiah, Amariah, and Shecaniah, in the cities of the priests, in their set office, to give to their brethren by courses, as well to the great as to the small:

16 Besides their genealogy of males, from three years old and upward, even unto every one that entereth into the house of the Lord, his daily portion for their service in their charges according to their courses;

17 Both to the genealogy of the priests by the house of their fathers, and the Levites from twenty years old and upward, in their charges by their courses;

18 And to the genealogy of all their little ones, their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, through all the congregation: for in their set office they sanctified themselves in holiness:

19 Also of the sons of Aaron the priests, which were in the fields of the suburbs of their cities, in every several city, the men that were expressed by name, to give portions to all the males among the priests, and to all that were reckoned by genealogies among the Levites.

20 ¶ And thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah, and wrought that which was good and right and truth before the Lord his God.

and in vs. 17—where Levites are said to function from the age of twenty (cf. I Chr. 23:24)—the hand of revisers may be recognized.

in Christ's name. As it is, churches are often in great straits. Why? Sometimes their members are ungenerous; more often they are generous and nevertheless are ungenerously reproached for not giving more. In Hezekiah's time his goodness and zeal so captivated the hearts of the people that they responded en masse to his appeal, and the treasury was filled.
21 And in every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments, to seek his God, he did it with all his heart, and prospered.

32 After these things, and the establishment thereof, Sennacherib king of Assyria came, and entered into Judah, and encamped against the fenced cities, and thought to win them for himself.

2 And when Hezekiah saw that Sennacherib was come, and that he was purposed to fight against Jerusalem,

3 He took counsel with his princes and his mighty men to stop the waters of the fountains which were without the city: and they did help him.

4 So there was gathered much people together, who stopped all the fountains, and the brook that ran through the midst of the land, saying, Why should the kings of Assyria come, and find much water?

5 Also he strengthened himself, and built up all the wall that was broken, and raised it up to the towers, and another wall without, and repaired Millo in the city of David, and made darts and shields in abundance.

6 And he set captains of war over the people, and gathered them together to him in the street of the gate of the city, and spake comfortably to them, saying,

7 Be strong and courageous, be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him: for there be more with us than with him.

21 And every work that he undertook in the service of the house of God and in accordance with the law and the commandments, seeking his God, he did with all his heart, and prospered.

32 After these things and these acts of faithfulness Sennach'erib king of Assyria came and invaded Judah and encamped against the fortified cities, thinking to win them for himself. 2 And when Hezeki'ah saw that Sennacherib had come and intended to fight against Jerusalem, 3 he planned with his officers and his mighty men to stop the water of the springs that were outside the city; and they helped him.

4 A great many people were gathered, and they stopped all the springs and the brook that flowed through the land, saying, "Why should the kings of Assyria come and find much water?" 5 He set to work resolutely and built up all the wall that was broken down, and raised towers upon it, and outside it he built another wall; and he strengthened the Millo in the city of David.

He also made weapons and shields in abundance. 6 And he set combat command- ers over the people, and gathered them together to him in the square at the gate of the city and spoke encouragingly to them, saying, 7 "Be strong and of good courage. Do not be afraid or dismayed before the king of Assyria and all the horde that is with him; for there is one greater with us.

3. The Assyrian Invasion and Hezekiah's Death (32:1-33)

32:1. Thought to win them: According to II Kings 18:13, the Assyrians did capture the Judean towns; and further, Hezekiah paid tribute, only to find himself duped. The Chronicler arbitrarily altered the tale because he felt that so good a king ought not to have been so humiliated.

32:1-8. Piety Unrewarded.—After this manifestation of piety, so genuine and so thorough, after these things and these acts of faithfulness, up came the king of Assyria with his overwhelming army. Frequent and daunting are the comparable experiences in life. Heavy labor, we feel, should be followed by a restful holiday. After we have battled through a dozen difficulties, surely we should have relief from anxiety and strain. Kindness should always have a response in gratitude. When we have beaten down temptations, and have long loved to try to do the will of God, ought there not to come a time when we enter into peace on earth? Constantly it does not so happen, and bitter trials may continue to be our lot. We should learn that character never can rise above need for the discipline which changing circumstance ever presents, and that the true reward of piety is not in cessation of trials but in increased strength rightly to encounter them. Not outward but inward peace is the possession, here and now, of "the treasure laid up in heaven."

Pious Hezekiah suddenly was faced by deadly peril: invasion by the merciless Assyrian army, equipped with terrible siege engines. As for the 8 With him is an arm of flesh; but with us is the Lord our God to help us, and to fight our battles. And the people rested themselves upon the words of Hezekiah king of Judah.

9 ¶ After this did Sennacherib king of Assyria send his servants to Jerusalem, (but he himself laid siege against Lachish, and all his power with him,) unto Hezekiah king of Judah, and unto all Judah that were at Jerusalem, saying,

10 Thus saith Sennacherib king of Assyria, Whereon do ye trust, that ye abide in the siege in Jerusalem?

11 Doth not Hezekiah persuade you to give over yourselves to die by famine and by thirst, saying, The Lord our God shall deliver us out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

12 Hath not the same Hezekiah taken away his high places and his altars, and commanded Judah and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall worship before one altar, and burn incense upon it?

13 Know ye not that I and my fathers have done unto all the people of other lands? were the gods of the nations of those lands any ways able to deliver their lands out of mine hand?

14 Who was there among all the gods of those nations that my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of mine hand, that your God should be able to deliver you out of mine hand?

15 Now therefore let not Hezekiah deceive you, nor persuade you on this manner, neither yet believe him: for no god of any nation or kingdom was able to deliver his little towns and villages of Judah, even if no opposition were ventured, there was only a faint hope of being spared from massacre or captivity. Now in II Kings 18:14-16 we are told that Hezekiah's first response to the threat was to try to appease the Assyrians by paying tremendous tribute, and that to obtain the wherewithal he seized the treasures in the temple. Imagine the "Chronicler's consternation—that was a ject failure to rely on Yahweh; it was Ahaz' sacrilegious sin repeated. To include this information would blacken his portrait of the good king. He met the problem by omitting the damaging verses, and instead related that Hezekiah bravely made all military preparations to resist, and then spoke to his people (vss. 7-8) words that deserve to be immortal: Do not be afraid than with him. 8 With him is an arm of flesh; but with us is the Lord our God, to help us and to fight our battles." And the people took confidence from the words of Hezekiah'ah king of Judah.

9 After this Sennacherib'ah king of Assyria, who was besieging Lachish with all his forces, sent his servants to Jerusalem to Hezekiah'ah king of Judah and to all the people of Judah that were in Jerusalem, saying, 10 "Thus says Sennacherib'ah king of Assyria, 'On what are you relying, that you stand siege in Jerusalem?' 11 Is not Hezekiah misleading you, that he may give you over to die by famine and by thirst, when he tells you, "The Lord our God will deliver us from the hand of the king of Assyria'?

12 Has not this same Hezekiah'ah taken away his high places and his altars and commanded Judah and Jerusalem, "Before one altar you shall worship, and upon it you shall burn your sacrifices"? 13 Do you not know what I and my fathers have done to all the peoples of other lands? Were the gods of the nations of those lands at all able to deliver their lands out of my hand? 14 Who among all the gods of those nations which my fathers utterly destroyed was able to deliver his people from my hand, that your God should be able to deliver you from my hand? 15 Now therefore do not let Hezekiah'ah deceive you or mislead you in this fashion, and do not believe him, for no god of any nation or kingdom has been able or dismayed before the king of Assyria and all the horde that is with him; for there is one greater with us than with him. With him is an arm of flesh; but with us is the Lord our God, to help us and to fight our battles (cf. II Kings 6:17; Isa. 31:1-8).

What should we think about the Chronicler's refusal to set on record Hezekiah's weakness in the first impact of crisis? Was his decision simply an unpardonable suppression of truth, or was it fairness to a larger truth, viz., the general tenor of the king's character? Men are prone to let a single tragic error devastatingly darken the memory of an upright life. "Judge not, that ye be not judged" (Matt. 7:1).

9-23. The Great Deliverance.—From this point the Chronicler could thankfully continue people out of mine hand, and out of the hand of my fathers: how much less shall your God deliver you out of mine hand?

16 And his servants spake yet more against the Lord God, and against his servant Hezekiah.

17 He wrote also letters to rail on the Lord God of Israel, and to speak against him, saying, As the gods of the nations of other lands have not delivered their people out of mine hand, so shall not the God of Hezekiah deliver his people out of mine hand.

18 Then they cried with a loud voice, in the Jews' speech, unto the people of Jerusalem that were on the wall, to affright them, and to trouble them; that they might take the city.

19 And they spake against the God of Jerusalem, as against the gods of the people of the earth, which were the work of the hands of man.

20 And for this cause Hezekiah the king, and the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz, prayed and cried to heaven.

21 ¶ And the Lord sent an angel, which cut off all the mighty men of valor, and the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria. So he returned with shame of face to his own land. And when he was come into the house of his god, they that came forth of his own bowels slew him there with the sword.

22 Thus the Lord saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, and from the hand of all other, and guided them on every side.

23 And many brought gifts unto the Lord to Jerusalem, and presents to Hezekiah king of Judah: so that he was magnified in the sight of all nations thenceforth.

24 ¶ In those days Hezekiah was sick to the death, and prayed unto the Lord: and he spake unto him, and he gave him a sign.

25 But Hezekiah rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him; for his heart was lifted up: therefore there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem.

to deliver his people from my hand or from the hand of my fathers. How much less will your God deliver you out of my hand!"

16 And his servants said still more against the Lord God and against his servant Hezeki'ah. 17 And he wrote letters to cast contempt on the Lord the God of Israel and to speak against him, saying, "Like the gods of the nations of the lands who have not delivered their people from my hands, so the God of Hezeki'ah will not deliver his people from my hand." 18 And they shouted it with a loud voice in the language of Judah to the people of Jerusalem who were upon the wall, to frighten and terrify them, in order that they might take the city. 19 And they spoke of the God of Jerusalem as they spoke of the gods of the peoples of the earth, which are the work of men's hands.

20 Then Hezeki'ah the king and Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, prayed because of this and cried to heaven. 21 And the Lord sent an angel, who cut off all the mighty warriors and commanders and officers in the camp of the king of Assyria. So he returned with shame of face to his own land. And when he came into the house of his god, some of his own sons struck him down there with the sword. 22 So the Lord saved Hezeki'ah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib king of Assyria and from the hand of all his enemies; and he gave them rest on every side. 23 And many brought gifts to the Lord to Jerusalem and precious things to Hezeki'ah king of Judah, so that he was exalted in the sight of all nations from that time onward.

24 In those days Hezeki'ah became sick and was at the point of death, and he prayed to the Lord; and he answered him and gave him a sign. 25 But Hezeki'ah did not make return according to the benefit done to him, for his heart was proud. Therefore wrath came upon him and Judah and

25. The occasion when he showed pride is that referred to in vs. 31 (see II Kings 20:12-19).
26 Notwithstanding, Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart, both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, so that the wrath of the Lord came not upon them in the days of Hezekiah.

27 And Hezekiah had exceeding much riches and honor: and he made himself treasuries for silver, and for gold, and for precious stones, and for spices, and for shields, and for all manner of pleasant jewels;

28 Storehouses also for the increase of corn, and wine, and oil; and stalls for all manner of beasts, and cotes for flocks.

29 Moreover he provided him cities, and possessions of flocks and herds in abundance: for God had given him substance very much.

30 This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper watercourse of Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David. And Hezekiah prospered in all his works.

31 And Hezekiah, in the business of the ambassadors of the princes of Babylon, who sent unto him to inquire of the wonder that was done in the land, God left him, to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart.

32 Now the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and his goodness, behold, they are written in the vision of Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, and in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

33 And Hezekiah slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the chiefest of the sepulchres of the sons of David: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem did him honor at his death. And Manasseh his son reigned in his stead.

33 Manasseh was twelve years old when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem.

K. REIGNS OF MANASSEH AND AMON (33:1-25)

Hezekiah, "a second David," was succeeded by Manasseh, who was tyrant, polytheist, by quoting with some curtailment from II Kings 18:13-37; 19:1-37, the dramatic episode regarding the Assyrian plenipotentiaries at the barred gates of Jerusalem, and the startling retirement of the Assyrian army.

31. God Left Him to Try Him.—God's testing of men continues to the very end; and it is best so. The Chronicler could be content now to admit that this good king was not quite free from fault (vss. 25, 31), was not quite a perfect saint. But Hezekiah had done very well. Requiescat in pace.

33:1-25. After the Best, the Worst.—The sheer perversity of things! Manasseh reigned for fifty-
2 But did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, like unto the abominations of the heathen, whom the Lord had cast out before the children of Israel.
3 For he built again the high places which Hezekiah his father had broken down, and he reared up altars for Baalim, and made groves, and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served them.
4 Also he built altars in the house of the Lord, whereof the Lord had said, In Jerusalem shall my name be for ever.
5 And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the house of the Lord.
6 And he caused his children to pass through the fire in the valley of the son of Hinnom: also he observed times, and used enchantments, and used witchcraft, and dealt with a familiar spirit, and with wizards: he wrought much evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger.
7 And he set a carved image, the idol which he had made, in the house of God, of which God had said to David and to Solomon his son, In this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen before all the tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever:
8 Neither will I any more remove the foot of Israel from out of the land which I have appointed for your fathers; so that they will take heed to do all that I have commanded them, according to the whole law and the statutes and the ordinances by the hand of Moses.
9 So Manasseh made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err, and to do worse than the heathen, whom the Lord had destroyed before the children of Israel.
10 And the LORD spake to Manasseh, and to his people: but they would not hearken.
11 Wherefore the LORD brought upon them the captains of the host of the king of Assyria, which took Manasseh among the thorns, and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon.
12 And when he was in affliction, he sought the LORD his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, 13 And prayed unto him: and he was entreated of him, and heard his supplication, and brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom. Then Manasseh knew that the LORD he was God.
14 Now after this he built a wall without the city of David, on the west side of Gihon, in the valley, even to the entering in at the fish gate, and compassed about Ophel, and raised it up a very great height, and put captains of war in all the fenced cities of Judah.
15 And he took away the strange gods, and the idol out of the house of the LORD, and all the altars that he had built in the mount of the house of the LORD, and in Jerusalem, and cast them out of the city.
16 And he repaired the altar of the LORD, and sacrificed thereon peace offerings and thank offerings, and commanded Judah to serve the LORD God of Israel.
17 Nevertheless the people did sacrifice still in the high places, yet unto the LORD their God only.
18 Now the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and his prayer unto his God, and the words of the seers that spake to him in the 33:11-13. Kings is silent as to Manasseh’s spell in captivity, and his penitence. That he repented in this wise there is no vestige of likelihood; for Josiah had to purge Jerusalem of heathenism. That he was removed to Babylon, but later released, may be fact—if he was suspect in the widespread revolt against Assyria in 648 B.c.

14-17. Not in Kings.

18. The late apocryphal book called The Prayer of Manasses drew its title from this verse, but not its contents.

II CHRONICLES 33:18

10 The LORD spoke to Manas’seh and to his people, but they gave no heed. 11 Therefore the LORD brought upon them the commanders of the army of the king of Assyria, who took Manas’seh with hooks and bound him with fetters of bronze and brought him to Babylon. 12 And when he was in distress he entreated the favor of the LORD his God and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers. 13 He prayed to him, and God received his entreaty and heard his supplication and brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom. Then Manas’seh knew that the LORD was God.

14 Afterwards he built an outer wall to the city of David west of Gihon, in the valley, to the entrance by the Fish Gate, and carried it round Ophel, and raised it to a very great height; he also put commanders of the army in all the fortified cities in Judah. 15 And he took away the foreign gods and the idol from the house of the LORD, and all the altars that he had built on the mountain of the house of the LORD and in Jerusalem, and he threw them outside of the city. 16 He also restored the altar of the LORD and offered upon it sacrifices of peace offerings and of thanksgiving; and he commanded Judah to serve the LORD the God of Israel. 17 Nevertheless the people still sacrificed at the high places, but only to the LORD their God.

18 Now the rest of the acts of Manas’seh, and his prayer to his God, and the words of name of the Lord God of Israel, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel.

19 His prayer also, and how God was entreated of him, and all his sins, and his trespass, and the places wherein he built high places, and set up groves and graven images, before he was humbled: behold, they are written among the sayings of the seers.

20 ¶ So Manasseh slept with his fathers, and they buried him in his own house: and Amon his son reigned in his stead.

21 ¶ Amon was two and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned two years in Jerusalem.

22 But he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, as did Manasseh his father: for Amon sacrificed unto all the carved images which Manasseh his father had made, and served them;

23 And humbled not himself before the Lord, as Manasseh his father had humbled himself; but Amon trespassed more and more.

24 And his servants conspired against him, and slew him in his own house.

25 ¶ But the people of the land slew all them that had conspired against king Amon; and the people of the land made Josiah his son king in his stead.

34 Josiah was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem one and thirty years.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of David his father, and declined neither to the right hand, nor to the left.

21-25. These verses reproduce II Kings 21:19-26, concerning Amon.

have been there embroidered in regard to his repentance. That might explain the curious vs. 17, which indicates that, although the local altars in Judah were not abolished, sacrifices were now there offered only to Yahweh and not also to the local spirits, the baals, or to the female deity, Astarte. But against whitewashing stand such verses as Jer. 2:20, 28.

The modern expositor may be inclined to think that if Manasseh’s conscience ever was troubled, it would be a case of expediency:

The Devil was sick—the Devil a monk would be;
The Devil was well—the Devil a monk was he.8

8 Rabelais, Works, Bk. IV, ch. xxiv.

No more can sensibly be suggested than forlorn hope that conceivably this sinner repented and was not refused the grace of God (vs. 19).

21-25. Assassinated Amon.—Amon was like-minded with his father. After two years he was murdered by a party in the palace. But the populace of Jerusalem had had enough of “Manassehism” and of palace plots: they rose and slew Amon’s slayers. “This interference in the court by the people of the land is the most democratic action recorded in the history” (but cf. Jer. 26:16-19).

* Montgomery and Gehman, Kings, p. 521.
3 For in the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David his father: and in the twelfth year he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places, and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images.

4 And they brake down the altars of Baalim in his presence: and the images, that were on high above them, he cut down; and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images, he brake in pieces, and made dust of them, and strewed it upon the graves of them that had sacrificed unto them.

5 And he burnt the bones of the priests upon their altars, and cleansed Judah and Jerusalem.

6 And so did he in the cities of Manasseh, and Ephraim, and Simeon, even unto Naphatai, with their mattocks round about.

7 And when he had broken down the altars and the groves, and had beaten the graven images into powder, and cut down all the idols throughout all the land of Israel, he returned to Jerusalem.

L. Reign of Josiah (34:1–35:27)

34:3. In the twelfth year: Josiah would then be twenty years old. An expectable sequence of events is related. The Assyrian Empire was in difficulties, approaching its destruction in 612 B.C., and its hold on central and northern Palestine was probably no more than nominal. Josiah and his counselors could venture on measures to strengthen unity of national feeling among the Hebrews throughout the land. A century earlier—so the Chronicler believed and said—King Hezekiah had brilliantly exploited a comparable but transient opportunity by holding a “Unity Passover” at Jerusalem. Josiah was a decent-minded youth, and there was probably a strong revulsion felt in Jerusalem against the religious polytheism and licentious rites obtaining in Manasseh’s reign. What the Chronicler stated is therefore entirely possible: viz., that in the twelfth year of Josiah’s reign drastic measures were taken to effect a thorough reform of religious rites, and concurrently to unify the Judean and Israelite Hebrews on the basis of their common worship of Yahweh. Hezekiah’s action, so the Chronicler believed, set a precedent, if one was needed. For not only did Josiah cleanse the Augean stables in Jerusalem, but he resolutely destroyed the local sanctuaries both in Judah and in Israelite territory—obviously with the object that the great religious festivals should be observed at Jerusalem and sacrificial worship henceforth confined to its altar. The Chronicler next told that in Josiah’s eighteenth year (34:8) an impressive document (vs. 14) was

34:3. One Generation to Another.—There is no accounting for the mutations of character from one generation to another: incorrigible Ahaz, followed by teachable Hezekiah; evil-disposed Manasseh and Amon, and then Manasseh’s grandson, good King Josiah, who was respected by Huldah (vs. 26-28) and honored by Jeremiah. “He judged the cause of the poor and needy; then it was well with him: was not this to know me? saith the Lord” (Jer. 22:16). In this matter the facts of life, broadly seen, are not depressing. Frequently the child of bad parents becomes disgusted with their ways and learns to meet his own experiences with eyes open and able to discern right from wrong. But it may be added that those who do great good 8 Now in the eighteenth year of his reign, when he had purged the land and the house, he sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, and Maaseiah the governor of the city, and Joah the son of Joahaz the recorder, to repair the house of the Lord his God.

9 And when they came to Hilki'ah the high priest, they delivered the money that was brought into the house of God, which the Levites that kept the doors had gathered of the hand of Manasseh and Ephraim, and of all the remnant of Israel, and of all Judah and Benjamin; and they returned to Jerusalem.

10 And they put it in the hand of the workmen that had the oversight of the house of the Lord, and they gave it to the workmen that wrought in the house of the Lord, to repair and amend the house:

11 Even to the artificers and builders gave they it, to buy hewn stone, and timber for couplings, and to floor the houses which the kings of Judah had destroyed.

12 And the men did the work faithfully: and the overseers of them were Jahath and Obadiah, the Levites, of the sons of Merari; and Zechariah and Meshullam, of the sons of the Kohathites, to set it forward; and other of the Levites, all that could skill of instruments of music.

13 Also they were over the bearers of burdens, and were overseers of all that wrought the work in any manner of service: and of the Levites there were scribes, and officers, and porters.

14 ¶ And when they brought out the money that was brought into the house of the Lord, Hilki'ah the priest found a book of the law of the Lord given by Moses.

found in the temple; and that thereafter an enthusiastic "Unity Passover" was celebrated in Jerusalem. It might well be that there was strong opposition to the destruction of the local sanctuaries, and that not until six years after the initiation of the reform could the "Unity Passover" be achieved. The Chronicler's order of events, it may be noted, is much more natural than the account in II Kings 22:3-20, where nothing happened until the discovery of the book occurred in Josiah's eighteenth year, and the discovery in life generally began to travel the right way when they were young, as did Josiah while he was yet a boy.

14. Sower and Reaper.—It is virtually certain that the writing so remarkably discovered in the temple was the book, or the essential part of the book, we know as Deuteronomy (see Exeg.) —teaching belief in the grace of the living God, showing how his people should worship him and how, as God's people, they should deal with one another. A single reflection is here offered. Think of the men who had gathered together this writing in time past, moved by their faith in the pure purpose of God, hoping that their labor would not be in vain in the Lord; and who died not knowing that it would thus be 15 And Hilkiah answered and said to Shaphan the scribe, I have found the book of the law in the house of the Lord. And Hilkiah delivered the book to Shaphan.

16 And Shaphan carried the book to the king, and brought the king word back again, saying, All that was committed to thy servants, they do it.

17 And they have gathered together the money that was found in the house of the Lord, and have delivered it into the hand of the overseers, and to the hand of the workmen.

18 Then Shaphan the scribe told the king, saying, Hilki'ah the priest hath given me a book. And Shaphan read it before the king.

19 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the law, that he rent his clothes.

20 And the king commanded Hilki'ah, Ahik'am the son of Shaphan, and Abdon the son of Micah, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asaiah a servant of the king's, saying, 21 Go, inquire of the Lord for me, and for them that are left in Israel and in Judah, concerning the words of the book that is found: for great is the wrath of the Lord that is poured out upon us, because our fathers have not kept the word of the Lord, to do after all that is written in this book.

22 And Hilki'ah, and they that the king had appointed, went to Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of Tikvath, the son of Hasrah, keeper of the wardrobe, initiated the reform alike in the capital and in the country, while in the selfsame eighteenth year the "Unity Passover" was triumphantly held! It is arguable that the Chronicler arbitrarily antedated the reform to the twelfth year, on the principle that a good young king should "get going" early. But one asks whether by aid of tradition or written source he happened to know the right order, or else rightly conjectured it. At any rate, it is the compilers of Kings who here presented a stilted, most improbable sequence.

15. I have found the book of the law: Unquestionably a remarkable MS concerning rightful worship of Yahweh was found in the temple by workmen carrying out repairs.

found in Jerusalem and when the hour came for the dissolution of the Judean kingdom, would serve to hold together their people, to instruct them and enlighten, and by its finest words inspire the faith of countless Jews and Christians. Christ saw in the fact that "one soweth, and another reapeth" no reason for sadness. The sower should rejoice in hope; the reaper through Moses. 16. Then Hilki'ah said to Shaphan the secretary, "I have found the book of the law in the house of the Lord"; and Hilki'ah gave the book to Shaphan.

17. Shaphan brought the book to the king, and further reported to the king, "All that was committed to your servants they are doing. They have emptied out the money that was found in the house of the Lord and have delivered it into the hand of the overseers and the workmen." 18. Then Shaphan the secretary told the king, "Hilki'ah the priest has given me a book." And Shaphan read it before the king.

19. When the king heard the words of the law he rent his clothes. 20. And the king commanded Hilki'ah, Ahik'am the son of Shaphan, Abdon the son of Micah, Shaphan the secretary, and Asaiah the king's servant, saying, 21. Go, inquire of the Lord for me and for those who are left in Israel and in Judah, concerning the words of the book that has been found; for great is the wrath of the Lord that is poured out on us, because our fathers have not kept the word of the Lord, to do according to all that is written in this book."

22. So Hilki'ah and those whom the king had sent went to Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of Tokhath, son of Hasrah, keeper of the wardrobe robe; (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the college;) and they spake to her to that effect.

23 And she answered them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Tell ye the man that sent you to me,
24 Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the curses that are written in the book which they have read before the king of Judah:
25 Because they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be poured out upon this place, and shall not be quenched.
26 And as for the king of Judah, who sent you to inquire of the Lord, so shall ye say unto him, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel concerning the words which thou hast heard:
27 Because thine heart was tender, and thou didst humble thyself before God, when thou hearest his words against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, and humbledst thyself before me, and didst rend thy clothes, and weep before me; I have even heard thee also, saith the Lord.
28 Behold, I will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace, neither shall thine eyes see all the evil that I will bring upon this place, and upon the inhabitants of the same. So they brought the king word again.
29 ¶ Then the king sent and gathered together all the elders of Judah and Jerusalem.

And there is no difference between Kings and Chronicles regarding the profound impression which its solemn words made on king and people. It is likely that the writing was an early version of the present book of Deuteronomy—a statement of Israelitish custom made under the influence of prophetic zeal for Yahweh, and somehow deposited in the temple at Jerusalem after the fall of Samaria. But scholars have gone beyond warrant in confidence that it was a version of Deuteronomy which clearly enjoined that sacrifice should be offered to Yahweh at one altar only in all Hebrew territory. All that is known for certain about the contents of the book, and the immediate impression which it made, is that when it was submitted to the prophetess Huldah she somberly declared that there was nothing in it to justify hope that sinful Jerusalem would escape destruction, but that the disaster would not happen in good-intentioned do know is fine—she refused to countenance wishful thinking (vss. 24-25), but she encouraged the young king to believe that his good intentions would not be in vain (vss. 26-28). Little did Josiah and Hilkiah and Huldah realize that four miles distant from Jerusalem a lad was growing up who, through suffering, would be led to see deeper into the heart of truth than any man who had yet lived—Jeremiah of Anathoth.

30 And the king went up into the house of the Lord, and all the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the priests, and the Levites, and all the people, great and small: and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant that was found in the house of the Lord.

31 And the king stood in his place, and made a covenant before the Lord, to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments, and his testimonies, and his statutes, with all his heart, and with all his soul, to perform the words of the covenant which are written in this book.

32 And he caused all that were present in Jerusalem and Benjamin to stand to it. And the inhabitants of Jerusalem did according to the covenant of God, the God of their fathers.

33 And Josiah took away all the abominations out of all the countries that pertained to the children of Israel, and made all that were present in Israel to serve, even to serve the Lord their God. And all his days they departed not from following the Lord, the God of their fathers.

35 Moreover, Josiah kept a passover unto the Lord in Jerusalem: and they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month.

Josiah’s lifetime (vss. 22-28; see II Kings 22:14-20). Thereafter king and people vowed that they would obey the injunctions of the book and loyally worship Yahweh. At this point Kings states that the whole reform movement was instituted, but Chronicles (34:32-33) that Josiah continued the good work throughout the land which he had begun in his twelfth year.

35:1-19. Josiah kept a passover to the Lord in Jerusalem: The Chronicler did not specify exactly when, deliberately refraining at this point (see vss. 18-19) from transcribing II Kings 23:21-23 where the implication is that the great “Unity Passover” was inspired by the finding of the book, and held in that very year. The Chronicler believed Hezekiah to have held just such a Passover a century earlier, when no “book of the law” had been discovered to prompt his action. Welch rightly insists on the great importance of this point for critical study. Other deep-seated differences between what is said of Hezekiah’s Passover and Josiah’s support the view that the historicity of Hezekiah’s Passover should not be dismissed as a fictional reading back to Hezekiah’s time of an event which in fact took place only under Josiah. (Cf. Welch, Work of the Chronicler, pp. 110, 147: “The fact remains that a responsible writer [the Chronicler], whose book has found its way into the Jewish Canon, had no hesitation in
2 And he set the priests in their charges, and encouraged them to the service of the house of the LORD.

3 And said unto the Levites that taught all Israel, which were holy unto the LORD, Put the holy ark in the house which Solomon the son of David king of Israel did build: it shall not be a burden upon you shoulders: serve now the LORD your God, and his people Israel,

4 And prepare yourselves by the houses of your fathers, after your courses, according to the writing of David king of Israel, and according to the writing of Solomon his son:

5 And stand in the holy place according to the divisions of the families of the fathers of your brethren the people, and after the division of the families of the Levites.

6 So kill the passover, and sanctify yourselves, and prepare your brethren, that they may do according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

7 And Josiah gave to the people, of the flock, lambs and kids, all for the passover offerings, for all that were present, to the number of thirty thousand, and three thousand bullocks: these were of the king's substance.

8 And his princes gave willingly unto the people, to the priests, and to the Levites: Hilkiah and Zechariah and Jehiel, rulers of the house of God, gave unto the priests for the passover offerings two thousand and six hundred small cattle, and three hundred oxen.

9 Conaniah also, and Shemaiah and Nathanael, his brethren, and Hashabiah and Jeiel and Jozabad, chief of the Levites, gave unto the Levites for passover offerings five thousand.

first month. 2 He appointed the priests to their offices and encouraged them in the service of the house of the LORD. 3 And he said to the Levites who taught all Israel and who were holy to the LORD, “Put the holy ark in the house which Solomon the son of David, king of Israel, built: you need no longer carry it upon your shoulders. Now serve the LORD your God and his people Israel. 4 Prepare yourselves according to your fathers’ houses by your divisions, following the directions of David king of Israel and the directions of Solomon his son.

5 And stand in the holy place according to the groupings of the fathers’ houses of your brethren the lay people, and let there be for each a part of a father’s house of the Levites. 6 And kill the passover, and sanctify yourselves, and prepare for your brethren, to do according to the word of the LORD by Moses.

7 Then Josiah contributed to the lay people, as passover offerings for all that were present, lambs and kids from the flock to the number of thirty thousand, and three thousand bulls: these were from the king’s possessions. 8 And his princes contributed willingly to the people, to the priests, and to the Levites. Hilkiah, Zechariah, and Jehiel, the chief officers of the house of God, gave to the priests for the passover offerings two thousand six hundred lambs and kids and three hundred bulls. 9 Conaniah also, and Shemaiah and Nathan’el his brothers, and Hashabiah and Je’el and Jo’zabad, the chiefs of the Levites, gave to the Levites for the passover offerings five thousand.

dating the first tentative movement for centralization, and the change of locus for passover in the time of Hezekiah, and that, by doing this, he made it impossible to connect either movement with the discovery of the book of the law.”) Deuteronomy exerted a profound influence on the men of the exilic and early postexilic generations; but that is a wider matter.

2-17. No parallel in Kings. Vs. 3b (Put the holy ark . . .) is probably revisional, for it deprecates the ark’s importance (cf. Exeg. on 5:7-14) and intimates that mere Levites, having redeposited the ark, are now to return to their ordinary duties. On the

The Chronicler had described a passover held at Jerusalem as the zenith of Hezekiah’s reign, with a great concourse of worshipers from both Judah and Israel. But this celebration under Josiah surpassed even that, surpassed all that loses in that the worshipers are so few relatively to the total population that the services for the day seem isolated amidst, not indispensable to, the general enjoyment of the welcome freedom from work.

thousand small cattle, and five hundred oxen.

10 So the service was prepared, and the priests stood in their place, and the Levites in their courses, according to the king's commandment.

11 And they killed the passover, and the priests sprinkled the blood from their hands, and the Levites flayed them.

12 And they removed the burnt offerings, that they might give according to the divisions of the families of the people, to offer unto the Lord, as it is written in the book of Moses. And so did they with the oxen.

13 And they roasted the passover with fire according to the ordinance: but the other holy offerings sod they in pots, and in caldrons, and in pans, and divided them speedily among all the people.

14 And afterward they made ready for themselves, and for the priests: because the priests the sons of Aaron were busied in offering of burnt offerings and the fat until night; therefore the Levites prepared for themselves, and for the priests the sons of Aaron.

15 And the singers the sons of Asaph were in their place, according to the commandment of David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun the king's seer; and the porters waited at every gate; they might not depart from their service; for their brethren the Levites prepared for them.

16 So all the service of the Lord was prepared the same day, to keep the passover, and to offer burnt offerings upon the altar of the Lord, according to the commandment of king Josiah.

17 And the children of Israel that were present kept the passover at that time, and the feast of unleavened bread seven days.

other hand, vss. 2-3a (And ... to the Lord), 4 (the and should be omitted as the revisers' linking word), and 5 are by the Chronicler, who gives the Levites the status later reserved to the Zadokites: they are said to be holy to the Lord, and to stand in the holy place. As for vss. 6-17, the Chronicler's mention that large cattle as well as lambs were permissible victims (so only in Deut. 16:2), and that the flesh was boiled, accords with Deuteronomy, but not with the final Law (cf. Deut. 16:7 with Exod. 12:9 in the RSV). It appears, however, that the revisers were content to obscure the matter by former years had known. The multitude of families who participated were of the utmost diversity of mind. Many were devout, many were by no means so; but we may suppose there were very few who did not in some degree benefit spiritually because this great holiday was conceived by the whole community as essentially a holy day.

18 And there was no passover like to that kept in Israel from the days of Samuel the prophet: neither did all the kings of Israel keep such a passover as Josiah kept, and the priests, and the Levites, and all Judah and Israel that were present, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

19 In the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah was this passover kept.

20 After all this, when Josiah had prepared the temple, Necho king of Egypt went up to fight against Carchemish by Euphrates: and Josiah went out against him.

21 But he sent ambassadors to him, saying, What have I to do with thee, thou king of Judah? I come not against thee this day, but against the house wherewith I have war: for God commanded me to make haste: forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not.

22 Nevertheless Josiah would not turn his face from him, but disguised himself, that he might fight with him, and hearkened not unto the words of Neco from the mouth of God, and came to fight in the valley of Megiddo.

23 And the archers shot at king Josiah; and the king said to his servants, Have me away; for I am sore wounded.

24 His servants therefore took him out of that chariot, and put him in the second chariot that he had; and they brought him to Jerusalem, and he died, and was buried in one of the sepulchres of his fathers. And all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah.

25 ¶ And Jeremiah lamented for Josiah: and all the singing men and the singing women spake of Josiah in their lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance in Israel: and, behold, they are written in the lamentations.

26 Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and his goodness, according to that which was written in the law of the Lord, days. 18 No passover like it had been kept in Israel since the days of Samuel the prophet; none of the kings of Israel had kept such a passover as was kept by Josi'ah, and the priests and the Levites, and all Judah and Israel who were present, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem. 19 In the eighteenth year of the reign of Josi'ah this passover was kept. 20 After all this, when Josi'ah had prepared the temple, Neco king of Egypt went up to fight at Car'chemish on the Eu-phra'tes and Josi'ah went out against him. 21 But he sent envoys to him, saying, "What have we to do with each other, king of Judah? I am not coming against you this day, but against the house with which I am at war; and God has commanded me to make haste. Cease opposing God, who is with me, lest he destroy you." 22 Nevertheless Josi'ah would not turn away from him, but disguised himself in order to fight with him. He did not listen to the words of Neco from the mouth of God, but joined battle in the plain of Megid'do. 23 And the archers shot King Josi'ah; and the king said to his servants, "Take me away, for I am badly wounded." 24 So his servants took him out of the chariot and carried him in his second chariot and brought him to Jerusalem. And he died, and was buried in the tombs of his fathers. All Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josi'ah. 25 Jeremiah also uttered a lament for Josi'ah; and all the singing men and singing women have spoken of Josi'ah in their laments to this day. They made these an ordinance in Israel; behold, they are written in the Laments. 26 Now the rest of the acts of Josi'ah, and his good deeds according to what is written in the law of introducing the confusing remarks about burnt offerings, and the quite mysterious reference to holy offerings found in vss. 12-13.

18-19. Here are the verses found in II Kings 23:22-23, for which the Chronicler (see Exeg, on vss. 1-19) substituted the dateless phrase such a passover as Josiah kept. These verses were probably inserted here by an annotator who perhaps failed to realize that the Chronicler's long and glowing description of the keeping of this Passover more than compensated for the omission of II Kings 23:22. What is significant is that neither the annotator nor the Chronicler thought it worth while to transcribe II Kings 23:21, 27 And his deeds, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah.

36 Then the people of the land took Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, and made him king in his father's stead in Jerusalem.

2 Jehoahaz was twenty and three years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem.

3 And the king of Egypt put him down at Jerusalem, and condemned the land in a hundred talents of silver and a talent of gold.

4 And the king of Egypt made Eliakim his brother king over Judah and Jerusalem, and turned his name to Jehoiakim. And Necho took Jehoahaz his brother, and carried him to Egypt.

5 Jehoiakim was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD his God.

6 Against him came up Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and bound him in fetters, to carry him to Babylon.

7 Nebuchadnezzar also carried of the vessels of the house of the LORD to Babylon, and put them in his temple at Babylon.

8 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and his abominations which he did, and that which was found in him, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah: and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

which says, "Keep the passover, . . . as it is written in this book of the covenant." Evidently they did not attach importance to the general phrase as denoting a specific order to come to Jerusalem for the purpose, instead of—as hitherto—observing the rite in the homes.

M. LAST KINGS OF JUDAH (36:1-23)

36:1-11. This section reproduces with some freedom II Kings 23:25-24:6; but vss. 12-20 give the Chronicler's own indictment of Zedekiah, final king of Judah, who would not obey even Jeremiah, and of the unteachable people who mocked the prophets sent by God, until at last there was no remedy (vs. 16).

36:1-23. The End.—Rapidly in this chapter the Chronicler mentions the kings of Jerusalem during its final twenty years of independence. Incidentally, his brevity is less than fair to the last of them, Zedekiah (vs. 12). The pitiful details mattered not; he hastens on to enforce the supreme reason for the tragedy. If the utterances of Jeremiah were sufficiently known to him, he must have agreed with the great prophet's interpretation of the decline and fall of the throne of David: Jeremiah's sad realization of the incorrigible nature of the religious blindness and moral perversity of the rulers and the people; his insight that the coming capture
9 Jehoiachin was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months and ten days in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord.

10 And when the year was expired, king Nebuchadnezzar sent, and brought him to Babylon, with the goodly vessels of the house of the Lord, and made Zedekiah his brother king over Judah and Jerusalem.

11 Zedeki’ah was one and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned eleven years in Jerusalem.

12 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord his God, and humbled not himself before Jeremiah the prophet speaking from the mouth of the Lord.

13 And he also rebelled against king Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him swear by God: but he stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart from turning unto the Lord God of Israel.

14 Moreover all the chief of the priests, and the people, transgressed very much after all the abominations of the heathen; and polluted the house of the Lord which he had hallowed in Jerusalem.

15 And the Lord God of their fathers sent to them by his messengers, rising up betimes, and sending; because he had compassion on his people, and on his dwelling place:

16 But they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy.

17 Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man, or him that stooped for age: he gave them all into his hand.

9 Jehoi’achin was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months and ten days in Jerusalem. He did what was evil in the sight of the Lord. 10 In the spring of the year King Nebuchadnezzar sent and brought him to Babylon, with the precious vessels of the house of the Lord, and made his brother Zedekiah king over Judah and Jerusalem.

11 Zedekiah was twenty-one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. 12 He did what was evil in the sight of the Lord his God. He did not humble himself before Jeremiah the prophet, who spoke from the mouth of the Lord. 13 He also rebelled against King Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him swear by God; he stiffened his neck and hardened his heart against turning to the Lord, the God of Israel. 14 All the leading priests and the people likewise were exceedingly unfaithful, following all the abominations of the nations; and they polluted the house of the Lord which he had hallowed in Jerusalem.

15 The Lord, the God of their fathers, sent persistently to them by his messengers, because he had compassion on his people and on his dwelling place; 16 but they kept mocking the messengers of God, despising his words, and scoffing at his prophets, till the wrath of the Lord rose against his people, till there was no remedy.

17 Therefore he brought up against them the king of the Chaldeans, who slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion on young man or virgin, old man or aged; he gave them all into his hand.

9. Read probably “eighteen.” Jehoiachin was king for three months only. Note therefore how conventional is the adverse verdict pronounced upon him.

of Jerusalem and destruction of its temple could work for good in the wisdom and purpose of God by enabling the survivors to cease to trust in outward things and to find their strength in the eternal truths of the spirit. But the Chronicler was impressively seeking to teach the same wisdom in his own way. The drama of his narrative, from Adam to Zedekiah, taught that the kingdom of Judah had come to an end because its kings and people persisted in rejecting the prophet-messengers of the living God—till there was no remedy.
18 And all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, and the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king, and of his princes: all these he brought to Babylon.

19 And they burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire, and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof.

20 And they that had escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon: where they were servants to him and his sons until the reign of the kingdom of Persia:

21 To fulfil the word of the LORD by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her sabbaths: for as long as she lay desolate she kept sabbath, to fulfil three-score and ten years.

22 Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the LORD spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah might be accomplished, the LORD stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying,

>21. Her sabbaths: The final Law enjoined, idealistically, that every seventh year the soil should rest uncultivated. Ten such occasions would therefore total three-score and ten years. The verse is a late addition to imply that legitimate worship of Yahweh was in abeyance from the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. until in 538 loyal, uncontaminated Hebrew priests and laymen returned to Jerusalem from captivity in Babylon, and in 518-516 the second temple was built and dedicated.

>22-23. These verses occur as Ezra 1:1-3a. But it does not follow that they must have been the conclusion of the Chronicler's book and that he was therefore the compiler of Ezra and Nehemiah. The contrary inference may be drawn: "Men do not take the trouble to stitch together two documents, unless they have been originally separate" (Adam C. Welch, Post-exilic Judaism [Edinburgh: William Blackwood & Sons, 1935]).

This last chapter reads like the tolling of a funeral bell. But Chronicles was not mere delineation of a tragedy, if one recollects when and for whom it was written. This drama spoke to Jews of his time in solemn warning, but also as a command to do their duty and as an exhortation to hope. It warned them that they should "hate evil and love good"; then they would be entitled to believe that God would be with them (cf. Amos 5:14-15). It warned them to perceive that suddenly or insidiously wickedness brings ruin as its sequel. Let them honor and follow after truth and righteousness. The picture of the fallen state was so drawn that they could perceive why the disaster had happened—even as we should understand the convulsions in our past history and learn how to build civilization on strong foundations.

The continuance of the kingdom had been always conditioned on the obedience of the kings to the word of prophecy which had brought the kingdom into existence. The condition was so absolute in its character that when the last king, ignoring the lessons of the past [vss. 12, 15-16], despised the message of the prophet, his kingdom fell. . . . But it had not fallen until it had created that house of God, through which the divine purpose with Israel was continued in force."

Therefore let them take heart and hope, who knew that light had arisen out of darkness; who Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, All the kingdoms of the earth hath the Lord God of heaven given me: and he hath charged me to build him a house in Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? The Lord his God be with him, and let him go up.

The probability is that, when Chronicles was relegated to the position of the very last of the Hagiographa, these verses were added to the MSS of Chronicles in order that the Hebrew Bible should conclude on a note of hope.

knew that wondrously God had had compassion on his stricken people to give them a continuance and a hope, that through them his will for mankind might be fulfilled. The Chronicler wrote for men who had seen their house of God built for a second time. He was urging them to believe that their future depended on whether they would comprehend that the temple's structure was no more than visible sign of invisible grace. If they could rise to the moral demands made by a true conception of the living God, then the divine glory would fill the second temple because righteousness filled their lives. Chronicles can be an inspiring work for us if we relate its essential heroism and its spiritual insight to the circumstances of our own age.

The books known as Ezra and Nehemiah are named not for the author but for the principal personalities encountered in each. It is apparent from the versions that in antiquity all that is now included in these books was known under the title of Ezra. Indeed, in addition to the canonical books there were two other writings that bore the name Ezra (Esdras): a recension of the canonical work, now known as the Greek Ezra, and an apocalypse in the Apocrypha with the same title.¹ There exists, therefore, the following ambiguity in the use of the name Ezra in the Greek and Latin versions:

I Esdras in the LXX = Greek Ezra (cf. p. 561)
I Esdras in Old Latin MSS = Greek Ezra (I Esdras)
I Esdras in later Latin MSS (post-Vulgata) = canonical Ezra-Nehemiah as one book

II Esdras in the LXX (major MSS) = canonical Ezra-Nehemiah as one book (chs. 1-10 = Ezra; chs. 11-23 = Nehemiah)

II Esdras in LXXI² = Greek Ezra (I Esdras)
II Esdras in later Latin MSS = chs. 1-2 of the Ezra Apocalypse

III Esdras in the Vulgate = Greek Ezra (I Esdras)
IV Esdras in later Latin MSS = chs. 3-14 of the Ezra Apocalypse
V Esdras in later Latin MSS = chs. 15-16 of the Ezra Apocalypse

It was Jerome (Prologus Galeatus) who first used the name “Nehemiah” for the second part of II Esdras.

I. Unity and Relationships

English Bibles treat Ezra and Nehemiah as separate books, but such practice has not always prevailed. Division into two books is first mentioned by Origen (A.D. 185-253), with the implication that such usage is Hebrew practice. But in accordance with the Talmudic tradition,³ the oldest Hebrew codices treat Ezra-Nehemiah as a single book,⁴ and the division into two books is not found in the Hebrew Bible until the Bomberg edition of 1525. Evidence for the original unity of the books in the Hebrew Bible is also seen in the fact that, though now separated, the Masoretic statistics and comments, usually found after each book of the Bible, are missing after Ezra 10:44, but are found for the entire work after Neh. 3:32, which is not the middle of Nehemiah but of the combined work.

The recognition of the two books, now established Christian practice, is first found in the Vulgate, and Jerome is the first to use the title Nehemiah. Not all Christian churches, however, recognized the separate books, for both Eusebius⁵ and Melito of Sardis⁶ knew but “Ezra,” and the oldest Christian indices of Old Testament books recognized but a single work.

³ Church History IV. 26. 14.
⁶ LXXI, as elsewhere in Exeg., signifies not a single MS but the Lutatian recension.
Although the Septuagint later separated Ezra-Nehemiah into two books, doubtless under Christian influence and the example of the Vulgate, it originally recognized but one book. Codex Vaticanus (LXX8) proceeds without interruption from Ezra to Nehemiah and designates all as 11 Esdras (Esdras2). The Greek Ezra recension (1 Esdras; cf. below) treats the books as a unit, showing no sign of a break between them or a knowledge of their separate existence. It has been assumed, however, from the silence about Ezra in Esclus. 44:1-49:13 and II Macc. 2:13, which mention only Nehemiah, that the story of Nehemiah may have circulated separately.7

The evidence is overwhelming that Ezra and Nehemiah, now separated, were once regarded as a literary unit and should now be so considered from the standpoint of authorship, purpose, and teaching. Under such circumstances it is easy to understand how some of the Ezra narrative has intruded into the book of Nehemiah.

But the original literary unit was even greater than Ezra-Nehemiah. It is a striking fact that II Chr. 36:23 concludes abruptly in the middle of Cyrus’ edict and that II Chr. 36:22-23 is repeated in Ezra 1:1-3a, finishing the fragmentary ending of the Chronicles. The “Greek Ezra,” another recension from the Hebrew text, includes even more of Chronicles, through II Chr. 35–36. Such duplication seems a del-berate device to indicate an original connection between Ezra-Nehemiah and the books of Chronicles. The conclusion that Ezra-Nehemiah was originally part of Chronicles is further supported by the fact that the same late Hebrew language, the same distinctive literary peculiarities that mark the style of the Chronicler, are found throughout Ezra-Nehemiah. The same presuppositions, interests, points of view, and theological and ecclesiastical conceptions so dominate all these writings that it is apparent that Chronicles-Ezra-Nehemiah was originally a literary unit, the product of one school of thought, if not of a single mind, that can be called “the Chronicler.”

II. Canon

In the English Bible Ezra and Nehemiah follow the Chronicles as they did originally. The English order follows the Hellenistic (Alexandrian) treatment of the books, which abolished the Jewish distinction between “the Prophets” and “the Writings.” In the tripartite division of the Hebrew Bible (Law, Prophets, and Writings) Ezra and Nehemiah, along with Chronicles, are classified not among the “prophetic” books (as Samuel and Kings are), but among “the Writings” (like Psalms, Job, and Ecclesiastes). Such location is a witness to their relatively late composition, when the other divisions of the Hebrew Bible were regarded as closed canonically.

Modern printed Hebrew Bibles follow the German Hebrew manuscripts, which place Nehemiah between Daniel and Chronicles. The Babylonian Jewish practice placed Ezra and Chronicles after Esther, concluding the section of “the Writings,” while Palestinian manuscripts began “the Writings” section with Chronicles and concluded it with the single work Ezra, placed after Esther and Daniel.

Old Latin Bibles differed greatly in the placement of Ezra-Nehemiah. Cassiodorus8 placed them between Judith and the books of Maccabees, while Augustine9 put them between the Maccabees and the Psalms. They are omitted entirely in a list from the last half of the fourth century A.D. found by Theodor Mommsen10 at Cheltenham.

Doubtless mere chance accounts for the omission of any reference to Ezra or Nehemiah in the New Testament, but there is a definite repudiation of Chronicles-Ezra-Nehemiah in the canon of the Syrian Christians. Chronicles was originally omitted from the Syrian translation of the Bible. When a Jewish Targum of the book11 was adopted in its stead, Aphraates quoted from it, but Ephraim omitted any commentary on the book and it was not generally accepted. There is no Targum for Ezra-Nehemiah. Theodore of Mopsuestia omitted Ezra-Nehemiah as well as Chronicles, Esther, and Job in his conception of the canon. The Nestorian canon and that adopted by several Monophysite groups omit all of Chronicles-Ezra-Nehemiah.

III. Author

Ezra and Nehemiah unquestionably have been formed and transmitted by the anonymous person known as the Chronicler, the author of the books of Chronicles.12 Only what can be learned of him from his work is known. Since he is greatly concerned with the temple and its cultus, it is assumed that he was a minister in the temple, quite possibly a Levite; and because he shows a special interest in the musicians, which were one of the minor orders of temple servants, it has been conjectured that the Chronicler was probably one of the singers of the guild of Asaph. 14

The peculiar interests and points of view of the author of the books of Chronicles, which are best learned from his work in Chronicles, where there is a control in the canonical sources that he used, also are constantly in evidence in Ezra-Nehemiah. His striking literary style 15 is also much in evidence in Ezra-Nehemiah, indicating that his literary activity also extended there.

The view that Ezra was the author of Chronicles-Ezra-Nehemiah, presented in the Talmud (Baba Bathra 15a) is also held by the rabbis, the church fathers, and most of the older commentators. 16 Even today William F. Albright has argued that the Chronicler was Ezra. 17

IV. Date

From the nature of his work the Chronicler has left but few clues in the form of historical allusions from which to date Chronicles-Ezra-Nehemiah. In I Chr. 3:15-24 a genealogy purporting to list the descendants of David appears to extend six generations beyond Zerubbabel (ca. 520 B.C.). Counting thirty years to a generation, 18 the last generation mentioned, which was presumably the Chronicler’s own, must be dated no earlier than ca. 350 B.C. Support for such a date is claimed in the list of high priests in Neh. 12:10 ff., which includes Jaddua, whom Josephus claims (cf. Neh. 15:28) was high priest at the time of Alexander the Great (ca. 332 B.C.). Principally on such basis the majority of scholars now date the work of the Chronicler 350-250 B.C. 19 Resorting to more subjective criteria for dating, such as style, vocabulary, and polemics, some urge the still later date of 300-250 B.C. 20 or even as late as some time after 18 E.g., Curtis and Madsen, op. cit., p. 5.

20 E.g., H. Wheeler Robinson, The Old Testament: Its

Ben Sirach (ca. 180 B.C.). 21 By thus assuming that the Chronicler was writing more than a century after the events he records, it is easy to understand why his statements can be challenged as unhistorical.

However, there has been a reaction to such a late date for the Chronicler. It is argued that in the crucial passage, I Chr. 3:21, a later hand has corrupted the text, and that originally there were but four generations after Zerubbabel. 22 If with Rudolf Kittel the generation is computed at twenty instead of thirty years, 23 six generations would extend to 400 B.C., and four would be 440 B.C. for the period of the Chronicler. But it is now widely believed that I Chr. 1-9 was originally not part of the Chronicler’s work. 24 This view eliminates I Chr. 3 as evidence for the Chronicler’s date. Furthermore, the other passage, Neh. 12:10 ff., has also been regarded as a secondary addition to the text. 25 With the elimination of these supposed historical allusions and the interpretation of the supporting evidence adduced from linguistic and polemical bases in other ways, the only remaining evidence for date is the time of the last datable event in the books—the mission of Ezra.

Those who insist that Ezra arrived in Palestine during the interval between Nehemiah’s administrations (cf. Ezra 7:8) argue for a date soon after 432 B.C. 26 and no earlier than 433 B.C., the end of Nehemiah’s first administration. 27 Since the Chronicler faultily places Ezra before Nehemiah (see below), it is suggested that several generations must have elapsed for the Chronicler to have won uncomplaining acceptance of his proposed order, and the date must be about 400 B.C., with perhaps the latitude of a decade more. Rudolph warns that not much more time can be allowed since the secondary insertions in 1 Chr. 3:15 ff. and Neh. 3:10 ff. reach only to about 400 B.C. when reckoned as above, and the lists in Neh. 12:1-9. 12-26 must be dated before the death of Darius II (405 B.C.) and thus were probably incorporated not long afterward. Albright, who identifies the Chronicler with Ezra, now ascribes Ezra's activity to 427 B.C., during the reign of Artaxerxes II (cf. Ezra 7:8), and thus dates the "Chronicler" about 400 B.C., just as Martin Noth did in his earlier work.

Such dating, which is possible only by emending Ezra 7:8, is weak in that it rests on the assumption that Ezra's activity fell within the reign of Artaxerxes I, which is less likely than that he arrived during the time of Artaxerxes II (cf. Ezra 7:1). In the latter case the Chronicler's work could be no earlier than 397 B.C., but with a similar allowance to that mentioned above of time elapsed between the activity of Ezra and the work of the Chronicler, the date of the Chronicler would be no earlier than about 365-350 B.C.

V. Sources

The question of sources is closely related to that of date. An eyewitness may stand on his own account (e.g., Nehemiah), but one removed a century or more from the events he records needs reliable sources of information if his credibility is to be maintained. The great controversy over Ezra-Nehemiah is centered in this issue. Those who posit a very late date for the Chronicler find it easy to be critical of his narrative and suspicious of his results. They insist that the few sources he employed were preserved almost literally (e.g., Nehemiah), but most of his work is thought to be his own composition, the product of his fertile imagination and therefore unhistorical. He is regarded as a person of great imagination, inventive skill, and firm convictions, who wrote his work as fiction, forging speeches and documents as needed, and even deliberately distorting known facts to support his peculiar theses. "It is evident," so Torrey claims, "that the Chronicler became an editor more from necessity than from choice. By taste and gift he was a novelist. He would doubtless have preferred to give freer rein to his imagination in composing the story of the Jews and their antecedents. But he was now writing not to interest, but with an apologetic purpose." Such scholars believe that he had almost no sources for the events he portrays, and the sources that he mentions by name (Neh. 7:5; 12:23) are regarded with suspicion as part of his "imaginary library." Wherever the Chronicler's strikingly peculiar literary style or his favorite concepts are manifest it is assumed that the work is the Chronicler's own invention and hence unhistorical.

Others tend to assign to the Chronicler a date almost contemporary with the events he records, in which case the sources are less important. Nevertheless they insist that he used many sources in the framing of his narrative. While they agree that he could reproduce his sources literally, without much of his tampering so long as the material did not conflict with his own ideas, and that in his editorial activity he created passages to join his sources and give a consecutive narrative, such scholars minimize the creative activity of the Chronicler. Where the Chronicler's characteristics are impressed on the material, it is recognized that he may have created those passages concerned with his favorite themes and interests. But it is also believed that lying behind the Chronicler's façade there may be credible sources that he has employed, working over them thoroughly and leaving on them the evidence of his activity. Therefore such scholars give greater historical weight to the Chronicler's narrative and attempt, wherever possible, to probe behind his text to the sources he seems to employ.

The major difference between the two schools of interpretation thus concerns primarily that material in which the Chronicler's style and ideas are clearly apparent. It can exist because even after extensive study of the Chronicler's activity in the books of Chronicles, where the canonical texts of Samuel and Kings, etc., are indisputably his sources, the results of such analysis are not decisive. It is apparent that the Chronicler could and did copy, revise, and compose even where he was obviously using a canonical source. The editorial technique of the Chronicler, demonstrable in the books of Chronicles, must be that employed in Ezra-Nehemiah with whatever sources he used, even though his work cannot be checked against the originals, as in Chronicles.

Even a casual reader will be impressed by the 29 Rudolph, loc. cit.

30 Die Genesis im Pentateuch (Halle: M. Niemeyer, 1940), p. 87, n. 2. 554 evidences of the Chronicler's use of sources in Ezra-Nehemiah. The narrative does not always run smoothly and continuously. Gaps occur where no actual sources were available, e.g., during the reign of Cambyses and during the interval between the time of Ezra and the coming of Nehemiah, as the Chronicler understood the chronology. Often there are abrupt transitions between passages a narrative is begun and is stopped abruptly when it is realized that a letter to be employed would duplicate the story (cf. Ezra 5:3-5). Twice there is a shift in language from Hebrew to Aramaic as the source appears in the Aramaic language (Ezra 4:8-6:18; 7:12-26), and there is a perplexing shift from the use of the third-person pronoun to the first (cf. Ezra 8:15-9:13; Neh. 1:1-7:7; 12:91: 13:6 ff.) which appears to be of greater significance than a slip on the part of the author.

Further evidence for sources may be seen in the fact that the Chronicler did not always understand the significance of his sources and therefore ignorantly misused them. A list is used twice in different contexts (Neh. 11:3-24: cf. 1 Chr. 9:1-44), and a source indicating antagonism toward the building of the city wall is treated as opposition to the rebuilding of the temple (Ezra 4:11 ff.).

A. Claimed Sources.—Twice in Ezra-Nehemiah the Chronicler actually mentions records, “the book of the genealogy” (Neh. 7:5) and “the book of the Chronicles,” which is not his canonical work but presumably a temple chronicle containing historical data as well as lists (cf. Neh. 12-23). These supposed records are not considered seriously by some 42 but are regarded as being on the same plane as the many otherwise unknown sources mentioned in the books of Chronicles. Driver, however, agrees with Wellhausen's conjecture that the “Book of Chronicles” may be one of the “older sources, accessible to the compiler.” 43

B. Earlier Canonical Sources.—The Chronicler’s knowledge of earlier canonical books of the Bible and his use of them is demonstrated in his books of Chronicles but is less readily observed in Ezra-Nehemiah where no earlier canonical records existed for so much of the narrative. The historical references to Haggai and Zechariah in Ezra 5:1-2 were doubtless part of the Aramaic source, but the allusion to Hag. 2:1-4 in Ezra 3:12-13 seems to come from the Chronicler’s hand. The scriptural dependence in Neh. 1:5, 7-8 may be due to him also, but the more extensive prayers (Ezra 9:5 ff.; Neh. 9:6 ff.), which also show extensive familiarity with scripture, may have come from elsewhere.

C. Nehemiah's Memoirs.—Although the extent of Nehemiah's narrative is debated, no one challenges the authenticity of the memoir concerning him that the Chronicler has incorporated in his work. Without making allowance for minor touches by the Chronicler, the general limits of the memoir of Nehemiah seem to be Neh. 1:1-7 73a: 11:1-2; 12:27-43; 13:4-31.

The following are some of the variations from the description given above of the extent of the Nehemiah story as found among scholars: In ch. 1 Batten omits vss. 5-11a. In ch. 2 he regards only vss. 1-7 as genuine, 44 while Torrey holds vss. 1-6, 9b-20 as Nehemiah’s. 11 Ch. 3 is regarded by Torrey as the Chronicler’s work 12 and it is clearly intrusive in Nehemiah’s memoirs, but Batten denies that the Chronicler composed it. 13 and Rudolph suggests that Nehemiah himself incorporated it into his narrative. 14 In ch. 7, while all regard vss. 1-5 as authentic. Rudolph includes the list in vss. 6-73a as one Nehemiah himself included in the record. In ch. 11 usually only vss. 1-2 are regarded as Nehemiah’s, but Rudolph would also include vss. 20, 25a, 46 while Carl Steuernagel holds that the kernel of vss. 3-24 are also Nehemiah’s. The passage 12:27-43 is regarded as authentic, 47 but Steuernagel would limit the genuine material to vss. 31-32, 37-40, 48 and Rudolph indicates as Nehemiah’s vss. 27aa, 30, 31-32, 37-40, 43. 49 The lists of names (vss. 33-36, 41-42) are doubtless supplements to the text. Some reject ch. 13 as the Chronicler’s work, 51 but those who find anything genuine in the chapter find it in vss. 4-8. Batten, however, begins the authentic material with vs. 6. 52

Nehemiah’s memoirs, written not very long after 432 B.C. (cf. Neh. 5:14) and preserved by the Chronicler literally, with relatively little interpolation or reworking, are one of the most accurate historical sources in the Old Testament, the only undisputed source for Jewish history between 520-175 B.C. The memoirs appear to be a memorial inscription, a type familiar in the ancient Near East. By placing his memoirs before God in the temple Nehemiah doubtless sought to stir the memory of the Lord regarding his good works and thereby to be assured of the “name” that he as a eunuch (cf. Neh. 2:1) could not obtain through his posterity (cf. Isa. 56:3-5). It was probably there in the temple archives that the Chronicler found Nehemiah’s text.

D. Ezra’s Report.—Since Ezra’s narrative, like Nehemiah’s, is written partly in the first person (Ezra 7:27-28; 8:1-15; cf. 9:1-15) it has the appearance of being autobiographical and is often assumed to be so. But lexical and syntactical analysis of the material indicates no real linguistic difference between the “I” portions of the story and those written in the third person, and it is asserted that therefore no “primitive” Ezra story can be dissociated from the rest of the Chronicler’s work in which it is supposedly set. It is usually assumed that the language of the whole is the Chronicler’s since it seems uniformly to agree with his literary style, and those who regard the Chronicler’s work with suspicion deny historicity to the Ezra narrative; some even deny the existence of Ezra himself (cf. p. 565). Such scholars regard the use of the first-person pronoun as a literary device to gain greater vividness in the narrative. As such it would have its parallels in Enoch, Tobit, the Ahiqar papyrus, and other works from the Near East. The shift from first to third person in the narrative is believed to depend upon the extent to which the author imaginatively enters into his narrative.

More recently there have been challenges to the former use of linguistic statistics to relate the whole composition to the Chronicler. The attack attempts to show that the Chronicler’s language is merely that of late Hebrew. A comparison of the linguistic usage in the Ezra memoirs with that of the Chronicler as seen elsewhere may show that when those linguistic phenomena which have their parallels elsewhere in late Hebrew are excluded, there remains but one element (the expression “there should be no . . .” in Ezra 9:14) that the Ezra source and the Chronicler have in common. It is assumed that “Ezra himself is the composer of the Ezra narrative” but that the Chronicler has here and there worked it over, leaving his trace which is so distinctive that his work can easily be distinguished from the original. In the Ezra memoirs the passages in the first person are claimed to be “clearly extracts from some record which Ezra kept of his work; and they appear to be verbatim extracts” while those in the third person “may well offer the gist of extracts from the same source.” Some hold that in addition to the first-person narrative the Chronicler, who shaped the Ezra story, had at his disposal a revised and amplified edition of Ezra’s memoirs. It has been conjectured that the Ezra narrative was written by a contemporary of Ezra who was still alive in 430-420 B.C., and that except for Ezra 7:1-26; 8:14 the Ezra materials are a unified whole, a valuable source of information.

Judged by the narrative itself, rather than on purely linguistic grounds, the Ezra story includes Ezra 7:11-10:44; Neh. 7:73b-9:5. For the original sequence of events see pp. 560-61.

There is more scholarly variation in estimating the extent of the Ezra narrative than in that of Nehemiah. Although Torrey also defines the Ezra story, he nevertheless regards it all as unhistorical fiction. The following differences occur: Ezra 7 is accepted in its entirety by some, although Lods believed that 7:1-10 is by a redactor who used Ezra’s memoirs and amplified them. Others, however, limit the original material to vss. 1-10, 27-28 or more usually.

to vs. 11-28 or vs. 12-28.3 Still others would limit the Ezra narrative to vs. 27-28.2 Most authorities regard all of Ezra 8 as part of the Ezra memoirs, but some would conclude the original material at vs. 347 and Batten limits it to vs. 15-19, 21-23, 28-29, 31-32, with vs. 36 dubious.7 The tendency is to attribute all of Ezra 9 to the Ezra memoirs, but Eissfeldt is suspicious of the prayer and regards only vs. 1-5 as fundamentally genuine.7 Batten holds that in ch. 9, vs. 1-11a. 13-15 are part of the Ezra story.4 Ezra 10 is regarded by almost all as part of the Ezra narrative, but Cornill suggests that the memoirs "suddenly break off at ix.15... due to the interposition of a strange hand: the events of the next thirteen years were clearly of too dismal a character to make it desirable to perpetuate the memory of them."7 Some regard Ezra 10 as indirectly genuine, based on the original memoirs.7

Part of the Ezra memoirs have intruded into the book of Nehemiah (cf. pp. 560-61). Schaeder considers Neh. 7:6-73 to be part of the Ezra memoirs.7 Torrey considers only vs. 70-73 part of the Ezra story,7 but the majority of scholars consider only vs. 75b as authentic.7 All of Neh. 8 is usually attributed to the Ezra memoirs, but some regard it as derived indirectly through a document based on the original narrative.8 Oesterley and Robinson, however, recognize as authentic Ezra narrative only 180

8.12-18." Most scholars consider all of Neh. 9 as part of Ezra's memoirs, but Cornill, regarding vs. 5 as rewritten, limits the authentic portion to vs. 6-38.2 Most probably, however, only Neh. 9:1-5 belongs to the Ezra story.8 Many scholars consider Neh. 10 also a part of the Ezra story,4 either received directly or indirectly as an expansion of the original Ezra memoirs.5 Oesterley and Robinson consider Neh. 10 "in the main" part of the Ezra memoirs.8 But it is much more likely that the narrative there is related to the Nehemiah records.7

E. Aramaic Source.—The Aramaic material in Ezra is so concentrated (Ezra 4:7-6:18; 7:12-26) that at least Ezra 4:7-6:18 was probably part of a single source. Aside from a few small sections (Ezra 5:1-5; 6:14-18) and some connecting links (Ezra 4:23-24; 6:1-2), the Aramaic material purports to be correspondence between the foes of the Jews and the Persian court (Ezra 4:7-22; 5:6-17; 6:3-12) and the royal firman given to Ezra (Ezra 7:12-26). Thus all are purported to be official documents, written as might be expected in Aramaic, one of the important languages of the Persian empire.8 The narrative sections in Aramaic, written by the compiler, show native skill and indicate that he was not a mere copyist.8

It has been argued unsuccessfully that Ezra 1–2 has been translated to Hebrew from an Aramaic original,4 just as Arsa 4:6-7 probably has been, and that Ezra 5:1–6:15 has been converted from Hebrew to Aramaic.8 But the block of Aramaic (Ezra 4:7–6:18) is considered as a unit that came to the hand of the Chronicler, who compiled Ezra-Nehemiah. It has been explained as the product of a Jew, working with the friendly Persian official Mithredath to transmit to the court a historical document referring to the Persian court.8

To the persecution of the Jews and showing that the Persian court had always resulted in supporting them. The purpose of the document was to gain royal support against the enemies of the Jews (cf. Exeg. on Ezr. 1:7-16). * This interpretation, which is also intended to explain that the disordered Persian chronology of the Aramaic material was due to the carelessness of the original compiler rather than to late Jewish ignorance of Persian chronology, sounds attractive, but it has weaknesses and is unlikely. * The incorrect chronological order must be explained otherwise (cf. Exeg. on Ezr. 4:4b-6:22).

Torrey once (1910) regarded the several documents as separate sources received by the Chronicler, whose hand he saw only in Ezr. 6:9-10, 15-18, * although formerly (1896) he had recognized the Chronicler's touch also in Ezr. 4:9-10, 24. * Later, however, he followed Nöldeke in treating the Aramaic material as the work of the Chronicler. * The historical validity of the Aramaic documents in Ezr. is still hotly debated. H. H. Graetz, who declared them all forgeries, * has been followed by many others. * Pfeiffer claims that each of the Aramaic documents must be judged separately, and concludes that the Persian documents in Ezr. are spurious. "They were written by the author of the narratives in which they are contained." * Since the discovery of the Aramaic papyri of the Persian period it has been common practice to conclude, as some Aramaic specialists have done, that the style of the Aramaic in Ezr. approximates that of the papyri of the fifth century B.C. * Torrey, to the contrary, assigns all biblical Aramaic to the second and third centuries B.C., where it would support his date for the Chronicler's authorship. *1 Later exhaustive comparative studies indicate that the Aramaic in Ezr. is doubtless later than that of the papyri, but there is still some confusion as to just how late it is. Walter Baumgartner dates the Aramaic of Ezr. perhaps a few decades or at most a century earlier than the Aramaic of Daniel, * which he assigns to the second or third centuries B.C. * while H. H. Rowley suggests that the Aramaic sections of Ezr. may have been written in the fourth or third centuries B.C. *

The severe judgment against the historicity of the Aramaic parts of Ezr. is based largely on the Jewishness of some of them, but there are other explanations for such a characteristic (e.g., Ezr. 7:11-12). There is an increasing recognition of the genuine elements in the Aramaic documents in Ezr. Kosters, who rejected most of the Aramaic material as unhistorical, nevertheless recognized some of it as genuine, * and the historian Eduard Meyer defended the authenticity of all of the Persian documents in Ezr. except for the Cyrus edict. * Now even that (Ezr. 1:2-4) has its defenders. * Pfeiffer says of Ezr. 4:6-24: "The fact that the Chronicler misunderstood these texts and placed them in the wrong context proves that he could hardly have been their author [and] the fact that these are the only Aramaic documents in which the enemies of the Jews triumph and the Persian king opposes Jewish aspirations, could be adduced in favor of their authenticity." * The Aramaic documents of Ezr. have by no means yet been proved a forgery. Increasingly it is found that their substance is in agreement with what is revealed by our growing knowledge of the Persian period (see Exeg.). *

F. Lists.—As in the book of Chronicles, the editor here shows a distinct liking for lists and seems to supply them whenever possible. Almost anywhere else such lists would be taken at face value and presumed to be authentic, but here as part of the Chronicler's work they are usually regarded with suspicion and considered to be the product of his imagination. Since one at least is falsely connected (Ezr. 7:1-5), all are on trial, and in each case it is a question as to what extent the Chronicler invented them or used authentic material. The lists remain a challenge to be proved or disproved, and it is impossible to do either in every case with convincing finitude. The use of the phrase “mentioned by name” (Ezra 8:20) would indicate that the author had a list available, which for some reason he refrained from using, while the lack of a list in Ezra 10:16 where one would be expected indicates that none was available. Such practices should lend more confidence than is usually given to the lists supplied throughout Ezra-Nehemiah.

Various kinds of lists are presented in Ezra-Nehemiah. Many are lists of names. sometimes grouped as genealogies (cf. Ezra 7:1-5) or more commonly by professions. There are a great many lists of temple ministrants, each designated by class. A few such lists identify leaders who participate in civic projects (Neh. 3:1-32; 12:35-36. 41). Sometimes the word “number” (Neh. 7:7) in a list of considerable size suggests a census, either of members of a caravan (cf. Ezra 2:25-20; 8:14) or of settlers in the land (Ezra 2:21-55). At least one list is geographical (Neh. 11:25-35). In a few cases there are inventories of animals (Ezra 2:66-67) or of gifts to the temple (Ezra 2:69; Neh. 7:70-72). That in Ezra 1:9-11 has been regarded as the translation of an official document, originally in Aramaic, which was attached to Sheshbazzar’s orders. It suggests another, of the time of Ezra, the purpose and use of which can be seen in Ezra 8:25-37, 30, 34.

Whence came such lists, if they are genuine? Such independent lists are not unknown in the Persian period. They are found among the Aramaic papyri and a clay label bearing the single Aramaic word “priests,” found at Persepolis, seems to indicate its use as a label for a list or series of lists of names of priests to which it was attached. At least one such list has been found among the Elamite tablets from the “treasury” at Persepolis. Since most of the lists used in Ezra-Nehemiah relate to the temple, its history, administration, and cultic affairs, the suggestion has been plausibly made that an important source of information used by the Chronicler was the temple archives, which might be available to him as a temple ministrant.

It is entirely probable that the temple at Jerusalem had a library—like that found associated with the temple of Baal at Ugarit—or at least an archival room where important documents were preserved. This seems indicated by the reference to a Levite official who was over the external business of the temple (Neh. 11:16), and by the use of written records in Ezra 8:34. Josephus, too, who lived while the temple stood and is therefore a good witness to the temple practice of his time, implies a depository for documents when he declares that Nehemiah’s orders were presented before God and when he insists that Hezekiah placed the letters of the Assyrian general “within the temple” (cf. Neh. 2:9). It was apparently there that the Chronicler also obtained Nehemiah’s memorial. The “book of the chronicles” in which the Levites were registered (Neh. 12:23) was probably a journal of the temple for the postexilic period (cf. Neh. 12:23). It is obvious from Ezra 2:62 that at least the temple ministrants were registered by genealogy, and it is probable that not only the family leaders but the ordinary citizens were likewise registered by families (cf. Ezra 10:25-41). Such official records would be increasingly important, especially as later Judaism tended to stress ethnic purity, although it need not indicate that such lists arose only after the practice of exclusivism began.

The use of the same list in two different contexts (Neh. 11:3 f.; cf. I Chr. 9:2-3) indicates that one must carefully distinguish between the source and the use to which it is put. Even that which is obviously now in error (Ezra 7:1-5) is faulty only in the interpretation that is made of the list. It is also imperative, in assessing the value of the lists, to distinguish between the lists supplied by the Chronicler referring to events long past and such lists as Nehemiah may have included in his own memoirs (cf. Neh. 8), since the latter were almost contemporary with the events and therefore more probably accurate.

G. Tradition.—More nebulous but equally real as sources are the traditions current during the time of the Chronicler. It is perhaps too much to see the force of tradition in “the choice of words, tone of the language and stylistic effects” of the present text, but undoubtedly oral tradition shaped the Ezra narrative, particularly in governing the order in which available sources would be employed, the identification of lists, and in some measure at least also in the philosophy and theology that color the narrative. It is probable too that such tradition has spoken where there were gaps in the available sources, so that the substance of the Chronicler’s additional narrative reflects not so much his individual whims or fancies as the tradition of his time. It has been conjectured also that “the additions and elaborations” suspected in Nehemiah’s narrative, too, may be due to current tradition, and that even the historical inaccuracies and deficiencies in knowledge, formerly attributed to the Chronicler, may be due actually to the traditions put at the editor's disposal.

It is impossible to trace such tradition, but there is evidence for its persistence and its development into rather grotesque forms in the Hellenistic period (cf. II Macc. 1:18-22; 31:36; 2:13). Strong evidence for the force of tradition and the Chronicler's response to it is found in the persistence of a tradition about Sheshbazzar in the time of Cyrus, even when that ran counter to another tradition stressing the importance of Zerubbabel (cf. Exeg. on Ezra 2:1-67; 5:16). Too strong to be ignored, the tradition was preserved by the Chronicler and kept in its proper historical setting in the Aramaic document (cf. Ezra 5:14-16).

VI. Order

The present chaotic order of the Ezra-Nehemiah narrative, which intermixes the story of Ezra with that of Nehemiah, is not that originally produced by the Chronicler. It has been suggested that the Nehemiah memoirs, which may have circulated separately (cf. p. 552), were not originally used by the Chronicler, who produced the Ezra story. S. Granild argues that the Nehemiah material, together with all of the Aramaic, was inserted by a late editor who wanted to credit Nehemiah rather than Ezra with the founding of Judaism. Albright has conjectured that the Chronicler later simply added Nehemiah's memoirs at the conclusion of his own work. There is no question but what Nehemiah's memoirs were originally a separate document but it is evident that the Chronicler has made an effort to incorporate them in the plan of his total work.

Rudolph has stressed the symmetrical structure of the Chronicler's original story of how, through the providence of God and the sympathetic co-operation of the Persian court, the Hebrew community and its temple, destroyed because of the sin of the people, were restored under the leadership of three men: Zerubbabel (Ezra 1:1-6:22); Ezra (Ezra 7:1-8:36; Neh. 7:78-8:18; Ezra 9:1-10:44; Neh. 9:1-10:40); and Nehemiah (Neh. 1:1-7:53; 11:1-13:1). Symmetrically, each of the three episodes began with an act of grace as the Persian ruler permitted or commissioned a Jewish leader to lead his fellow Jews to Palestine from exile.

116 "Date and Personality of the Chronicler," p. 123.

instance those who returned promptly and vigorously began the special task of reconstruction to which they had been dedicated: rebuilding the temple (Zerubbabel); re-instituting the law (Ezra); and the fortification of the city and re-establishment of the cult in the light of that law (Nehemiah). In each case the task, despite opposition, was continued to a successful conclusion, which was then celebrated as a great festival. The result was a rejuvenated community loyal to God and his law. In the light of such symmetry it is likely that for the Chronicler the story of Nehemiah ended with the ceremony of the dedication of the wall and the exclusion of all foreigners from the community (Neh. 12:27-13:3). And that Neh. 13:4-31 was an appendix to his work, communicated, perhaps reluctantly, because it concerned cultic matters.

In the first episode it was doubtless the Chronicler who disrupted the order of his Aramaic source and thereby caused confusion in chronology by shifting Ezra 4:6-23 from its proper place after 5:1-6:15 so that his narrative would move smoothly, directly from the completion of the temple (6:15) to the story of its ceremony of dedication (6:16-22). He was obviously more concerned with the temple, central in the episode, than with the accurate chronology.

It has been conjectured that the work of Ezra failed and that the original conclusion of the Ezra narrative, which supposedly ended as a confession of failure to solve the problem of mixed marriages, has since been displaced by the Chronicler by a substitution of the positive story of the popular acceptance of the law, which supposedly was first associated with Nehemiah's activity. Such speculation, however, is without foundation and there is no real evidence for Ezra's failure.

The present order, which puts part of the Ezra narrative (Neh. 7:73b-8:18) in the book of Nehemiah, is due to an editor later than the Chronicler. It was apparently he too who put the name of Nehemiah in Neh. 8:9 and the reference to Ezra in Neh. 12:36 which falsely suggest that they were contemporaries in Jerusalem. That such confusion is relatively late is seen in the fact that in I Esdras and Josephus, Ezra precedes Nehemiah in Jerusalem and Nehemiah is not mentioned in I Esdras (cf. p. 561). It was perhaps this late editor, or another like him, who placed Neh. 10 at the conclusion of the Ezra story (cf. Exeg. on Neh. 9:38-10:39), incorporated Neh. 9:35-37, and added the supplement in 11:22-23, which reflects substantially later times.

VII. I Esdras (Greek Ezra) and Josephus

Evidence of a different and doubtless earlier sequence of the Ezra-Nehemiah materials is found in I Esdras (the Greek Ezra), which is believed to reflect a better text of the Hebrew Bible than that now found in the Masoretic Text.123 The most significant differences between I Esdras and the Masoretic Text are:

1. I Esdras begins with two full chapters of duplication of II Chronicles (35:1-36:21) instead of just a few verses (Ezra 1:1-3a=II Chr. 36:22-23).

2. The Artaxerxes correspondence regarding the building of the wall (Ezra 4:7-24) is found after the narrative of the return with Sheshbazzar (Ezra 1:3b-11). It was perhaps the reference to "the Jews that have come up from you to us" in I Esdras 2:18 (=Ezra 4:12), appearing after the reference to the return under Zerubbabel (I Esdras 2:1-15), that was responsible for the transfer of the section (Ezra 4:7-24) in I Esdras 2:16-30.

3. After the story in Ezra 4:17-24 there is a long interpolation (I Esdras 3:1-5:6) of unique material regarding three guardsmen in the court of Darius. It is a pagan story, possibly Persian in origin,124 written originally in the Aramaic language,125 but adapted to Jewish use to explain how Zerubbabel won permission to go from exile to Jerusalem.

4. The omission of Neh. 1:1-7:73a leaves I Esdras without a reference to Nehemiah. Silence regarding Nehemiah may be due to the fact that I Esdras is but a fragment from which the Nehemiah portion is missing. The text is incomplete, concluding abruptly after the first few words of Neh. 8:15a. The most striking and significant fact is that in I Esdras, Neh. 7:73 follows Ezra 10 and is followed by Neh. 8:1 ff., just as the Masoretic Text is now conjectured to have been originally. Thus the Ezra material, now transferred to Nehemiah in the Masoretic Text, is here still attached to the book of Ezra.

When I Esdras concludes, Josephus, who used I Esdras rather than the Septuagint or Masoretic Text as his source for the period of Ezra-Nehemiah, proceeds to tell the story of Nehemiah in a form somewhat different from that in the present Masoretic Text and Septuagint. It is conjectured that he then uses an independent Greek narrative as his source,126 but it is possible that he merely continues his work of presenting the story as originally completed in I Esdras.

In his work it is noted that Josephus gives "the substance of the first six chapters [of Nehemiah], making brief but plain allusion to 7:4; 11:1; 12:27, and 13:10 f. Of chapters 9 and 10 he makes no use."127 It is significant that in one sentence (Antiquities XI. 5. 8) he refers in its first part to 7:4 and the latter part to 11:1, suggesting that in Josephus' Greek source Neh. 7 was followed immediately by Neh. 11—as originally was the case128 (cf. Neh. 7:73a; 11:1-2).

Josephus did not reproduce his source literally but dealt with it freely, omitting tedious parts at will (cf. Ezra 2:1-67) and "correcting" his text as pleased him. He corrects the impossible order of the Persian kings in I Esdras, which actually reverses the historical sequence, and he puts them in their proper relationship. Thus the "Artaxerxes" of Ezra 4:7-24 becomes "Cambyses" in Josephus 129 and, although he still has Ezra precede Nehemiah, both men are located in the reign of Xerxes instead of Artaxerxes (Ezra 7:1-10:44; Neh. 7:73-8:13a).130 While such chronology is superior to that which he displays elsewhere (cf. Exeg. on Neh. 13:28), the solution proposed for the disruption of the proper sequence of Persian kings given above (cf. p. 560) is preferable.

VIII. The Priority of Nehemiah

Affixing the book of Nehemiah to that of Ezra, whether by the Chronicler or by a later editor (cf. p. 560), created a chronological problem regarding the order of appearance of Ezra and Nehemiah in Jerusalem. It is natural to assume that the one mentioned first was the first to arrive, and this traditional order has many defenders.131 The problem is complicated by the dating of the arrivals of both ambiguously to the time of "Artaxerxes," and the present text treats them as contemporaries (Neh. 8:9; 12:36), which is highly improbable (cf. p. 562).

In solution of the chronological problem it was proposed in 1889 that Nehemiah was active under Artaxerxes I (464-423 B.C.) while Ezra, if historical, came to Jerusalem under Artaxerxes II (404-358 B.C.). This thesis, pronounced, expanded, and defended for years by Albin Van Hoonacker, until it has become associated with his name, has always been under attack but has nevertheless gained many adherents.123 The principal considerations that have made this view persuasive are: 124

1. It is unlikely that the same king would send to Palestine two men with official support and authority at the same time. The powers granted Ezra and Nehemiah were so similar that it is improbable that they could have exercised them simultaneously. Nor was there a division of labor whereby Nehemiah left religious matters to Ezra the priest, for he was himself concerned with regulating the priests (Neh. 7:64 ff.; 10:32 ff.), the tithes and temple treasures (Neh. 13:10-11), and the sabbath (Neh. 13:15 ff.).

2. Ezra and Nehemiah ignore each other in a way that would be surprising if they were contemporaries. Ezra is not mentioned until Neh. 8, and then only in a passage originally not part of the Nehemiah story. In all his reforms Nehemiah nowhere gives the slightest indication that he is enforcing the law introduced by Ezra and accepted by the people. Nor does either mention the other, who, like himself, had an official royal commission. "Wherever their names are found together one is a mere passenger, whose name can be dropped without the slightest consequence to the narrative" 125 (cf. Neh. 8:9; 12:36).

3. Nehemiah would scarcely have designated the inhabitants of Jerusalem as those who had escaped exile (Neh. 1:2-3) if shortly before a great caravan had arrived there from Babylonia with Ezra.

4. In preparation for a census Nehemiah is concerned with the list of those who had returned with Zerubbabel some time before (Neh. 7:1-75), but he is silent regarding those who returned with Ezra (Ezra 8:1-14).

5. Nehemiah found Jerusalem almost uninhabited and subsequently took steps to repopulate it (cf. Neh. 7:4; 11:1-2), whereas Ezra lived and worked in a busy city (Ezra 9:4; 10:1).

6. In Ezra 8:29; 10:5 the priests, Levites, and heads of families were dwelling in Jerusalem, while according to Neh. 11:1 ff. Nehemiah had sent them to the capital.

8. No members of the families that returned with Ezra (Ezra 8.1-20) can be identified with certainty in the list of those who built the wall of Jerusalem with Nehemiah. Hashabiah (Neh. 3:17; Ezra 8:19, 24) and Meshullam (Neh. 5:3, 4, 30; [6:18]; Ezra 8:16) are too common to identify, and it is obvious that the Davidic Hattush son of Shechaniah (Ezra 8:21) is not Hattush son of Hasabneiah (Neh. 3:10).

9. Whereas Nehemiah was a contemporary of the high priest Eliashib (cf. Neh. 3:1, 20-21; 13:4, 7, 28), Ezra lived during the period of the high priest Jehohanan, the grandson of Eliashib (Ezra 10:6; cf. Neh. 12:10-11, 22). Jehohanan is attested by the Aramaic papyri as high priest in Jerusalem in 407 B.C., under Darius II. 126 This most important evidence indicates that Ezra was active under Artaxerxes II, at least a generation after Nehemiah.

10. The papyrus mentioning the high priest Jehohanan, contemporary of Ezra (cf. paragraph 9 above), also indicates that the power of Samaria then was in the hands of the sons of Sanballat, who was apparently an old man, 127 rather than in his own, since he personally had been the active opponent of Nehemiah (Neh. 2:10; 4:1-2; 6:1-2).

11. Nehemiah appointed a commission of temple treasurers (Neh. 11:16; 13:13) and when Ezra arrived he found a similar one (Ezra 8:33). The priest Jozabad, whom Nehemiah appointed over the outside business of the temple (Neh. 11:16), may not be the one of that name functioning in that role in the time of Ezra (Ezra 8:34), but the interval between is proper for him to have been the grandson (cf. Eliashib and Jehohanan in paragraph 9 above). Grandsons often bore the names of their grandfathers.

12. Meremoth the son of Uriah was of the family of Koz, which could not authenticate its priestly status in the time of Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:61-62). He appears as a builder of the wall without priestly title in the time of Nehemiah (Neh. 3:4, 21), assuming a .double portion, apparently in youthful enthusiasm. His family doubtless regained its priestly status during Nehemiah's administration, for at Ezra's arrival he is a priest, perhaps an aged man, who received the treasure from Ezra. 128

13. The rigorous reforms instituted by Nehemmiah would hardly be necessary if Ezra had won popular acceptance of the law and its implied loyal support of the cultus. Those who maintain the traditional order must posit a failure for Ezra's efforts or an apostasy by the people shortly after they accepted the law.

14. The matter of tithes and the consequent flight of the Levites (Neh. 13:10-11) would be surprising so soon after the popular acceptance of the law. It appears that Nehemiah was not merely restoring conditions temporarily upset but was correcting a situation of long neglect and abuse.

15. While the matter of mixed marriages could have been a recurring problem, the situation faced by Nehemiah was one of some years' standing, since he found children speaking in their foreign mothers' tongues (Neh. 13:23-24), a situation unlikely if Ezra's reforms occurred shortly before. Moreover, there is a greater psychological motive for Nehemiah's reform in that a member of the high priest's family had married into the family of Nehemiah's enemy (Neh. 13:28). It is also likely that Nehemiah's violent approach to the problem would not be as effective and give as enduring results as that of Ezra's, which depended upon voluntary co-operation and an appeal to the law.

Not all of the foregoing considerations are of equal weight in determining the priority of Nehemiah, but their cumulative effect is strong, arguing that it is most probable that Nehemiah preceded Ezra in Palestine. Rebuttals to this view are strictly defensive and are often ingenious rather than persuasive. In the course of debate over this chronological problem, alternate solutions are proposed by those who admit the priority of Nehemiah but believe that Ezra too served under Artaxerxes I. It is suggested that the Chronicler has just reversed the dates of Ezra and Nehemiah, that Nehemiah came in the seventh year (458/457 B.C.) and Ezra in the twentieth year (445/444 B.C.) of Artaxerxes I. Some emend the Masoretic Text to gain a later date for Ezra. It was suggested that the numeral twenty has been lost from the text, and that the date of Ezra's arrival should be the twenty-seventh year (458-457 B.C.), but this would place Ezra in the midst of Nehemiah's administration (445-443 B.C.). Others conjecture that Ezra's mission came after Nehemiah's first administration and before his second one (cf. Ezra 7:7-8), after 432 B.C. In support of the latter view it is argued that representatives of the priestly groups Phinehas and Ithamar, which came with Ezra (Ezra 8:2), are lacking in the population list during Nehemiah's first administration (Neh. 11:10 ff.), but that the family of Daniel the son of Ithamar is present during Nehemiah's second administration (Neh. 10:6). Still others consider that the numeral thirty has been lost and that Ezra's arrival was during the thirty-seventh year of Artaxerxes I (428/427 B.C.). As an alternative, Markwart proposes the fortieth year of Artaxerxes I (425/424 B.C.), but that is textually more difficult.

More radical solutions have been proposed. Hugo Winckler substitutes the name Darius for that of Artaxerxes, and thus dates Ezra during the seventh year of Darius, while others cut the Gordian knot by denying the historicity of Ezra entirely.

All such proposals are purely conjectural, without the support of the Hebrew text or the versions. The chronological problem seems best solved by assigning Ezra to the period of Artaxerxes II, as suggested long ago.

IX. Historicity

Whatever is attributed to Nehemiah is regarded as "admittedly genuine beyond the shadow of a doubt," but a great gulf is fixed between scholars regarding the historicity of the events of the Ezra narrative and in the Chronicler's work in general.

For those who, on the basis of a theory of literal inspiration of scripture, accept Ezra-Nehemiah at its face value as historical, there is no problem of chronology or historicity, since the biblical narrative is regarded as the truth with which the present puzzling chronology is someday expected to be seen in agreement. Those at the other extreme, who hold that the Chronicler writes unhistorical fiction instead of history, forging speeches and documents and expounding his fictional "history" as he imagined it occurred, likewise have no chronological or historical problems. They reject all of the Chronicler's views out of hand as unhistorical, and regard it impossible to know the actual historical truth of the Persian period in Palestine since Neh. 1:1-7:73a "is the only unimpeachable source for Jewish history between Haggai and Zechariah in 520-516 and I Maccabees for the period 175-135." For them the historical problem is transmuted into the psychological one of determining what has led the Chronicler to distort and jumble historical data as he is reputed to have done. Between these extremes are the many who recognize the errors and inaccuracies in the Chronicler’s narrative but also acknowledge that there is more or less historical material in his work. For them problems of chronology and historical validity are vital but troublesome considerations. They agree with the dictum: “We are in the direct need of information as to the history of the Jews in the Persian period, and every scrap of material that promises help ought to be treasured and put to use. But no extremity of need can outweigh the obligation to follow the evidence.” 146

Adequate criteria for distinguishing the true from the false in the Chronicler’s work are greatly needed. Those who deny historical validity to the Chronicler’s narrative do so because they mistrust him as one who uses more imagination than objective sources. This attitude has arisen as a result of a study of the Chronicler’s technique in the books of Chronicles, where canonical biblical books that he used as sources are still available as a check. The reputation he earned there is transferred to Ezra-Nehemiah where, however, canonical and even uncanonical data which could serve as a check on his practices are largely lacking.

But other scholars, carefully working over the same material, have obtained widely conflicting results. The questions that divide scholars here are whether the Chronicler’s function was that of an editor, compiling and arranging his sources, adding bits where necessary to produce a smooth narrative and on occasion even reworking his sources to make them conform to his own conceptions, or whether he was predominantly an author, using few sources and those verbatim with little addition by himself but, on the other hand, writing from his own imagination great stretches of material, including official documents which he forges and supposed “sources” which he names (cf. Neh. 7:5; 12:23). The latter view, supported by Torrey after much research,147 has resulted in the radical view that the Chronicler’s work is unhistorical fiction, while the former, held by Batten among many others, has led to his statement, “I find myself among the number who must still take the Ezra story seriously.” 148

Linguistic study of the Chronicler’s work has been extensive. Comparative studies in the books of Chronicles have resulted in the compilation of long lists of the lexical, syntactical, and conceptual peculiarities of the Chronicler.149 It is said, “There is no writer, in all the Old Testament, whose peculiarities of language and style are so strongly marked, or who can so easily and certainly be recognized, as the Chronicler.” 150 Hence the principal criterion for historicity employed by Torrey and his followers in Ezra-Nehemiah is a linguistic one. Wherever in the text of Ezra-Nehemiah such “telltale signs of the Chronicler” are recognized, the passage is presumed to be the Chronicler’s composition and it is automatically regarded as unhistorical. Even though the Chronicler may explain that a source is being used by him, it is assumed that none existed.

Although literary criticism is a valid technique, it must be used with discretion and not regarded as the sole criterion for determining historical validity. The medium is easily subject to abuse. A single telltale mark of what is called the Chronicler’s style does not allow the critic to judge an entire passage. Such a practice would imply that the Chronicler had a monopoly on his usage. Although Torrey has scored the assumption of “a generation or more ago” that the Chronicler’s style was merely late post-exilic Hebrew prose,151 there is now an increasing tendency to defend that proposition. Driver suggested that “Ezra’s style approaches slightly more than Nehemiah’s does to that of the compiler,” 152 and Kapelrud claims that “the choice of words, tone of the language and stylistic effects [of the Ezra narrative] are now those that were natural in [the Chronicler’s] circles.” 153 Geissler’s studies have produced a long list of words and phrases in common between Ezra and the Hexateuch,154 and Rudolph, after careful study, concludes that there is but a single linguistic phenomenon shared by Ezra and the Chronicler that is not also encountered elsewhere in Hebrew.155 Admittedly the Chronicler has favorite expressions, but it is dangerous to assume that no one else could use them and that they form a sure clue to the Chronicler’s authorship of any passage.

As valuable as linguistic evidence is as a technique for indicating source and relationship, it is not the sole criterion but must be used along with every other test. S. A. Cook properly warns that "historical criticism cannot start from the untrustworthiness of Chronicles, and minimize the extent of the 'chronicler' in [Ezra-Nehemiah] or exaggerate it ... or assume that all other records are necessarily superior." It is strange that the Chronicler's statements to be credible must be authenticated by another witness, while material in the books of Samuel and Kings, under similar circumstances, is at once accepted as true. All of our rapidly growing knowledge of the history and culture of the Near East must be brought to bear on the interpretation of the Ezra-Nehemiah narrative. While our knowledge of events in Palestine during the Persian period is still unfortunately incomplete, enough has been accomplished to permit Albright to state, "We are justified in rejecting [Torrey's] position completely, without any concessions—except that Torrey's searching criticism of the sources and their interpretation have been of immense heuristic value."

In Ezra-Nehemiah the test of plausibility, whether the event fits the total picture as known from all other evidence, is important. If there is agreement with known facts, then even though there is linguistic evidence of the Chronicler's hand, the data may still be valid. In the light of the Chronicler's imposition of his style upon everything he touched, a broader scale of judgment than simply true and false must be used. While searching for the truth we must be satisfied at times, at least temporally, with the classifications "possible" and "probable." Attitude also is important, for incredulity is not the only virtue of a historian, and experience shows that a negative attitude breeds negative results, whereas critical readiness to believe, when not simple credulity, opens the door to constructive knowledge and often to the ultimate solution of historical problems.

One of the fruits of the radical criticism of Ezra-Nehemiah is the denial of the existence of an Ezra narrative, which is then described as "spurious Memoirs of Ezra patterned after Nehemiah" and even the denial of the existence of the person Ezra. It is stressed that Ezra "appears relatively late in tradition, but continues to grow in reputation. He is absent from both Ben Sira xlix. 12 sq. and 2 Macc. i. seq., and here [Nehemiah] is particularly prominent." Torrey refers to the Chronicler's 'creation of the character' of Ezra, and claims that "Ezra" himself is the personification of the Chronicler's interests, completely identi-cal with the Nehemiah of Neh. 13 and (mutatis mutandis) with each of the long list of ecclesiastical heroes and reformers created by the Chronicler. Pfeiffer, who usually agrees with Torrey, is somewhat reluctant here, but ultimately also denies the historicity of the Ezra narrative as he remarks: "Ezra need not be a purely fictitious character. He may well have been a devout Jew living in Jerusalem in the days of Nehemiah, whose name was remembered in later generations. The Chronicler ... apparently selected Ezra for the role of founder of the guild of the scribes and concerted his fictitious biography." He also claims: "His [Ezra's] 'Memoirs' lack the genuine historicity of those of Nehemiah and his life is far more legendary."

Such a negative conception has not found wide acceptance. Many prefer to say, "The probability is that Ezra was indeed a real person, who came to Jerusalem and did substantially what the Chronicler says he did." Albright is willing to admit that the Chronicler wrote the Ezra narratives, but he identifies that author with Ezra himself. Such a concept is quite extreme, however, and is not held widely. It is usual to regard Ezra as the embodiment of the later particularistic and legalistic Judaism, but it is clear that he was also its fountainhead. Cowley has declared:

It was Ezra who made modern Judaism, by instituting (or re-instituting) the ceremonial law and formulating regulations for the national festivals. The books of Ezra and Nehemiah show this as clearly as the early literature shows the lack of them ... The importance of the new revelation [law] is that in it we see the birth of modern Judaism, which could never have developed by natural process from pre-exilic Judaism. The subsequent development of it down to the present day is easily traced. ... All this is the natural growth of the system born under Ezra: it could not have grown out of a religious system such as that of the colonists of Elephantine.

The story of Ezra-Nehemiah for the most part rings true. It makes good sense when understood from the standpoint of what is known otherwise of the history of the Jews during the exilic and postexilic periods (cf. Robinson, "The History of Israel," Vol. I, pp. 284-88) and of the history and culture of the world in which

X. Theological Significance

Since Ezra-Nehemiah is part of the Chronicler's work (cf. Intro., p. 532), the work shares the general purpose of the books of Chronicles (cf. Intro. to Chronicles, pp. 544-45). The Chronicler rewrote and supplemented the historical books which were already canonical. He intended chiefly to include in the national history an account of the origin and development of the Jerusalem temple and its cultus. Because those books concluded with the negative narration of the destruction of Jerusalem (II Kings 25:1-30), its temple, and cultus, the Ezra-Nehemiah portion of the narrative, without a counterpart in the canonical works, was especially significant for the Chronicler. In a positive way, it describes the rebuilding of Jerusalem, its defenses and its temple, and the reinstitution of the temple administration and religious practices. It concludes with a message dear to the Chronicler, that the Jews of the postexilic period became a united, self-conscious people, avoiding all foreign contamination and maintaining a fierce loyalty to the law of their God.

However, each of the major sources employed by the Chronicler had its own purpose. The now-fragmentary Aramaic source seems to have preserved a factual account of the reconstruction of Jerusalem in the face of unbelievable opposition by the neighbors of the Jews. Although Nehemiah's work, too, is basically factual, the key to its purpose is to be found in its frequent petition to God to "remember" what Nehemiah had done for Jerusalem and the cause of religion there. His work was designed presumably to be preserved as a memorial before God in the temple in order that the perpetuation there of the good deeds of Nehemiah the eunuch might gain for him salvation, the preservation of his name and reputation, which would otherwise have been lost and forgotten since he could leave no posterity (cf. Neh. 15:14). Ezra's account has been described as a report to his king regarding the faithful discharge of the commission with which he was sent to Palestine.²⁴² Obviously the writer aimed particularly at describing the means employed by Ezra in getting the Jewish people to accept God's law as binding on their actions, making them a community ideally subservient to his will, and at showing how, in consequence of such law, or an expansion of it, the community purged itself of every foreign element that might seduce the people religiously, as they had been led astray in the dark days just past. Such particularistic emphases strongly marked later Judaism.

With a more recent development of universalistic thought and of impatience with legal restrictions, especially in religion, the work of Ezra-Nehemiah has been greatly neglected, regarded as negative in character, and considered significant only for its possible factual content. Properly understood, however, the value of the work goes far beyond its historical import. Rarely in the Bible is there expressed such a sense of intimate relationship with God and consciousness of his providence as is found in Nehemiah's frequent observations that the "hand of God" guided and defended him in his holy work (cf. Neh. 2:8, 18). Always Nehemiah was confident that the almost impossible task of reviving the desolate Jewish community could not be accomplished without the guidance and support of God. Thus his work is no mere human boast of achievement but an account of faithful stewardship to his Lord.

The work of Ezra, too, although often scorned today because of its particularism and legalism, likewise has enduring significance when seen in proper perspective. It is true that the emotional intensity, prophetic boldness, and beautiful language of the major prophets are not encountered in the work of Ezra, but it is a fact that in a great measure Ezra made a practical application of the prophetic ideal and realistically implemented the prophetic message. The great prophets had declined against the menace of Canaanite and other foreign religious influences and had declared that continued acceptance of such seducing forces would lead to divine displeasure, exile, and destruction. Ezra admitted the truth of the prophetic contention and, recognizing that all intimate foreign contacts inherently presented an insidious possibility of contamination of the cult, he urged that such "cancerous growths" should be removed, surgically if necessary, in order that a sound Jewish cult might survive, avoiding a repetition of divine displeasure and of the destruction which had come, as the prophets had warned, because of the ready acceptance of foreign influences, particularly in religion. Judaism lost much of its cultural benefit, to be sure, by the rigid rejection of all foreign influences, but the cost was counted worth while when the purity of its religion and the identity of its people were maintained. The real test of the value of the policy of exclusion came with the onset of the Hellenistic Age (cf. Robinson, "The History of Israel," Vol. I, pp. 288-90). As might be expected, some Jews accepted Hellenism and revealed in their new freedom but it was such conservative and exclusivist groups as the Hasidim that preserved Judaism and led the way toward Christianity.

Since Paul, Christians have looked with com-tempt upon the legalistic development of Judaism and have rejected the “burden” of the Law as a means of salvation. But such a view often distorts the truth. Even Paul had to combat in the church the antinomian tendencies that his words and attitudes on the subject had released. Although not all Jewish laws need be binding upon Christians, nevertheless there were Christian laws or principles by which religious conduct must be guided, and Paul himself was often most explicit about these. There are few men with adequate religious sensitivity and discernment to understand and appreciate and make effective the law that God writes in every human heart. Historically, the result of human attempts to make that law explicit has been confusion, contradiction, and crossed purposes. Nevertheless, most men require an objective guide of conduct. Such abstractions as “holiness” and “righteousness” must be spelled out in concrete expression. The average man wants these explanations to be adequate but in minimal terms. He asks, “How far can I go and still be righteous?” or “What must I do to be saved?” Jewish law met the issue by supplying a specific code of conduct, recognized as the will of God. Strict adherence to it constituted righteousness. Therein lay both its positive force and its corrupting influence.

EZRA

TEXT, EXEGESIS, AND EXPOSITION

The Book of Ezra.—In Thornton Wilder's novel The Ides of March, set in the last days of Julius Caesar, the author explains that he has deliberately displaced one historical event by seventeen years, and that he has for his own purposes kept several of his historical characters alive long after the actual dates of their deaths. But he points out that "historical reconstruction is not among the primary aims of this work," and calls it rather "a fantasia on certain events and persons of the last days of the Roman republic."

Likewise, in his well-known long poem John Brown's Body, Stephen Vincent Benét has incorporated into his account of Brown's attack on Harper's Ferry, and of his later trial and execution, the actual words which Brown uttered in explanation and defense. Benét then portrays, through characters and events of his own creation, the powerful influence of John Brown's words and deeds upon the course of the Civil War and the history of the American people.

Both these twentieth-century procedures illuminate the present-day relevance of the book of Ezra. Benét and Wilder have written in an age when the standards and methods of responsible historical scholarship have become widely established, and about periods of history for which the written sources of our knowledge are abundant. Ezra, on the other hand, as the Intro. and Exeg. show, was written some generations—perhaps even a century or two—after the events with which it deals, about one of the most obscure periods in Hebrew history, on the basis of written sources that were scanty and ambiguous, by an author whose knowledge on many historical questions was confused and inaccurate. Its author had little if any comprehension of what we now mean by historical scholarship; but like Wilder, who does know a great deal about it, his primary aim in any case was not that of historical reconstruction. He was chiefly interested in the maintenance and enrichment of the temple ritual and its development after the rebuilding of the temple, which he undertook to recount; and he was equally concerned in the elaboration and enforcement of the early Jewish religion of the law, which was developing so fast in his own time.

Seeing the danger to later Judaism in any relaxation of these developing ceremonies and traditions—especially through intermarriage with the surrounding peoples, whose religious practices were much less strict than his own—he used his scanty sources and limited knowledge of earlier times to write what a modern scholar has called "idealized history." He carried back the origins of the ceremonial observances and legalistic conformities by which in his own day he set such store, into an earlier period when our fuller sources show that these practices had not yet developed. By the great influence of his book, and especially of its hero Ezra, upon the course of later Judaism, he gave both direction and powerful impetus to the elaboration of the ceremonialism, the legalism, and the exclusive "particularism" which thus became characteristic of later Judaism.

It cannot be too strongly emphasized that in all this there was no conscious falsification on the author's part. Like his successors of whom the N.T. speaks, he fully believed that he was doing both God and God's chosen people a great service. The course of later history seems to us Christians to show that God's purposes

I:1 THE INTERPRETER’S BIBLE

I. Sheshbazzar’s Return (1:1-2:70)

A. Preliminary (1:1-4)

This passage reproduces II Chr. 36:22-23 almost exactly. The final sentence, incomplete in II Chronicles, is finished in Ezra, where Cyrus’ decree is given in full. Duplication is even more extensive in I Esdras 1:1-58 where two full chapters of II Chronicles (35:1-36:23) are repeated. This is usually regarded as evidence of the original unity of Chronicles-Ezra-Nehemiah (cf. Intro., p. 552). With the present division of the books the passage forms both an optimistic conclusion to II Chronicles and a fitting introduction to the Ezra-Nehemiah story of reconstruction.

The first year was not Cyrus’ first regnal year (559 B.C.) but his first as king of Babylon (538 B.C.), when the Jews had their first major contact with him (cf. 5:13). King of Persia was Cyrus’ title as early as the Nabonidus Chronicle (col. 2, 1. 15) where it describes him before the capture of Babylon (Sidney Smith, tr., Babylonian Historical Texts [London: Methuen & Co., 1924], pp. 112, 116). Since more inclusive titles were used within three weeks after the capture of Babylon, king of Persia is usually regarded as anachronistic, an evidence of the Chronicler’s authorship. It has been defended, however, as representing the title popular in the West (R. D. Wilson, “Titles of the Persian Kings,” Festschrift Eduard Sachau [Berlin: Georg Reimer, 1915], pp. 179-207; E. J. Bickerman, “The Edict of Cyrus in Ezra 1,” Journal of Biblical Literature, LXV [1946], 254-56).

Jeremiah prophesied a return to Palestine after the period of exile (Jer. 29:10; 25:12). The Chronicler has already cited the prophecy in its negative aspect, the duration of exile (II Chr. 36:21), and now refers to the positive implication, the promise of restoration. Because of divine incitement Cyrus made a proclamation. The Hebrew text has, lit., “he made a voice pass through,” which means “he sent a herald through.” Ernst Herzfeld (Zoroaster and His World [Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1947], I, 172, were moving toward other ends, and were being fulfilled by other means than those on which he laid such stress. We read and interpret his book in the light of the fuller revelation of God’s character and purposes which has been given to us in Jesus Christ, and through Christ’s servant Paul. Inevitably we often find that the

n. 9) finds essentially a translation of this expression in the Persian word for "herald" in Dan. 3:4 (חכ), which he derives from Persian kāra, "pass through," and vāč, "voice." Such heralds are mentioned often in Greek sources (Herodotus History III. 62; VII. 119; Xenophon Anabasis II. 1. 7; etc.) and are implied in the "commandment" and "deceer" in Esth. 1:19-20, 22; 3:14; 8:13. After the proclamation the herald left a writing confirming the message (cf. II Kings 19:9-14). Writing here is a technical term used in Hebrew almost always for formal inscriptions (Bickerman, op. cit., pp. 272-73). It is perhaps this writing, with some editing, that is given in ch. 6.

2. Edict of Cyrus (1:2-4=6:3-5; II Chr. 36:22-23; I Esdras 2:3-7)

Cyrus' edict appears in both 1:2-4 (in Hebrew) and in 6:3-5 (in Aramaic), in somewhat different forms. Those who feel impelled to choose between the accounts usually favor the Aramaic text. Bickerman, however (ibid., pp. 249-53), insists that no choice is necessary since the Hebrew text may represent the oral proclamation of the herald, while the Aramaic text may be the official written decree.

L. W. Batten rightly claims, "In the Heb. edict ... there is no note of improbability, save in the matter of Baby. contributors" (A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah [New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1913; "International Critical Commentary"], p. 61). Phrases in the decree frequently suggest Persian bureaucratic style as known from extrabiblical sources and reflect concepts found in Cyrus' other inscriptions. These have been regarded by some as deliberate imitations of Persian style to give a semblance of authenticity to a decree forged entirely by the Chronicler (C. C. Torrey, Ezra Studies [Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1910], p. 152). Probably, however, they are traces of a genuine source used by the Chronicler. Like the record in II Kings 18:17-25, 27-35; 19:10-13, the proclamation is not preserved verbatim but transmits the essence of the herald's words, including some of the official terminology.

2. Thus says Cyrus resembles the prophetic declaration "Thus saith the Lord," but it doubtless represents the official Persian formula of royal inscriptions. It appears in all versions of the Behistun inscription (Weissbach, op. cit., pp. 8-75; A. E. Cowley, ed., Aramaic Papyri of the Fifth Century B.C. [Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1928], pp. 251-71, col. 1, ll. 7, 12; col. 2, ll. 16, 17, 22; col. 3, l. 37; col. 4, ll. 50, 59), the Gadatas inscription (tr. C. J. Ogden in G. W. Botford and E. G. Sihler, Hellenic Civilization [New York: Columbia University Press, 1915], p. 162), and in trilingual inscriptions from Susa (V. Scheil, Inscriptions des Achéménides à Suse [Paris: E. Leroux, 1929], Nos. 3, 7, 9, 10, 14, 16 C, 16 E, 18, 20, 21, 23, 25, 26, 28, 29). Since the formula always concludes with "the king," the additional of Persia is due to the Chronicler (cf. vs. 1). The assertion God ... has given me all the kingdoms of the earth has its counterpart in an inscription of Cyrus from Ur which claims, "The great Gods have delivered all the lands into my hand" (C. J. Gadd and Léon Lefrain, Ur Excavations Texts: Royal Inscriptions [London and Philadelphia: British Museum & the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania, 1928], p. 58, No. 194), and the Cyrus Cylinder (1. 12) which states, "to sovereignty over the whole world he [Marduk] appointed him [Cyrus]." This view igious policy of Cyrus toward the gods and shrines of his subject peoples is here interpreted as a fulfillment of Jeremiah's unspecified prophecies, and as a direct result of the working of God on the mind of the king. This religious view of human history, which anticipates the later doctrine of the divine providence, becomes for us, in our anxiety about the course and outcome of history, the most relevant aspect of this opening chapter. Little as Ezra and the Chron-

3 Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel, (he is the God,) which is in Jerusalem.

4 And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, besides the freewill offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem.

The interpreters are in agreement that the freewill offering for the house of God in Babylon was allowed, and that Cyrus was receptive to the gods of his subjects. He "worshiped" Marduk of Babylon (Cyrus Cylinder, II, 23, 35) and repatriated the gods exiled to Babylon by Nabonidus along with their worshipers (ibid., II, 32, 35). To the restored gods he gave "habitations for all time" (ibid., I, 32), "habitations giving joy to their hearts" (ibid., I, 34).

3. His God be with him: "Let his God go with him." The Jewish God is permitted to return home with his adherents, just as the Babylonian gods were. Since there was no image to transport to Jerusalem, the concept is Persian rather than Jewish. The Nabonidus Chronicle (col. 3, II, 21-22) states that after the fall of Babylon (Oct. 13, 539 B.C.) "from Kishlimu [November-December] to Addaru [February-March] they returned the gods of Akkad, whom Nabonidus had brought up to Babylon, to their cities" (Sidney Smith, Babylonian Historical Texts, pp. 113-14, 118). Apparently the Jewish return was part of that movement. Cyrus claims that during the conquest of Babylon Marduk went with him, "going by his side as friend and companion" (Cyrus Cylinder, I, 15).

Since heraldic proclamations are known from other sources to begin with a question (Xenophon Cyropaedia V. 8. 1; Herodotus History VII. 134; cf. Judg. 7:3), it is preferable to translate who is there among you instead of who is among you, thus obtaining a smoother reading. The M.T. permits either. All, omitted in I Esdras 2:5, is unnecessary, reflecting the Chronicler's idea that northern Israelites who had been in pre-exilic Jerusalem (I Chr. 9:3; II Chr. 11:16; 30:11, 21; 31:6) were also to return.

4. Each survivor presumes those "that had escaped from the sword" (II Chr. 36:20), those returning to Judah; but more probable is the interpretation "everyone remaining behind" (cf. I Chr. 13:2; Num. 11:26), those who refused to go to Judah. Some interpreters prefer to include Gentiles as well as Jews, and thus see the hand of the Chronicler laboring under the influence of the story of the exodus from Egypt (Exod. 11:2; 12:35). But the reference is rather to Jews who followed Jeremiah's advice and developed such strong roots in Babylonia, acquiring wealth and position (Jer. 29:4-10), in the hands of God. Holding this theocentric faith, they here represent Cyrus' tolerant policy toward the religions of all his subject peoples as involving (vs. 9) an explicit recognition of the God of Israel as the source and support (vs. 2) of his own kingly authority.
5 Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit God had raised, to go up to build the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem.

6 And all they that were about them strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things, besides all that was willingly offered.

that they decided to remain. These were expected to assist those who wished to return. Help him: Lit., “support him.” The verb may also mean “supply him” (cf. 1 Kings 9:11). Such supplies were to enable the emigrants to make the long journey.

B. Preparation for the Return (1:5-11)

1. Chiefs of Fathers (1:5=I Esdras 2:8)

5. The Chronicler portrays immediate response to the permissive edict. Chief of the fathers abbreviates the heads of the fathers’ houses (cf. Exod. 6:14; I Chr. 5:24), “clan chieftains” according to I Esdras 2:8. Judah and Benjamin were regarded by the Chronicler as constituting the postexilic community, presumably because they alone had remained loyal to the house of David (4:1; II Chr. 11:12; I Chr. 12:16; Neh. 11:4) and were the elements of the pre-exilic kingdom last taken into captivity. The priests and the Levites were the religious personnel needed for the temple. Levites were priests of a lower order, treated as servants of the regular priests (Num. 3:9-10).

With all them seems to imply another class of emigrants, but the Hebrew text should be translated “namely,” indicating those already mentioned, since all who returned were stirred by God (vs. 1). Rose up . . . to, idiomatic for “began at once to . . . ,” means “Then they began at once to go up to build . . . .” To go up, rather than simply “to go,” indicates Palestinian usage where the height of Jerusalem above other sites necessitates ascent to the capital.

2. Support of Neighbors (1:6=I Esdras 2:9)

6. The influence of vs. 4 is apparent here, but the Chronicler amplifies or alters some of the expressions. “Those remaining” (vs. 4) becomes all who were about them, which could refer to Gentile neighbors as well as Jews. Strengthened their hands: An idiom meaning aided them is used for the “supply him” of vs. 4. Instead of with vessels (יִנְּשָׁלָה), I Esdras 2:9 reads a graphically similar Hebrew text as “in all things” (יִנְּשָׁלָה). The latter is preferable since vessels may be due to vs. 7. In addition to things listed in vs. 4, mention is made of costly wares (cf. Gen. 24:53; II Chr. 21:3; 32:23), possibly under the influence by the exodus story (Exod. 3:22; 11:2; 12:35). The Hebrew words rendered besides are a unique combination without that meaning elsewhere. Part of the Hebrew expression itself (יִנְּשָׁלָה) may mean “in addition to” (cf. Gen. 28:9; 31:50). The remainder of the Hebrew text (יִנְּשָׁלָה) should be translated “in abundance” (יִנְּשָׁלָה), correcting a scribal error of a graphically similar text (cf. I Esdras 2:9 and Syriac).

5-11. A Heritage Becomes a Task.—In the light of the pathetic picture of the situation and morale of the returned exiles in Jerusalem given in Hag. 1, and of the difficulty the prophet plainly encountered in arousing the people to rebuild their temple, which he explicitly says (Hag. 2:3) was in such depressing contrast to “its former glory,” these verses seem to throw a rosy glow of magnifying patriotism and piety over the actual scale of the rebuilding of Jerusalem, as not only Haggai but the archaeological evidences indicate it. This picture of an emigration of leading citizens from Babylon to Jerusalem to rebuild the temple, bringing with them not only large gifts freely offered, but five thousand four hundred and sixty-nine . . . vessels of gold and of silver from Solomon’s temple, now restored to them by Cyrus for this purpose, 7 Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the LORD, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem, and had put them in the house of his gods: besides all that was freely offered. 7 Cyrus the king also brought out the vessels of the house of the Lord which Nebuchadnezzar had carried away from Jerusalem and placed in the house of his gods. 8 Cyrus king of Persia brought these out in charge of Mithredath the treasurer, who counted them out to Shesh-bazzar, the prince of Judah. 9 And this was the number of them: thirty chargers of gold, a thousand chargers of silver, nine and twenty knives, a thousand four hundred babies of gold, two hundred basins of silver.

3. Cyrus’ Return of Temple Vessels (1:7-11=I Esdras 2:10-12)

7-8. The Hebrew text stresses the royal contribution, the returning of precious vessels taken by the Babylonians (Jer. 52:18-20; II Kings 25:14-15), by placing the king before Cyrus. The vessels were dedicated as a trophy of war (cf. I Sam. 5:2; 31:9-10; II Chr. 5:1) in the temple Esagila, the house of his gods in Babylon, by Nebuchadnezzar (605-562 B.C.) who destroyed Jerusalem in 586 B.C. Mithredath is a Persian name (Mithradata) and the title treasurer is also a Persian word which was adopted by the Akkadian, Aramaic, and Hebrew languages.

Shesh-bazzar is a corruption of Babylonian Shamash-ab-usur (so M.T. and LXX) or Sin-ab-usur (I Esdras and Josephus). The Lucianic recension of I Esdras suggests Shamash-apal-usur, but lack of support of the reading by the O.L. (Sasabalassar) suggests that it is a late revised spelling. Like Zerubbabel (cf. 2:2), he bears a Babylonian name but is the prime secular Jewish leader. His title (শ্শবজু) often means prince, but may be simply “chief” or “leader” (Gen. 17:20; 25:16). Some identify him with Shenazzar (I Chr. 3:18), the son of Jehoiakim and uncle of Zerubbabel (I Chr. 3:19). If so, the title prince would be appropriate. The Chronicler wrongly identifies Shesh-bazzar with Zerubbabel. Here I Esdras 2:11 calls him “governor” (προστάτης), anticipating the title applied elsewhere (5:14).

9-11. Vessels is too limited since the Hebrew term could include implements of various kinds as well. The bowls (vs. 10) are Babylonian kaparu, food bowls. Chargers, “platters” (ASV), or basins represent a Hebrew word (던נה) of uncertain origin and meaning. It appears non-Semitic, possibly Aryan, but proposed identification with Greek “basket” (κάρταλος) or “wine mixing bowl” (κρατήρ) is precarious. The LXX renders “wine cooler” (μπαλέτος) and I Esdras (2:9) here has “libation vessel” (σπονδεία). Censers, too, represents an obscure word rendered elsewhere as knives (so Vulg.; Syriac; Talmud) and “changes of garments” (LXX). I Esdras employs the same word (censers) used by the LXX in II Kings 25:14 for the Hebrew word “hand” (_upgrade), which may indicate the hand-shaped “censers” of ivory and steatite found at Megiddo (Herbert G. May, Material Remains of the Megiddo Cult [Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1935], pp. 18-19, Pl. XVII). Julius A. Bewer would omit the word (衎niej) entirely, regarding it as a corrupt repetition of the preceding word “two thousand” (Der Text des Buches Esra [Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1922], p. 16). Kurt Galling revocalizes the Hebrew word to translate “substitute fittings,” which appears inappropriate (“Der Tempelschatz nach Berichten und Urkunden im Buche Esra,” Zeitschrift für die alte Sprache, 20:574).
10 Thirty basins of gold, silver basins of a second sort four hundred and ten, and other vessels a thousand.

11 All the vessels of gold and of silver were five thousand and four hundred. All these did Sheshbazzar bring up with them of the captivity that were brought up from Babylon unto Jerusalem.

2 Now these are the children of the province that went up out of the captivity, of those which had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon carried away from Jerusalem.

des deutschen Palästina-vereins, LX [1937], 180-81). Wilhelm Rudolph (Estra und Nehemia [Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1949; “Handbuch zum Alten Testament”], p. 5) treats it as a marginal comment, “to be corrected,” which has been accidentally taken into the text. Of a second sort (vs. 10), which separates an item from its total, is also difficult. The Hebrew word means either “double” (LXX MSS; Syriac; Ethiopic) or second sort, neither of which suits the context. Since I Esdras has a larger number than the M.T. in this verse, the Hebrew word (חתיות) has been regarded as a corruption of two thousand (חתיות).

The figures are in hopeless confusion. Totals vary in the versions, and except for I Esdras the grand total does not agree with that obtained by adding the given items. The grand total 5,400 of the M.T. is 2,901 more than the figure arrived at by addition. Figures given in the KJV and ASV are those of the M.T. and LXX, while those of the RSV follow I Esdras.

Explanations of the discrepancies differ considerably. Rudolph (ibid.) makes few emendations of the M.T. and explains the differences between items and total by the assumption that the grand total includes items accidentally lost from the M.T. Bewer (loc. cit.) prefers emendation, reading “two thousand” for censors (vs. 9) and another two thousand for a second sort (vs. 10). He contends that the original total was 5,499, that obtained by adding his emended figures. He assumes that from that figure the number “ninety-nine” was lost from the Hebrew text to leave the round number 5,400 in the M.T. and LXX.

A list of articles taken from the Jerusalem temple is given in II Kings 25:14 ff. but without enumeration. The figures in vss. 9-11 are fantastically large, apparently exaggerated according to the Chronicler’s well-recognized custom.

C. Returning Israelites (2:1-70)

In 1:11 the Chronicler presumes the substance of ch. 2, which he introduces from Neh. 7:6-73, where the list is designated as “those who came up at the beginning” (Neh. 7:5). He assumes that it describes those returning with Sheshbazzar, although that name is not mentioned therein. Such identification is possible only because the Chronicler wrongly identifies Sheshbazzar with Zerubbabel. Since traditionally each headed a return to Jerusalem (vs. 2; 1:11b), and each began to build the temple (3:8; 5:2), it is perhaps inevitable that there should be confusion, even though a later document used even the details of their adventurous journeys through what were doubtless “days of small things.” God had been at work in their national history, as in that of the United States, through the courage and faith of little-known men “whose hearts God had touched” (1 Sam. 10:26) with the energy and patience to overcome great odds, and to finish what began as a precarious undertaking.

2:1-67. The Role of Inconspicuous Individuals. —This religious view of history in retrospect illuminates also the longer range significance of the extensive lists and numbers of family and regional groups that make up so large and, for Babylon had carried away unto Babylon, and came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one unto his city:

2 Which came with Zerubbabel: Jeshua, Nehemiah, Seraiah, Reclai,iah, Mordecai, by the Chronicler (5:2, 14, 16) makes it evident that historically Sheshbazzar under Cyrus must be differentiated from Zerubbabel, who was active under Darius I.

Zerubbabel and Jeshua in vs. 2 suggest that the list originally described a return at the time of Darius I, but it is probable that the list does not all come from the same period, for differing formulas in the list of laymen (vs. 2b-35) indicate that it has been supplemented by data drawn from other sources. In I Esdras 5:7-16 it purports to list those returning with Zerubbabel. The list was so highly regarded by the Chronicler that its clan names and their sequence are employed whenever a tabulation of postexilic Judeans is required. Its influence is found in the list of those sealing the covenant (Neh. 10:14-27), in the list of those who had taken foreign wives (10:18-44), and elsewhere. Josephus knew the list but purposely omitted it lest it interrupt his narrative (Antiquities XI. 3. 10).

I. SUPERSCRIPTION (2:1-2a=Neh. 7:7; I Esdras 5:8)

2:1. These in the superscription signifies not only those in vs. 2 but all in the list. The province was technically the Judean subdivision of the fifth Persian satrapy. The point of view of the list is Palestinian and postexilic. The Chronicler ignores Jews who remained in Judea and the temporary fugitives who returned to the land early, and regards as true Israel the people of Judah and Benjamin who returned from exile. Names in the list indicate that some at least of the clan founders were descendants of those exiled and had not themselves seen pre-exilic Judea. Each to his own town (cf. vs. 70) unrealistically ignores the fact that many pre-exilic sites were not subsequently reoccupied. The rabbis claimed, "Many cities which were conquered by the Israelites who came up from Egypt were not reconquered by those who came up from Babylon" (Isidore Epstein, ed., The Babylonian Talmud: Seder Kodashim [London: Soncino Press, 1948]; Hullin I, 7a), and archaeology confirms this view. Destroyed Jerusalem could not house all of its pre-exilic inhabitants (cf. Neh. 2:17; 7:4). Doubtless the immigrants sought to settle at pre-exilic ancestral homes wherever possible, but many obviously had to start anew elsewhere.

2a. A simple list of people, given without genealogy perhaps because they were well-known personages, precedes the principal list. The record is ambiguous since it could be, as in the KJV, a list of those who returned with Zerubbabel or (with ASV, RSV, and the American Jewish Translation) an account of leaders of diverse periods, of whom Zerubbabel was but one, who led Jews back to Judea. They were "guides" (προηγούμενοι) according to I Esdras 5:8, and Josephus (loc. cit.) calls them "rulers" who were "distinguished from the multitude." According to Rudolph (op. cit., p. 19, n. 4), R. Fruin has suggested that they were a series of governors of the province of Judea (cf. "Is Esra een Historisch Persoon?" Nieuw Theologisch Tijdschrift, XVIII [1929], 132 ff.). If so, several, like Zerubbabel and Jeshua, may have been contemporaries, for the list is much too long. Sheshbazzar, of course, would be omitted by virtue of identification with Zerubbabel. If "Azariah" (Neh. 7:7), the name of which Ezra is an us of today, so tedious a part of ch. 2. As the Exeg. shows, these long lists were made up not only from different sources but from different categories—some genealogical, others geographical. The Chronicler was greatly interested in such lists of the men of other days, and made them do duty for various purposes. They are reminders to every subsequent generation that its own history and civilization have been forgotten or perhaps confused. Who knows today the names of more than a very few of the American pioneers who first settled the thirteen abbreviation, is read instead of Seraiah, the order of Nehemiah and "Azariah" may be significant. In addition to Zerubbabel, a Persian Bigvai is mentioned as governor of Judea under Darius II (Cowley, Aramaic Papyri, No. 30, l. 1; Josephus, too, mentions a vice-regent of the same name in Palestine [Antiquities XI. 7], and a Rehum figures prominently as a Palestinian official contemporary with Nehemiah (cf. 4:8-9, 17, 23). Such a theory, obviously incapable of proof, would explain the preponderance of foreign names, since more than half are non-Jewish and distinctly postexilic in type. Bigvai is Persian and in addition to Zerubbabel ("Seed of Babylon"), Mordecai (an abbreviation of a name with the god element Marduk) and Bilshan (probably the popular abbreviation Bel-shunu) are Babylonian names.

2. The Principal List (2:2b-67)

The principal list presents the number of each clan that returned, followed by a list of their servants and beasts, concluding with a listing of donations to the temple (vss. 68-69). The list, divided by headings into different categories, begins, contrary to the Chronicler's preference, with a list of laymen rather than priests and Levites. Introductory formulas show that the original lay list (vss. 3-20), wherein the clans are identified by ancestors who founded them, has been supplemented several times (vss. 21-28, 29-35) from sources which identify those returning by geographical names.

Although described as a "book of genealogy" (Neh. 7:5), a stress on number rather than name has led some to regard the list as an official Persian census of the Jewish community (Robert H. Pfeiffer, Introduction to the Old Testament [New York: Harper & Bros., 1941], pp. 822, 836; G. Hölscber, Die Bücher Esra und Nehemia [4th ed., E. Kautzsch and A. Bertholet; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1923], II, 508-4). This concept seems to be supported by the use of geographical rather than personal names, but numbers are just as important in a tally of immigrants, and vss. 65-67, inexplicable as part of a census, are appropriate to an account of a return (cf. Rudolph, op. cit., pp. 15-16).

Where personal names are found they are not all of the same order. In addition to the usual Hebrew sentence names (e.g., vs. 4, Shephatiah, "The Lord Judges") there are partial names, used in abbreviation (e.g., vs. 9, Zaccai for such a name as Zechariah, "The Lord Has Remembered"), animal names (e.g., vs. 3, Parosh, "Flea"; vs. 5, Arah, "Ox"), and nicknames (e.g., vs. 19, Hashum, "Broad Nose"). Interesting is Pahath-moab (vs. 6), which is not a personal name but the title "Governor of Moab." The foreign names Elam (vss. 7, 31), Bigvai (vs. 14), and Ater (vs. 16) reflect the Exile.

Since the lists all name rather remote ancestors, the words sons of should here be understood as "descendants of."

a) Laymen (2:2b-35=Neh. 7:7b-38; I Esdras 5:7-23)

1) By Family (2:25-29)

5. Arah ("Ox") has parallels in Babylonia and among Arabs, but only the Chronicler uses it in the Bible. He names a pre-exilic descendant of Asher, a "chief of princes" who was a "head" of a "father's house" (1 Chr. 7:59-40). Of widely differing totals in the versions, the original figure appears to have been either 652 (as in the M.T. of Neh. 7:10
6 The children of Pahath-moab, of the children of Jeshua and Joab, two thousand eight hundred and twelve.
7 The children of Elam, a thousand two hundred fifty and four.
8 The children of Zattu, nine hundred forty and five.
9 The children of Zaccur, seven hundred and threescore.
10 The children of Bani, six hundred forty and two.
11 The children of Bebai, six hundred twenty and three.
12 The children of Azgad, a thousand two hundred twenty and two.
13 The children of Adonikam, six hundred sixty and six.

and I Esdras 5:10 in the Lucianic recension) or 752 (with the LXXBR of Neh. 7:10 and the Lucianic Greek text there).

6. Pahath-moab ("Governor of Moab") designates an early Hebrew person who ruled Moab. Under David (II Sam. 8:2) and Solomon, Judeans dominated Moab. The Chronicler suggests that Judeans ruled Moab (Neh. 3:11) and lists a Judean Sarah ("Serpent") as ruler of Moab (I Chr. 4:22). The clan was subdivided into those of Jeshua and Joab (cf. 8:9; Neh. 3:19).

7. Elam is used by the Chronicler to designate a Benjaminite (I Chr. 8:24). The name probably has connection with the country east of the Tigris (Gen. 10:22) later ruled by Cyrus, a place to which exiled Israelites were sent (Isa. 11:11).

10. Bani (בָּנִי) appears as "Binnui" (בִּינְוִי) in Neh. 7:15 and as "Bunni" (בּוֹנִי) in Neh. 10:15. Since two names are found in the list in both Ezra 10:29, 34 and Neh. 10:13-15, it is probable that the original list contained two very similar names, representing different clans, and that identical spelling in the C.T. caused the loss of one here. Read for 642 the 648 of Neh. 7:15 and I Esdras 5:13.

12. Azgad ("Gad Is Strong") like Gaddiel ("Gad Is God") in Num. 13:10 contains the name of the god Gad, "Fortune" (cf. Gen. 30:11; Isa. 65:11). For the one thousand two hundred and twenty-two of Ezra read 2,222 with the Lucianic recension of Ezra and Nehemiah (cf. Neh. 7:12). The text in Ezra is easily explained by the loss of a letter which makes two thousand (שלישים) read one thousand (שלישים). The loss was easy before two hundred (מאות), which begins with the same letter that was lost.

13. Adonikam ("My Lord Has Arisen") has the element Adoni- ("My Lord") found in the early names Adoniram (I Kings 4:6) and Adonijah (I Kings 1:8; II Sam. 3:4), where it substitutes for the name of God. Read 667 with Neh. 7:18 and I Esdras 5:14 for the six hundred and sixty-six of Ezra.

14. Bigvai (cf. vs. 2), a Persian name, could be a clan name no earlier than the time of the Exile. Greek texts and Josephus (Antiquities XI. 7) show that the first certainly tedious reading in public worship or private devotion today; but they remind us of humanity's unpayable debt to nameless men and women who have made posttery their heavy debtors by the courage and persistence that were the historical price of our human heritage.

16 The children of Ater of Hezekiah, ninety and eight.
17 The children of Bezai, three hundred twenty and three.
18 The children of Jorah, a hundred and twelve.
19 The children of Hashum, two hundred twenty and three.
20 The children of Gibbar, ninety and five.
21 The children of Beth-lehem, a hundred twenty and three.

syllable is Persian baga- ("God"). Aramaic papyri spell Bigvai (בִּגְ vara), the name of a Persian governor of Judea (Cowley, op. cit., No. 30, l. 1; No. 32, l. 1; cf. p. 109).

16. Ater as Hebrew could be either "Cripple" or "Lefty," but is probably the very common abbreviated name Etir, found often in business documents of the Neo-Babylonian and Persian periods. The spelling of the name is the same as that of the element Etir in the names in Aramaic endorsements on cuneiform tablets (Louis Delaporte, Épigraphes araméens [Paris: Paul Geuthner, 1912], p. 52, No. 38; p. 57, No. 53). For of Hezekiah read "namely of Hezekiah," since the Babylonian name, given in the Exile, had displaced the old clan name Hezekiah.

Here I Esdras 5:15 adds four names not in the list in the Hebrew text. The first two are corruptions of Ezra 2:31 (Bewer, Der Text des Buches Ezra, pp. 21-22) but from Neh. 10:18-19 it is clear that the other two (יוֹי אֹזָר וַעָרָא, 432, יוֹי אָמְנָא [for וֹאֶמְנָא], 101) represent the Azzur of Neh. 10:17, and a corruption of Hodijah of Neh. 10:18 (KJV), now lost from the Hebrew lists. Bewer arbitrarily assumes that the 101 of I Esdras 5:15 was originally 110 in order to obtain a larger grand total.

17-19. I Esdras 5:16 supports the order of verses in Neh. 7:22-24 (cf. Neh. 10:18-19), where the substance of vs. 19 here appears before that of vs. 17. Bezai abbreviates Bezalel (10:30; cf. Exod. 31:2; 35:30). Jorah ("Autumn Rain"); cf. Deut. 11:14; Jer. 5:24; Hos. 6:3), unique in Ezra, is "Hariph" in Neh. 7:24; 10:19 and originally in I Esdras 5:16. Since Arabic harif means either "freshly gathered fruit" or "autumn rain," it has been argued that Jorah and Hariph may be equivalents (Martin Noth, Die israelitischen Personennamen im Rahmen der Gemeinsamen Namengebung [Stuttgart: W. Kohlhammer, 1928; "Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament"], pp. 228, 244; cf. Rudolph, op. cit., p. 8).

20. Gibbar appears in Neh. 7:25 as the place name "Gibeon," perhaps because of proximity to the names that follow, but Gibeon, northwest of Jerusalem, should not appear before vs. 25 in a list which works northward. The LXXΔ vocalizes Gaber which is probably the abbreviated Babylonian name Gabria (for Ilu-gabri) found in cuneiform tablets of the Persian period.

(2) By Cty (2:21-35)

21-28. (Cf. Neh. 7:26-32; I Esdras 5:17-21.) With vs. 21-28 the introductory formula changes from "the sons of" to the men of, and the listing is by geographical home rather than by ancestor. The significance of the shift is not clear. It may indicate later supplementation from another source, but some have thought that it indicated a different type of citizen. K. F. Keil suggested that the previous clans were all of Jerusalem, in contrast to those listed geographically (Chronik, Ezra, Nehemia und Esther [Leipzig: Dorpillig & Franke, 1870; "Biblischer Commentar über das Alte Testament"], pp. 415-17), but the figures given are much too large. Others have suggested that those in vs. 3-20 22 The men of Netophah, fifty and six. 23 The men of Anathoth, a hundred twenty and eight. 24 The children of Azmaveth, forty and two. 25 The children of Kirjath-aim, Chephirah, and Beeroth, seven hundred and forty and three. 26 The children of Ramah and Gaba, six hundred twenty and one.

were landed property holders, the freemen, the “people of the land,” in contrast to those without property, “the poor of the land,” (II Kings 25:12; Jer. 40:7), who were not listed by clan (Eduard Meyer, Die Entstehung des Judenthums [Halle: M. Niemeyer, 1896], pp. 152 ff.; Rudolf Kittel, Geschichtte des Volkes Israel [2nd ed.; Stuttgart: W. Kohlhammer, 1929], III, 359-61; Rudolph, op. cit., p. 20).

It is uncertain whether the places mentioned represent pre-exilic ancestral homes to which the immigrants returned or centers at which returning Jews actually settled. From vss. 1, 70 it is clear that the Chronicler thought that all Jews could return to their pre-exilic homes. It is significant that there is no reference to towns of the Negeb, far in the south, which Jeremiah (13:19) claims were plundered in 598 B.C. and cut off from Judah so that no prisoners were taken from that region in 586 B.C. (Albrecht Alt, “Judas Gaue unter Josia,” Palästinajahrbuch, XXI [1925], 108). The towns listed begin with the southernmost, in the vicinity of Bethlehem, and proceed northward through familiar sites that appear largely to have escaped the destruction which made the rest of Judea quite a desolate region during the Exile.

23. Anathoth, home of some of David’s men (II Sam. 23:27), of Abiathar (I Kings 2:26), and of Jeremiah (1:1; 32:6-15), is Râs el-Kharrûbeh near ‘Anäta, about three miles northeast of Jerusalem.

24. Read “men of” as in Neh. 7:28 and I Esdras 5:18 instead of sons of. For Azmaveth read “Beth-azmaveth,” as in Neh. 7:28 and I EsdrasAB 5:18. It is modern Hizmeh, about five miles north-northeast of Jerusalem. The name is Canaanite, preserving the divine name Mot now found in the Ugaritic texts.

25. As in vs. 24, read “men of” with Neh. 7:29 and I Esdras 5:19. Kiriatharim (“Village of Cities”) is obviously an error for “Kiriath-jearim” (“Village of the Woods”) as Neh. 7:29 and the LXX show (cf. Josh. 9:17; 15:9; etc.). It is probably Tell el-Azhar, about nine miles from Jerusalem toward Lydda, nearly six miles southwest of Gibeon. Chephirah is Nhirbet el Kefreh, five miles west of Gibeon, commanding its approaches from the west, about two miles north of Kiriath-jearim. Beeroth, which presumably guarded Gibeon from the north, is not yet exactly identified but Eusebius locates it “under the hill of Gabaon” (Erich Klostermann, Das Onomasticon der biblische Ortsnamen [Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1904]; cf. Peter Thomsen, “Palästina nach dem Onomasticon des Eusebius,” Zeitschrift des deutschen Palästina-vereins, XXVI [1903], 97-188).

26. Read “men of” with Neh. 7:30 and I EsdrasAB 5:20. Geba is modern Jeba’, a Benjaminite town commanding the pass at Michmas, east of Ramah, which as modern Er-Râm is five miles north of Jerusalem, opposite Bethel. Ramah was a frontier outpost of Benjamin, lying between the ancient kingdoms of Israel and Judah (I Kings 15:17, 22).
27 The men of Michmas, a hundred and twenty and two. 28 The men of Beth-el and Ai, two hundred twenty and three. 29 The children of Nebo, fifty and two. 30 The children of Magbish, a hundred fifty and six. 31 The children of the other Elam, a thousand two hundred fifty and four. 32 The children of Harim, three hundred and twenty. 33 The children of Lod, Hadid, and Ono, seven hundred twenty and five.

27. Michmas, modern Mukhmâs (cf. I Sam. 14:5), lies northeast of Geba, on the road from Jericho to Ai. 28. Bethel and Ai cross the border of Judah-Benjamin into former Ephraimite territory. Alt ("Judas Gaue under Josia," pp. 108-9) has argued that it was Josiah's policy of expansion that added the marginal district to Judah in pre-exilic times. Bethel, modern Beitin, lies on the road to Shechem (Nablus), about twelve miles north of Jerusalem. Ai ("The Ruin") was et-Tell near Dér Dîwân, on a rocky terraced mound almost two miles east of Bethel. Excavation shows the site deserted from about 2200 B.C., except for a few houses about 1000 B.C. Although it is improbable that the place was resettled in any serious fashion during the postexilic period, Rudolph would identify it with Aiath (Isa. 10:28) and Aija (Neh. 11:31).

29-35. (Cf. Neh. 7:33-38: I Esdras 5:21-24.) From "men of" the formula changes to "sons of," as in vss. 3-20, indicating another source. Since the names from vs. 33 are indisputably geographical, it must be true of the whole list that "sons of" must mean "inhabitants of" (cf. Joel 3:6).

29. Most MSS of I Esdras 5:21 support Ezra in reading "sons of" rather than "men of." Nebai (Neh. 10:19) and Nob (Neh. 11:32; cf. Isa. 10:32) suggest a reading Nub or Nob for Nebo here (Meyer, op. cit., pp. 145, 149). It has nothing to do with Mount Nebo (Deut. 32:49) or Nebo of Trans-Jordan (Num. 32:3) but is probably Beit Nûbâ, north of Ajalon (Yâlô).

30. Magbish is omitted in Neh. 7:33-34, but appears as "Magpiash" in Neh. 10:20. Its location is uncertain but the name signifying "made massive" or "heaped up" suggests a place. Etymological difficulty prevents acceptance of C. R. Conder's identification with Khirbet Maḥbîyeh, about four miles northwest of Nebo (Nûbâ) (Map of Western Palestine [London: Ordnance Survey Office, 1880], Sheet XXI, sec. JV; cf. F. M. Abel, Géographie de la Palestine [Paris: J. Gabalda, 1958], II, 398, s.v. Nébo).

31. Other Elam contrasts with the Elam of vs. 7. Conder (loc. cit.) identifies this place with Beit 'Alam, about three and a half miles south of Khirbet Maḥbîyeh and somewhat west-southwest of Nûbâ. The total is the same as that in vs. 7, but Rudolph (op. cit., p. 9) rightly insists that such a coincidence does not justify the omission of vs. 31. The larger figure of 2,254 in the LXX of Ezra and Nehemiah, which apparently derives from an alternate Hebrew text, is preferable.

32. Conder (loc. cit.) identified Harim with Khirbet Hôrân, about one mile northwest of Khirbet Maḥbîyeh (cf. vs. 30).

These cities, far from Jerusalem, may have been added to Judah under Josiah in pre-exilic times (Alt, "Judas Gaue unter Josia," pp. 110-11), but in postexilic times they appear to have been in a neutral zone between the provinces of Ashdod and Samaria (Neh. 6:2; Alt, "Judas Nachbarn zur Zeit Nehemias," Palästinajahrbuch, XXVII [1931], 72, n. 5). Rudolph (op. cit., pp. 20-21) holds that this verse cannot refer to the time of Cyrus or Darius and must be a supplement from a later period.

34. Jericho lies at the ruins of Tell es-Sulta'n, about a mile and a half northwest of modern Jericho, at the eastern foot of the Judean hills. Formerly under control of the Northern Kingdom (cf. I Kings 16:34; II Kings 2:4 ff.), Jericho by late pre-exilic times came under the authority of Judah presumably during the reign of Josiah (Alt, "Judas Gaue unter Josia," p. 109), and it appears to be Judean in the time of Nehemiah (cf. Neh. 3:2).

35. Senaah was probably classical Magdalsenna ("Tower of Sen'a"), controlling the route from the Jordan Valley to Baal Hazor. Abel (op. cit., II, 455) identifies it with the ruin Sheikh Tarūnī near Khirbet el 'Auja el Fōqa, about eight miles northeast of Jericho.

b) Temple Ministrants (2:36-58 = Neh. 7:39-60; I Esdras 5:24-35)

After the laymen, the list includes those who ministered in the temple, presented by classes and assigned to clans according to ancestors as in vss. 3-20.

(1) Priests (2:36-39)

36-39. Very early the tribe of Levi became official priests; in the Deuteronomic Code the priests are called "the sons of Levi." In David's court his priest Abiathar (I Sam. 22:20; 23:6) served with Zadok (II Sam. 15:27, 36), who was not of the ancient priesthood and possibly not of Levitical lineage. With the banishment of Abiathar (I Kings 1:25, 42 ff.) his post was given to Zadok (I Kings 1:32 ff.), who dominated the Jerusalem temple priesthood. In the Ezekiel Code the priests are called "sons of Zadok." In the Holiness Code (Lev. 17-26) the priests are called "the sons of Aaron" (Lev. 21:1), a restriction perhaps due to the non-Zadokite priests whose legitimacy was denied by the Zadokite group. Thus in Neh. 10:38 the priests are "the sons of Aaron." But later tradition furnished a priestly genealogy for Zadok, appropriate to his eminent position, as a descendant of the eldest son of Aaron (I Chr. 24:3).

Only four clans of priests are listed in Ezra 2 but the number of individuals is proportionately very large (4,289), approximately one tenth of those returning. During the Exile the priests more than others must eagerly have awaited the opportunity to return to rebuild the temple and participate in its cultus. Each of the clans appears related to members of the priestly courses in David's temple, as recognized by the Chronicler. A Jedaiah (vs. 36) was the head of the second course of priests in David's temple (I Chr. 24:7). Jedaiah is identified as being of the house of Jeshua, presumably Jeshua the high priest (vs. 2). Such identification of the house of Jeshua, as of the clan of Jedaiah, must be a later insertion, made after the return of Jeshua and his
The Levites: the children of Jeshua and Kadmiel, of the children of Hodaviah, seventy and four.

The singers: the children of Asaph, a hundred twenty and eight.

The children of the porters: the children of Shallum, the children of Ater, the sons of Talmon, the sons of Jeshua, and the sons of Kadmiel, of the children of Hodaviah, seventy-four.

The Levites: the sons of Jeshua and Kadmiel, of the sons of Hodaviah, seventy-four.

The singers: the sons of Asaph, one hundred and twenty-eight.

The sons of the gatekeepers: the sons of Shallum, the sons of Ater, the sons of Talmon, the sons of Jeshua, and the sons of Kadmiel, of the children of Hodaviah, seventy-four.

Since Jeshua, but not Jedaiah, occurs in 10:18 ff., it appears that the Chronicler equated the names.

Immer (vs. 37) was in the sixteenth course of priests in David's temple (1 Chr. 24:14). Harim (vs. 39) was a priest in the third course (1 Chr. 24:8). Pashhur (vs. 38), who bears an Egyptian name like some other Levites, should belong to the early period. Since a priest Pashhur, the descendant of Malchijah, is mentioned in Neh. 11:12 (cf. I Chr. 9:12), it is possible that he is of the same clan, and that the distinguished remote ancestor Malchijah was the member of the fifth course of priests in David's organization (1 Chr. 24:9).

All Levites were originally regarded as priests, equal to the Zadokites (Deut. 18:6-8), but after the Deuteronomic reform in actual practice they were degraded to become the hereditary servants of the acting priests (Num. 3:9-10), compelled to contribute part of their tithe to the priests (Num. 18:21-29; Neh. 10:38). They acted as butchers of sacrifices, doorkeepers, singers (I Chr. 15:22), scribes, teachers (II Chr. 35:3; Neh. 8:7, 9), and even temple beggars (II Chr. 24:5 ff.). Such secularization greatly depleted the numbers willing to serve in the temple after 586 B.C., for many apparently entered secular employment. Thus very few (seventy-four) Levites are mentioned here, and Ezra found it difficult to get any Levites to return (8:18 ff.). If Neh. 3:17 ff. seems to imply any great number of Levites in Jerusalem, it was perhaps because many could have been recruited from those who had remained in secular service in Judea (Meyer, op. cit., pp. 176 ff.; Kittel, op. cit., III, 394, 404 ff.; Rudolph, op. cit., p. 22).

For Jeshua and Kadmiel read "Jeshua, namely of Kadmiel" with Neh. 7:43, for Jeshua was the great ancestor and the others named are but subdivisions of the clan. Instead of sons of (12) I Esdras 5:26 has the name "Bannas," but other Greek texts suggest either "Bani (12) or "Bunni" (12), as in vs. 10. Levites with both names occur in Neh. 9:4-5. The word of before the sons of must be omitted as due to dittography.

The singers, called "The holy singers" in I Esdras 5:27, were a single clan, the descendants of Asaph, one of three Levites whom David set over the song in the temple (I Chr. 15:16; cf. I Chr. 6:31-32, 39). Since only men served in the temple, the singers of vs. 65 were a different and secular group. Under Nehemiah they lived near Jerusalem (Neh. 12:29) and received regular support (Neh. 11:22 ff.) but when neglected, they, like the Levites, turned to secular work in the fields (Neh. 13:10).

The gatekeepers of the temple are not mentioned in extant pre-exilic literature, although Samuel apparently kept the door of a shrine (I Sam. 3:15). Postexilic gatekeepers did more than tend the door (I Chr. 9:17-32). They are sometimes regarded as Levites (I Chr. 9:26; II Chr. 8:14; 23:4; etc.; Neh. 12:25; 13:22) but sometimes are differentiated as here (II Chr. 35:15).

Shallum, Talmon, and Akkub appear in I Chr. 9:17 with Shallum as chief. A Shallum occurs as ancestor of a gatekeeper in the time of Jeremiah (Jer. 35:4). Talmon...

(5) TEMPLE SERVANTS (2:43-54)

The Nethinim are literally those “given” or “dedicated” as temple servants. The Chronicler reports that David and the princes dedicated them for the service of the Levites (8:20). Some were Hebrews (I Sam. 1:11, 24-28) but more frequently they were foreigners, captives of war, who became temple slaves (Num. 31:30, 47) and “hewers of wood and drawers of water” in the cult (Josh. 9:27). Such temple servants are strongly parallel to the Babylonian shirku'tu (R. P. Dougherty, The Shirku'tu of Babylonian Deities [New Haven: Yale University Press, 1925]). They dwelt in the “house of the Nethinim” (Neh. 3:81; cf. Babylonian Bit Shirki), supervised by overseers (Neh. 11:21; cf. Rab Shirki). When they married outside of their class, their offspring too were reckoned as temple servants (cf. Mishnah: Kiddushin III. 12; Yebamoth II. 4).

The names of the temple servants are significantly largely foreign. Two names are national rather than personal. Meunim (vs. 50) were the Arabs at Ma'an (I Chr. 4:39-41; II Chr. 26:7) and the Nephisim (vs. 50) are the Naphish Ishmaelites (Gen. 25:15; I Chr. 1:31; 5:19). Ziha (vs. 43) and Asnah (vs. 50) are Egyptian; Barkos (vs. 53) is Edomite; Rezin (vs. 48) is probably Aramaean (cf. Isa. 7:1 f.); and Sisera (vs. 53) is non-Semitic (cf. Judg. 4:1-5:31). Many names are such informal nicknames as might be given to servants. Hasupha (“Quick,” vs. 43), Gahar (“Humble,” vs. 47), and Neziah (“Faithful,” vs. 54) express approval, while Lebanon (“White,” vs. 45); Giddel (for “Gadhol,” “Big,” vs. 47), Nekoda (“Spotted” or “Frackled,” vs. 48), Paseah (“Lame,” vs. 49) Hakupha (“Stooped,” vs. 51), and Harsha (“Deaf” or “Dumb,” vs. 52) indicate physical condition. Hatipha (“Snatched,” vs. 54) and Mehida (for “Mehira,” “Bought,” vs. 52) indicate how the servants were acquired.

45-46. After Akkub I Esdras 5:30 and the LXX of Neh. 7:48 have additional names “Outa” and “Ketab” (cf. “Ketar” in LXX of Neh. 7:48), which are probably corruptions of names now lost in Hebrew lists. Read “Shalmai” for Shamlai, with Neh. 7:48 and Hebrew Qere in 2:46.

47. Vocalization in I Esdras 5:30 (Καθωος) suggests reading for Giddel the “Gadhol” (גָּדֹל) found often in the Aramaic papyri.
52 The children of Bazluth, the children of Mehida, the children of Harsha, 60 The children of Delaiah, the children of Tobiah, the children of Nekoda, six hundred fifty and two.

(6) DESCENDANTS OF SOLOMON'S SERVANTS (2:55-58)

55-58. A subdivision of the temple servants are the sons of Solomon's servants, who are included among the temple servants in Neh. 10:28 and in the total in vs. 58. Nothing certain is known of their history or function. They may be Canaanite prisoners of war, possibly Gibeonites (Josh. 9:27; I Kings 9:20-21; I Chr. 8:7-9; Rudolph, op. cit., p. 23), who became state slaves (Issac Mendelsohn, "State Slavery in Ancient Palestine," Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research, No. 85 [1942], pp. 16-17). Like the temple servants, their names are informal and descriptive: Peruda (or "Perida") in Neh. 7:57 is "Lonely" or "Solitary" (vs. 55); Hattil, "The Babbler" (vs. 57); and Darkon, "Rough" (vs. 56). Giddel (vs. 56) should be "Gadhol," as in vs. 47. Hassophereth (vs. 55) means "The Teacher" and Pochereth-hazzeba'im is "The Gazelle Hunter" (vs. 57; cf. Rudolph, op. cit., p. 14). Although a relatively large number of names of the temple servants are given, the group itself was quite small—three hundred and ninety-two—averaging about eight per family.

c) UNCERTIFIED CLANS (2:59-63=Neh. 7:61-65; I Esdras 5:36-40)

The Mishnah declares that Ezra did not rest until Babylonia was "sieved like fine meal" (Kiddushin IV. I. 69b, 71b; Yalkut II. 106-7), and that Ezra himself had his own line certified before he left Babylonia (Baba Bathra 15a). Pure-blooded Jews were called "fine meal" and the others were designated "mixed dough" (Hugo Graetz, "Illegitime Mischehen in Judäa," Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judenthums, XXVIII [1879], 481-508). It is usually assumed that such racial consciousness and striving for purity did not exist until the reforms of Ezra (9:1-10:44) and Nehemiah (13:23-30), but the great list implies the keeping of strict genealogical records during the Exile. There may have been little such concern in Palestine, but there was evidently such interest abroad, especially among such conservative folk, as contributed to the Return.
61 ¶ And of the children of the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai: which took a wife of the daughters of Barzillai the Gileadite, and was called after their name:

62 These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found: therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.

63 And the Tirshatha said unto them, that they should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim.

The six clans, three lay and three priestly, who remained uncertified were appended to the great list. These may have derived from proselytes or may have lacked proper credentials. Their seed (vs. 59) means their descent. They came from five Babylonian places not yet identified. Since the element Tel means a ruined mound of an earlier habitation (Josh. 8:28; Deut. 13:16; Jer. 49:2) at least two places were Jewish resettlements.

61. Omit the introductory the sons of with Neh. 7:63 and I Esdras 5:38. Habaiah is unique but its variant "Hobiah" may be related to the abbreviation "Hubbah" in I Chr. 7:34 (Qeré, Vulg.). Hakkoz ("The Thorn") also appears without the article as Koz (I Chr. 4:8; Neh. 3:4, 21). It is argued from Neh. 3:4, 21 that the clan was later reinstated. Possible relationship to the ancient nonpriestly Barzillai (II Sam. 17:27; 19:32-37; I Kings 2:7) doubtless brought into question the status of the priestly clan of Barzillai.

62. Their registration is, lit., "their writing," which is described as those that were reckoned by genealogy. This "writing" is a priestly list like the list of Levites in Neh. 12:22-23 and the much later list of priests mentioned by Josephus (Against Apion I. 7). It is preferable to read, "They sought in their writing," as in the Syriac. It is better to read, with Neh. 7:64, "They were not found," since the subject is the clan, not the writing in which the other priests (cf. vs. 39-42) were listed.

Uncertified laymen could doubtless remain in the community, possibly with some restrictions, until lineage could be established. But the priests posed a greater problem because of their prerogatives and the possibility of contaminating the cultus. To avoid defilement of holy things by uncertified priests those challenged were "desecrated from the priesthood." "Desecrated," a term in late Hebrew usage, is preferable to polluted.

63. The order restricting the uncertified priests was given by the Tirshatha, the Jewish authority in charge. Tirshatha is not the title governor but an Iranian epithet "The One to Be Feared," which could signify "His Excellency." Its use in Neh. 8:9; 10:1 for Nehemiah as governor is responsible for the intrusion of Nehemiah into I Esdras 5:40 alongside the epithet transliterated as "Atharias." The Syriac text of I Esdras has Nehemiah alone, but the Peshitta declares that "the heads of Israel" gave the order.

According to the M.T., the uncertified priests were forbidden to share in the most holy food, special portions reserved for male descendants of Aaron (Lev. 2:3; 7:31-33), but I Esdras 5:40 excluded them from "all holy things," the ordinary priestly food (Lev. 7:3-6; 10:14; 22:10, 13b). This is interpreted in the RSV as they were excluded from the priesthood (vs. 62). The exclusion was not intended to be permanent, but only until a divine decision could be made through the sacred lot, the Urim and Thummim (cf. I Sam. 14:41). Rabbinical tradition lists the sacred lot as among things lacking in the postexilic temple (Tosephta Sota XIII. 2; Yalkut II. 150. 568; Yoma 21b), and despite Josephus (Antiquities III. 8. 9), there is no evidence for sacred lot in the postexilic temple. The rabbis regarded the statement in vs. 63 as meaning "until the dead
The whole congregation together was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore, Besides their servants and their maids, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven: and there were among them two hundred singing men and singing women.

Their horses were seven hundred thirty and six; their mules, two hundred forty and five;

Their camels, four hundred thirty and five; their asses, six thousand seven hundred and twenty.

And some of the chief of the fathers, their heads together were thirty-seven thousand.

The whole assembly together was forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty, besides their menservants and maidservants, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred and thirty-seven; and they had two hundred male and female singers. Their horses were seven hundred and thirty-six, their mules were two hundred and forty-five, their camels were four hundred and thirty-five, and their asses were six thousand seven hundred and twenty.

Some of the heads of families, when are resurrected” or “until Elijah comes” (Tosephta Sota XIII. 1; Sota 48b; Ketuboth 24b; Shebuoth 16a; Jerusalem Kiddushim IV. 1; Tosaphoth Yoma 21b).

A priest would be appropriate in pre-exilic times when any Levite could use the lot (Deut. 33:8), but it was later restricted to the high priest (Exod. 28:30; Lev. 8:8; Num. 27:21; cf. “a priest” in Neh. 7:65). The “high priest” is specified in the Peshitta, Vulg., and I Esdras16-21. If the high priest is meant, it would indicate that none was yet recognized in the community and the date of the document must be before 520 B.C.

d) SUMMARIES (2:64-67= Neh. 7:66-69; I Esdras 5:41-43)

(1) CONGREGATION (2:64)

64. Together indicates that all of the lists were used in the total. As in 1:9-11, the figures do not agree in all versions and there is a discrepancy between the given grand total and that obtained by addition. By emendation (vss. 12, 16, 31) Bewer (Der Text des Buches Ezra, p. 33) derives a sum 32,360, ten thousand less than that in vs. 64.

65-67. It has been argued that the great list ended with the total in vs. 64, and that what follows has been added by the Chronicler (Hölscher, Esra und Nehemia, II, 504), but the arguments are not persuasive (cf. Rudolph, op. cit., pp. 7, 9-10). Besides indicates that what follows was not counted in the assembly. The servants or “slaves” were private property, as were the singers, whose secular role is seen by the inclusion of women who were not employed in the temple. Such singers, to be differentiated from those in vs. 41, entertained the wealthy and served as minstrels (II Sam. 19:35; II Chr. 35:25; Eccl. 2:8).

The animals (vss. 66-67) were needed for the caravan. Mules were sometimes used to carry burdens (II Kings 5:17; cf. Judith 2:17; 15:11) but were generally prized for riding (II Sam. 18:29; 18:9), while asses were used as pack animals (II Sam. 16:1), and I Esdras 5:43 here calls them “beasts of burden” (νηπηγγια). Read their asses with seven MSS, the LXX, Vulg., and Ethiopic versions and the other nouns in the verses.

(2) PRIVATE PROPERTY (2:65-67)

65-67. It has been argued that the great list ended with the total in vs. 64, and that what follows has been added by the Chronicler (Hölscher, Esra und Nehemia, II, 504), but the arguments are not persuasive (cf. Rudolph, op. cit., pp. 7, 9-10). Besides indicates that what follows was not counted in the assembly. The servants or “slaves” were private property, as were the singers, whose secular role is seen by the inclusion of women who were not employed in the temple. Such singers, to be differentiated from those in vs. 41, entertained the wealthy and served as minstrels (II Sam. 19:35; II Chr. 35:25; Eccl. 2:8).

The animals (vss. 66-67) were needed for the caravan. Mules were sometimes used to carry burdens (II Kings 5:17; cf. Judith 2:17; 15:11) but were generally prized for riding (II Sam. 18:29; 18:9), while asses were used as pack animals (II Sam. 16:1), and I Esdras 5:43 here calls them “beasts of burden” (νηπηγγια). Read their asses with seven MSS, the LXX, Vulg., and Ethiopic versions and the other nouns in the verses.

3. TEMPLE DONATIONS (2:68-70= Neh. 7:70-73; I Esdras 5:44-46)

68-70. Vss. 68-69 have been regarded as dislocated, originally following either 1:11 (Hölscher, loc. cit.) or 8:36 (C. C. Torrey, The Composition and Historical Value of when they came to the house of the Lord which is at Jerusalem, offered freely for the house of God to set it up in his place:

69 They gave after their ability unto the treasure of the work threescore and one thousand drams of gold, and five thousand pounds of silver, and one hundred priests' garments.

70 So the priests, and the Levites, and some of the people, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinim, dwelt in their cities, and all Israel in their cities.

3 And when the seventh month was come, and the children of Israel were in the cities, the people gathered themselves together as one man to Jerusalem.

II. BUILDING THE TEMPLE UNDER DARIUS (3:1–6:22)

A. RECONSTRUCTION OF THE ALTAR AND RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF SACRIFICES (3:1–6)

Throughout this narrative concerned with the cultus the Chronicler's interests and literary habits are observable. What, if any, sources were at his disposal cannot now be determined. It is probable that some sound tradition lay behind the story of the reconstruction of an early altar before the temple was rebuilt. It could exist without the temple and was greatly needed for the rehabilitation of the cult. David had an altar in Jerusalem before the construction of the temple (II Sam. 24:25) and sacrifices continued to be made there even after the temple was destroyed (Jer. 41:5; Hag. 2:14). Less plausible is the Chronicler's inference that the depleted and distressed community at once instituted a sacrificial system on the grand scale that the Chronicler himself knew.

I. ERECTION OF THE ALTAR (3:1–3 Esdras 5:47–50a)

3:1. Comparison of vs. 1 with I Esdras 5:47 and Neh. 7:73b shows that the material formed the conclusion of the document incorporated in Ezra 2:2–70. In Nehemiah it introduces the narrative of the reading of the law in the reign of Artaxerxes but here, as in I Esdras, it leads to the erection of an altar prior to the building of the temple in a much earlier period. Such differences in context have compelled some modification in content.

The seventh month would fit the context in Nehemiah, where the next previous date is the sixth month, when the walls were completed (Neh. 6:15; 7:1). But since the seventh month was a festal period when there would be great need for an altar, the palace will recognize at once. Idealize his history as the Chronicler may well have done, he is nevertheless frank enough to admit that some of the heads of families made freewill offerings for the house of God . . . according to their ability, but he also implies that some others gave only sparingly and under pressure, and that some did not give at all. So has it been with church building funds from that day to this.

An even more authentic touch of human nature, under the stress of one of the most poignant of human experiences, quickens into life for us
2 Then stood up Jeshua the son of Jo'zadak, and his brethren the priests, and Zerubb'babel the son of Sheal'tiel, and his brethren, and builded the altar of the God of Israel, to offer burnt offerings thereon, as it is written in the law of Moses the man of God.

3 And they set the altar upon his bases; for fear was upon them because of the people of those countries: and they offered

2 Then arose Jeshua the son of Jo'zadak, with his fellow priests, and Zerubb'babel the son of She-al'ti-el with his kinsmen, and they built the altar of the God of Israel, to offer burnt offerings upon it, as it is written in the law of Moses the man of God. 3 They set the altar in its place, for fear was upon them because of the peoples of the lands, time would also be appropriate for the Ezra narrative. Nevertheless, the taboos prevailing at the beginning of the seventh month (cf. vs. 6) raise some question as to the validity of the date for the Ezra narrative. The numerical reckoning of the seventh month, which was Ethanim in the pre-exilic Canaanite calendar (I Kings 8:2) and Tishri in the postexilic Babylonian one, reflects the postexilic change in calendar, when the Babylonian names (cf. 6:15; Neh. 1:1; 2:1; 6:15) had not yet come into general use (cf. Hag. 1:1, 15; etc.).

The year date is difficult to determine since there was none in the original document. The Chronicler apparently considered it to be during the first year of Cyrus (1:1) but Rudolph (op. cit., p. 29) contends that six months would be too short for the return and settlement, and suggests possibly the second or even third year of Cyrus as the actual date. Since Babylon fell in 539 B.C. and the gods were returned during the rest of that year (1:3), the actual interval of preparation and return may have been longer than six months. But it is obvious that the Chronicler identified Sheshbazzar with Zerubbabel and thinks of the days of Darius I as in I Esdras (cf. I Esdras 5:2, 6).

The assembly, according to Ezra, was held in Jerusalem, but Nehemiah, which reflects a much later date, located it in the plaza before “the Water Gate” (cf. Neh. 8:1) in restored Jerusalem, while I Esdras 5:47, influenced by I Esdras 9:38, placed it in the plaza before the temple porch. The latter would be appropriate only if it is understood as being before the temple ruins, since in I Esdras, as in Ezra, the temple is not yet rebuilt.

2. Jeshua and Zerubbabel (2:2) indicate the time of Darius rather than that of Cyrus (cf. Hag. 1:1–2:23 and Zech. 1:1–8:23). Elsewhere Zerubbabel, as secular ruler, is mentioned first (vs. 8; 2:2; 4:3; 5:2; Neh. 12:1) but Jeshua precedes him here where matters of cult are involved. Surprisingly, Jeshua’s title “high priest” is here omitted (cf. Neh. 12:10 ff.; Hag. 1:1, 14; 2:2). His brethren used of Jeshua means his fellow priests; used of Zerubbabel, it signifies not principally brothers but fellow laymen.

The altar was hastily constructed in less than a day (vs. 6) of field stones in accordance with the earliest prescriptions for altars in the law of Moses (Exod. 20:25; cf. Deut. 27:6). It was described by Hecataeus of Abdera (cf. Josephus Against Apion I. 22) and lasted down to Maccabean times (I Macc. 4:47, 54). Man of God is applied not only to Moses (cf. Deut. 33:1; Josh. 14:6; I Chr. 23:14; II Chr. 30:16) but also to Samuel (I Sam. 9:6), Elijah (I Kings 17:18), and Elisha (II Kings 4:7) as a prophetic title. It is used also of David (Neh. 12:24, 36) and of Timothy (I Tim. 6:11; II Tim. 3:17).

3a. The bases of the altar signify “foundation” rather than “site,” since the altar was erected on a platform or pavement (cf. Ezek. 43:13–14, 17). But Josephus, influenced by the Greek text, paraphrases, “He then built the altar on the same place it formerly had been built” (Josephus Antiquities XI. 4. 1).

Whatever may have been the chronological and ceremonial confusion that have been so carefully disentangled by the Exeg., every subsequent older generation knows only too well the nostalgia for “the days that are no more” * that still throbs with such moving paths within this brief account. burnt offerings thereon unto the Lord, even burnt offerings morning and evening.

4 They kept also the feast of tabernacles, as it is written, and offered the daily burnt offerings by number, according to the custom, as the duty of every day required;

5 And afterward offered the continual burnt offering, both of the new moons, and of all the set feasts of the Lord that were consecrated, and of every one that willingly offered a freewill offering unto the Lord.

A difficult and confused Hebrew text lies behind the translation for fear was upon them because of the peoples of the lands. It is best explained as an intrusive comment which may once have explained some such word as “adversaries” in 4:1. Rudolph (op. cit., p. 28) regards the gloss as relevant, indicating that the motive for restoring the cultus was to assure the help of God against their enemies. The people of those countries were the non-Jews sent in to repopulate the land (4:9-10) but the Chronicler would also include those Jews who had remained in the land and married Gentile women (cf. 6:21).

2. INSTITUTION OF PROGRAM OF OFFERINGS (3:3b-6=I Esdras 5:50b-53)

35-4. Burnt offerings in the earliest postexilic period would probably have followed the simple prescriptions of the Deuteronomic Code (Deut. 12:5-7, 13-14, 27), but the Chronicler doubtless regarded them as following the priestly practices of his own day (Num. 28:1-8; cf. Exod. 29:38-42). The sacrifices were prescribed as each day required (cf. Neh. 11:23). This is specified as being either according to custom (cf. I Sam. 27:11; Gen. 40:13) or according to the ordinance (Lev. 5:10; 9:16; Neh. 8:18), since the Hebrew word used (mishpāt) can mean either. The latter is perhaps intended (cf. Neh. 8:18) since the complete expression is frequently found in later legislation regarding the feast of booths (cf. Num. 29:18, 21, 24, 27, 30, 33).

The feast of tabernacles or booths, originally a Canaanite agricultural festival (Judg. 9:27), named for the temporary shelters of branches (cf. Neh. 8:15) erected in the fields for the harvest laborers (cf. Isa. 1:8; 4:6; Jonah 4:5) is the oldest festival in the Hebrew cultic calendar. Frequently called simply “the feast” or “the feast of the Lord,” it is the only one mentioned in the historical literature (Judg. 9:27; I Sam. 1:1 ff.; I Kings 12:32). Originally a joyous harvest celebration at the close of the year (Exod. 34:22; 23:16; Deut. 16:13-16), in the later Priestly Code it lost its joyful character, and beginning on the fifteenth day of the seventh month (Lev. 23:33-36, 39-43; Num. 29:12-40) it lasted eight days.

5-6. The Chronicler’s hand is most apparent here where he assumes that from its completion the altar was as busy with offerings as it was later in his own day. The offerings are listed as in the priestly legislation (Num. 28–29). The continual burnt offering was that repeated with regularity morning and evening (vs. 5). The pre-exilic burnt offering was made each morning and a meal offering was made each evening (I Kings 18:29-30; II Kings 16:15), but later priestly legislation called for two burnt offerings, morning and evening, each accompanied by a subordinate meal offering (Num. 28:3-8). The latter, which prevailed in the Chronicler’s day (cf. I Chr. 16:40; II Chr.

who knew nothing beyond or before the comparative drabness and smallness of the new. The old men who had seen the first house, wept with a loud voice when they saw the foundation of this house being laid, though many shouted aloud for joy; so that the people could not distinguish the sound of the joyful shout from the sound of the people’s weeping (vss. 12-13).

That same strange mingling of the diverse emotions of age and youth over the same situation can still be heard by sensitive ears at 6 From the first day of the seventh month began they to offer burnt offerings unto the Lord. But the foundation of the temple of the Lord was not yet laid.

7 They gave money also unto the masons, and to the carpenters; and meat, and drink, 18:11; 31:3) is here clumsily transported back to the simple ritual of the early postexilic period. Such a burnt offering is later called simply the “continual” (Dan. 11:31).

With the new moon a new month began and it was the sign of a period of danger and taboo, when labor had to cease and sacrifices had to be made. Important sacrifices were held by clans (I Sam. 20:6) and in court (I Sam. 20:5) at that time. Pre-exilic prophets condemned new moon celebrations (Isa. 1:14; Hos. 2:11) apparently because of association with Canaanite rites. Although there is abundant evidence for observance of new moons in the early cultus, there is no pre-exilic legislation regarding it. Later legislation is found in Num. 28:11-15. The new moon, superseded by the sabbath, continued down into late times (Judith 8:6; Col. 2:16). Reference to the sabbath, frequently associated with the continual sacrifices (Num. 28:9 ff.; II Chr. 2:24; 8:13; Neh. 10:33) and new moons (Amos 8:5), is missing here in Ezra but is found in I Esd. 5:52, where it may be original.

The set feasts were the appointed feasts recurring yearly at fixed times (cf. Gen. 1:14). Those meant here are doubtless those of the later priestly calendar (Lev. 23:1-44), the Passover, the feast of Weeks, New Year, the day of Atonement, and the feast of Booths. A freewill offering was a sacrifice made usually in thanksgiving and was not mandatory by law or because of a vow (cf. 1:4; Deut. 12:17; Lev. 22:17 ff.; Num. 15:1 ff.). No such offerings are mentioned in I Esd. 5:53 but instead sacrifices due to vows, presumably those made for the safe journey from Babylonia. These are linked to the following verse: “And all they that made any vow to God began to offer sacrifices to God from the new moon of the seventh month.” Some have preferred this version (Gustav Jahn, Die Bücher Esra [A und B] und Nehemja [Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1909], p. 30), and Batten (Ezra and Nehemiah, p. 111) has regarded the Hebrew of Ezra as ungrammatical, since the reference to freewill offerings dangles awkwardly, but as Bewer insists (Der Text des Buches Ezra, p. 40), the reference goes back to they offered burnt offerings in vs. 3b. The M.T., grammatically correct, seems distinctly preferable. The Chronicler may have thought of the offerings brought from Babylonia to the temple (1:4).

The first day of the seventh month was a most holy time during which later legislation decreed that no servile work was to be done (Lev. 23:23-25; Num. 29:1). If such prohibition also existed earlier, it would be extremely unlikely that the labor here described took place on that day. But the foundation of the temple of the Lord was not yet laid interprets a Hebrew text which is, lit., “But the temple of the Lord was not restored.” Thus there need be no direct reference to a foundation.

B. Work on the Temple (3:7–6:22)

1. Work Begins (3:7-13)

The conclusion of vs. 6 leads to preparation for the rebuilding of the temple. It is evident that the narrative here has been influenced by the Chronicler’s account of the building of Solomon’s temple (II Chr. 2; cf. I Kings 5). Such literary dependence need not indicate unhistorical character since the process of building a temple at Jerusalem would necessarily involve the same problems and procedures in every age (cf. Rudolph, op. cit., p. 31).

a) Supplies and Labor (3:7–9 = I Esd. 5:54–58)

7. Coined money was known in the Persian period but was not common until later. Precious metals were still weighed out. Solomon’s “hire” was paid in commodities (I Kings and oil, unto them of Zidon, and to them of Tyre, to bring cedar trees from Lebanon to the sea of Joppa, according to the grant that they had of Cyrus king of Persia.

8 Now in the second year of their coming unto the house of God at Jerusalem, in the second month, began Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and the remnant of their brethren Sido'nians and the Tyrians to bring cedar trees from Lebanon to the sea, to Joppa, according to the grant which they had from Cyrus king of Persia.

5:6, 11), and references here to food, drink, and oil indicate that such was still the basic medium of payment. The masons were miners who quarried the stone (cf. I Kings 5:15; Isa. 5:2; 22:16). Carpenters were “engravers” who worked in many mediums. Batten (op. cit., p. 119) plausibly suggests that they dressed and carved the temple stones, but the term also described wood carvers and those who chased metals.

Zidon and Tyre were famous in antiquity for their trade (Ezek. 27), especially for cedar trees from Lebanon brought from the mountains nearby. Because the cedars furnished the long, massive, tough beams essential for the construction of such large structures as palaces and temples, the forests of Lebanon supplied all the kingdoms of the Near East. As Solomon (I Kings 5:6-10) and Nehemiah (Neh. 2:8) needed cedars for their building, so new cedars would be necessary for rebuilding the burned temple (II Kings 25:8-9). No royal grant of timber is mentioned in the Cyrus edict (Ezra 1:24; 6:3-5), and the parallel passage in I Esdras 4:48, which refers to such a grant but assigns the act to Darius, is probably based on Ezra 3:7, with some influence possibly from Neh. 2:8. Josephus here (Antiquities XI. 4. 1), influenced by I Esdras, describes a shipment of logs in the days of Darius, which he claims was ordered by Cyrus.

8. From 4:24; 5:16 it would appear that the second year refers to the first attempts at reconstruction of the temple in the reign of Cyrus. But in blundering fashion the Chronicler introduces Zerubbabel and Jeshua of the time of Darius I (521-485 B.C.). For him Zerubbabel was Sheshbazzar. Both I Esdras and Josephus place the events during the reign of Darius I. Work on the temple began on the twenty-fourth day of the sixth month of the second year of Darius (Sept. 21, 520 B.C.) according to Hag. 1:15. Although the Chronicler finds it impossible to do so, historically an abortive attempt at rebuilding by Sheshbazzar in the time of Cyrus must be kept separate from the successful one by Zerubbabel during the reign of Darius. Influence of the Chronicler’s narrative of the building of Solomon’s temple (II Chr. 3:2) may be seen in the statement that work began in the second month (Iyar, i.e., May). But it is plausible that the work should have started then, when the rainy season had ended and the harvest was gathered (Kittel, Geschichte des Volkes Israel, III, 428-29; Rudolph, loc. cit.). Began dangles incompletely in the Hebrew text, without specifying the action begun. Made a beginning does not reflect the awkwardness of the original. The Chronicler’s sentence might well be completed, as in I Esdras 5:57, by supplying “And they laid the foundation of the house of God.”

The subject of began is extremely long and complex. It suggests that in Hag. 1:12, 14, but there Haggai is silent regarding the priests and Levites in whom the Chronicler is much interested. To Haggai, who never mentions Babylonian Jews, the remnant means almost any wedding. It is even more evident through periods of rapid and far-reaching change in the life of a community, a nation, or a generation. It recurs likewise in the experience of almost every church, especially in changing city or suburban or rural neighborhoods, when a strategic site has to be given up, or a beloved building torn down, or a traditional program radically modified. The older members weep nostalgic tears as they look back to the way things were when they were young; but their eventual successors, with no such memories of “the good old days,” look forward in hope and faith, and are in a mood to celebrate. the priests and the Levites, and all they that were come out of the captivity unto Jerusalem: and appointed the Levites, from twenty years old and upward, to set forward the work of the house of the Lord.

9 Then stood Jeshua with his sons and his brethren, Kadmiel and his sons, the sons of Judah, together, to set forward the workmen in the house of God: the sons of Henadad, with their sons and their brethren the Levites.

10 And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the Lord, they set the priests in their apparel with trumpets, and the Levites the sons of Asaph with cymbals, to praise the Lord, after the ordinance of David king of Israel.

11 And they sang together course in praising and giving thanks unto the Lord; because he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever toward Israel. And all the people brethren, the priests and the Levites and all who had come to Jerusalem from the captivity. They appointed the Levites, from twenty years old and upward, to have the oversight of the work of the house of the Lord. 9 And Jeshua with his sons and his kinsmen, and Kad'mi-el and his sons, the sons of Judah, together took the oversight of the workmen in the house of God, along with the sons of Hen'adad and the Levites, their sons and kinsmen.

10 And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the Lord, the priests in their vestments came forward with trumpets, and the Levites, the sons of Asaph, with cymbals, to praise the Lord, according to the directions of David king of Israel: 11 and they sang responsively, praising and giving thanks to the Lord, "For he is good, for his steadfast love endures for ever toward Israel.”

those who had not been exiled, while the Chronicler applies the term to the returned exiles alone. The Levites (cf. 2:40) were assigned to have the oversight of the work (cf. Neh. 11:16). The Hebrew word used means “to be pre-eminent,” and used by the Chronicler it has the sense “to oversee” or “to superintend.” The twenty years minimum age for Levites contrasts with the twenty-five (Num. 8:24) and thirty (Num. 4:3) years of the priestly legislation. Harmonizers have suggested that the difference was due to the scarcity of Levites at the time when many were needed, or that the younger men would be needed for the work of heavy transport. It is questionable whether the Levites were used to any great extent for actual manual labor (cf. vs. 9). More likely the difference in age reflects the practice of the Chronicler’s own time (cf. I Chr. 23:24-27; II Chr. 31:17), before changing social and economic conditions compelled a change in age.

9. The names must be emended as in the RSV, in accordance with the Greek texts, to include “Binnui” (בִּניֵו), whose name has been translated as his sons (יְהוֹדָבֶיא, and “Hodaviah” (יוֹדָבְיָא), “Hodevah,” in Neh. 7:43), which has been corrupted to the graphically similar Judah (יוֹדָבְיָא). But a Judah does appear elsewhere as the head of a family of Levites (Neh. 12:8). Henadad does not appear in 2:40, but is mentioned in Neh. 3:18, 24; 10:9, and may have been introduced here secondarily from Nehemiah. It is separated from the other names by text in the M.T. but is joined with them in I Esdras 5:58. Meyer (Entstehung des Judenthums, p. 177) believed the name to be missing in 2:40 because the family had not gone into captivity but had remained in Palestine. Stood . . . together means were mutually responsible. To set forward (cf. vs. 8) is properly rendered in I Esdras by “to serve as taskmasters” (ἐργοδικῶν). While some MSS read “the doing of the work” instead of the workmen, it is better to read with the M.T. “the doing of the work.” Here “work” is the task of rebuilding (cf. Hag. 1:14) and must not be restricted simply to “worship” as Meyer inclines to suggest (ibid., p. 195).

b) Subfoundation Laid and Dedicated (3:10-11=I Esdras 5:59-62)

10-11. The celebration occurred before the temple was completed (4:1-3) but there is no specific reference to a foundation in the verse (cf. vs. 6). For they set read with thirteen MSS, the LXX, and I Esdras, “they stood,” which the RSV interprets shouted with a great shout, when they praised the LORD, because the foundation of the house of the LORD was laid.

12 But many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men, that had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice; and many shouted aloud for joy:

13 So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping of the people: for the people shouted with a loud shout, and the noise was heard afar off.

And all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the LORD, because the foundation of the house of the LORD was laid. 12 But many of the priests and Levites and heads of fathers' houses, old men who had seen the first house, wept with a loud voice when they saw the foundation of this house being laid, though many shouted aloud for joy; 13 so that the people could not distinguish the sound of the joyful shout from the sound of the people's weeping, for the people shouted with a great shout, and the sound was heard afar.

came forward. The Hebrew "dressed" is interpreted as in their apparel and in I Esdras "clad in vestments" (ἐστολισμένοι). Josephus expands this to "adorned with their customary garments." It is possible that a word, perhaps "in fine linen" (πύρρο), has dropped from the text. The trumpets were the long tubelike clarions with flaring bell such as are portrayed among the plunder of the temple on the Arch of Titus at Rome. They were the priests' instruments (cf. Num. 10:8), used on ceremonial occasions (cf. I Chr. 16:6). The Levites played cymbals (cf. II Sam. 6:5; I Chr. 15:19). The Levitical musicians were the sons of Asaph (2:41). David was the one who ordered the Levites to be musicians, according to the Chronicler (II Chr. 29:25-26). The Hebrew "they answered" is properly interpreted as they sang responsively. Josephus and I Esdras 5:61 indicate that hymns were sung; the line of song quoted here (found also in Ps. 106:1; 136:1; cf. Jer. 33:10 ff.), was a favorite of the Chronicler (cf. I Chr. 16:34; II Chr. 5:13; 7:3). Toward Israel was added early by someone who did not recognize the quotation.

12-13. Popular reaction to the building (3:12-13=I Esdras 5:63-65)

12-13. Popular reaction to the temple must be understood in the light of Hag. 2:1-4, in which the prophet encourages the people who were disappointed with the appearance of the structure. Any old men who had seen the first temple would have been greatly in the minority in the crowd in 520 B.C., since that temple had been destroyed sixty-six years before.

Part of vs. 12 is in Hebrew quite rough and grammatically impossible, reading, lit., "... the old man who had seen the first house in its establishment, this the house, with their eyes..." The expression "this the house" may be a correct gloss to the pronoun its (Rudolph, op. cit., p. 30); or the pronoun א, this, may be a fragment of an original verboled, "despised," in a parenthetical comment explaining the weeping on such an occasion: "... at the time of its rebuilding the house was despised in their eyes" (Arnold B. Ehrlich, Randglossen zur hebräischen Bibel [Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1914], VII, 168; Bewer, op. cit., pp. 45-46). This conforms to the sense of Hag. 2:3. According to I Esdras 5:65, "The people did not hear the trumpets because of the weeping of the people," a view reflected by the Peshitta. But the Chronicler believed that the complaints of the weepers were concealed by the loud shouts of the others who outnumbered them. Josephus explains: "But the people in general were content with their present condition, and because they were allowed to build themselves a temple they desired no more, and neither considered nor remembered nor tormented themselves at all with the comparison of that one and the former temple, as though this were below their expectations" (Antiquities XI. 4. 2).

The intrusion of several words in vs. 13 obscures the meaning. Of three occurrences of the people only the last seems original. The first instance is lacking in the Vulg. and the second, which may be a ditto graph, is missing in the LXX. Ehrlich's emendations,

Now when the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin heard that the returned exiles were building a temple to the Lord, the God of Israel:

further improve the text, reading discern as singular and inserting the preposition "of" before the first occurrence of sound. As emended, vs. 13 should read: "And there was not a discerning of the sound of the shout of joy from the sound of weeping, for the people were shouting a great shout."

2. The Samaritan Conflict (4:1–6:22)

In ch. 4 the Chronicler explains why the temple, begun during Cyrus' reign (539-530 B.C.), was not finished until the time of Darius I (521-486 B.C.). Ignoring economic reasons (Hag. 1:9) and Jewish reluctance to undertake the task (Hag. 1:2), he suggests that the delay was due to persecution by the neighbors of the Jews, whose offer of co-operation was rejected (4:1-5). He illustrates such persecution by offering excerpts from an Aramaic source (cf. Intro., p. 557) which showed that in all periods, through correspondence with the Persian court, the enemies of the Jews tried to stop the reconstruction of Jerusalem and succeeded temporarily (4:6-24).

Through his usual confusion of Zerubbabel with Sheshbazzar, the Chronicler transports events of the time of Darius I back to that of Cyrus. Thus he is enabled to expound his views that the returned exiles began work on the temple at once, and that from the beginning the Jews rejected the contamination of associating with foreigners, no matter what religion they professed. While the actual date of the first open break between the returned Jews and their neighbors cannot yet be determined, tension between them must have increased from the very start on economic and political as well as religious grounds. As J. W. Rothstein's correct interpretation of Hag. 2:14b shows, already by the time of Haggai "the people of the land" were regarded as "unclean" (Juden und Samaritaner [Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1908; "Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten Testament"], pp. 31-41).

a) Offer of Assistance (4:1-2 = I Esdras 5:66-69)

4:1. The adversaries, now identified in vs. 2, 9-10, may once have been explained here rightly by the migrant gloss "the peoples of the lands," now in 3:3. They appear to be the folk of mixed blood inhabiting the province of Samaria, where the Hebrews of the Northern Kingdom had dwelt. Although tradition associates Benjamin with the northern tribes at their secession (I Kings 11:32, 36; 12:17, 20; Hos. 5:8), ultimately it was linked with Judah (cf. Jer. 33:12-13), where it is regularly associated in postexilic sources (cf. 2:20-34; 1 Chr. 7-8; 9:7-9; 12:2-7; Neh. 11:7 ff.). The Lord represents the proper name of the Jewish God which was probably pronounced "Yahweh."

4:1-24. Sectarianism and Racialism.—Whatever the chronological confusions, and the variety of sources both Hebrew and Aramaic that have been interwoven into this puzzling chapter, as these have been so strangely mingled by the Chronicler and so patiently disentangled by present-day scholarship, there is one aspect of this chapter which modern eyes, in the light of subsequent history, must note with sadness of heart. The offer of cooperation by the Samaritans, with its reminder of a common heritage in faith and worship: Let us build with you; for we worship your God as you do (vs. 25)—is curtly rebuffed by the exclusiveness characteristic of sectarianism in every age, and of racialism in every land: You have nothing to do with us in building a house to our God (vs. 3). This refusal of the returned exiles in Jerusalem to allow their Samaritan coreligionists any share in the worship of the rebuilt temple, a refusal which according to Josephus actually dated from the end of the Persian period, is here projected back by the Chronicler to this first attempt to rebuild the temple—in the face of his own admission in II Chr. 34:9 that money had earlier been sent from Samaria for the repair of the temple under Josiah. The Chronicler is of course in entire sympathy with the stress of 2 Then they came to Zerubbabel, and to the chief of the fathers, and said unto them, Let us build with you: for we seek your God, as ye do; and we do sacrifice unto him since the days of Esar-haddon king of Assyr, which brought us up hither.

3 But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua, and the rest of the chief of the fathers of Israel, said unto them, Ye have nothing to do with us God of Israel, 2 they approached Zerub’-babel and the heads of fathers’ houses and said to them, “Let us build with you; for we worship your God as you do, and we have been sacrificing to him ever since the days of E’sar-had’don king of Assyria who brought us here.” 3 But Zerub’babel, Jeshua, and the rest of the heads of fathers’ houses in Israel said to them, “You have

2. As I Esdras 5:68 shows (cf. Ezra 4:3), “and to Jeshua,” now lost from the M.T., should be added after Zerubbabel. We seek your God (cf. 6:21) reflects the tradition in II Kings 17:25-28, 32 (cf. Josephus Antiquities IX. 9. 3). According to II Chr. 34:9, money was sent from Samaria for the temple in the time of King Josiah. Later the sons of the governor of Samaria (cf. Neh. 2:9-10) bore the good Jewish names Delaiah and Shelemiah; the Jews in Egypt, when their temple was destroyed, appealed to the Samaritans for aid in 408 B.C. (Cowley, Aramaic Papyri, pp. 108-21); and the relative of a Jewish high priest married the daughter of the governor of Samaria (Neh. 13:28). They accepted the Jewish Pentateuch as their sacred scripture. Thus, essentially Jewish in religion, the Samaritans felt they had a common interest with the Jews in their cult and made an apparently sincere offer of co-operation. Josephus claims that they were permitted to worship at the temple after its completion (Antiquities XI. 4. 3; XVIII. 2. 2).

Some have seen a political motive in the Samaritan offer. The Samaritans under the Assyrians and Neo-Babylonians had prestige as the ruling group in the province until the Persian rule began. Jewish newcomers from the East, who had the consent and support of the Persian court and could thus form a new and powerful upper class in the region, were menacing the established position of the Samaritans. By joining the new Jewish group in their venture the Samaritans may have sought identification with them and thus a salvaging of something of their political position (Rudolph, op. cit., pp. 33-34).

Reference to Assyrian King Esar-haddon (680-669 B.C.) shows that the adversaries were not those settled in Samaria after its conquest by Sargon in 721 B.C. (II Kings 17:24 ff.) but a group exiled there later. Esar-haddon’s annals indicate that the Syrian coast was subdued and organized as an Assyrian province from which Syrians were exiled and to which Eastern folk were sent for settlement in 677-676 B.C. (D. D. Luckenbill, Ancient Records of Assyria and Babylonia [Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1926-27], II, 211-12, sec. 527; A. T. Olmstead, History of Assyria [New York: Charles Scribner’s Sons, 1923], pp. 374-75). The neighboring province of Samaria may then have received the Easterners mentioned in vs. 2. It has also been suggested that the settlement was made in connection with the fall of Tyre and Esar-haddon’s Egyptian campaign of 671 B.C. (Rudolph, op. cit., p. 33).

b) Rejection of Assistance (4:3—I Esdras 5:70-71)

3. The Jewish rejection was, lit., “It is not for you and for us,” which is properly interpreted as You have nothing to do with us or, in the Amer. Trans., “You have nothing in common with us.” We ourselves together signifies the Jews banded together against both Ezra and Nehemiah on racial purity as a prerequisite for any sharing in the worship of the God of their fathers. But as Julius A. Bewer points out in his discussion of the book of Ruth, the “broader sympathies” and “larger-hearted view” so memorably set forth in that exquisite little idyl did not prevail against the “nativists, led by Nehemiah and Ezra.”

In the light of the tragic story of anti-Semitism down the centuries, of its cruel climax in mid-twentieth century Germany, and of its ominous echoes in other countries, one can only speculate as to how different the course of history to build a house unto our God: but we ourselves together will build unto the Lord God of Israel, as king Cyrus the king of Persia hath commanded us.

4 Then the people of the land weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and troubled them in building.

5 And hired counselors against them, to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus king of Persia, even until the reign of Darius king of Persia.

the Samaritans. We alone follows the Vulg. and I Esdras, but such a meaning for the M.T. is not otherwise supported in Hebrew.

Cyrus . . . commanded us appeals to the royal edict (1:2-3; 5:13, 15; 6:1-4) to exclude Samaritans, taking advantage of a technicality to exclude undesirables. The Chronicler believed that none but returned Jewish exiles built the temple. Jewish reluctance to co-operate may have been due historically to the fact that the Samaritans were not pure monotheists but had merely added the Jewish God, as the god of the land, to their regular pantheon (II Kings 17:29-34a; cf. ibid.).

c) Plots and Frustrations (4:4-5=I Esdras 7:72-73)

From an Aramaic document at his disposal (cf. Intro., pp. 557-58) the Chronicler presented evidence of the scheming antipathy of the adversaries who sought royal support in preventing Jewish reconstruction. Only part of the material refers to the temple, and that from the time of Darius (5:1-6:15). None was available from the periods of Cyrus and Cambyses to explain the stoppage to which the Chronicler's verse (4:24) would intend the opposition to refer. Apparently because the Chronicler desired to lead directly from the completion of the temple (5:15) to reinstitution of cultic services as a preliminary to the story of Ezra (7:1-10:44), he shifted the later material of 4:6-23, which would have interrupted his narrative, from after 5:1-6:18 to its present location. He was more concerned with the religious history than with accurate chronology. Evidently for him the data from the reigns of Xerxes and Artaxerxes amply illustrated the type of opposition which he believed also marked the period prior to Darius. With the shift the statement in 4:6 was translated from Aramaic to Hebrew and the reference to the letter in vs. 7 was but partially so translated.

4. Weakened the hands (cf. Neh. 6:9), lit., "relaxing the hands," an old Hebrew idiom (cf. II Sam. 4:1; Isa. 13:7; Jer. 6:24; 50:48; etc.), means to cause someone to lose heart and be discouraged to the point of inefficiency and even of inability to work. It is now found in a Hebrew ostracon from Lachish, referring to a prophet accused of lowering the morale of the country in a critical moment (Harry Torczyner, et al., The Lachish Letters [London: Oxford University Press, 1938], pp. 104-5, 117, No. VI, 1. 6).

The hired counselors could have been Jewish traitors (cf. Neh. 6:12-13) or, since the term is used of royal advisers (7:28), bribed Persian officials. The accusations are general, presumably because specific data were lacking for the early Persian period. The Chronicler records a persistent tradition of the beginning of the temple by Sheshbazzar during the reign of Cyrus, but he could supply no details. It was common knowl-sown in Palestine 2,400 years ago. The Chronicler is at least explicit in his summary of the bitter harvest: Then the people of the land discouraged the people of Judah, and made them afraid to build, and hired counselors against them to frustrate their purpose...

6 And in the reign of Ahasuerus, in the beginning of his reign, wrote they unto him an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.

7 And in the days of Artaxerxes wrote Bishlam, Mithredath, Tabeel, and the rest of their companions, unto Artaxerxes king of Persia; and the writing of the letter was written in the Syrian tongue, and interpreted in the Syrian tongue.

edge, from the work of Haggai and Zechariah, that the temple was actually constructed by Zerubbabel and Jeshua in the time of Darius. The Chronicler harmonizes his traditions in part by identifying the leaders of the two periods and in part by the contradictory hypothesis of a compulsory work stoppage between the reigns.

d) Reigns of Xerxes and Artaxerxes (4:6-24)

(1) Complaints Made to Xerxes and Artaxerxes (4:6-16 = I Esdras 2:16-24)

6. As indicated above, Ahasuerus here is anachronistic if it refers to Xerxes. Both I Esdras and Josephus omit this verse. Ahasuerus (cf. Esth. 10:1; Dan. 9:1) is a corrupt form of a Persian name. It has been called a corruption of Cyaxares, confused with the name Xerxes. This has been taken as evidence that the Chronicler shared the later Jewish concept of Persian chronology which, faulty and unhistorical, recognized Cyaxares (II), a fictitious Median king reputed to be the son of "Darius the Mede" (Dan. 5:31) and the successor of Cyrus (C. C. Torrey, "Medes and Persians," Journal of the American Oriental Society, LXVI [1946], 3, 6-9). This ingenious interpretation would explain the unusual order of kings in vss. 6 ff. but it is not persuasive. More likely is the usual identification with Xerxes (486-465 B.C.). In explaining the unhistorical sequence of kings, Xerxes and Artaxerxes have been regarded as being used as typical Persian names (Alfred Bertholet, Die Bücher Esra und Nehemia [Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1902; "Kurzer Hand-Commentar zum Alten Testament"], p. 13). We probably have here a genuine reference to King Xerxes which has been drawn from its proper chronological position in the original Aramaic document (see ibid. and Rudolph, op. cit., pp. 35, 37, 41).

The accusation is not explicit. Presumably the Chronicler (or the author of the Aramaic source) did not regard it as being as important or as relevant as those letters given in full. Lack of detailed knowledge of events in Palestine during the time of Xerxes makes it impossible to recover the substance of the letter or its occasion. The beginning of his reign means Xerxes' accession year, when he ascended the throne (December, 486 B.C.) to fill out the last year of his predecessor before beginning his own first year on April 6, 485 B.C. A papyrus describes such a year as "the beginning of the reign, when ... the king sat upon his throne" (Cowley, op. cit., p. 16, No. 6, II. 1-2).

7. Like vs. 6, the letters to Artaxerxes I (464-423 B.C.) are out of chronological order. The two Artaxerxes letters are combined in I Esdras 2:16 by listing together all the senders. Josephus (Antiquities XI. 2. 1) corrects the chronology of both the M.T. and I Esdras by making Cambyses (530-522 B.C.) the recipient of the letter. Heprefaces the document with a statement that during the reign of Cyrus the satraps were bribed to oppose Jewish reconstruction without the knowledge of Cyrus, who was preoccupied with war elsewhere. Thus he does what the Chronicler leads one to expect by his vs. 24. But he does so only by mentioning the reconstruction of the temple which he already found in I Esdras 2:18, 20, although it is not in any of the Artaxerxes correspondence in the M.T. which should postdate the completion of the temple (but cf. 6:14).

The senders of the first letter (vs. 7) were the Persian Mithredath (Old Persian Mithradates; cf. 1:8) and the Aramaean Tabe-el (like Hebrew Tobiah), about whom nothing more definite is known. It has been conjectured that Tabe-el was a Jew, sympathetic toward rebuilding Jerusalem, who wrote the Aramaic document (cf. Intro., pp. 557-58) to Mithredath (cf. LXXB) for transmission to the king (H. H. Schaeder, Iranische Beiträge I [Halle: M. Niemeyer, 1930], pp. 16-17). The M.T., however, only permits both men to share in sending the letter. Despite I Esdras 2:16, Bishlam is not a proper name but the Aramaic for "in peace." It could be part of a salutation in a letter (cf. vs. 17: 5:7), but the verse is not an introduction in form, and the word order would be unusual for a salutation. Rudolph (op. cit., p. 34) therefore suggests reading בִּשְׁלָם, therefore suggests reading בִּשְׁלָם, Bishlam.

Although vs. 7 is in Hebrew, its original Aramaic is still evident in the spelling of unto and in the use of loan words for companions (vss. 9, 17, 23; 5:3, 6; 6:6, 13) and letter (vss. 18, 23; 5:5). Writing, too, is an Aramaic word, a gloss to explain the Persian loan word for letter. Written could refer to the use of square script or to the use of the Aramaic language. In the Syrian tongue is, lit., in Aramaic the language which was the lingua franca of the Persian Empire (R. A. Bowman, "Aramaeans, Aramaic, and the Bible," Journal of Near Eastern Studies, VII [1948], 65-90). The last occurrence of in the Syrian tongue, not found in the LXX, is probably an addition, inserted as in Dan. 2:4 to indicate transition to the Aramaic language which follows (4:8-6:18).

8-16. The second Artaxerxes letter is given in full. Within vss. 8-11a are several introductions to the letter, each differing in the identification of the senders. Vss. 9-10, which interrupt the narrative, are an interpolated explanatory comment identifying the companions of the senders (cf. Torrey, Ezra Studies, p. 178). Schaeder (Iranische Beiträge I, p. 22) assumes that the long list of vss. 9-10 originally followed vs. 11b, but that the Chronicler first omitted them and later put them back in the margin whence they migrated to the present position after vs. 8, where they are relevant. As the letter actually begins in vs. 11b, the senders are now grouped anonymously under a general title. Josephus makes Cambyses the recipient of the letter (cf. vs. 7) instead of Artaxerxes.

Each section of the complex (vss. 8-11a) concludes with a peculiar expression, lit., and thus (vs. 8) or and now (vss. 10, 11), usually incorrectly translated in this sort, as follows, or "at such a time" (vs. 11). Such an expression regularly in the Aramaic papyri marks the division between the salutation and the body of the letter (Cowley, op. cit., No. 17, 1. 2; No. 21, 1. 3; No. 26, 1. 1; No. 37, 1. 2; etc.).

8. Rehum ("Merciful") abbreviates such an Akkadian name as mRahim-ill or mRahim-sharri. His title was "Holder of a (royal) decree," the Aramaic equivalent of rigid racialism that speaks out so positively, not only in vs. 3b. We alone will build to the Lord, the God of Israel, but likewise throughout both Ezra and Nehemiah? Would Judaism, the law and the prophets alike, have survived amid the rising flood of Hellenistic syncretism through 9 Then wrote Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe, and the rest of their companions; the Dinaites, the Apar-sathchites, the Tarpelites, the Apharsites, the Archevites, the Babylonians, the Susancchites, the Behavites, and the Elamites.

Persian farmānhāra. He was not a military leader but a bureaucrat representing the king (Herzfeld, Zoroaster and His World, I, 171; the Persian equivalent, prmnkr, is found in Cowley, op. cit., No. 26, ll. 4, 8). The title was borrowed from Assyria, where it was held by officials of high rank, sometimes even by the chief priest (E. G. Klauber, Politisch-Religiöse Texte aus der Sargonidenzzeit [Leipzig: E. Pfeiffer, 1913], pp. xxiv-xxv; cf. No. 137, reverse, l. 2; No. 103, reverse ll. 9-10; No. 111, reverse l. 4; No. 116, reverse l. 3). Klauber calls the official the "reporter," the meaning found also in I Esdras 2:17, 25 and in Josephus, who interprets the title "the recorder of all things that happen" (Antiquities XI, 2. 1). Such royal investigators were sent out yearly to the Persian satrapies to investigate and report conditions (Xenophon Cyropaedia VIII, 6. 16). Neither chancellor nor commander adequately renders the title or function.

Shimshai is found frequently in Akkadian records as mShamshai, an abbreviation of a name including the name of the Babylonian sun-god Shamash. Since a common scribe would not be mentioned in the salutation, Shimshai must be an official. Rudolph (op. cit., p. 42) identifies him as Rehum's secretary. He probably was such a royal appointee as the scribe attached to officials during the Persian period to spy upon them and report directly to the king (Herodotus History III. 128; cf. George Rawlinson, The History of Herodotus [New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1859], II, 426, n. 9). Thus both men were required to investigate suspicious acts such as the fortification of Jerusalem. Letter here represents an Akkadian word (egirtu) borrowed by both the Aramaic and the Hebrew languages.

9-10. The list of names is a commentary on the "adversaries" (vs. 1), "the people of the land" (vs. 4). Although the M.T. treats all the names as gentilics, and some are definitely geographic, many are official titles.

The Dinaites are the judges (Persian dātabhar), found often in the Aramaic papyri (Cowley, op. cit., No. 6, l. 6; No. 8, l. 24; No. 27, l. 9; No. 80, l. 8; No. 82, l. 1). The Lucianic recensions of the LXX and of I Esdras 2:17 translate as judges, and Josephus calls them "the judges of the council" (Antiquities XI, 2. 1). Herodotus (History III, 31) claims that their authority derived from the king, and a papyrus links them with "observers" and "police" as part of the spy network of the province (Cowley, op. cit., No. 27, ll. 8-9).

The Apar-sathchites were not governors but "envoys" (Persian frēstaka or fraistaka; Rudolph, op. cit., p. 36, cites Wilhelm Eilers, Iranische Beamtennamen in der keilschriftliche Überlieferung [Leipzig: F. A. Brockhaus, 1940], pp. 39, n. 1, 100; cf. Herzfeld, Zoroaster and His World, I, 171). I Esdras 6:7, translating the “Apharsachites” of Ezra 5:6; 6:6, has “governors.” None of the many explanations of the Tarpelites is convincing but its position suggests some kind of officials. The Apharsites are usually rendered as Persians (so also Rudolph, loc. cit.) but Herzfeld relates them to a possible Neo-Babylonian official, the amiprasakanu, whose identity is yet undetermined (Herzfeld, Zoroaster and His World, I, 171). Since the -ka sign is damaged in the text, the name is probable but not certain. Harry Torczyner (“Aryans and non-Aryans Persians in the Bible,” Bulletin of the Jewish Palestine Exploration Society, XIV [1947-48], pp. 1, 6) regards the Archevites (ארכיבים) as representing the Aryans, the “free-born” Persians (αροικοι) and the Tarpelites (אפְשַׁרְטְכִיתִים) and comparing for “affiliated” or “dependent” Persians, the Babylonians and Shushanites that follow in the list. But this hypothesis depends on reading “Persians” for titles otherwise identifiable (Apharsites and Apharsathchites) and if the affiliated Persians are those listed, Tarpelites should appear just before the ethnic names.
